COMMISSION.

VICTORIA R.

VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, to Our trusty and well-beloved GEORGE WATERS, Esquire, one of Our Counsel, CONSTANTINE MOLLOY, Esquire, Barrister-at law, and WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esquire, Barrister-at-law; greeting.

Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, have by a joint Address humbly represented unto Us, that the Honorable Baron FITZGERALD, one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, and one of the Judges selected for the Trial of Election Petitions, pursuant to the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, has reported to the House of Commons that from the evidence at the Trial before him of the Petitions relating to the last Election for Cashel he had reason to believe that the corrupt practice of Bribery did extensively prevail at the said Election, and have humbly prayed that We will be graciously pleased to cause Inquiry to be made, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Parliament passed in the Sixteenth Year of Our Reign, intituled "An Act to provide for more effectual Inquiry into the existence of corrupt practices at Elections for Members to serve in Parliament," by the appointment of you, the said GEORGE WATERS, CONSTANTINE MOLLOY, and WILLIAM GRIFFIN, as Commissioners for the purpose of making Inquiry into the existence of such corrupt practices.

Know ye, that We, in compliance with the prayer of the said joint Address, have authorized and appointed, and do by these presents, in pursuance of the powers vested in Us by the said Act, authorize and appoint you, the said GEORGE WATERS, CONSTANTINE MOLLOY, and WILLIAM GRIFFIN, to be Commissioners for the purpose of making inquiry into the existence of such corrupt practices in the said joint Address referred to.

Given at Our Court at Saint James's, the Twenty-third day of June, One thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in the Thirty-third year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,

H. A. BRUCE.

CASHEL ELECTION INQUIRY COMMISSION, 1869.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, the Commissioners appointed in pursuance of the Act, 15th and 16th Victoria, chapter 57, to inquire into the existence of Corrupt Practices at the last Election of a Member to serve in Parliament for the Borough of Cashel, humbly submit the following Report to your Majesty :—

We proceeded, in obedience to Your Majesty's warrant, to inquire into the manner in which the last election for the Borough of Cashel, which took place in the year 1868, had been conducted, and as to whether corrupt practices were committed at that election; and having found that corrupt practices were committed at that election: We proceeded, as directed by the statute, to make the like inquiry concerning the latest previous election, which took place in the year 1865; and having found that corrupt practices were committed at that election, we made the like inquiry concerning the latest previous election for the same borough, which took place in the year 1859. Upon such inquiry we did not find that corrupt practices were committed at the last-mentioned election, and we therefore did not inquire into any antecedent election.

At the election of 1859, 109 persons voted. The candidates were Mr. Lanigan, who polled 91 votes; Mr. Carden, who polled 10 votes; and Mr. Hemphill, who polled 8.

At the election of 1865, 126 electors voted. The candidates at that election were Mr. John Lanigan, who had been elected in 1859, and Mr. James Lyster O'Beirne. Mr. Lanigan polled 40 votes, and Mr. O'Beirne 86.

We find that the election was conducted in a corrupt manner on the part of Mr. O'Beirne, and that corrupt practices were committed at that election.

We find in respect to the said election, that the persons whose names are set forth in the schedule A annexed to this report, were guilty of corrupt practices within the provisions of the 2nd sec. of the 17th and 18th Vic., cap. 102. Of these, 2 were electors.

We further find that the persons whose names are set out in schedule B annexed to this report, were guilty of corrupt practices within the provisions of the 3rd sec. of the 17th and 18th Vic., chap. 102. All these persons were electors, and the entire number of electors whom we find to have been guilty of corrupt practices in respect of the said election is 32. Besides the persons whose names are placed in the schedules, we have no doubt that a number of people, whose names we have been unable to ascertain, were guilty of corrupt practices at the election of 1865; but owing to the death of Mr. Frazer Johnson, solicitor, Mr. O'Beirne's conducting agent at that election, who seems to have been the principal manager of the corrupt practices on his behalf, and the non-attendance of Mr. O'Beirne, we were unable to ascertain the full extent of corrupt practices at that election.

It appears, however, from the evidence of Mr. J. D. White, the local partner of Mr. Frazer Johnson, that he gave 10 men £30 each on bills at that election, the money being furnished to him by Mr. Frazer Johnson, but he was unable to identify the men to whom he gave the money, being only able to state that he believed them to be voters from the Commons.

It also appeared from the evidence of Captain Graham that Mr. O'Beirne had himself stated that the election of 1865 cost him from £2,500 to £3,000, a sum very greatly in excess of any possible legitimate expenditure.

On the registry for the Borough of Cashel for the year 1868, there are 203 voters, of whom 197 are rated occupiers, 3 freeholders and 3 lodgers; 43 of the rated occupiers were added by the 31st and 32nd Vic., cap. 49, the valuation of the premises in respect of which they are rated being between £4 and £8. The Parliamentary borough contains two districts, one consisting of the town, the other being about three miles outside the town, and known as the Commons of Cashel, on which 49 voters (rated occupiers) reside, who are known as the Commoners or Commons men.

The last election for the Borough of Cashel was held on the 20th November 1868, and two candidates only went to the poll, Mr. J. L. O'Beirne, who polled 100 votes, and Mr. Henry Munster, who polled 84 ; and we find that the election was conducted in a corrupt manner on the part of each of the candidates.

We find in respect of the said election that the persons whose names are set forth in the schedule C annexed to this report, were guilty of corrupt practices within the provisions of the 2nd sec. of 17th and 18th Vic., cap. 102. Of these, 9 were electors.

We further find that the persons whose names are set out in schedule D annexed to this report, were guilty of corrupt practices within the provisions of the 3rd sec. of the same Act.

All the persons named in schedule D were electors, but as the names of two electors occur in both schedules (C and D), the entire number of electors whom we find guilty of corrupt practices is 77.

From the accounts and other evidence given before us, it appears that the amount expended at the last election as returned through Mr. Munster's expense agent, was £924 5*s*. 10*d*., besides unsettled claims mentioned in the return, of which £214 17*s*. 6*d*. have been since paid.

Mr. M. Laffan, his conducting agent, further expended about £200 not included in the above account ; and other sums amounting to £380 were also paid in connexion with the election.

About £1,100 were paid in direct bribery on Mr. Munster's side, through Mr. P. Laffan, and there were donations in charity, or for charitable and other public purposes, in or near Cashel, to the amount of about £1,000, making a total expenditure of over £3,800.

We think it necessary to refer in detail to one of these charitable donations.

Mr. Munster, previous to the election of 1868, was residing at Sheffield. He had no knowledge of, or connexion whatsoever with Cashel, his object in becoming a candidate being, on his own admission, to prevent the re-election of Mr. O'Beirne, and this object he was prepared to effect either by being a candidate himself or by paying the expenses of another. The only introduction Mr. Munster had to the borough of Cashel was through Mr. Edmond Leahy, his intimate friend, who was resident in England, but connected by family with the county of Tipperary. Through Mr. Leahy and a Mr. Dudly Byrne, who resides in the county not far from Cashel, Mr. Michael Laffan, a resident solicitor and an elector of the borough, was engaged as Mr. Munster's conducting agent.

Mr. Michael Laffan having been informed very soon after his engagement by either Mr. Leahy or Mr. Dudly Byrne, that Mr. Munster was anxious to confer some substantial benefit on Cashel, on the 15th of September, 1868, wrote the following letter to Mr. Dudly Byrne :—

" Cashel, 15th day of September, 1868.

" My dear Sir,—Since you left I have gone through a good many of the electors, and Mr. Munster's candidature has been favourably received. You should have the address issued immediately, and let him be prepared to come here the day after the races. Take care to see the address before sending it to anyone for publication. I have been talking to some of the Commissioners, and telling them that Mr. Munster, if elected, would desire to confer some substantial benefit on the town, and one of them suggested that, as they are about getting up Christian Brothers' schools, and as Mr. M. is so wealthy, the best thing he could do to gain a good character at the outset would be to agree to give, if returned, £400 or £500 to establish these, the money to be given back to him by the trustees if not elected. There is no doubt this would be a judicious investment—that is, if he do not mind the expensive nature of it. Mention it to him, and see how far he would be inclined to go, that I might be able to state something of the kind. I wish particularly you would come up again, say on Friday morning, in reference to John Lanigan. It would be of advantage to arrange that one of his sons should come up with Mr. Munster. It will be of considerable service to have Mr. M. identified with Tipperary people, and the Lanigans should not hesitate to pay off O'Beirne.

" Faithfully yours,

" Michael J. Laffan.

" Captain Byrne, Sorrel Hill.

" Take care to see that any letters I write you are sealed with (D. L.), and the seal unbroken.—M. J. L."

Mr. Dudly Byrne enclosed this letter in the following letter written by him to Mr. Leahy on the 17th September :—

" Sorrel Hill, Templemore, 17th September, 1868.

" My dear Edmond,—I have just received your note of yesterday. I now enclose two letters I have received from Mr. Laffan, who is very hopeful of our success. He suggests in his first note to give a subscription, conditionally, to assist in building the Christian schools ; now, my opinion is this, that by so doing you would have the votes of every respectable man of the O'Beirne and Lanigan party in the borough, and, as a consequence, care very little for money hunters of both sides. I mentioned to Mr. Laffan that Mr. O'Beirne was returned as a large creditor by the Messrs. Gurney and Co. ; now he writes to me to procure the schedule of the creditors, and he says he will make good use of it. Let me hear fully from you by Saturday, for nothing like following up the matter with spirit, and I have no doubt of the result, that we will see your friend the M. P. for Cashel in the next Parliament. If possible, I will run up to Dublin on to-morrow to get John Lanigan to send his son to Cashel to aid us; he cannot refuse to wipe out O'Beirne.

"Ever yours, sincerely,

"DUDLY BYRNE.

"E. LEAHY, esq.

Mr. Leahy laid these letters before Mr. Munster on the 19th, who on the same day drew a cheque for £400 on the Sheffield Bank in favour of Archbishop Leahy, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of the diocese in which Cashel is situated, which Mr. Munster on the same day handed to Mr. Edmond Leahy, who was with him in Sheffield, and who is the brother of the Archbishop. This cheque was never used by the Archbishop, nor does it appear ever to have been cashed. On the 19th September Mr. Munster wrote to Mr. Laffan the following letter :—

"Sheffield, Sept. 19th, 1868.

"MY DEAR MR. LAFFAN,—I am quite shocked that in your kind caution for me you should have thought it necessary to secure a sort of quid pro quo in any case for me in quasi return for anything I may like to do for the excellent Christian Brothers in your town. 'Longe meâ discrepat istis et vox et ratio.' Such has never been my manner and, please God, never will be. Even in dealing with laymen I always prefer to suppose that there is honour on both sides, but in a matter concerning men serving God and religion procul absit. God forbid that I should offer them not a bargain, but even the semblance of one; 'tis Cæsar's wife, you know. When you know me better you will comprehend the almost ludicrous aspect it bears in comparison with my notions of what is proper. As for yourself, my dear sir, something of the same feeling exists. If I am rightly informed you wish, in case your work should be too light to stipulate for a fee of £105; if so, it seems quite a reasonable thing to me, and I should prefer if that is so, and you will say so to me, to send you my cheque at once for that amount. Of late I have (for reasons you will hear) been prepaying everybody, nor have I the least fear but that, in the hands of a gentleman like yourself, to whom my friend Mr. L. has thought fit to confide my interests, I shall find no diminution of zeal.

"I am yours truly,

"(Signed,) H. MUNSTER.

"P.S.—My views about the Christian Brothers' schools are so large that they will require a special ambassador. I think I shall have a bargain to propose, but I trust not a corrupt one.

"(Signed,) H. M."

On receipt of this letter, Mr. Laffan abandoned the idea of a conditional gift, and stated that Mr. Munster would make a donation without any conditions. Nothing more appears to have been done with reference to the matter until after Mr. Munster came to Cashel on the 16th of October. On a subsequent day some of the Town Commissioners came to Abbeyview, a residence which he had taken at Cashel, and after some discussion Mr. Munster, in substitution for the cheque for £400 already mentioned, drew another cheque for the increased sum of £500, payable to Mr. Edmond Leahy, to be indorsed by him to Archdeacon Quirke, the parish priest of Cashel (who is not a voter), to be used by him in introducing the Christian Brothers into the town, if certain premises which were then mentioned were found suitable for the schools, the only further condition being that the Christian Brothers should be brought into the town within a limited time.

Taking the whole of these transactions together, we have no doubt that though Mr. Munster rejected the proposition of the condition that the money should be returned in case of his non-election, yet the donation was still an "investment," and his object or his principal object in giving it was to influence the electors in his favour. We find that he gave it because he thought the gift was calculated to induce voters to support him, and to obtain influence in favour of his return; and we find that this transaction constitutes corrupt practices on Mr. Munster's part.

Besides this donation to the Christian Brothers, about £500 more were given in contributions to charities and public purposes, and Mr. Munster at the beginning of his canvass lodged £5,000 in the National Bank at Cashel, the voucher for which was exhibited by his conducting agent to electors and others. The reputation so acquired of being a very rich man, and his lavish expenditure in charities and otherwise, operated on and were assigned as a reason for supporting Mr. Munster by more than one witness.

Direct bribery on Mr. Munster's side does not appear to have commenced until the Monday before the election, but Mr. Munster himself previously directed what he termed "a step in the direction of purity of election," which was the retaining as his agents, by a fee of five guineas each, as many of the voters believed to be venal as could be engaged, so as to prevent their voting at either side. Mr. Munster stated that he desired that this should be done with venal voters, without respect to the side for which they were inclined to vote; but his agents would appear to have selected parties whom they believed to be hostile. Baron Fitzgerald, before whom this practice was exposed on the hearing of the election petition, decided that this system of retainers did not constitute corrupt practices. The evidence given before us upon this matter was substantially the same as that given before the learned judge, and we consider this question closed by his decision.

Mr. Patrick Laffan, the brother of Mr. Munster's conducting agent, was the person who principally managed the direct bribery on behalf of Mr. Munster. He got from Mr. Edmond Leahy £350, which Mr. Leahy procured from Mr. Michael Laffan, and on his applying for more, Mr. Leahy told him to go to Thurles (a town nine miles distant) to a house there, where a sum of £600 would be left for him. He went accordingly on the 15th of November, and got the money. We have not been able to ascertain where Mr. Leahy procured this sum. Mr. Laffan also got a further sum of £300 from Mr. Dudly Byrne. That was given to him by Mr. Dudly Byrne out of a sum of £1,000 which Mr. Byrne got from Mr. Munster. Mr. Munster's account of this matter was (answer 16427), that on the night of the 16th of November, at about eleven o'clock, when he was retiring to rest, Mr. Byrne abruptly asked him for the loan of £1,000, and that after about a minute's consideration he gave Mr. Byrne a cheque for that amount, taking as the only security for it then or afterwards Mr. Byrne's I. O. U. Mr. Byrne's account varied from Mr. Munster's in this respect, that according to his recollection he only asked for a loan of £400 or £500 (answer 17864). This transaction occurring a few days before the election, was a very suspicious one, but we do not find that Mr. Munster was aware of Mr. Byrne's object in obtaining the money, or that he knew that it was to be applied in corrupt practices, or that he intended it to be so applied.

These sums, also some more moneys, in all about £1,100, were expended by Mr. P. Laffan in the direct bribery of voters, principally at the rate of from £30 to £40 a head, by the hands of a man named Larkin, who was a stranger in Cashel, and had been brought there from another part of the county by Mr. Dudly Byrne for this purpose. The persons who were to receive the money were brought up to a room in which Larkin was, having previously received an envelope from Patrick Laffan, or Patrick Cunningham (a subordinate agent), which they presented to Larkin.

Besides this direct bribery, there were some cases in which parties were led to expect that they would receive money after the election. There appears indeed to have been an idea amongst many voters, who did not get anything before the election, that, to use their own expression, "if there was anything going" after the election, "they would get their share." Accordingly a great many claims, to the number of about 30, were sent in to Mr. Munster's agents, or entered in his agents' books after the election, generally in the names of sons or relations of voters for "services at the election," the sums varying from £20 to £60. In some cases the claims were either suggested by, or actually put in for the parties without their request or knowledge by Mr. Munster's conducting agent, who gave as his reason (answer No. 6923) for doing so, that he "intended that those who voted honestly and independently," as he conceived, "should not afterwards be worse off than those who had made a corrupt bargain."

A form of corrupt practices, well known in Cashel, as appeared both before us and at the trial of the election petition, is that of taking houses from voters, which was resorted to on both sides, but more extensively on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne.

Bribery however does not appear to have been so largely committed at the last election on Mr. O'Beirne's behalf as on the side of Mr. Munster.

We could not ascertain that Mr. O'Beirne had at his disposal for the election more than £900, and of that sum about £400 were spent in hotel bills, the payment of mobs, and other expenses. Two hundred and thirty pounds we find to have been expended in bribery, and applied by Mr. O'Beirne himself, or with his knowledge.

We were unable to procure the attendance before us of Mr. O'Beirne or Mr. Edmond Leahy. We were satisfied that Mr. O'Beirne, who resides in London, was unable through severe illness to appear before us. Mr. Leahy left Ireland a few days before the sitting of the Commission, and we were informed that he went to Vienna, and thence to Constantinople. We attach the evidence given before us.

All which we humbly submit.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

GEORGE WATERS, Esq., Q.C., Chief Commissioner,

CONSTANTINE MOLLOY, Esq.,

AND

WILLIAM GRIFFIN, Esq.,

The Commissioners appointed under the Act of the 15th & 16th Victoria, Cap. 57, for the purpose of making Inquiry into the Existence of Corrupt Practices at the last Election for Cashel.

Secretary, John MacSheehy, Esq.

FIRST DAY.

First Day.

Monday, October 4, 1869.

October 4.

The Secretary read the precept authorizing the inquiry.

Mr. Waters, Q.C., said—My brother Commissioners and myself, whom it has pleased Her Majesty to appoint as Commissioners to examine into the existence of the corruption that is supposed to have been practised at the last election, under the Commission that has been read by Mr. MacSheehy, our Secretary, are here now to commence that investigation. It will be our duty, under that Commission, to endeavour, by every means in our power, to ascertain whether corrupt practices prevailed at the last election for this borough; and it will be our duty to make the strictest and closest investigation that we possibly can. That investigation we shall conduct by the examination of every person who shall come under our notice as having any knowledge of anything approaching corrupt practice with reference to the last election. We have power by the Act of Parliament under which this Commission has been issued, to serve upon any person whom we think it right to examine, a summons to appear here as a witness; and under the Act of Parliament there is power given to inflict punishment on any person who disobeys the summons which is so served on him. Now, it has come to our knowledge, and is a matter of notoriety in this borough of Cashel, that at least one person who was served with a subpœna to attend as a witness at the trial of the election petition which took place here before Mr. Baron Fitzgerald, in contempt of that summons, absconded—I can use no other term—absconded and did not appear here and give evidence; and it also is a matter of notoriety that some other persons were not to be found in their usual places of abode at the time when subpœnas to attend as witnesses were being served. Now I think it right just to say a few words to the people of Cashel with reference to these matters. Any person who is served with a summons, and who does not obey the order of the summons to attend here and give evidence before us, can, as I have already said, be severely punished, and the people of Cashel are very much mistaken, and any witness who leaves his home and stays away for the purpose of avoiding being served with a summons is very much mistaken, if he thinks he will accomplish his object by going away from Cashel. We have power to send a summons to the very utmost limits of the united Kingdom, and we have power beyond that to adjourn this Commission from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, if necessary, and to wait until any person who avoids service of the summons shall be found; and most unquestionably we shall not leave anything that lies in our power undone to make witnesses attend and to arrive at the truth. Therefore, any person who leaves his home or stays away from Cashel, under the expectation that he will avoid the service of a summons, will find himself very much mistaken. Mr. Commissioner Waters.

Allow me to say another thing that perhaps may touch the feelings of the people of Cashel; it is this:—The expense of this investigation will partly fall on Cashel, and if we are obliged to adjourn and to keep this Commission hanging on from time to time—from month to month, as I have said, if necessary—it only entails so much additional expense on the ratepayers of Cashel. Therefore the more promptly every person comes before us, the sooner will this investigation be closed, and the sooner will Cashel be relieved of that expense. We are armed with very great authority by Her Majesty, and we are armed with full powers to carry out our authority here. It is well known now, and has been widely disseminated through the press, that commissions are sitting in England for the same purpose as that for which we are assembled here; and everybody has read that at some at least of those places the Commissioners have been obliged to have recourse to exceedingly severe measures. In some cases persons who were examined as witnesses have been sent for trial for perjury—committed before the Commissioners. In very many cases witnesses have been committed to prison for contempt of court, exhibited either in refusing to answer, in unsatisfactory answering, or in refusing to produce documents when required. Now, the people of Cashel and those whom we summon before us must know that we have precisely the same powers as the Commissioners that sat, and that are sitting in England; and, performing our duty under this Commission, it will be necessary for us, provided the occasion arises, which I hope will not be the case, to pursue the same course that was pursued in England; and if the occasion arises, if any witness be guilty of contempt of court in refusing to answer, or prevaricating, or not telling the truth and the entire truth, on examination before us, let every such person be assured that we will most unsparingly exercise all the powers vested in us, so as to ensure that his example will at least lead others to conduct themselves differently. I hope for the character of our countrymen, and for the character of this borough, that no such thing will occur. I have felt it my duty to let the witnesses that come before us know what our powers are, and how we mean to exercise them. As I have said, I hope that no occasion of the kind will arise. We are here simply to investigate the truth. We shall leave no source of information that comes before us without trying whether we can elicit the truth, and I hope that the witnesses whom we shall summon before us will assist us in this investigation by frankly, fairly, and fully telling the truth and stating all they know.

There is only one other matter that I have to allude to, and that is with reference to the position which witnesses that come before us will hold. If any man, no matter how deeply he may be involved in any corrupt practices, comes before us on our summons, and frankly, and fairly, and fully tells the truth of all that he knows, it is in our power to give him a certificate which will free him from all pains and penalties of any kind whatsoever. The giving of that certificate is entirely in our discretion. Where we find a witness frankly and truthfully telling all that he knows, we will feel it our duty under the Act of Parliament to give him a certificate that will free him from responsibility. But if we see any prevarication, any withholding of the truth, any want of candour or veracity in the mode of giving testimony, we have full power to withhold the certificate, and any person from whom a certificate is withheld may be made responsible in a criminal court, not only for what he has disclosed himself on his own examination, but for anything that may be elicited in the examination of any future witness, or in the evidence afterwards elicited. Therefore it is plainly the interest of every person who comes before us, frankly and candidly to tell all he knows. He will then get a certificate that will preserve him from all responsibility of any kind whatsoever; whereas if he does not do so, the certificate being withheld, three or four days afterwards evidence may be given by another witness that may implicate the person who has already not candidly answered and from whom the certificate is withheld, and on that evidence he may be prosecuted to conviction. I once more say that I do not announce these things expecting that the witnesses who come before us will attempt to conceal the truth; on the contrary, I hope and expect that every man will tell us all that he knows. I only make these observations because I feel it my duty to let persons know the powers that are vested in us.

Mortimer Shea was sworn to use diligence in the service of summonses, and to make true answers to such questions as may be put to him.

The Hon. George P. Prittie.

The Honorable George P. Prittie sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1. Are you the Clerk of the Peace for this county?—I am.

2. Do you produce the register?—I produce this as a copy of the register of the last election, certified by me. [Witness hands in register.]

3. This is the register which was settled at the revision of 1868, and was in force at the last election?—It was in force at the last election, and so settled at the revision by the Chairman of the county.

4. I believe the qualification for this borough of Cashel is the qualification of rated occupiers only?—Rated occupiers and lodgers.

5. That is under the recent Act?—Under the recent Act: the rated occupiers are £4 and upwards, and there are only four lodgers who were admitted and registered by the Chairman.

6. Three lodgers?—Three or four; three I think.

7. And 200 rated occupiers?—Yes.

8. Then there is no freeman or other freehold qualification?—No.

9. Have you got the register of the former years?—I was only told to bring this.

10. Perhaps you would have the kindness to send for the register on which the election of 1865 was held?—I made a mistake in saying that there was no other qualification, I find there are three freeholders, and that they were passed at the revision sessions, that is three £50 freeholders on the last list.

11. Are you aware whether the £50 freehold gives the right of voting in the borough of Cashel?—I am not quite certain, there is a doubt about it.

12. At any rate you find them there?—I find them here. They were so allowed by the Chairman.

Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald.

Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13. You are the sub-sheriff?—I am sub-sheriff of this county.

14. Were you sub-sheriff in 1865?—I was, since 1857.

15. Have you got the register of 1865?—I have got the register for the two years referred to, the register for the last election, and also for the previous one, given to me by the Clerk of the Peace.

16. Are they certified by the Clerk of the Peace?—They are the registers handed to me by the Clerk of the Peace, the official documents.

17. Do you produce the return of expenses furnished to you by the candidates at the last election?—I do. I now first produce one that was given to me on behalf of Mr. Munster.

18. Did you previously to the receipt of that document get the appointment of an expense agent on behalf of Mr. Munster?—I did.

19. What is the date of that appointment?—14th November, 1868.

20. What is the name of the gentleman appointed expense agent?—"George Richardson, of No. 12, Lever-street," I think it is, "in the city of Manchester, gentleman."

21. By whom was that appointment given to you?—I cannot exactly say. It was at the day of the nomination, and it was given to me probably by Mr. Richardson himself, who was there.

22. Do you know Mr. Richardson?—I do.

23. Did you see him here?—I did.

24. When did you see him last?—Not since the election.

25. When did you get the account of the expense of the election?—This account I received on the 11th February, 1869.

26. Do you recollect from whose hands you received it?—I think it came to me by post.

27. This purports to be signed by "George Richardson, 12, Lever-street, Manchester:" do you chance to know his handwriting?—Except by seeing it. I saw his handwriting once or twice, and I believe this to be the same.

28. You believe this to be his handwriting?—I believe that to be his handwriting.

29. Was Mr. Munster a candidate at the last election?—He was.

30. Mr. O'Beirne I believe was the only other candidate?—There were several proposed and seconded.

31. But eventually only Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Munster went to the poll?—They alone went to the poll.

32. Did you receive an appointment of expense agent on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir, signed by Mr. O'Beirne.

33. On what day did you get it?—On the day of the nomination.

Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald.

34. Did you afterwards get an account of the expenses from the expense agent?—Subsequent to the hearing of the petition I received it through the post.

35. At what time was the petition heard—I believe it began on Monday, 15th February?—I was going to say February: I cannot exactly charge my mind.

36. You say that subsequently to the hearing of the petition you got the account of expenses?—I received this document through the post office, with no letter accompanying it. I received it on the 22nd March, 1869.

37. Do you know in whose handwriting it is, or by whom it is signed?—I do not.

38. It purports to be signed I see by Patrick Connor. Is that the name of the person appointed?—That is the name of the person appointed.

39. You say this was received on the 22nd March: Previous to that did you receive any account of expenses from Mr. Connor or anyone on his behalf?—I did not.

40. Are you able to tell me the date of the nomination for the last election?—The nomination was on the 18th November, 1868.

41. And the polling I believe on the 20th?—In boroughs one day intervenes. The polling took place on the 20th, and the declaration the following day.

42. Was it you or the sheriff that presided at the election?—I presided, but I had also a deputy.

43. And you, I presume, examined the books and declared the poll?—The sheriff, Mr. Waldron, was here himself at the nomination: he presided at the nomination, but did not remain after.

44. Was it you who declared the state of the poll?—No, Mr. Waldron.

45. I believe he declared Mr. O'Beirne elected?—Mr. O'Beirne.

46. Do you recollect the election of 1865?—I do.

47. And you produce the register of that date?—Yes. [Witness hands in register.]

48. Who were the candidates at the election of 1865?—Mr. John Lanigan and Mr. James Lyster O'Beirne were the only candidates that went to the poll, as far as I recollect.

49. Do you produce any accounts of election expenses for that election of 1865?—This bundle of accounts and vouchers were sent to me by Mr. Laffan, sen., who was solicitor for Mr. Lanigan, and they are in the same state as when I got them. I got no money for publishing them, and of course did not publish them. [Witness hands in papers.]

50. Do these papers that you have handed in contain the nomination of an expense agent?—I think not. I have that though. The nomination of expense agent, signed by Mr. Lanigan, was dated the 13th July, 1865, and appoints Daniel Laffan, of Cashel, solicitor, agent for the payment of expenses. [Document handed in.]

51. Do you know, as a matter of fact, if Mr. Lanigan is living or dead?—John Lanigan is dead.

52. Have you any appointment or nomination of an agent for election expenses on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne, the other candidate, in 1865?—I have, of the same date signed by Mr. O'Beirne, and nominating John Davis White agent for the payment of expenses—same election.

53. Did you receive from the agent, for election expenses of Mr. O'Beirne, an account of expenses of the election of 1865?—I received an account; I think from Mr. Johnson, who was acting as his solicitor.

54. This account which you produce is not signed?—No, sir.

55. Are you able to say in whose handwriting it is?—Well, I am not able to say in whose handwriting it is.

56. Do you recollect the fact of getting it from Mr. Johnson, or from whom did you get it?—(Witness peruses a letter.) There is no reference to it in the letter that I was under the impression it came with. There is no reference to it. What I thought was that I got it from Mr. Johnson.

57. I understand you to say this is the only account that you got of the expenses of Mr. O'Beirne?—The only account I got.

58. And are you able to say, from recollection, how you got it, whether by post, or whether it was sent to you?—I should think by post.

59. And you have not the letter that accompanied it?—I have not.

60. Did you receive any of those documents from anybody else but Mr. Johnson?—Not that I am aware of. That was given to me long after the election.

61. So it appears by the date?—I had to apply several times that the Act of Parliament might be complied with.

62. To whom did you apply?—I applied to Mr. Johnson.

63. Mr. Johnson, I believe, is dead?—He is.

64. Have you any doubt that that document came from Mr. Johnson?—I have no doubt about it.

65. You reside, I believe, in Clonmel?—I reside in Clonmel.

66. Are you able to give my brother Commissioners and myself any information whatever as to anything connected with the last election for the borough of Cashel?—Except officially, I know I think, nothing about it.

67. Is there anything in your official knowledge that would serve the ends of this Commission of inquiry with regard to corrupt practices?—I know nothing about it except being in court during the poll, and at the trial of the election petition, and hearing all the evidence.

68. Are you acquainted with Mr. O'Beirne's handwriting?—I am.

69. Is that in his handwriting (witness is handed letter, dated 2nd October, 1869, addressed to E. R. Conron, esq., and signed "J. Lyster O'Beirne")?—Comparing it with his other signatures, and from my recollection of it, I believe it to be his.

Mr. John MacSheehy (Secretary) sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mr. John MacSheehy.

70. You produce the copy of poll book furnished by the Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper?—Yes; the poll book for the election of 1868 ordered by me and certified at the end.

Simon Tracey, of Cashel, was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mr. Mortimer Shea.

71. You have been sworn?—Yes sir.

72. Recollect the oath you have taken to-day to tell the truth to every question put to you during the whole course of this inquiry. Do you know Simon Tracey?—Well, sir.

73. Do you know where he lives?—Yes, sir.

74. When have you seen him last in Cashel?—I have seen him on Wednesday evening, your worship.

75. That is last Wednesday?—Last Wednesday evening.

76. How did you serve the summons that you got for him?—I called there on Wednesday evening three times.

First Day.
October 4.
Mortimer Shea

77. How soon had you seen him before you called to his house?—About less than two minutes.

78. Where was he?—He was at Mrs. Dunne's hotel, outside her door.

79. Had you then a summons against him?—I had the summons with me, but it was so dark, your worship, that I turned to the light to pick out the copy that I had for him, and as soon as I came back he was gone, and I pursued him, and I saw a man that it appeared to me was Tracey going to his own house, and I went there and they denied him.

80. How far is outside Mrs. Dunne's door where you saw him, from Tracey's house?—About fifty perches.

81. You say you "pursued him" from Mrs. Dunne's hotel up to his own door?—Yes.

82. And you saw a man go in the door?—Yes; I have no doubt it was he, to the best of my belief.

83. Whom did you see at his house when you inquired for him?—His sister-in-law.

84. Do you know her name?—I do; Ellen Casey.

85. You served her with a copy of this summons?—I did the following morning.

86. You inquired for Simon Tracey?—I did the day before I left her the summons.

87. What answer was given to you?—She told me that he was not to be seen, nor neither his wife.

88. At what hour was that?—About 8 o'clock on Thursday morning.

89. Did you not ask for him on Wednesday night?—I did, your worship.

90. Whom did you see on Wednesday night?—The sister-in-law.

91. What answer did she give you?—She told me he was gone up towards Mrs. Dunne's looking for a friend of his.

92. When did you call again?—In about half an hour after that.

93. Was it the same person you saw?—The same person.

94. What did she say then?—She said he didn't call in since.

95. Did you call any more that evening?—I did some reasonable time, about half an hour or twenty minutes after that.

96. Whom did you see on the third occasion?—The same woman.

97. What answer did you get?—The very answer that he didn't come in.

98. Then when did you call next?—Next morning about 8 o'clock—Thursday morning.

99. Whom did you see in the house then?—The sister-in-law.

100. What answer did you get to your inquiry for Simon Tracey?—I asked her, "Is the governor in? did he get up out of bed yet?" "No, he is not in," said she. "Is it to mass he's gone?" said I to her. "No," said she, "himself and the wife are gone to market to Tipperary; you cannot see him." I considered then it was only a mock all the time, and I left the summons.

101. Have you seen Tracey since then?—No.

Simon Tracey was again called, but did not appear.

Michael Keeffe.

Michael Keeffe sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

102. Did you see Simon Tracey this morning?—He was in my house this morning.

103. At what hour?—Between 9 and 10 I think, your worship.

104. Did you see him yesterday?—I did not, sir.

105. The day before?—No, I did not, sir.

106. Had you any conversation with him?—Yes, I had, sir, on this business.

107. About this business?—Yes, sir.

108. Did he tell you he had been served with a summons?—He told me he was.

Adjourned.

Second Day.
October 5.

SECOND DAY.

Tuesday, October 5, 1869.

Simon Tracey.

Simon Tracey, sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

109. Why did you not appear here yesterday?—I wasn't exactly aware I would be called on as the first witness. I was coming up when I found the Court was over.

110. Did you get the summons to attend here?—I did.

111. Did you see the day named in the summons?—I did sir, but I was busy in the shop. I intended to come up yesterday.

112. You swear that you intended to come up yesterday?—I swear I intended to come up yesterday. I was coming up.

113. I accept your explanation as you give it now. I am very glad to be saved the unpleasantness of doing something that certainly would be an example to all others?—I am very sorry.

114. Were you summoned to attend as a witness before the judge here on the trial of the election petition?—I was.

115. Did you attend in obedience to that summons?—No.

116. Where did you go to?—To London.

117. Did you do that of your own accord or at the suggestion or by the advice of any person?—I adopted that course at my own suggestion, for to do my own business in London.

118. Did you consult with anyone before you went away about your going from this?—No; I had business of my own to do and went to London to do it.

119. What trade are you in?—Dealing in old and new clothes.

120. Were you supplied with money by any person in order to go to London then?—No.

121. Were you repaid any expense you were put to in going to London, since then?—No.

122. Now, I ask you again, were you in communication with anyone, with reference to going to London and avoiding giving evidence on the trial of the election petition here?—No.

123. By letter or otherwise?—No.

124. You were not in communication with any one—No. I was in communication with my wife on my own business.

125. Now, you told me you went to London on business. Were you not back here in Cashel from your London business before the trial of the election petition was over?—I was.

126. Why did you not come up for examination?—I found my name was called, and my business wasn't transacted in London—wasn't finished in London at the time I left. I went back to London to finish my business when I found my name was called.

127. How many days were you here after your return before you went back?—Only a day.

128. Were you in communication with anyone about election matters on that day? Not as know, but my wife.

129. Were you, with anyone but your wife?—No, on election matters.

130. Are you sure you were only one day at home?—That is all; I left the next day.

131. You will have to be careful in your recollection, because we have the evidence that was given here before the judge. I believe you are not an elector of Cashel?—No.

132. Have you ever been an elector of Cashel?—No.

133. Were you engaged at the last election for either of the candidates?—Yes.

134. For whom?—James Lyster O'Beirne.

135. When did you first become engaged for him in the election?—About seven or eight weeks before the election took place.

136. Did that engagement result from a written communication from Mr. O'Beirne or from a verbal communication?—A verbal communication; he was in town at the same time.

137. Then you heard nothing from him until he came to town?—No.

138. How much money did you get from Mr. O'Beirne before, during or after the election?—I got no money from him, but I got a cheque for sixty pounds.

139. Did you get only one cheque?—That is all.

140. What became of that cheque?—I destroyed it.

141. When?—I found it was no good in the bank.

142. When, I ask you?—Some time after the election.

143. About how long after the election?—Three weeks or a month.

144. That was in the interval between the election and the petition?—Yes.

145. What was the date of the cheque?—Well I cannot exactly swear.

146. As well as you can recollect?—Some time in the month of February, I think.

147. Do you understand my question?—I do, sir.

148. What was the date of the cheque?—I cannot exactly swear the exact date of the cheque, but I think it was in the month of February.

149. Do you mean February, '69?—Yes, February, '69.

150. Do I understand you to say you got it in November?—No.

151. You said you got a cheque from Mr. O'Beirne for £60; what was the date of it?—It was dated some day in February, '69. He retained me about six, or seven, or eight weeks before the election to convass for him.

152. He retained you?—He kept me as an agent. He didn't give me the cheque until the time of the election.

153. Now, are you quite sure of the date of the cheque; you got that cheque in November?—I did not get the cheque until February, in or about I think to the best of my knowledge some part of the month of February. I think it must be about the 26th February the cheque was dated.

154. You recollect the date then?—Something in or about that time.

155. Now, Mr. Tracey, recollect yourself—did you tell me that you destroyed the cheque in the interval between the election and the election petition?—Yes.

156. How could you have done that if you did not get the cheque until the 26th February, when the election petition was tried on the 26th February?—Between that and the election petition.

157. You say you did not get the cheque until the 26th February?—I destroyed that cheque some time after the election.

158. Did you tell me a minute ago that you did not get the cheque until the 26th February?—I think it was in or about February I got the cheque, sir.

[The shorthand writer reads questions and answers numbered 153, 154, and 155.]

159. Think of yourself now, and see if you can explain or reconcile your statements?—The time I got the cheque is at the time of the election taking place.

160. Then you wish to alter your answer?—I wish to alter the answer. At the time of the election taking place I got the cheque.

161. Perhaps you wish to alter the date of the cheque?—It was dated, I think, the time of the election. I think it was about the time of the election it was dated.

162. You say it was dated about the time of the election, and that you got it at the time of the election?—I got it at the time of the election, within a week or so.

163. You had better be careful?—I wish to be careful.

164. You have not shown a great result of care in the way you have given your answers up to this. You said the amount of that cheque was £60?—Yes.

165. Why did you not present the cheque for payment?—I presented the cheque to know was it good.

166. When?—Some time after getting it.

167. To whom?—To Mr. O'Brien.

168. Is he the teller at the bank?—The teller at the bank.

169. That is Mr. William James O'Brien?—Yes.

170. You say you presented it to him in the bank?—I presented it to him in the bank to know was it good.

171. What answer did you get?—He told me that it was.

172. Why did you not then take the money?—I didn't want it.

173. Did you ever present it again?—No.

174. When you found the cheque was good why did you never present it again?—I didn't want the money.

175. What was the money given to you for?—For my services.

176. For yourself?—Yes.

177. And do I understand you to say that that money was given to you for your services and was for yourself?—Yes.

178. To apply to your own purposes?—To my own purposes.

179. You went to the bank and ascertained that it was good?—Yes.

180. You were told it was?—Yes.

181. And you never cashed it?—I never cashed it.

182. Why did you take it?—Because I was doing business for Mr. O'Beirne when I took it.

183. Did you intend to cash it after a time?—I intended to cash it after a time. I was depositing money the time I went to see was it good.

184. Did you intend to convert it into cash at the time you took it from Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

185. Give me any reasonable explanation why you did not cash that cheque?—I didn't want it at the time.

186. And then you destroyed it?—When I found he closed his accounts in the bank it was no value.

187. When did you find that?—Some time afterwards.

188. I ask you did you ever present that cheque again?—No.

189. How did you know it was of no value?—People in the town told me his account was closed. I had occasion often to go to the bank on my own account and then I found his account was closed.

190. From whom did you learn that his account was closed?—From every person in town.

191. Did you ever write to Mr. O'Beirne to ask for payment of that cheque?—No.

192. Did you canvass any person for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

193. Whom did you canvass?—Several about.

194. I want their names?—I canvassed a party of the name of Kennedy.

195. Where does he live?—In Friar-street.

196. Is that Thomas Kennedy?—Thomas Kennedy.

197. Who else?—In fact I canvassed every one in the borough. I asked them for their vote for Mr. O'Beirne. I didn't select one person above another.

198. Did you canvass generally for him?—Generally for him.

199. Did you canvass on the Commons?—Yes.

200. With whom did you go there?—With Mr. O'Beirne and others canvassing.

SECOND DAY. October 5. Simon Tracey.

201. How often did you go there?—Three or four times.

202. Did you go four times or more?—Something about three or four times. I used to go out there along with the rest of the people.

203. Who were the people you went with?—People from Cashel on the cars.

204. Did you ever go there by yourself?—No.

205. During the course of the election did you hear of any money going?—I heard of money rumoured about going.

206. With reference to whom?—I didn't hear reference given to any person in particular.

207. With reference to whom; you are sworn to tell the whole truth?—I heard of no people giving money particularly, but I heard money spoken of.

208. Mention to me the names of any men whose names you heard rumoured in connexion with money?—I couldn't give you any names.

209. Do you swear on your oath that you do not recollect the name of any man whose name you heard rumoured?—I cannot mention any names.

210. Do you swear on your oath that you do not recollect?—I do, sir.

211. Did you ever go the Commons by yourself, or go into any house there by yourself?—No.

212. Tell me the name of any man whose house you went to there?—I never went to the Commons by myself.

213. Answer my question; tell me the name of any man whose house you went to there?—I cannot exactly mention the names of the houses. I went to their houses along with the rest.

214. Do you mean to say you do not recollect the name of any man to whose house you went canvassing about the election?—I went along with the crowd.

215. I will commit you if you do not answer. I ask you again to tell me the names of any persons to whose houses you went, in the Commons, canvassing about the election?—I went to a person of the name of Connor's house.

216. What name besides Connor?—Patrick Connor.

217. Anybody else?—There are other houses, but I cannot mention the names.

218. Is that the only name you recollect?—I went to his house.

219. Attend to my question and answer it. Is Patrick Connor the only name you recollect?—That is the only name I recollect. I went along with all the rest, in and out.

220. Who are all the rest?—There are a good many voters in the borough of Cashel, and the whole lot of us went out to canvass the houses in the borough. I went along with the rest of them, in and out. I didn't make a selection of any house.

221. Are there many voters in the Commons?—Thirty-two or thirty-three, I think.

222. Do you swear you do not recollect any name but that one?—I do not recollect, for I didn't make a selection.

223. Did your wife tell you that any person had been with her about votes?—She did.

224. What person?—She told me there was a person of the name of Rochford, after Rochford being there some time.

225. Now, sir, did you go to Rochford's house?—I was passing by Rochford's door.

226. Answer my question: did you go to Rochford's house?—I did.

227. On your oath did you forget that when I was pressing you to tell me any names?—The Commons you alluded to, sir.

228. Where does Rochford live?—In Canopy-street, Cashel.

229. What did your wife tell you Mrs. Rochford came to her about?—She told me, the time of the election, that Mrs. Rochford came to know would she get money from me if her husband gave his vote in favour of Mr. O'Beirne.

230. Was it after you heard that from your wife that you went to Rochford's house?—No, I was in Rochford's house before that.

231. Did you see Rochford or speak to him in his house or anywhere else, after you heard what you have now told me from your wife?—No.

232. Did you ever see Rochford afterwards?—I see Rochford—I wasn't talking to Rochford after my wife told me. I see Rochford at his own door, before that, on the same evening that his wife was with my wife. I was at Rochford's door before my wife told me.

233. You say you saw him at his door?—At his own door.

234. And you went into his house?—I did. The wife was after coming in it seems from my wife, and she called me in to her and out in her back yard.

235. What took place between you and Rochford's wife there?—She asked me could I give her any money, telling me that Mr. Munster's agents or parties were giving money. I told her that I could give her no money, that I never got money, and I could give her no money.

236. You told her you got no money, and that you could give her none?—Yes.

237. Was there anyone else there at the time besides Mrs. Rochford and her husband?—They tell me there was a party of the name of Meara, but I have no recollection of his being there at the door. There was no one talking to me out at the yard but Rochford's wife.

238. Then did you go out of the house to the yard?—I went out of her house into her back yard.

239. Was it at her request?—At her request; she called me out.

240. Leaving the husband?—Leaving her husband at the door where I was talking to her.

241. Did you then come back to the husband?—No, the husband came in and sat by the fire, and I went straight right out.

242. Did you not say a word to the husband?—No, he was after giving me his answer before that, that he would vote for Mr. Munster and nobody else, and he would vote for Mr. Munster in consequence of Mr. Fahey giving him work. I told her there was no use as he gave me his answer. He was telling me he was promised to Mr. Munster.

243. You told that to the wife?—I did.

244. Then I understand you to say that this conversation took place before the wife came in?—Yes.

245. Was the wife present at it?—No.

246. Was anyone present at it?—Not that I know. They tell me Meara was present, but I don't swear whether he was or no.

247. What hour of the evening was it?—Well, it was after dusk, a winter's evening, I suppose about five o'clock.

248. Did you go from your own house down there?—Yes, from my own house.

249. Direct from your own house?—I was on my way going up to Mr. O'Beirne's room.

250. Answer my question?—Yes, I went to John Rochford's house.

251. Direct from your own house?—Direct from my own house.

252. And your wife had told you that Mrs. Rochford was in the house with her?—Not at that time.

253. She had been there before?—She had been there before.

254. And you saw your wife before you left the house?—I don't know that I did.

255. Try and recollect: are you quite sure your wife did not tell you before you left the house that Mrs. Rochford had been there?—I am quite sure it was after I coming back that my wife told me Mrs. Rochford was here, and wanted me.

256. Then was your turning into Rochford's an accidental circumstance?—An accidental circumstance; he was at the door.

257. Where was the cheque for £60 at that time?—I had it.

258. Where was it?—I had it in a cabinet drawer in my own house.

259. Had your wife access to that drawer?—She had access to the drawer.

260. In what part of the house was it?—In the front room, up stairs.

261. Is it a bed-room?—A bed-room and front room together.

262. Was there anything else in the cabinet drawer besides that cheque?—No.

263. Was there anything else in any other drawer near it?—There was another box, and there was money and cheques of my own—deposit receipts on the bank of my own.

264. Then I understand you now to say in one cabinet drawer there was this cheque for £60?—In one cabinet drawer the cheque of Mr. O'Beirne's, and in the box—there is a box in a large clothes-box, and in the cabinet there is a chest of drawers. They were both in the same room. In the box I left my money; in the cabinet the cheque. They were different pieces of furniture altogether.

265. In this box that was in the other box—is that so?—Yes.

266. You had money, cheques, and deposit receipts?—I had deposit receipts, money in the line of notes and silver, no cheques or anything, but only deposit receipts.

267. Do you say now there were no cheques?—I say there were deposit receipts, no cheques; no cheques but deposit receipts.

268. Have you a very bad recollection?—I cannot say I have, sir.

[The shorthand writer reads questions and answers Nos. 262 and 263.]

269. On the virtue of your oath were there cheques in that other box?—On the virtue of my oath there were no cheques, but only deposit receipts.

270. Why did you not put the £60 cheque along with your other cash and deposit receipts?—I left it in the cabinet.

271. I ask you why you did not do it?—I had no particular reason, only it happened to be left in the cabinet drawer.

272. Are you able to tell me about how much cash you had there?—I suppose if I had £15 or £20 it was as much as I keep in the house. Generally when I make up £20 I go to the bank and deposit it.

273. The money was notes and silver?—Notes and silver.

274. Who was present when Mr. O'Beirne gave you the cheque for £60?—No one but myself.

275. What did he tell you you were to do with it? what did he say when he gave it to you?—"Here is a cheque for your own use—£60."

276. What time of the day was it when he gave it to you?—I cannot exactly say. I suppose about twelve o'clock or so.

277. Where?—I think in Mr. Dunn's on the square.

278. Did you ask him for money?—No.

279. You did not ask him for any money?—No.

280. Tell me what he said; were you talking for any time about the election?—We were talking every time about the election.

281. Confine yourself to the occasion about which I am asking you questions; were you talking about the election the day that you got the cheque, and before you got it?—He told me he would give me this cheque for all the trouble I went to. "I give you this cheque."

282. Was that before the election?—Before the polling.

283. Were you before you got the cheque talking about the election?—To whom was it I was talking?

284. Did you not tell me there was no one in the room but Mr. O'Beirne and you?—There was no one in the room.

285. Were you talking with him about the election?—I suppose I was, sir.

286. Had you the list of voters on the table?—No.

287. Had you any canvassing books or papers containing voters' names?—No.

288. Were you mentioning voters' names?—No, we were talking about the electors, about who we would have, and who we would not have.

289. Were you talking about doubtful people?—We were talking about doubtful people.

290. Tell me the name of any doubtful man mentioned between you that day?—I could not name one.

291. You swear that?—I do.

292. Was John Rochford mentioned?—Not that day.

293. Was his name mentioned any day as a doubtful man?—It was.

294. Was he mentioned as a man who might be induced to change his opinion?—I don't believe his opinion was ever for Mr. O'Beirne.

295. Was his name ever mentioned as a man who might be induced to change his opinion?—It was not.

296. You swear that?—I do.

297. Was it ever said he might be induced to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—No.

298. Did you know at the time you were speaking to Mr. O'Beirne about him that he was pledged to Mr. Munster?—I did not, until he was telling me that time.

299. Did you when you spoke to Mr. O'Beirne know that Rochford was pledged to Mr. Munster?—I did at that time.

300. Why did you talk of him as a doubtful man if you knew he was pledged to Mr. Munster? did you tell me you talked to Mr. O'Beirne of Rochford as a doubtful man; did you tell me that?—We were talking over the election.

301. Answer my question; did you tell me a moment ago that you were speaking of Rochford with Mr. O'Beirne as a doubtful man?—Yes, I did.

302. Did you tell me afterwards that you knew he was pledged to Mr. Munster at that very time?—At the time that he gave me the cheque?

303. Attend to my question; at the time you were talking with Mr. O'Beirne you told me you knew Rochford was pledged to Mr. Munster?—Yes.

304. And you told me that you spoke to Mr. O'Beirne of him as a doubtful man; explain that?—That he wouldn't give his vote to Mr. O'Beirne; that he was promised to Mr. Munster.

305. Is that what you mean by a doubtful man?—No; he was for never to give his vote for Mr. O'Beirne, in my opinion.

306. Therefore he never was doubtful?—No; Rochford is a supporter of Mr. Munster.

307. You swore his name was mentioned as a doubtful man, and you told me you knew he was at that time pledged to Mr. Munster; are you able to give any explanation of the inconsistency of your two answers?—I cannot give any explanation only that Mr. O'Beirne and me were talking over the subject of the parties, and he was asking me about Rochford. "Oh, Rochford won't vote for us," said I, "he will vote for Munster."

308. Did that conversation take place on the day you got the £60?—I dare say it did.

309. Now do you say that that conversation took place on the day you got the £60 cheque?—I think it did, sir.

310. And you also told me that it was the very day that you had been at Rochford's house?—I dare say it is. I don't mean to say, I am quite sure it is. It is in or about that time when I was talking to Rochford, and after being talking to Rochford—the day afterwards, I think—I was speaking to Mr. O'Beirne, saying Rochford would go with Mr. Munster. That is the day Mr. O'Beirne gave me the cheque.

311. Now recollect yourself, and tell me was that after or before the night that you went to Rochford's house and had the conversation with Rochford's wife?—It was after Rochford's wife had the conversation with my wife.

312. And do you mean to say that it was that very night that you went to Rochford's house?—It was after the night I was at Rochford's house. It was after I was talking to Rochford.

SECOND DAY.
October 5.
Simon Traccy.

313. It is very unpleasant to have to recall so many inconsistencies in your evidence?—I am sorry for it.

314. Do you recollect that when Rochford's wife called on your wife the cheque for £60 was lying in the cabinet?—I do.

315. How could that be if you say you did not get the cheque until you had the conversation with Mr. O'Beirne, and that that conversation was after the night you went to Rochford's house?—I suppose I must have got the cheque before that so sir.

316. Do you think if you went off the table and took a little time to think of this transaction, and then came back, you could tell me a little more consistently?—I like to be consistent; that is what I wish to be. I had the cheque before Mrs. Rochford came to my house. I had the cheque, I know, in the cabinet at the time Mrs. Rochford came to my house, and then I went to Mr. O'Beirne after talking to Rochford, and told him about Rochford not coming with us, and I had the cheque at the time.

317. Give me some reason for believing you are accurate now; what fixes it in your mind?—Because I know I had the cheque in the house at that time.

318. Bring your recollection back to the day you got the cheque; you say you did not ask for money?—No money.

319. And Mr. O'Beirne offered the cheque to you of his own accord?—Yes.

320. And that was before the election took place?—It was before the election took place he gave me the cheque.

321. Did you work very hard for Mr. O'Beirne at the election?—Not very hard, only the same as any other ordinary person.

322. Did you think yourself entitled to the sum of £60?—No, he could give me what he thought proper.

323. Tell me what he said; was the cheque-book lying on the table, or did he open his drawer and take it out?—He said, "I will give you a cheque for your services?"

324. Is it "for the services you are to render" or "have rendered?"—For what I had done and what I had to do for him.

325. Did he tell you anything further about the cheque than that?—No.

326. Tell me the whole conversation?—I cannot tell the conversation.

327. Can you recollect any more of it than that?—I cannot; there are many things passed between me and Mr. O'Beirne that I cannot recollect.

328. Do you recollect any more of the conversation?—I do not. "Tracy," said he, "I will give you this cheque for yourself." I thanked him.

329. Was the name of any other doubtful man mentioned that evening except Rochford's?—No.

330. Was Rochford's the only name mentioned?—The only one; I have no recollection of any other one.

331. And you say that all Mr. O'Beirne said about the cheque was, "this is for your services?"—That is all.

332. He did not tell you what you were to do with it?—He told me first to do whatever I liked with it for my own self.

333. And your story is, you got the cheque for yourself, and knowing it was good you never cashed it?—I never cashed it. I didn't want the money at that time; I had money of my own.

334. Do you tell me you never applied for it since?—Never since.

335. Have you never written to Mr. O'Beirne since?—No.

336. And you never sought, directly or indirectly, to get it?—No.

337. And you put it into the fire and destroyed £60?—Of course if I thought it was good I would not destroy it.

338. You say still that Mr. O'Beirne said nothing more about the cheque?—Not that I know of.

339. Did he say anything about not presenting it for payment?—He did not; not to my recollection, at all events.

340. Did anything pass about your not presenting the cheque?—Not as I recollect. He didn't say anything to me only, "Here is a cheque for you," says he. There was a rumour about that his name wasn't good at the bank. I was going down to the bank, depositing some money, and I showed it, and they told me it was good, and I could get it cashed if I liked. I said I didn't want to get it cashed so long as it was good.

341. Did you get any letter from Mr. O'Beirne about it?—No.

342. You are quite sure of that?—No correspondence at all about it.

343. I wish you would try and recollect did Mr. O'Beirne say anything about not presenting the cheque?—I don't recollect.

344. Will you say it did or did not occur?—I don't think it did.

345. You will not go further than that?—No; what motive could he have to tell me not to get it cashed? sure I could get it cashed if I liked.

346. Did you ever apply afterwards for any money to Mr. O'Beirne?—No.

347. Can you give any explanation why you did not try to get that £60 that was yours?—When I seen him unseated I thought there was no use in my trying to get it. It was reported Mr. O'Beirne was a very poor man.

348. Did you ever say to any person that you had money for voters in Cashel?—No.

349. I ask you again do you recollect the name of any man who was rumoured as likely to take money, or to whom money was offered on either side?—Likely to take money, or money offered—I don't recollect, sir.

350. Did you hear there was money going on Mr. Munster's side?—It was rumoured through the town from one to another.

351. Were you not taking an active part for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

352. Were you doing everything in your power to find if money was going on Mr. Munster's side?—Yes.

353. Did you make inquiries about it?—I did not make particular inquiries.

354. Did you make any inquiries?—No, sir.

355. I ask you did you try in Mr. O'Beirne's interest to find out if there was money going?—I did not try to find out. I heard it rumoured about the town that Mr. Munster was giving money.

356. Did you hear any man's name in connexion with that rumour?—No, sir. I heard that Cornelius Carroll got money; that is all I know of.

357. Do you recollect any person from whom you heard that rumour?—No; it was common town talk.

358. And although it was common rumour, you do not recollect the name of any man with whom the rumour was connected?—I can't recollect.

359. And although it was common town talk, you ask me to believe that you do not recollect a single person that said it to you?—I cannot mention a single name, sir.

360. Did you keep any books or any papers in connexion with the election?—No.

361. Did you not keep a list of names of any kind?—No, nor never had.

362. Did you ever write a letter to anyone about the election?—No.

363. Did you ever receive a letter from anyone before, at, or after the election?—No.

364. How often do you generally go to London on your business?—Twice or three times a year. Twice a year.

365. Did you ever in the whole course of your life before come back from London, stay a day, and return to London again?—Never.

366. Do you still now ask me to believe that you went back a second time on your own business only?—I went back the second time on my own business. I lent my brother £30, and I found he was going to change his business, and I went back to arrange it and to finish my business. At the time I was coming back I was told my brother was changing his business and I went back to get it arranged.

367. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What day did you go back to London?—I cannot exactly mention the day.

368. The hearing of the petition commenced on the 16th February; how long before that day did you go to London?—The day the election petition was going on my name was after being called, whatever day that was.

369. Then you went to London after your name had been called, and whilst the election petition was in progress?—Yes.

370. Had you at that time heard the story Mrs. Rochford was telling about your wife?—I did.

371. Did you know at that time that Mrs. Rochford alleged your wife offered her money to bribe voters?—I did.

372. And you went to London knowing that that story had been told, and that there was a contradiction on oath between your wife and Mrs. Rochford?—I went away immediately to London after stopping one day at home.

373. Did you tell me you went away after your name had been called?—After my name had been called.

374. And knowing what Mrs. Rochford had told about your wife?—I heard so.

375. Mr. MOLLOY.—You had money and deposit receipts at the time that Mrs. Rochford called to your house?—Yes.

376. You had money in bank on deposit receipts?—Yes.

377. And you were getting interest on that money?—Yes.

378. Why did you not lodge the sixty pounds and get interest on it?—I didn't care about it. It is more for safety I leave money in the bank than for interest.

379. Did you get any list of voters from Mr. O'Beirne?—No.

380. How did you know who were the voters?—I know all the voters in Cashel.

381. What business do you follow?—Old clothes and second hand.

382. What sort of a room had you your cabinet in. Is it a bed-room?—It is a sitting-room and bed-room together; a front room up stairs.

383. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You say that at the time you went to the bank with the cheque for £60 you heard a rumour that it was not good?—I heard a rumour that it was not good; that Mr. O'Beirne closed his accounts in the bank.

Michael Ryan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Michael Ryan.

384. I believe you are a voter of this town?—Yes.

385. I think you voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes.

386. Is your house in the main street?—Yes.

387. And I believe a man named John Murnane was lodging with you before the election, and was on the list of persons entitled to vote in Cashel?—Yes.

388. Is he still?—He is.

389. Is he in Court?—He is here.

390. You got £60 from Mr. O'Beirne for your house?—Yes.

391. How much of that did you give to Murnane?—None at all.

392. In any way?—In any way.

393. In any way, directly or indirectly; allowing him for a debt due, or in any way whatever, did any portion of that go to Murnane?—No, sir.

394. Had he anything at all to say to the letting of your house?—No, sir.

395. Directly or indirectly?—No; he wasn't along with me at all, sir, when I set it.

396. Had he anything to say, hand, act, or part, in the letting of your house to anyone at the last election?—No, sir.

397. Was he ever present when the letting of your house was talked of in any way?—He was, sir.

398. Where?—In the house where I live.

399. With whom was the talk?—Well, it was with Michael Keeffe, and Captain Graham, and Michael Hanley.

400. You say Murnane was present at that talk?—He was. Michael Keeffe wasn't much present, I think, but he came to call me.

401. Is that the only occasion on which Murnane was present when anything occurred about the letting of your house?—He was present when Michael Hanley spoke and Captain Graham.

402. Was he ever present at any other time that anything occurred about it?—He was present at every time when anything was spoken in the house, but he was not present when I set the house the last time.

403. What do you mean by the last time?—The time that I set it to Mr. O'Beirne.

404. What is "last." Why did you use the word "last": did you set it to Mr. O'Beirne twice?—No, sir.

405. Why did you use the word "last"?—I couldn't say, sir.

406. You may as well tell it out at once, because I know all about it. Why did you use the word "last"—why did you say he was not present at the last time you set it?—Mr. Hanley came one time, and Captain Graham came another time.

407. You said Murnane was not present the last time you set it, and I have asked you why did you use the word "last." It implies that you set it more than once, does it not?—I was about setting it to Mr. Munster first, sir.

408. You say you were about to set it to Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

409. That was before you set it to Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

410. Did you set it to Mr. Munster or to any one for him?—I did, sir; but I didn't close the bargain.

411. Did you get £50 into your hands?—I didn't, sir, but half notes.

412. Did you sign an agreement?—I did, sir.

413. Where is that agreement?—It was torn up, sir, when the money was given back.

414. Who tore it up?—I did, sir.

415. What day was it that you set the house for £50, and signed an agreement for Mr. Munster?—I couldn't exactly tell the date.

416. Who was it that gave you the £50?—Patsy Cunningham. I only got £25 and the rest in half-notes.

417. Did you get £25 in whole notes?—Yes, sir.

418. And £25 in half-notes?—Yes, sir.

419. Did you give a receipt for £50?—I did, sir.

420. Who drew up the receipt?—I don't know whether it was young Cunningham or Murnane. I cannot exactly say which of the two now.

421. How long had you that £25 and the half-notes for £25 in your possession?—Well, I think to the best of my belief, sir, I got them in the evening late and gave them up about twelve o'clock the day after. I couldn't rightly say, but as far as I believe that was the way.

422. Why did you break off the bargain?—Because they didn't give me whole notes, and they wouldn't agree to give me whole notes.

423. And were you afraid to trust Mr. Munster? did you fear that he would not give you the other half notes?—No, but I mistrusted Cunningham.

424. Was Mr. Munster's name mentioned in the receipt you gave?—I think not, sir. I couldn't SECOND DAY. October 5.

Michael Ryan.

rightly say, but to the best of my belief I think it was not.

425. Did you know it was let for Mr. Munster?—Sure I knew the money belonged to Mr. Munster, sir.

426. Are you aware the house was taken for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

427. And that Cunningham was an agent working for Mr. Munster at the election?—Yes, sir.

428. And you tell me you doubted that the halves would be given to you?—I had a doubt of it.

429. Do you swear that that is the reason you broke off the agreement?—If Mr. Munster wasn't elected I would have a doubt that I would get the other half notes—if he wasn't elected.

430. Then that was the only reason that you broke the bargain?—Yes, sir, that was it, and I expected to get more. I said that certainly I should get £60 for the house before I would let it the next morning.

431. You had let it for £50 the day before?—Yes.

432. Why did you put on the £10 over the £50; tell me honestly: if you expect a certificate tell me out honestly?—I certainly will tell the truth, sir,

433. Tell me why did you put on the £10?—Says Cunningham, says he—

434. Tell me why did you put on the £10 after letting it for £50?—I said that Mr. Murnane was a lodger, and that he didn't agree I should set it so cheap.

435. Did you not say you had to give £10 to Murnane?—No, but I will you how it was. "Mr. Murnane," said I to Cunningham, "wouldn't agree to this." "Don't mind that" said he, "when the election is over Murnane will get £10."

436. Did you not say Murnane was to get £10?—Maybe I did that time, sir.

437. With whom was it you had the talk; with which of Mr. O'Beirne's people, after you let the house for the £50; was it with Mr. O'Beirne himself or with any other person acting for him?—Michael Keeffe came and called me, and carried me up to Mr. O'Beirne.

438. After you got the £50 from Mr. Munster's people, was it then Keeffe came to you; after you got the £50 who was it that came to you from Mr. O'Beirne?—I couldn't say, but Captain Graham came, I think he did, and Mick Keeffe, the morning after.

439. Captain Graham came after you got the £50?—I have a doubt, sir, and my memory is so short I can't recollect. I know Mick Keeffe came and called me up to Mr. O'Beirne.

440. Did you tell Captain Graham you had set the house for £50?—I think I did, sir.

441. I suppose you told Michael Keeffe?—I think not, sir.

442. Did he know it; did Keeffe know it?—I think he did, sir; I couldn't rightly say.

443. Did he not talk to you about it?—He did.

444. What did he ask you about it when he was taking you up to Mr. O'Beirne?—He only told me to go up and speak to Mr. O'Beirne.

445. There was more than that?—I think not a great deal, sir.

446. How long do you know Mick Keeffe?—Since I was a child, sir.

447. And do you mean to say that all Mick Keeffe said is "come up to Mr. O'Beirne"?—Yes, "I think he is settling taking the house," said he.

448. Is that all he said?—I can't recollect anything he said.

449. Did he say anything to you about letting the house to Mr. Munster?—I can't say.

450. He knew it very well?—I dare say he did, sir.

451. You went up with Keeffe?—I don't know whether Keeffe walked with me or not, sir.

452. Did he go into the room with you?—No, sir.

453. When you got into the room to Mr. O'Beirne did you tell him you had set the house to Mr. Munster?—I don't say I did tell him. I think I didn't.

454. Were there any words between you and Mr. O'Beirne about the price he was to give for the house?—No, sir, I asked £60, and he gave it.

455. He gave it at once without any bargaining or trying to get it less?—No, nothing less; and then he got the house labelled up "Committee Rooms."

456. Did Mr. O'Beirne say anything about your having let the house to Mr. Munster?—I think not, I can't rightly say between the two, but to the best of my belief he did not.

457. I suppose you had not your mind made up how to vote at the election?—Well, I hadn't, sir.

458. I suppose if you got the £10 additional from Mr. Munster you would have voted for him?—I couldn't say, sir. Any man that I would set my house to, sir, of course, I should when I would set my house. I would be a great robber after setting my house if I would go back to give my vote to another man.

459. Did you understand that setting your house told a man you must vote for him?—Oh, no.

460. Did you not tell me just now you would be a great robber if you set your house to a man and gave your vote to another man?—Well, it would be fair, but in setting my house to Mr. O'Beirne, he never said to vote for him.

461. But you said to me that the man that would set his house to one man, and vote for another, would be a great robber: did you not say that?—I did, sir, but the word slipped from me. I was sworn before, and I said I had an inclination to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, if I didn't set my house.

462. Do you not understand: if you got the £10 from Mr. Munster, you would have let him occupy the house?—I would have got the £10 more from Mr. O'Beirne.

463. If you got the £10 more from Mr. Munster, would you not let the house to him?—Sure I would get £70 afterwards, and I wouldn't turn over.

464. Who offered you the £70?—Some of the boys.

465. Tell me his name?—Tom Farrell.

466. Where does he live?—He lives in the Main-street.

467. Did he offer you £70?—He did, sir.

468. From whom?—From Mr. Munster.

469. When did he offer the £70?—The night before the election, I think; I could'nt rightly think.

470. Some short time before the polling, any way?—Yes, sir.

471. Where did he offer it to you?—In my own house.

472. Who was by?—I think there was no one but himself; I don't know was there any of the boys.

473. Think and tell me honestly?—Maybe he had no footing for what he said, but he said if I went he would be sure I would get £70. I said I could not do it.

474. Did he offer you the money, or say you would be sure of getting it?—He said I would be sure of getting it.

475. From whom?—From Mr. Munster's agent.

476. Did he tell you that anyone told him to come to you?—I think he did, sir.

477. Who did he say told him?—I couldn't say, sir, which of the gentlemen that he said. I couldn't recollect whether he said any gentleman or not.

478. Try and recollect what gentleman he said?—I couldn't, sir; I would be in dread to say it, because I can't recollect what gentleman he said, I was so confused about it.

479. Did he say he was an agent to Mr. Munster?—He said something about it.

480. Or did you know that the person whose name he mentioned was an agent to Mr. Munster?—I can't recollect whether he mentioned any gentleman's name but he said I would get the £70.

481. He told you he was sent by some person from Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

482. You do not recollect his name?—No, sir.

483. Do you recollect was he an agent acting for Mr. Munster?—I think he was, sir.

484. You thought some of the boys were also with Farrell?—They came two or three times.

485. Who did?—Farrell; and I don't know were the boys along with him.

486. Tell me the names of the boys who were along with him?—Neddy Duggan; but I don't know was he along with him the time he spoke.

487. Are those men voters?—I believe not, sir.

488. Is Farrell a voter?—No, sir.

489. What is Farrell's Christian name?—Thomas Farrell, sir.

490. You say they came to you more than once?—They did, sir.

491. That was after you had set the house to Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

492. And they tried to get you to go back of the bargain with Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

493. Tell me honestly, as you were to get the £10 for Murnane, how did you give it?—I never gave a farthing.

494. Are you going to give it?—Never.

495. And do you think that honest?—I think it is, sir.

496. How was it that you got the £60 from Mr. O'Beirne?—In notes.

497. And I suppose you kept them and made use of them?—Yes.

498. Do you know the day you handed back the money to Patsy Cunningham who was present?—This Farrell was, I think, sir.

499. Was there anyone else; was Murnane?—He was when I handed back the notes.

500. And Murnane heard you say you wanted £10 for him, I suppose?—He did not. Cunningham said Murnane would get £10 when the election would be over.

501. Did you not say something about £10 for Murnane?—I said Murnane wouldn't agree to have the place set for £50 unless there was no half notes.

502. And that there were to be £10 for him?—Cuningham then said that he would get the £10 after the election.

503. Before you set the house to Mr. Munster you had a talk about setting it to Captain Graham?—I had.

504. What were you asking for it then?—He didn't speak of taking the house at all. He was speaking of taking the rooms for himself to lodge in it at the upper part of the house.

505. For how much. Forty pounds wasn't it?—Forty pounds.

506. How long was that before you set it to Mr. Munster?—It was a long time, sir.

507. It was for the election, was it not, that he was speaking about £40?—He lent me the £40, and I passed a bill to him and signed my name to it, and I paid the money and got the bill back and tore it up.

508. It was Captain Graham that lent you the £40?—Yes.

509. And you gave him a bill?—Yes, sir.

510. When did he lend you the money and you give the bill?—Five or six weeks or seven before the election.

511. Was Captain Graham living in Cashel at that time?—He was not, sir; but he came to take a place, and he took Mr. Brown's place above.

512. I believe he lives in Kingstown?—Yes.

513. He came down to Cashel?—He did.

514. Was it about the election he came?—I didn't hear him speaking about any election.

515. He lent you £40?—He did, sir.

516. How long before the election?—Near five or six weeks.

517. Did you give a bill?—Yes, sir.

518. Was it a three months' bill?—It was, sir.

519. When did you pay back the £40?—Before the election.

520. At the time he lent you the £40, was it then you were talking about giving the rooms in the house?—It was, sir.

521. And was the £40 to pay the rent in advance?—Yes sir, and then he lent it to me; sure of course it was lending it to me when I gave him a note for it at three months.

522. You knew that there was an election approaching at that time?—I did.

523. And Captain Graham and you talked about it?—Except he spoke to Murnane a little about it.

524. What did he say about it?—He asked would we give our votes to Mr. O'Beirne.

525. That is, yours and Murnane's?—Yes.

526. Was that before or after you talked about the letting of the rooms and before you got the £40?—It was before letting the rooms.

527. Was the talk about the votes before or after you got the £40?—I believe the talk about the voting was before I got the £40.

528. And then he agreed to take the rooms?—He did, sir.

529. And it was for the election he wanted them?—No.

530. Sure he did not want them for twelve months?—He wanted them for a bed-room for himself to stop in.

531. And for the election?—No, he was not taking the house this time, sir.

532. Did he want them for twelve months?—I don't know; for while the election would be going on.

533. Was it not while the election would be going on he wanted it?—He was taking the rooms to take a bed-room to stop in himself while the election would be going on.

534. And then he asked for yours and Murnane's votes for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

535. Why did you break off the bargain with Captain Graham?—He wanted to get his money; I gave him his money.

536. When did you give him his money?—Before the election.

537. Was it out of the £60 Mr. O'Beirne gave you you paid him?—No, sir.

538. What other money?—Money I got out of the shop.

539. Do you recollect the day you paid it?—I do; some few days before the election.

540. Do you keep books?—No, sir; I kept no account.

541. Have you no account-books?—I have, sir, but I kept no account of that.

542. What is your business?—Grocer and publican.

543. Do you pay £40 without entering it in any book? If you paid a merchant in Dublin £40 for goods, would you make no entry of it in your books?—When I get them on the file, I think that will do, and not to enter them in the book.

544. Would you pay a sum of £40 without putting an entry of the payment in your books?—I do pay the money and when I get these papers on the files they tell as well as if I entered them in a book, no one going to them except myself or Mr. Murnane.

545. Do you keep a book in which you enter the payments you make?—I do not.

546. Have you any books at all?—I have books.

547. Do you keep any account in the bank?—No, sir.

548. You keep money in your house?—I do, sir.

549. Do you tell me that you would pay a sum of £40 or get a sum of £40 without putting in your books an entry of it at the time?—I do, sir.

550. Did you put down anywhere an entry of the date of the bill you gave Captain Graham?—No sir, I did not.

551. Where did you pay the £40; was it in the bank?—No, but into his own hands.

552. Had he the bill in his pocket?—He had, sir.

553. Was it in your own house you paid it?—I think it was in my own house or at Dunne's.

554. Was that before or after you got the £60 from Mr. O'Beirne?—It was before, sir.

SECOND DAY.

October 5.

Michael Ryan.

555. And do you recollect had you that money in your house, that £40?—I had, sir.

556. How did you get it?—I got it in notes.

557. From whom?—From Captain Graham.

558. From whom did you get the £40 that you paid him back with?—I might take some of them out of the till, and I might have some of his own notes.

559. But I want to know from whom you got it?—I got it out of the shop.

560. All of it?—All of it.

561. Did you get part of it from anyone?—No, sir, never one farthing.

562. And you got back your bill from him?—I did, sir.

563. And tore it up?—And tore it up.

564. It was a three months' bill?—It was, sir.

565. And you paid it seven weeks before it was due?—Yes, sir, I could not say how long.

566. About seven weeks before it was due?—Yes, sir.

567. Why did you pay it before it was due?—Because I didn't want it any longer.

568. You are not in the habit of paying your bills before they are due, are you?—No, sir; I often did, sir.

569. Tell me the reason why you paid that seven weeks before it was due?—I didn't want it any longer.

570. Is that the only reason?—It is, sir.

571. Did Captain Graham ask you to pay it back?—I couldn't say but he did: I couldn't say.

572. Do you mean by that to say that he did ask it back from you; did he?—I think not, sir; I don't know it.

573. I think you told me it was in your own house you paid it?—Then I couldn't say, sir.

574. Did he say that he wanted his money from you?—I think not, sir.

575. Did you go of your own accord to him or did he come to you?—I went of my own accord to him—no, but I think—I couldn't say now whether he came to me or I went to him to Dunne's.

576. Did he not come to you and say you broke your bargain with me, and give me back my £40?—He did not, sir.

577. It was before you got the money from Mr. O'Beirne that you paid him back?—It was, sir.

578. Was that after you got the money from Cunningham?—I had Captain——

579. When you paid back the £40 to Captain Graham, that was before you got the £60 from Mr. O'Beirne—was it after you got the £50 from Patrick Cunningham?—No, it was before I got it from Mr. O'Beirne.

580. Was it after you got the money from Patsey Cunningham that you paid Mr. Graham back the £40?—It was, I think, sir—it was, sir, I think.

581. Tell me, did Captain Graham say anything like this to you—"You broke your bargain with me, and let your house to Mr. Munster—give me back my £40;" did he say anything to that effect, or anything like it?—He did not, sir.

582. Do you want me to believe that you went and handed him back the £40 of your own accord without his ever saying a word to you?—He never said a word, sir.

583. Did you think you ought to give back the £40 after having broken the bargain?—I didn't like to keep it any longer.

584. After having made the bargain with Mr. Munster's people you did not like to keep it any longer?—No, sir.

585. Did you hear any talk in town about money going on one side or the other during the election or about the election?—I heard some talk about.

586. Tell me who you heard talking?—I couldn't point out one, or didn't mind them. They were all having it over and hither that there was something of the kind going.

587. Do you mean that every man was asking it?—I couldn't point out any person that told me about the money.

588. You heard money was going?—I heard some talk about it.

589. What did you hear?—First that they were getting money from this person and from that person.

590. Who was this person and that person?—Some of the agents. I could not point out one person that spoke about money. When everyone is riddling it over and hither. I couldn't point out any person.

591. Riddling it?—Riddling or sifting it.

592. Did you hear Mick Keeffe talking about it?—I believe he spoke of it. They were all speaking of it—every person about.

593. Did he say any money was there for any one?—No, sir. I never heard him say that he had money for any one.

594. Or that there was money for any one anywhere?—No, sir.

595. Or cheques?—No.

596. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Captain Graham ever make any use of the rooms after you got the £40?—It was a lend of the £40 I got.

597. Did he ever use the rooms during the four or five, or six weeks?—Didn't I tell you he went up and took them from Mr. Brown after.

598. Who is Brown?—A watchmaker.

599. Is he a voter?—He is.

600. Where does he live?—At the upper end of the town, Old Bank-place.

601. Is that James Brown of Canopy-street?—It is not in Canopy-street; it is near it.

602. Was there any use made of your room for Mr. O'Beirne?—No. This house was set before by Mr. Murnane as committee-rooms some time ago for another election.

603. You say Murnane had set your house at a former election for committee-rooms?—Yes, before I came to live in it, when himself was master of it.

604. Does Murnane pay you for his support?—He does.

605. Did you make him any allowance for his support on account of having got the £60?—No.

606. You kept the whole of the £60 for yourself?—Every ha'penny.

607. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What does Murnane pay you?—Something under £20 a year, sir.

608. How does he pay it?—Monthly some of it, and yearly more of it.

609. Had he paid you before the petition was heard—does he owe you any money now?—He pays half yearly, and the other half monthly.

610. How much does he owe you now?—Next Christmas there will be £10 due.

611. When did he make the last payment to you?—I could not say now what time after Christmas, or what time it was.

612. Did he pay you anything since last Christmas?—He pays me monthly, sir.

613. He has paid you monthly since last Christmas?—He did, sir.

614. Regularly?—Regularly, sir.

615. How much does he owe you now?—He will owe me £10 next Christmas.

616. He ought to have paid you half of that about the middle of the year?—No, sir.

617. Did you not say he paid half of it half-yearly?—No, but yearly.

618. He paid you the monthly instalments, and has not paid the remainder yet?—No, sir.

619. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did either Mr. Munster or Mr. O'Beirne canvass you for your vote?—He didn't know me at all, but he often spoke to Mr. Murnane.

620. Who spoke to Murnane?—Mr. O'Beirne.

621. What is Murnane to you?—He is my brother-in-law.

622. Was Murnane the owner of the house before you went to live there?—He was.

623. Had Murnane a vote at the former elections when he was the owner of the house?—He had, sir; but either he nor me hadn't a vote at the last election, in '65, because I was after coming in lately.

624. Mr. O'Beirne called to Murnane?—Yes, sir.

625. Did Mr. Munster call to Murnane?—He did, sir.

626. Were you by?—I was, sir.

627. What answer did you give?—He didn't speak much.

628. Did he ask you to vote for him?—He didn't ask much.

629. Was there any person with Mr. Munster when he came?—He was in a carriage. Mr. Murnane and me went out out to speak to him, and he didn't say much.

630. What did he say?—He was reading a paper, and Mr. Murnane and he were speaking at the same time, sir.

631. What were they saying?—They didn't say much; they were only reading the paper each of them.

Thomas Murphy sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

632. Do you live at Lower-gate?—Yes.

633. What is your business?—A dealer.

634. You are a voter of this town?—Yes.

635. And voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes.

636. I think you let your house?—I did.

637. Were you canvassed by Mr. Munster or by any one on his behalf?—He called one day to me and I didn't go out to him. Mr. O'Beirne called another day.

638. Did any persons come to you from Mr. Munster although you did not see himself?—They did.

639. Who did?—Mr. Pat Laffan. Pat Cunningham talked to me a couple of times.

640. Did Mr. Pat Laffan come more than once to you?—He did.

641. How often?—I believe four or five times.

642. Did he come by himself or was there any one with him?—Generally by himself.

643. Had you before then promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Long before he came to town. I was intended to vote for him all through.

644. I did not ask you what you intended to do, but I asked you before Mr. Laffan was calling on you had you promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

645. Did Mr. Laffan know that?—He did not.

646. He was coming to try to persuade you?—Yes.

647. You would not promise him for Mr. Munster?—Never.

648. Did you refuse to vote for Mr. Munster?—I never promised to vote for him.

649. Did you refuse Mr. Laffan to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did.

650. The first time he came?—First and last.

651. And he came four or five times?—He did.

652. Did he offer to take your house from you?—He did.

653. Did you agree to let it to him?—No.

654. What occurred between you?—He wanted to take a part of the house.

655. Mr. Pat Laffan asked you to let him have a part of your house?—He did.

656. What did he offer you?—He offered me nothing, and I asked nothing.

657. Was there any talk between you as to the price?—Nothing.

658. On the first occasion that he called to you did he speak about taking your house?—He didn't.

659. Then the first time he called he asked you to vote for Mr. Munster, and you refused?—Yes, he wanted me up to Mr. Munster's hotel.

660. And on the first occasion of his calling he said nothing about taking the house?—The first, or second, or third he said nothing.

661. At what time was it he said it?—The day before the election.

662. Then you had refused him to vote for Mr. Munster some four times before he asked you to let the house?—I had.

663. What day was it he asked you to let the house?—About three or four days the first time before the election.

664. Was there no mention of any sum of money at all?—Not a word.

665. Was there any mention of any remuneration at all?—He asked me one day what could he do for me. I said I didn't know. I said I knew nothing he could do for me.

666. Are you speaking of Mr. Pat Laffan?—Yes, Mr. Pat Laffan.

667. Did anything more occur?—Nothing more.

668. That was not the entire of the conversation, was it?—He wheeled around and went away from me then.

669. During that conversation did he ask you how you would vote?—He asked me had I decided how I would vote, and I told him I had not.

670. And then he asked you what could he do for you?—Yes.

671. Was that to assist you in coming to a conclusion?—I suppose it was; I don't know.

672. Did you understand it as such?—I did. I can only swear to what I understood.

673. What occurred about the house when he came next?—He asked me to set a part of the house to Mr. Munster, and I said I would not.

674. Did he take a refusal at once?—No, he talked many things about what Mr. Munster would do.

675. Did he talk about money?—He said there was plenty of money there; no stint of money at that side.

676. What did he say?—He said if I was going to Mr. O'Beirne's side I was wrong; that he had no money, but there was plenty money at the other side. "Very well," said I, "you won't know how I am going if that be the way."

677. What did he say about the house?—He said a room or two would do him.

678. But you steadfastly refused?—I did.

679. After that did you go to Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

680. And you told him you were offered by Mr. Munster to have the house taken?—I did.

681. What did Cunningham say on those occasions that he talked to you?—He wanted a part of my house, too; just the same as Pat Laffan.

682. Did he say anything about the amount of money that you would get?—No; we didn't come to the amount of money.

683. Did Mr. Laffan say he had money to give?—He did not say.

684. Did Cunningham?—No.

685. You went to Mr. O'Beirne and told him about this treaty for your house?—I went up to him the morning of the nomination and told him, and he took my house from me that morning, just on the street as I was going up.

686. What sum did he promise to pay you?—Twenty-five pounds.

687. Was it you named the sum or he?—It was I named the sum.

688. Did he ask you how much you wanted?—He did.

689. Where did this conversation occur?—Outside Mr. Dunn's hotel. They were just coming down.

690. Was it the nomination day?—The nomination day.

691. Was anyone present?—Not one. He happened to be over before the rest.

692. Did it occur in as short a time as you have been telling me?—Shorter, sir.

693. Did he make any use of your house?—No.

694. Were you paid the £25?—Never.

SECOND DAY.
October 5.
Thomas Murphy.

695. Did you ask for it?—I never asked for it.

696. Why did you not ask for it?—I was called on to furnish a bill at one time and I gave a bill to Mr. Grace and I never heard of it since.

697. Is that Mr. Grace the conducting agent of Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

698. When did you furnish that bill?—Some time after the election; I forget now.

699. I asked you was there any use made of your house?—There was not.

700. Was this the first election at which you were a voter?—It was.

Patrick Mackay.

Patrick Mackay, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

701. Where do you live?—Bank-place, Cashel.

702. How long are you a resident in Cashel?—The last sixteen years, and over sixteen years.

703. I believe you voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes, sir.

704. For whom did you vote at the election of '65?—For Mr. Lanigan.

705. For whom did you vote at the election before that?—1865 was the first I ever voted at in Cashel.

706. I believe Mr. Lanigan and Mr. O'Beirne were the only persons that went to the poll in 1865?—Yes.

707. You voted for Mr. Lanigan?—Yes.

708. In 1868, the last election, was there any talk with you some time before the election about taking your house?—There was.

709. Who was speaking to you?—The first who spoke of it was Mr. Munster's agent, Mr. Michael Laffan.

710. When did he speak to you about it?—On the 21st September.

711. Where did that conversation occur between you?—In my own house.

712. Did he come to you?—Yes.

713. What did he say to you?—He asked me for the house, and asked me what would I take for it—that he had the house in 1865?—I told him from the annoyance I got before in 1865 I would not give it under £50. He told me there would be no such annoyance now if I gave the place, and he offered me £25.

714. Did you refuse to give it for £25?—I told him I would not give it for £25, from the annoyance I got in 1865, that I didn't wish to give my house at all.

715. What then occurred?—He went away and never came to me afterwards but passed on, not for a few days. I believe about a fortnight or three weeks before the election, he came to me again. Mr. Munster was passing by in a carriage. He wanted me to go out and speak to Mr. Munster, but I told him I wouldn't do that, and had pledged myself to Mr. O'Beirne.

716. When had you pledged yourself to Mr. O'Beirne?—About three or four weeks before the election.

717. You had voted against Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—Yes.

718. To whom did you pledge yourself for Mr. O'Beirne this time?—I made up my mind. He came and canvassed me, and I told him I couldn't give a decided answer, that I would go with the majority of the township. That was in October.

719. Had you your mind made up then?—Not at that time.

720. When he called on you in October you had not determined how you would vote?—No.

721. Did you make up your mind before November?—Yes, I did before November.

722. When, do you recollect?—As far as I can recollect, the latter end of October.

723. Mr. Munster had been for some time in Cashel?—He had.

724. What induced you to make up your mind?—I was encouraged to vote for Mr. O'Beirne by friends of mine. In the first place I had a letter from a brother of mine to say I should vote only for Mr. O'Beirne, and I was influenced by him.

725. Did you say you were engaged to vote for Mr. Munster by any person?—No; but I told persons his agents were taking the house.

726. You told some persons about their offers to take the house?—Yes.

727. To whom did you say that?—I can't recollect. I told it to several persons. We talk so much during electioneering that we can't remember.

728. You cannot recollect to whom you spoke?—I spoke to some of my own family. It was not their wish that I should set it to Mr. Munster, but to Mr. O'Beirne.

729. But to Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

730. After Mr. Laffan, who was the next that called about taking the house?—Captain Graham.

731. He called for Mr. O'Beirne, I suppose?—I can't say he did, whether it was for Mr. O'Beirne, but he told me he wanted to take the house for his own private use. He made use of the words.

732. Where was he living at that time?—I believe in Kingstown.

733. Had he taken Brown's at that time?—I don't know, but I heard he had it taken afterwards.

734. Try and fix the time Captain Graham asked you for your house?—To the best of my belief it was between three and four weeks before the election.

735. Have you any means of fixing it?—No.

736. Did you get any writing from him?—No.

737. You heard Captain Graham had taken Brown's house?—Yes, after some time I heard it.

738. Did you ever hear he had taken Ryan's house?—Yes, some days before the election.

739. Not until then?—Not until then.

740. He wanted to take the house for himself?—For himself.

741. What did he offer?—We agreed on £40.

742. Did you entirely agree on that?—We agreed on £40.

743. Did this conversation take place in your own house?—Not in my own house.

744. Where else?—Next door.

745. How did it happen to be next door?—He sent for me.

746. Whose house was it?—My son-in-law's.

747. What is his name?—Michael Dwyer.

748. Had you any document written, or was there anything to prove the bargain?—No, sir.

749. No money passed, or no writing?—No.

750. Nothing but a verbal conversation?—That is all.

751. Had you seen Captain Graham before then?—I had no conversation with him.

752. Had you seen him?—I saw him several times.

753. Walking about the streets?—Walking about the town.

754. How often?—I saw him for some time. I couldn't state the number of days.

755. About how long?—About a week before that.

756. Walking about occasionally through the streets?—Yes, sir.

757. And he was living in Cashel at that time?—Yes, he was during that time.

758. Was Mr. O'Beirne here then?—He was.

759. Who was present when you agreed to give it to Captain Graham?—My son-in-law.

760. About what day in October was it? Was it towards the middle, end, or beginning?—About the latter end of October.

761. Had you at that time made up your mind how you would vote?—Previous to his taking the house I had made up my mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

762. Did Captain Graham ever use your house?—No.

763. Never came into it at all?—Never.

764. Did he ever take possession of it?—No.

765. Or ever set foot inside it at all?—Never, not to my knowledge.

766. Did you ever after ask him why he did not?—No.

767. Did you ever after ask him for the £40?—No, never.

768. Did you ever speak to him about it since that day?—I never spoke about the £40 to him. We had no conversation about the money since.

769. You never inquired why he broke his bargain with you?—Never.

770. I wonder you had not the curiosity to ask him why he did not carry out his agreement?—I didn't. He told me he would take possession of the house that evening, and he left for Dublin that evening and didn't return for ten days. I then took it that he broke his agreement.

771. After that you let it to Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

772. Where?—At Dunn's hotel.

773. How soon after?—About a week after.

774. Who introduced the conversation in Dunn's house?—He sent for me.

775. What occurred when you went in that day?—I refused the messenger to go first.

776. Who was the messenger?—Michael Keeffe.

777. What did Michael Keeffe say to you?—He told me that Mr. O'Beirne wanted me, and I told him I would not go to see him; that what he wanted he had not to get, that is meaning my vote.

778. But you did not say it?—That is what I said, and he might understand me.

779. What did Keeffe say then?—He said no more.

780. Did I not understand you to say you had not promised Mr. O'Beirne?—Not at the first time he came to canvass me in October. When he first came round I didn't give a decided answer.

781. Did Keeffe walk away then?—He did.

782. Did he come back afterwards?—He remained for some time and walked up with me.

783. Did you not refuse to go with him first?—First I refused to go with him.

784. Did he then go away?—I believe he went away some distance or hovered around the door.

785. Did he come back?—He walked up with me to the door.

786. Did he come back with another message?—He did not, sir.

787. You refused first, and then altered your mind, and went with him?—Yes.

788. Did he go into the room with you?—Not past the room door.

789. Was there any one in the room but you and Mr. O'Beirne?—None.

790. What conversation occurred between you and Mr. O'Beirne?—He only asked me would I give him my house, and I said I would.

791. Was that the first thing he said when you went in?—He made an apology for taking me away from my house, and I said it made no difference. He then asked me would I set my house, and I said I would. He then said he would take a note of it, and he took a note of it on paper.

792. Did he say what he would give?—No.

793. Did you ask anything?—No.

794. Did you expect anything?—Of course I did.

795. And you let it to Mr. O'Beirne without saying a single word on what he was to pay you?—Not a word, because my mind was made up to vote for him, whether he took the house or not.

796. Why do you say you were going to vote for him; I did not ask you anything about that; what connexion has the taking of your house and your vote?—I merely stated to you that my mind was made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne before he took the house.

797. What connexion is there between taking your house and giving your vote?—I can't say.

798. You seem to make some connexion between them?—No, I don't sir. If I do it is through ignorance of what you said to me. It is not wilfully I do it.

799. Had you any conversation with any friends of Mr. O'Beirne about what you were to get for your house?—No, but Mr. Laffan and Captain Graham.

800. Did you believe that £40 is what you were to get?—I expected it.

801. Did you not believe that that taking of your house by Captain Graham was for Mr. O'Beirne?—I didn't; I couldn't tell the mind of another man.

802. Did Mr. O'Beirne allude to Captain Graham's having taken your house, or having agreed to take it?—In the conversation between me and Mr. O'Beirne?

803. At any time at all?—He merely stated to me—"I suppose," said he, "you are already spoken to before." "Yes," said I. I made use of the word yes.

804. Did you understand that to refer to Captain Graham?—Well, I did.

805. What else did he say?—"I shall take a note of it," said he.

806. What did "it" mean?—I couldn't know what it meant, sir.

807. Was that in the hotel?—In the hotel.

808. Did he say first, "will you give me your house," or "I suppose you have been already spoken to"?—No, the last words were, "I suppose you are already spoken to;" the first word was, "will you give me your house."

809. Did he say "with reference to what you have been spoken to about," or to the price of the house, or anything of that kind?—He did not.

810. Were you paid anything for the house?—No.

811. Did you apply for it?—Yes, I sent a bill.

812. For how much?—£40.

813. Was any use made of the house at all?—Yes there was.

814. What use?—It was occupied by Mr. O'Beirne and other persons there.

815. What use was made of it?—It was intended as a committee-room.

816. What use was made of it?—Well, sir, I can't say, but I saw papers, pen, and ink on the table laid there, and I saw men going up and down, and used to hear them.

817. How long did you hear that?—About a fortnight.

818. Did you ever go into any of the rooms?—I never went in but when he was in.

819. Did you ever see any strangers in your house?—I heard them; there is a side-door going in.

820. Did you ever see any strangers in your house at the time?—I did.

821. Who?—I didn't know any of them hardly. I saw one man in particular; he came through the shop and was prevented by one of my children, and I said he might come in this way.

822. Who was he?—Michael Noonan, that lived in this town.

823. What was his business?—He wanted to see Mr. O'Beirne, he said.

824. Was Mr. O'Beirne there at the time?—He was at the same time up in the room.

825. Did you see him there?—I did. There were numbers of people there that I didn't see, for they would go up unknown to me.

826. How much did you get for your rooms in '65?—£20.

827. Who paid you that money?—Mr. Laffan.

828. Is that the same Mr. Laffan who was the attorney for Mr. Munster?—His father.

829. Is he living or dead?—He is living.

830. Does he live in this town?—He does.

831. With whom did you make the agreement for your house in '65?—With young Mr. Laffan.

832. Is that the other son of Mr. Daniel Laffan?—Yes, Mr. Michael Laffan.

833. He is an attorney, I believe?—He is.

834. Did you give a receipt for that money?—I did.

835. To whom?—To Mr. Laffan.

836. Who was the conducting agent of Mr. Lanigan then?—I believe Mr. Daniel Laffan.

837. And was it to him you gave the receipt?—It was.

SECOND DAY. October 5. Patrick Mackay.

838. Do you know of any other houses having been taken by Mr. Lanigan in '65?—I do not remember any more houses being taken.

839. Do you know of any other houses having been taken in '68?—Yes, I heard of other houses being taken.

840. What houses?—Michal Ryan's.

841. Any more?—Thomas Murphy's—Michael Coffey's.

842. Did you hear of any houses having been taken by Mr. Munster?—I cannot state that any houses were taken by Mr. Munster.

843. Did you hear of it?—I heard they were taking the house of Mr. Carroll: they were taking a house from Coffey; and I believe they were taking Michael Ryan's house.

844. And your own?—And my own.

845. Any others?—I cannot know of any more.

846. Did you hear of any more?—No, but I heard he had a house taken in Friar-street for a bedroom for some persons.

847. Whose house was that?—A man named Dwyer: I was told they had his house taken for a bedroom.

848. What Dwyer is this of whose house you speak?—I can't exactly know his Christian name.

849. Is there any man of the name in Friar-street?—I think not, sir, but I am not certain.

850. Did you know of any bills being passed in '65?—No, I had no knowledge of the election in '65, for I was not here; I went away the day after my house being taken, and didn't return for a fortnight.

851. You have heard of bills?—I heard of bills.

852. How many did you hear of?—I could not say, sir.

853. Did you hear of two or of six?—I heard there were some bills; I cannot say the number.

854. Did you hear of ten?—I heard of no certain amount, but I heard there were bills passed in '65.

855. Are you not able to tell me any better?—I am not able to tell the number.

856. Did you ever hear of any men's names which were on the bills?—I couldn't say, sir,

857. When I, living in Dublin heard it, it is likely you heard it, and do you mean to tell me that you never heard the name of any man which was on the bills with respect to the election of '65?—All the knowledge I have—

858. I am not asking you as to your knowledge, sir. Tell me what names you heard with respect to the bills in '65?—At the last petition I heard bills—names mentioned—a man named Dwyer that had a bill passed.

859. Do you wish me to understand that your answer is, you never heard of it until the election petition?—I heard of bills being passed, but I never heard the names before the election petition. I heard they were passed.

860. You heard they were passed before the election petition?—I did.

861. What names did you hear?—I cannot tell the names.

862. Did you hear Mr. White's name?—I heard Mr. White had something to do with regard to witnessing bills.

863. Did you ever hear Phelan's name mentioned?—No.

864. Tell me some names besides Mr. White's?—I can't, except a man named Dwyer, who was mentioned in this court.

865. Do not confine yourself to this court, but from what you heard anywhere, at any time, tell me the names of the persons?—I beg your pardon: I may speak, I cannot know the names, and that I won't swear to.

866. Do you mean to say you do not know of any names?—I do, sir; I don't know the names, and if I knew the names I would tell them.

867. You heard no names?—No names in particular

868. Did you hear of any money going with regard to the election of '65?—I did; I heard there was money given at Mr. O'Beirne's side in '65.

869. What did you hear?—I heard there were bills passed and money given to the Commons people, but I had no acquaintance with them.

870. Did you hear there was money given which these bills represented?—Yes, for bills.

871. Did you hear anything of any of those bills in '68?—None but what I have stated.

872. I mean before the election?—Not before the election.

873. Did you hear of any other money going in '65 except those bills?—No, I have no knowledge of it.

874. I ask you if you heard of it?—I didn't hear of any money being going except what was paid by bills.

875. Did you hear of any money going in '68?—No, I heard there were promises made to them that after the election they would get it.

876. To whom?—I am told Mr. Munster's party made promises.

877. To whom?—I can't say.

878. Did you never hear a name mentioned?—I did not.

879. Do you recollect the name of any person to whom you heard money was promised to be given after the election?—I cannot, for often these things were mentioned in my own office between women and persons.

880. Did you ever hear the names of the persons by whom the promises were made?—I did not.

881. Did you ever hear Mr. Pat Laffan's name mentioned?—I only heard his name mentioned.

882. Did you ever hear his name mentioned as having promised money?—I did of course, that he was promising money.

883. Any body else besides Mr. Pat Laffan?—I don't know of any other persons.

884. Did you ever hear Cunningham's name mentioned?—Yes, but I have no knowledge of his having promised money. I heard that he promised money for the house of Michael Ryan and money for Con Carroll's.

885. Did you ever hear any other man's name in connexion with a promise of money for anything with reference to the election?—I did; I heard a promise made to myself by a man of Mr. Munster's.

886. What is his name?—Nicholas Burke, a messenger. I can't say what foundation he had for it.

887. What did he say?—On the Saturday before the election began he was sent by the friends of Mr. Munster to know would I let my house.

888. Did he name any person that sent him?—He named no person, sir.

889. He said he was sent by the friends of Mr. Munster to know would you let your house?—Yes, and that any money I would say I would get it.

890. Did anything further happen?—No, but the answer I made him was, that if he gave me the full of the hat of gold I would not turn over, as I promised Mr. O'Beirne.

891. Of course you understood when he talked about giving any money you asked for your house that it meant your vote?—I dare say that of course it did. I believed that.

892. And I suppose you know it to be understood in Cashel that it would not be honest of a man who set his house and took money, to vote for the other party?—Well, it would not.

893. And that it is an understood thing that a man who lets his house votes for the person to whom he lets it?—Yes, it is.

894. I see you sent in a claim for £40 for the house?—Yes.

895. And that was because you understood the £40 offered by Captain Graham applied to the letting?—Yes.

896. Mr. MOLLOY.—Does Nicholas Burke live in Cashel?—He does.

897. Where?—In Bank-place, sir.

Michael Murnane sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

898. I believe you are the brother-in-law of Mr. Ryan who was examined here to-day?—Yes.

899. Is he married to your sister or you to his?—I am married to his sister.

900. You were the owner of his house before he got it?—Yes, before he came in.

901. How long have you been living in it?—I am living in it these eighteen or twenty years.

902. Have you voted at a great many elections in Cashel?—I have, sir, as they came on in succession.

903. Did you vote in '65 for any one?—I did, sir.

904. For whom did you vote in '65?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

905. Did you vote for Mr. Lanigan?—No.

906. It was Mr. Lanigan who was opposing Mr. O'Beirne then?—It was; I could perceive so.

907. Did you vote in '59 for anyone?—I can't recollect.

908. Mr. Lanigan and Mr. O'Beirne were candidates then, I believe?—I believe they were; my memory fails me.

909. Surely you can recollect if you ever voted for Mr. John Lanigan?—Oh, yes, I did sir; he was the chosen person at the time, of the people.

910. That was in '59?—Yes.

911. He was beaten in '65?—Yes.

912. You voted for Mr. Lanigan in '59?—Yes.

913. And for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Yes.

914. Was your house taken in '65?—Yes.

915. By Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

916. What did you get for it then?—I think it was £50 in '65, as far as I can recollect.

917. Who was it paid it do you recollect?—I believe it was Captain Graham, sir.

918. In 1865?—Yes.

919. Was Captain Graham living in Cashel at that time?—Why, at times he was down in Dublin.

920. And sometimes here?—Sometimes here.

921. He is the owner of some property, I believe, in Cashel?—He is, sir.

922. Do you recollect if you gave any written agreement in '65 about the house to any person?—No, I have no knowledge of giving any written agreement.

923. What made you change in '65 from Mr. Lanigan, for whom you voted before—was it the letting of your house that made you change?—I think Lanigan and O'Beirne were on good terms.

924. Were they not opposed to each other?—They compromised after.

925. Was it not the letting of your house in '65 for £50 that made you vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Oh, yes, undoubtedly.

926. Do you recollect in '68 Mr. Cunningham coming to take the house?—He did, sir.

927. And I believe you agreed for £50?—Yes, 'twas Ryan.

928. But did not Ryan consult you about it?—He did.

929. And he would not do it without your wish?—No.

930. Did you see Cunningham giving him some money—£25 in notes and £25 in half-notes?—Yes.

931. I believe it was you who wrote the receipt?—I believe it was. Cunningham is very smart himself in writing, and whether he wrote the receipt or not now I can't positively say.

932. If he said it was he that wrote it you would not say that he was wrong?—No.

933. Do you recollect his coming back afterwards and the talk about the £10 additional?—Yes.

934. Who talked about the £10 additional?—Ryan said I wouldn't be satisfied unless the £10 was given.

935. Was that £10 for Ryan or for you?—It would be for me.

936. What did Cunningham say to that?—He said it would be got after the election.

937. Was Ryan satisfied with that?—He was, sir.

938. He was?—He was.

939. Did he not give back the money?—Ryan gave it back.

940. Was he satisfied when Cunningham told him the £10 would be got after the election?—It didn't please him altogether. I wasn't pleased well with it either. I thought he ought to give it at once.

941. If he paid the £10 down, then would you and Ryan have voted for Mr. Munster?—No; I don't think we would.

942. Why would you not—on getting £60 from him would you not have voted for Mr. Munster?—We were pledged to Mr. O'Beirne.

943. Do you mean to say you would take £60 from Mr. Munster and vote against him?—I would not.

944. If you got the £10 from Cunningham that day after having the £50, would you have voted for Mr. Munster?—No, I would vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

945. Notwithstanding getting the £60: did you not tell me you would not vote against Mr. Munster if you took his money?—Ay, if I took it.

946. I ask you if you got the £60 from Mr. Munster, would you have voted for him?—I ought, in justice.

947. At any rate you were not satisfied with his promise to pay the money after the election?—No.

948. And you handed back the £50, or Ryan did?—Yes.

949. And did Cunningham give back the receipt?—Oh, yes, he did.

950. What was done with the receipt?—It was torn up.

951. Was it torn up then and there?—Yes.

952. Ryan told us he got £60 from Mr. O'Beirne afterwards?—He got £60 for the use of his house.

953. And he and you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

954. Had you any talk with him since about that £60?—I knew he got it, and there was no more about it.

955. Were you to get any share of it?—I didn't get it.

956. Were you to get it?—There was no agreement. I left it all to his own good will. I didn't claim it, and I left it all to him.

957. Did you not tell me that Ryan said to Cunningham that the £10 were for you?—He did, for certain.

958. If there was no petition here, and if there was nothing after the election, would you not have got a share of that money?—I don't think I would get a fraction of it. There is the candid truth. Some people are very fond of money.

959. Are you living with Ryan still?—Yes.

960. And good friends with him?—Oh, yes.

961. And you never asked him for the £10?—Never.

962. You say you got £50 at the election of 1865?—Yes.

963. What did you get at the election before that in 1859 when you voted for Mr. Lanigan?—I have no recollection of getting anything in Mr. Lanigan's time.

964. Did you ever get anything from Sir Timothy O'Brien?—No, indeed, not a stiver.

965. Did you ever get anything from Mr. O'Beirne?—Never.

966. Then, the only elections at which you got anything were the elections of 1865 and 1868?—Yes, as far as my retention goes.

967. Did you hear of any other persons getting money in 1865?—I declare I could not name them. I don't meddle in other people's business at all. I was always very circumspect in that.

968. I want to know if you heard any talk amongst your neighbours about money going in 1865?—There was some talk of it, but I never took any notice of their names, or anything that way.

969. Did you hear talk of the people in the Commons getting it?—I did, but I didn't take any particular note of it.

SECOND DAY.
October 5.

Michael Murnane.

970. But you did not take any particular note of it?—No.

971. Did you hear talk of any persons in the town getting it?—Yes.

972. Would you tell me the names of any of them?—Indeed I could not.

973. In '68, the last election, did you hear talk of any persons getting money?—I did, but I couldn't name them.

974. That is not long ago; a man even with a bad memory would think of that?—I am old now, and my intellect is failing.

975. Try and think of any one that you heard that got money in '68?—I cannot name them: I cannot indeed, sir.

976. Did you hear of any money to the Commons people in '68?—Yes, it was always thought they got it, and known they got it, by report.

977. Was it known that they got it in '68?—Of course they did.

978. Who did you hear gave it to them in '68?—I could not tell you that.

979. Was it Mr. Munster or Mr. O'Beirne?—I don't know which.

980. Who was it that used to manage the Commons people best?—Mr. John Coman was agent over them, and he had power I suppose that way.

981. If I was coming down here to try an election, and asked you who would manage the Commons people best, who would you tell me?—They are a people in themselves, that it would be hard to judge, hard to control.

982. Who is Mr. Coman: is he connected with the town of Cashel?—He is.

983. What is he?—He is agent to the Town Commissioners.

984. Have you not any other name you would tell me?—No.

985. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You pay Ryan something by the year for living and boarding in his house?—I do, sir.

986. How much do you pay him?—I pay him at the rate of £20 a year.

987. You say that £10 of the £60 was intended for you, at least by the man who gave it?—Yes.

988. I suppose your brother-in-law was not so hard on you as to make you pay the £20 a year since he got this £10 intended for you?—It went all the same.

989. He did not allow you anything for it?—No.

990. Did he make you pay just the same?—Just the same, sir.

Michael Coffey was called but did not appear.

Michael Keeffe.

Michael Keeffe recalled and resworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

991. How long have you been living in Cashel?—Since I was born, sir.

992. You have been at a great many elections?—Not many, sir.

993. You have not a vote?—No, sir.

994. Were you employed by any person at the last election?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

995. What were you to do for him?—Canvass, and go as a messenger.

996. Was that all you were to do?—Yes.

997. To canvass the votes, and ascertain who would vote for him?—Yes.

998. When were you employed for him?—When he came first to Cashel in '68.

999. When did he come in '68?—Early in October.

1000. And you acted for him at the election of '65?—I did.

1001. And acted for him in '59?—I did.

1002. Was he ever a candidate at any election before '59?—Not to my knowledge, sir, since that time against Sir Timothy O'Brien.

1003. Was not that in '57?—I think it was.

1004. From the first you were acting for Mr. O'Beirne?—From the first time he came to Cashel.

1005. When he came to Cashel in October last, where did you see him?—At Dunn's hotel.

1006. Did he send for you?—I was there before him when he came, and I put in his traps.

1007. What did he say to you?—He asked me how Cashel was going on, and I told him very well.

1008. Did you ask him to employ you?—No, sir; he knew I was to be employed, and I knew I was.

1009. How did you know?—By letter from him.

1010. When did you get the letter from him?—About two months before that.

1011. Only one letter?—Only one.

1012. Had you written to him before that?—I wrote to him for a balance that was due to me.

1013. How much was the balance?—£15.

1014. From the election of '65?—Yes.

1015. Did he send you the £15?—He did.

1016. Was that after the dissolution of Parliament?—It was.

1017. When you knew there would be a new election?—I think so, sir.

1018. Where is the letter you got from him?—I believe it is at home at the house; I didn't bring it.

1019. Go down and bring that letter, and all the letters you have got?—I will, sir.

1020. Have you any other papers?—No, sir.

1021. Have you more than one letter of Mr. O'Beirne's?—I have several letters from him.

1022. Bring up every letter of his you have with you?—Yes, sir.

1023. Have you them in a box or desk?—I think they are in a tin small box.

1024. And that is amongst them?—It ought, sir.

1025. Bring up the tin box, and you can get the letter out of it here?—

Michael Maloughney.

Michael Maloughney sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

1026. Were you employed in Cashel at the last election?—Yes, sir.

1027. Who employed you?—Only employed: no money in question.

1028. Who employed you?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

1029. Was there any agreement between you?—No agreement in the world, sir.

1030. Had you known Mr. O'Beirne before the last election?—Yes, sir.

1031. When you met him first did he send for you, or did you go to him?—I went to Dunn's hotel the night he came there.

1032. Without his sending for you?—Yes, sir.

1033. What passed when you went in?—There were a few gentlemen of the town there, and they went in and they were talking there. I went there and asked was Mr. O'Beirne there, and he called me up.

1034. You went up then?—Yes.

1035. What occurred then?—Nothing but to sit down there a few hours.

1036. Did you tell him anything?—I did, sir.

1037. What was it?—About Cunningham and the way he was going on with the voters.

1038. What did Cunningham say?—He met two voters in the streets.

1039. What were their names?—Mr. Thomas Murphy of Lowergate and Mr. Patrick Sullivan of Boherclaugh.

1040. This was Pat Cunningham?—Yes.

1041. What did Pat Cunningham say about money?—He came to them and said what way had they a notion of going, that Mr. Munster was after lodging £6,000 to the credit of Michael Laffan, and all they wanted was a way to know how to give it.

1042. Did you hear him canvassing then for Mr. Munster?—He said no more than that, and he was going on that way a few times. There was a man named Fogarty who came up to the three of us.

1043. What Fogarty was that?—That was Roger Fogarty of Lady's-well-street.

1044. What happened then?—He parted him. They were not with us at all. When he seen those two men and myself together he parted Fogarty, and Fogarty went another way, and Cunningham came back and stood with the three of us then.

1045. Were you employed in the election of 1865?—I was, sir.

1046. By whom?—Michael Laffan sent to the house for me two or three times. I wouldn't go to him. The day Mr. O'Beirne was coming to town in 1865 he sent for me.

1047. For whom was Laffan acting then?—For Mr. Lanigan.

1048. What happened when he sent for you?—He sent for me and I went to him. "I want to employ you," he says, "for this election." "Very good," says I.

1049. Did he employ you?—"I suppose," says I, "you are going to give a great deal of money?"

1050. Did you ask him what for?—No, but I said to him, "I suppose you are going to give a great deal of money?" "Oh," said he, "we have whips of that." Then he desired me go into a drawing-room at the right hand side of the hall. His own father who was acting for Mr. Lanigan was at the other side. He left me in the room about a quarter of an hour. There were other parties in the other room with the father.

1051. Were you engaged to act?—After that I was called in, when these parties were done. They were parties he was after employing.

1052. Who were they?—They were John Meenahan, Mr. Canovan, and, if I don't mistake, Mr. Hourigan, but I can't say who the third man was.

1053. Are those men voters?—None of them are voters. When they were done they were let out the door. I saw them passing the window in the side of the street. Then I was called in.

1054. What occurred then?—Then I was engaged.

1055. For what sum?—For £20.

1056. What was the £20 for?—For acting at the election, canvassing, doing everything I could, and looking round. Himself and his father were there then.

1057. Do you mean by "looking round" watching the people of the opposite side?—The voters, sir.

1058. How did your father vote at that election?—He voted for Mr. O'Beirne, sir. At that time when I went down I had two brothers that were playing in the band, and they were going to meet Mr. O'Beirne at the same time. This was in '65.

1059. Were your brothers then voters?—No, sir. I went to Mr. Laffan, and he said, "You can come up now and again; any news you have you can tell me; let no one see you coming in and we will settle these affairs between ourselves."

1060. Your father voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes; I came down and told my brothers I was employed by Mr. Laffan for Mr. Lanigan. They said, if anything happened them I would be the cause of it. With that then I didn't stir out of the town that day. Mr. Laffan asked me what way were the minds of the Lowergate people. "You know well," said I, "every man in the Lowergate is for Mr. O'Beirne." "Then," said he, "the butchers are not." "Oh," said I, "they are only a small body."

1061. Whom did they support at that election?—They supported Mr. Munster. Then I stood in the street. I said, "'Tis better for ye not to play at all, and don't get yourselves hurt."

1062. You got paid £25 by Mr. Lanigan at the last election?—Yes, sir. I didn't get a halfpenny; I was promised it.

1063. Do you remember being examined before Baron Fitzgerald?—I do, sir.

1064. Did you then state you were paid £25 for the election of '65?—I was not paid it, but it was sent to my father, and sent to the house to him.

1065. Did your father keep it?—He did, sir.

1066. Do you live with your father?—I live with my father.

1067. Did Mr. Lanigan know that your father was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne when he engaged you?—I never see Mr. Lanigan at all, but Mr. Laffan.

1068. Did Mr. Laffan know your father was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He did not, sir.

1069. Was it after the election was over the £25 was sent?—Long before it, sir.

1070. Then it was before your father had voted for Mr. O'Beirne that it was sent?—This last time, sir.

1071. No, but in '65?—'Tis the last election I am talking of £25. It was due since the election before.

1072. Was not Mr. Laffan acting for Mr. Lanigan?—Yes, sir.

1073. Was it not on behalf of Mr. Lanigan that you were engaged, and promised the £20 in '65?—Yes.

1074. Was it not for him you were engaged to work?—I never worked for him a day; I was engaged for him.

1075. You did not do anything for Mr. Lanigan?—No, and I was not paid anything by him.

1076. When was the £25 paid to your father?—The very instant Mr. O'Beirne came to town this last time.

1077. Who sent you the money?—I could not say, sir.

1078. Whom did your father vote for?—The last election for Mr. O'Beirne.

1079. How did the money come to your father?—I don't know whether he gave it to him or not, only he told me he got the money.

1080. Did he not tell you who gave it to him?—I know it was Mr. O'Beirne gave it to him.

1081. Did you say anything to Mr. Laffan about not being paid the £25 promised?—No, but Cunningham might know it was due to me, for Cunningham was employed by Mr. O'Beirne at the election before.

1082. Is your father in Cashel?—He is, sir.

1083. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You swear that the entire of that £20 was due to you in '68?—It was paid before the election of '68, sir.

1084. It was due about a month before the election?—Yes, sir.

1085. In your examination at the trial of the election petition here, were you asked, "Do you swear there was no balance due to you at the last election," and did you say "No"?—No, sir, I didn't swear there was a balance due since the last election, but it was paid, sir.

1086. Did you say one word about the £25 being paid to your father?—I didn't know it until he told me.

1087. When did you first learn that your father got that £25?—At the time of the election.

1088. Did you know at the time of the election petition?—I did, sir.

1089. Did you tell it then?—I did, sir, distinctly; I swore that I was paid it.

1090. That you were paid it?—I swore that it was paid.

1091. Where is your father?—He is in the Lowergate, sir.

1092. Do you know of any other money paid during the election of 1868?—I do.

1093. What money?—Carroll got £35 for his vote.

1094. Anybody else?—I know Michael Coffey got some money.

SECOND DAY.
October 5.
Michael Maloughney.

1095. Anybody else?—I don't know of anybody else.

1096. You were engaged in this election?—I was.

1097. And you were walking about the streets trying to pick up all the information you could?—That was my business.

1098. And you were then hunting up evidence for the election petition?—No, sir.

1099. Did you hear of any other men getting money at the election, except Coffey and Carroll?—I was witness to money between Carroll and Mr. Munster, and the argument; Mr. Munster wanting to say it was for taking his house, and Carroll acknowledged before me he didn't take his house.

1100. Did you hear of any other money given to any one?—No, but I was in the street the night of the 16th November, and that was the night the money was given out at Corcoran's hotel.

1101. Who was giving out that money?—I couldn't tell who was inside. When Carroll got the money that night, he went up to Mr. Pierce Grace with the £35. I just walked up the street, and Carroll was right before me, and says I want to see Mr. Grace. He had the £35 in an envelope, and Mr. Coman's name on it. I went over to Mr. O'Beirne's then and said a few words to him, and he told me to go out, and then word came in that Carroll had the money.

1102. Did you hear that any other money was given except that to Carroll?—Coffey, sir.

1103. Did you hear of any man except Carroll getting money that night at Corcoran's hotel?—I did, Pat Maher, sir. We went to Pat Maher, and Carroll told him, "Pat, I got the money." "Och, blood and ages!" says Pat, "hold on; I'll go in too," says he. With that Pat Maher and Carroll went in, and I went up the street.

1104. What have you to say about a man named Geary?—I was in his house.

1105. Did you hear anything about him?—I did not.

1106. Did you hear of any other man getting money that night or any other night?—No, except Coffey; I seen a man with him.

1107. Had you any money during the election?—No, sir.

1108. Or a cheque?—Never handled a cheque or money during the election.

1109. Or anything of the nature of a promissory note, or bill, or anything of that kind?—No, sir.

1110. MR. GRIFFIN.—What was the sum paid to your father in 1868?—£25, sir.

1111. It was £20 you agreed with Mr. O'Beirne for in '65?—Yes, on conditions that my brothers went, they would get as much more, and they wouldn't stop.

1112. How did your father come to get £25 instead of £20, if it was paid for you?—Sure that is Mr. Lanigan's £20.

1113. It was Mr. Laffan that promised you £20?—Yes.

1114. With whom did you make the subsequent agreement for £25?—I made no agreement. It was my father and brothers went in, and Mr. Johnson said he would give them £25.

1115. And Mr. Johnson was agent for Mr. O'Beirne?—I couldn't say; but he was acting for him.

1116. Was that in '65?—In '65. Mr. Johnson said that he would see me all right.

1117. Were your father and brothers with Mr. Johnson in '65?—Yes.

1118. And it was in consequence of what occurred between Mr. Johnson and yourself that your father got £25?—Yes.

1119. You refused to go for Mr. Lanigan after that?—Yes, because I was in dread.

1120. What money did your father get in '65?—I couldn't tell you, sir.

1121. Did he not tell you what he got?—No, sir.

1122. Was there no talk in the family about what was going on?—No, sir.

1123. Did you not ask what you were to get?—No; all he told me was to get £20 from Mr. Munster and Mr. Lanigan.

1124. Do you not believe your father got money in '65?—I wouldn't swear it.

1125. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did your father ever vote for Mr. John Lanigan?—He did once, sir, when there was not another man there. He was pledged to him.

1126. When was Mr. Lanigan a candidate when there was no person opposing him?—I believe the election before he——

1127. What year?—I don't know was it in '59 or what year.

1128. And there was a poll and your father voted for Mr. Lanigan?—He did, sir.

1129. You said that on the 16th November you were in the street at night. Whom did you see going in and out of Corcoran's?—I saw different voters.

1130. Tell me who they were?—I saw Cunningham's father going in with Mr. Flynn.

1131. What Flynn?—Mr. Flynn that lives in Johnstreet.

1132. Did you not see him going in with other persons?—No; but I seen the other persons going in two by two.

1133. Whom did you see going in?—I saw Robert Cashin going in.

1134. Whom else did you see going in?—There were so many I couldn't remember. There was Michael Noonan and different boys, and there were men that had no votes bringing them in. I know the whole of them, but can't bring them to my recollection.

1135. Name some other persons who were going in?—I couldn't go too near the door for they were murdering one another in the street. I should stand near where the Peelers were.

1136. And you saw people going in?—When the Peelers would come near the door I was sure to be alongside of them.

1137. Whom else did you see going in?—I can't bring to my mind their names.

1138. How long was Maher in?—About three quarters of an hour.

1139. How much did you get from Mr. O'Beirne for the last election?—Nothing at all, sir.

1140. The £25 was for '65?—For '65.

1141. Did you work for nothing at the last election?—I knew he was a gentlemen, and would see me all right.

1142. Did you ever make application to him since?—No application.

1143. Do you expect anything from him?—I don't expect it now.

1144. Why?—Because it would be too bad to look to a beaten man for money.

1145. Did you not fulfil your service?—I did, but I don't expect payment now.

1146. Were your brothers engaged in the last election?—No, but they were engaged in '65.

1147. Were they as active for Mr. O'Beirne in '68 as they were in '65?—No; there was one of them in America.

1148. How many brothers had you in '65?—Four brothers, but one of them was a young fellow; he is dead.

1149. Then you had two brothers in '68?—No, but one; the other was in America.

1150. Did your father get anything from Mr. O'Beirne in '68?—No, sir, never went near the house only one night he was sent for and went up.

1151. Did he tell you what he was sent for on that night?—They were sent for for nothing at all.

1152. Did he tell you what he was sent for on that night?—All the voters were assembled there that night.

1153. Did he tell you what he was sent for on that night?—I knew well myself what he was sent for.

1154. Did he tell you?—He did: that all the voters were there, and Mr. O'Beirne wanted to see the strength of his voters.

1155. Whom did your father tell you he got the £25 from?—From Mr. O'Beirne.

1156. From Mr. O'Beirne himself?—I think so.

1157. Do you recollect what your father told you about it?—All he told me was that he got it.

1158. Did he show you the money?—He did not.

1159. Is your father's name William?—Yes, sir.

Michael Keeffe recalled; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

1160. Did you examine the tin box?—I did, sir.

1161. What was in it?—A lot of papers belonging to the agent. I examined them carefully, and there was nothing belonging to Mr. O'Beirne.

1162. Why did you not comply with the direction to bring the tin box without examining it?—There were too many papers belonging to other parties, sir.

1163. Where did you get these letters?—In the wooden box, not in the tin box.

1164. Is the letter there that you mentioned before you went away?—It is, sir [handed in letters]. There were no communications concerning voting between Mr. O'Beirne and me, excepting them two letters.

1165. You canvassed for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

1166. Was there any agreement about what you were to be paid?—£20.

1167. For canvassing the voters?—Yes, and going of messages during the election.

1168. Was that agreed the night you took his traps into the hotel?—Yes, sir.

1169. And you were to get it up to the election?—Yes, on the day of the declaration.

1170. You were acting for him in '65?—For the last thirteen years.

1171. How much did you get for what you did for him in '65?—I think £20.

1172. And he gave you the same terms in '68?—Yes.

1173. Did he tell you that night "you will get £20 for canvassing"?—I told him Mr. Laffan sent for me, and promised me a handsome sum, and that I would not go with Mr. Laffan. He asked me what did I think I would get from Mr. Laffan. I told him he didn't name a sum, but would see me well paid. He turned on me and said "for your services and messages I will give you £20 for this election," and I was satisfied.

1174. Whom did you canvass?—All the voters that I could see. I know the greater part of the voters.

1175. Did you get a list?—No.

1176. Did you go to the Commons?—I did.

1177. Did Mr. O'Beirne pay you the £20?—His valet paid me.

1178. What is the valet's name?—Henry Raven.

1179. When did he give it to you?—He gave it to me in three drafts. He paid me £5 twice, and after the declaration of the poll I was paid £10 more by the valet again, Mr. O'Beirne being gone home at that time.

1180. This was all in '68?—In '68.

1181. Was that all the money you got for the election of '68?—That was all.

1182. For any purpose?—Oh, yes, I did, for several purposes.

1183. All you were entitled to, for your services, was £20?—£20.

1184. And your claim, on that head, has been discharged?—Yes.

1185. Did you do for him what you contracted?—As far as ever I could go.

1186. Did you canvass the Commons people?—I did, sir.

1187. Did you meet with many refusals?—Well, I didn't, sir. There were twenty-nine, I think, of the Commons people altogether that pledged to Mr. O'Beirne.

1188. Did you go round among the Commons people?—Yes, in procession; we went round and there were meetings held.

1189. Did you go round canvassing them?—I did. I met the most of them in town and asked them.

1190. Did many refuse you?—Not many.

1191. Some said they had not their minds made up, I suppose?—As far as I can recollect I don't recollect them. We got the chief part of the Commons.

1192. Did any persons tell you that they had not their minds made up?—I heard it in parties who didn't vote for him, and I didn't canvass one of them.

1193. You did not try to induce them?—I did not, sir; 'twas no use.

1194. How much money did you get from Mr. O'Beirne on account of the election of 1868?—£20.

1195. Did you get any other money?—I got money to pay a mob.

1196. How much did you get to pay the mob?—I couldn't exactly say. It can be ascertained. He came to town about the 10th October, and from that until he was declared, about six weeks.

1197. What can be ascertained?—The first night there was a mob hired 'twasn't I paid them.

1198. Who paid them the first night?—Canovan and Meenehan: 132 men at 2*s.* 6*d.* a head.

1199. How much did you get for those you paid?—I would return my list to his valet.

1200. Did you get £5 or £500?—To the best I could ascertain or recollect, I got something about near £150 or £200.

1201. You spoke about the lists you made out; what were those lists?—Men at 2*s.* 6*d.* a day agreed for.

1202. What did you do with the lists?—I returned them each night to his valet.

1203. Where?—At the hotel.

1204. Two-and-sixpence a day was the payment for the men employed in the mobs?—Yes.

1205. Did you expend the whole of that £150 or £200 in the payment of these men?—I don't say it was that exactly, but only a rough calculation to come at it or about it.

1206. Did you apply all you got in the payment of those men?—In the payment of the men and the women.

1207. And to nothing else?—To nothing else.

1208. Did you do nothing at all with the money you got but to pay it out to the men and women?—Nothing else except to pay for the orders for liquor. That was exclusive of the £150. There are bills over for that yet.

1209. Who was to pay for it?—I don't know.

1210. Which was it you or the people that drank the whiskey that were to pay for it?—I suppose 'tis me; it is to be paid for yet.

1211. How will you pay for it?—Of course if I am pursued for it. They are only small bills, sir.

1212. Do you know how much you owe for this election?—I don't, sir.

1213. Did you keep an account?—I did not, sir. I never gave more than an order at each time for two gallons of spirits.

1214. Who desired you to order the spirits?—Mr. O'Beirne's valet.

1215. Did he say who would pay for it?—He did not.

1216. Whom did you order the liquor from?—Different parties in town.

1217. How many persons?—Four I think, sir.

1218. Who were they?—There's Joseph Ryan, Pat Maher, Michael Dwyer, and Pat Condon.

1219. Any person else?—Not to my knowledge, sir.

1220. Did not a man named Grace get an order?—Yes, Richard Grace got a very small order.

1221. I suppose you gave orders in the same way at the election of 1865?—I did, sir.

1222. Were those orders paid?—I dare say they were, for if they were not they would look to me for them.

1223. And they did not look to you?—They didn't.

1224. Did not some of the publicans come to you at the election of 1868 for your custom in giving these orders?—Never to my knowledge. I went unexpected to them; they never invited me.

1225. Did you not go to the same persons as you did in 1865?—I did.

1226. You would not give the custom to men that would vote against Mr. O'Beirne?—Of course I would not.

1227. And any man that would support Mr. O'Beirne, you would order the liquor from him?—It was only a small order.

1228. Any publican that had voted for Mr. O'Beirne, would you not give him the custom of ordering liquor from him?—I give a preference, sir.

1229. Did you receive any money at all from Mr. O'Beirne himself?—No, never: through his valet.

1230. You received the payment of the £150 from the valet?—As far as my knowledge can lead me it comes to that.

1231. But you are certain you received no money from Mr. O'Beirne himself?—Except my own salary, the £20.

1232. Was it by cheques or in cash the valet paid you?—The last £10, it was in notes he paid me; I got a cheque for £5, and notes for the other £5.

1233. How was the £150 paid?—'Twas all in notes.

1234. Do you know of any money passing on the other side at the last election?—On my oath I don't, sir.

1235. Did you hear that any money passed?—I did, sir.

1236. Did you hear who was getting it?—I heard they were getting it at both sides.

1237. Who did you hear was giving it?—I could hear both sides were giving it.

1238. Who did you hear was giving it on Mr. Munster's side?—I couldn't swear.

1239. Try and recollect?—If I could recollect I would.

1240. Who did you hear was giving it on Mr. Munster's side?—I heard Mr. Pat Laffan, that is gone away now, offered to give money to several of the Commons people, particularly the women.

1241. Whom did you hear Pat Laffan offered money to in the Commons?—I couldn't swear any particularly.

1242. Did you not inquire?—I did, sir.

1243. Whom did you hear he was offering it to?—I could not swear, sir.

1244. Do you swear that?—I do honestly.

1245. Whom did you inquire from?—I don't know who I inquired from—every party I met I inquired of it.

1246. Who else did you hear was giving money on behalf of Mr. Munster?—I don't know, sir.

1247. Did you hear Cunningham was giving it?—I heard so, but I don't know to whom.

1248. Who else did you hear was offering money on behalf of Mr. Munster?—I don't know, sir. I heard, but I couldn't name any person.

1249. Did you not hear they were taking houses?—I did.

1250. Did you know what they meant by taking the houses?—I did, of course.

1251. What did it mean?—Tally-rooms, legally.

1252. What do you mean by legally?—The law allows it, I am told; but if it goes beyond a certain number.

1253. How many would be allowed?—Either two or three, I believe.

1254. Were not the tally-rooms to be used?—Of course.

1255. How many tally-rooms did you hear would be required?—I heard three for each candidate.

1256. What was understood by taking a man's house, and never using it?—I couldn't answer that, sir.

1257. You are a native of Cashel, and when you would hear that a man's house was taken for £40—two rooms in it on the eve of an election, and no use made of it—what would you believe to be the object of the man who took it?—My opinion is that I don't think he was right in doing so.

1258. What object had he in giving £40 for nothing?—I can't answer that, sir.

1259. How would the man that got the £40 for the rooms that were not used vote?—I never knew such a case at any election.

1260. If such a case did occur and a man took £40 and voted for the other candidate, what would you think?—I don't think he was an honest man.

1261. And whoever he took the money from you would expect he would vote for that man?—Yes.

1262. If a man lets his rooms to a candidate you expect he would vote for that man?—I think he ought, sir.

1263. You mentioned Condon?—Yes, Patrick Condon, living in the Main-street.

1264. You got orders for liquor to him?—A very few orders.

1265. Did you ever pay for any of these orders?—I did not; they are hanging over still.

1266. Were they written orders?—Verbal.

1267. Did you tell them to put it down in the book?—I didn't; I suppose they did it themselves.

1268. Did you keep any account of how you expended this money?—I should return the list every night to Mr. O'Beirne's servant, and I would not get money unless I did so and my name signed to it.

1269. On what were the lists written that you gave the valet?—On a small slip of paper. I would get money for it at night.

1270. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You have no letter later than these?—No, sir.

1271. This is the last?—The last sir; no communication with Mr. O'Beirne since.

1272. What was the largest sum you paid to any man from the time you heard from Mr. O'Beirne until the election was over?—2*s.* 6*d.*

1273. And you tell me you paid £150 in sums of 2*s.* 6*d.*?—For between six and seven weeks.

1274. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You gave orders to Joseph Ryan, Pat Maher, Michael Dwyer, Pat Condon and Richard Grace?—Yes, sir.

1275. Are any of those men voters?—They are all voters.

1276. What was the largest amount of any of those orders?—I believe there were other parties gave orders, but mine were very small.

1277. I do not mean one night's ordering, but what was the largest amount you heard of any of those men getting?—I think £3 was the highest.

1278. Do you mean to say that none of those men got more than £3?—They may from others; I am only talking of myself.

1279. You gave the preference to the men you expected to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Of course I did, your worship.

Mr. George Richardson.

Mr. George Richardson sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1280. I believe you live in Manchester?—I do.

1281. You are a solicitor?—Yes.

1282. You say you came over here for no other purpose but to attend at this inquiry?—For no other purpose.

1283. You were appointed an expense agent of Mr. Munster at the last election?—I was.

1284. Did you keep accounts?—Yes, I did.

1285. Did you bring them with you?—I have got a statement of them.

1286. Did you bring the accounts from Manchester with you?—The accounts are here in Cashel.

1287. Had you the accounts in Manchester?—I had no accounts in Manchester.

1288. Where are the accounts?—Mr. Laffan has some and Mr. Biggan others.

1289. Mr. Biggan is your clerk?—Yes.

1290. Has he ceased to be Mr. Munster's secretary?—I believe he has.

1291. Have you collected the accounts?—They are altogether, I believe.

1292. Where?—Some in Mr. Laffan's hands and some in Mr. Biggin's.

1293. Can you give them to me now?—I cannot give you the accounts.

1294. What do you produce?—A statement of my accounts the same as is filed.

1295. Is not this the copy furnished by the secretary to the Commissioners?—It is exactly the same as I have sent in.

1296. Where is the one from which this account is made out?—I do not know.

1297. You made this account out from some materials?—Yes.

1298. Where are the materials from which you made this account out?—They are principally in Cashel.

1299. Are there any of them not in Cashel?—I don't think there are any.

1300. You say these accounts are here, but you have not put them together. I must ask you to collect them, and have them for me by to-morrow morning?—Very well.

1301. You were appointed an agent for election expenses?—Yes.

1302. Do you recollect the date of the order of appointment?—The 14th November, I think.

1303. Are you able to tell me whether any money has been paid on behalf of Mr. Munster at the last election except what passed through your hands?—Not that I am aware of.

1304. Did you hear of any having been paid?—None.

1305. You never heard of any?—Not of any except what passed through my hands.

1306. How soon did you go back to Manchester after the election?—Very soon after; perhaps a day or two after.

1307. And were you over here before the 14th—the day of your appointment?—I think my appointment was made here; I think so, but I am not quite sure.

1308. How did you make the payments?—I made the payments by cheques. I think I made all the payments by cheques.

1309. On what bank?—On the bank here in Cashel.

1310. The National Bank?—Yes.

1311. Then I presume there was a lodgment made to your credit there by Mr. Munster?—Yes, there was.

1312. When was that done?—It was done at the time that I came to Cashel.

1313. To what amount?—At first I drew on his account. It was not exactly lodged in my name in the first instance, but I had authority on the bank and drew on his account.

1314. Subsequently there was an account opened in your own name?—Yes.

1315. Have you the blocks of the cheques that you drew?—I can have them in the morning.

1316. Is this account in your handwriting?—No; it is written by my clerk; but it bears my signature.

1317. Your name is written on an erasure there?—I don't know why that was. It is my clerk's writing. He may have put the date there before I put my name. I don't know why there is an erasure there. It is only an error of some kind.

1318. Is the clerk that wrote this here or in Manchester?—He is in Manchester.

1319. Was this document written in Manchester?—It was written in Manchester.

1320. Was it written from your dictation or did you give him a draft?—It was written from a draft.

1321. Where is that draft?—Well, I don't know where the draft is.

1322. Are all the moneys that were paid in this account paid by you?—They were all not immediately paid by me. They were all paid by cheques by me. Some of them were paid by Mr. Laffan, and he assisted in paying them in that way. They were all paid by my cheques. A great many of them are in small sums.

1323. Has any money been paid since?—I believe some of these accounts mentioned as not being paid have been paid since. I gave authority to Mr. Biggin, my clerk, to draw cheques to pay these.

1324. Will Mr. Biggin be able to tell whether these are paid or not?—He will.

1325. I observe in the first page there are several newspaper bills for advertisements?—I believe they are all paid, but I don't know it as a fact; I believe not for so much as is put down there.

1326. I observe here, "The following persons also claim as follows, but their accounts are disputed and will probably be reduced"?—I believe none of these have been paid.

1327. Will Mr. Biggin be able to tell me that?—He will be able to answer that.

Mr. Edward Henry Biggin sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1328. Do you know if any of the men whose names appear on the second page of this account have been paid since;—I know that persons have been paid since, and I can tell you them all in the morning.

1329. You will let me know in the morning?—Yes.

Mr. George Richardson's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1330. This account was sent from Manchester?—It was.

1331. Were there any vouchers sent with it?—No, the vouchers I had seen at Cashel while here.

1332. And did you not send any vouchers to the sheriff?—I am not quite sure about that. It was sent to Mr. Laffan to be handed to the sheriff, and I believe he sent the vouchers with it.

1333. Are you aware that under the Act of Parliament you are bound to send the vouchers?—Yes.

1334. Did you send any?—I have no doubt they were sent in, because the document was sent to Mr. Laffan to be filed, and he had the vouchers, and I have no doubt he sent them with it.

1335. Was it sent by you from Manchester to the sheriff?—No, but to Mr. Laffan, to be filed with the sheriff.

1336. Then, you do not know what was done with it after it reached Mr. Laffan's hands?—No.

1337. Did you preserve the vouchers yourself?—No.

1338. What did you do with them?—He had all the vouchers, and I suppose he handed them in.

1339. You did not keep any of the vouchers yourself?—No.

1340. Did you see any of those payments made yourself?—I gave cheques for several of them. I gave a cheque to Mr. Laffan for that first money for himself. Then I gave Mrs. Corcoran also a cheque which paid her bill. I gave Mr. Fitzgerald a cheque for that £15.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. George Richardson.

1341. Who disbursed the money entered on the other side—£42, £49, and £155?—That was disbursed out of cheques which I gave to Mr. Laffan to pay these.

1342. Do you know who disbursed those sums?—Mr. Michael Laffan disbursed them.

1343. He was the conducting agent?—He was.

1344. Did you know Mr. Patrick Laffan, his brother?—I did.

1345. I suppose you saw him here several times in connexion with the election?—I did.

1346. Did you give him any money?—No, not any that I am aware of. No, I did not give him any. I gave all the cheques that I drew to his brother, the solicitor.

1347. Do you say generally now, and with a full recollection of the fact, that you did not give any money to any one but Mr. Michael Laffan?—To Mr. Patrick Laffan I gave no money certainly, nor for election expenses, except what I have mentioned, to anybody except Mr. Michael Laffan.

1348. Are you aware that Mr. Patrick Laffan did disburse some money during the election?—I heard it mentioned that he did.

1349. Have you any idea of where that money came from?—I have not, except that he might have disbursed part of the money I handed to his brother.

1350. In any other way you do not know?—No.

1351. Mr. MOLLOY.—You spoke of this account sent to the sheriff being copied by your clerk from a draft?—Yes.

1352. Who wrote out the draft?—I wrote it out myself principally, and it was corrected by Mr. Laffan.

1353. Was the whole of the draft in your handwriting?—It was either in my handwriting or in my clerk's handwriting.

1354. Which was it, you or the clerk, that made out the draft?—I made out the draft from which the account was copied.

1355. Did you preserve it along with the vouchers?—I do not know.

1356. What has become of that draft?—I do not know. I did not think you would want the draft.

1357. Did you ever bring the vouchers to Manchester?—No; I saw them here before I left Cashel.

1358. Was the draft prepared here?—It was partly prepared here and partly prepared in Manchester.

1359. What were the vouchers you had with you in Manchester?—I had no vouchers in Manchester; the vouchers were all left here.

1360. Are you able, looking at the copy you have there, to say what portion of the draft was prepared in Manchester?—I do not know that I can say that exactly.

1361. Are you certain that all the vouchers remained in Ireland, and that none of them were brought to Manchester?—I do not believe one of them was.

1362. For what purpose did you bring the draft over to Manchester?—I took it over generally to settle it, and see what things properly belonged to it. There were other cheques I drew in Cashel for other things which did not belong to the election at all, which, of course, I did not include in this.

1363. You are not able now to say what portion of the draft was made out in Manchester?—I think it was mostly made out in Cashel; there may have been some little correction made afterwards in it.

1364. Was it Mr. Biggin who copied this?—No.

1365. Who is the clerk that copied it?—He is not with me now.

1366. What is his name?—His name is Burke.

1367. What is his Christian name?—Michael.

1368. He had been with you in Manchester?—He was at the time he wrote it.

1369. You gave him a draft to copy?—Yes.

1370. You then sent it over to Mr. Laffan?—Yes.

1371. Did you give directions to Mr. Laffan to send any vouchers along with the account?—I may not have said it in so many words, but Mr. Laffan knew what was the custom.

1372. Did you send the accounts to him to send in with the vouchers to the sheriff?—Quite so.

1373. Had you ever, in your own custody, the vouchers, or did they remain with Mr. Laffan, or Mr. Biggin?—They passed through my hands in Cashel frequently.

1374. But you did not preserve them in your own custody?—I left them with Mr. Laffan.

1375. How do you know but that Mr. Biggin may have some of them?—I heard him say he has some of them. He has paid some of them with my orders since I left.

1376. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you able to give me any information as to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No; I know nothing about him.

Adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1869.

THIRD DAY
October 6
Mr. George Richardson.

Mr. George Richardson recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1377. Have you got the accounts you have spoken of?—I have got the accounts.

1378. Are you able to tell me how much you charged on the entire in Cashel while you were here?—£1,168 7*s.* 1*d.*, and £345 9*s.* 10*d.*

1379. You say that some of those were for matters not connected with the election?—Yes. I can explain all the cheques: Mr. Boyton for his house £40; that is, for Mr. Munster's residence. It is dated October the 15th. Cashel races, £25, same date; and telegraph office, £26.

1380. What was that paid for?—I believe it was towards the expense of establishing a telegraph office here.

1381. You paid those cheques yourself, I understand you to say?—I paid the cheques myself.

1382. Did you give them to the persons to whom they were payable, or hand them to others?—I generally gave them to the individuals themselves, I believe.

1383. Go on?—For purchases at the bazaar, £50.

1384. Who made those purchases?—Half the purchases were made by me, and the other half by Mrs. Leahy.

1385. You made purchases amounting to £25?—Yes.

1386. On what day was the bazaar held here?—Somewhere between the 15th and 27th of October. I think the cheque is dated the 15th.

1387. To whom is the cheque made payable?—It is made payable to myself.

1388. By whom was it indorsed? Who got the cash for it?—It was not indorsed at all. I got the cash without indorsing it.

1389. You say that that £50 represents goods purchased at this bazaar: it was a charitable bazaar, I suppose?—Yes.

1390. What is the institution with which it was connected?—I think it is the Presentation Convent here.

1391. And £25 worth of the goods were purchased by yourself?—£25 by myself and £25 by Mrs. Leahy.

1392. Did you purchase those goods by the directions of anybody?—By the directions of Mr. Munster.

1393. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you recollect the day Mr. Munster came?—He did not come, I think, until it was over.

1394. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Were you here before Mr. Munster?—I was.

1395. And where did Mr. Munster give you the order to purchase those things at the bazaar?—Well, it was either by letter or by order when I saw him in Sheffield before I came over here; I am not sure which; but I know I had his instructions to buy those things—"generally, spend £50 for me at the bazaar."

1396. That is, the entire order to spend £50 was given to you, and you disposed of some of it and Mrs. Leahy of the rest?—Yes, we were together here, his friends.

1397. Of course you heard of this bazaar being about to take place?—Yes, we had had circulars about it: he had a circular about it in Sheffield.

1398. At that time, was Mr. Munster's address published, or was it intended that he was to be a candidate?—It was generally known that he was to be a candidate: whether the address was published I cannot say.

1399. Searching your recollection farther, are you able to say that the direction to purchase that £50 worth of goods was by letter?—I really cannot say. I should think it would be by verbal direction: I should say so.

1400. Did not Mr. Munster live in Sheffield?—He lived in Sheffield and I live in Manchester, but I saw him a very short time—immediately—before I came over to Ireland.

1401. If it was by verbal direction, do you recollect anything more than the simple direction to buy £50 worth?—No, I do not.

1402. Who is Mrs. Leahy?—The wife of Mr. Edmund Leahy who is a friend of Mr. Munster.

1403. Were they stopping in Mr. Munster's house?—I am not quite sure whether it was Mr. or Mrs. Leahy that made the purchases, but it was either the one or the other.

1404. What is the next cheque?—The next is a cheque for £50 which was paid afterwards in small sums. It was paid away in small sums, not being appropriated to the use for which it was drawn.

1405. What is the date of it?—It is dated the 15th October.

1406. What is the date of the cheque for the £50 you expended at the bazaar?—That will be it: the 15th October.

1407. What is the next?—The next is 16th October, £50.

1408. For what purpose was that cheque originally drawn?—It was drawn originally, I believe, to buy a horse, but it was not used for that purpose, because the horse either was not sound, or it was not appropriated to that purpose. It was drawn for it, but not used for it. Parson and Beresford got £9 11*s.* 6*d.* for printing addresses. R. O'Donnell, by Mr. Laffan, got £10. He had something to do with the telegraph office. I am not sure of O'Donnell. Leonard Cartwright, a hotel bill, a young man from Sheffield in Mr. Munster's employment, having nothing to do with the election, £2; Rogers, another messenger from Sheffield, £2; £5 paid to cabmen and others in Cashel, for sundry small things.

1409. Do you speak of those things from your own knowledge?—Yes, certainly, from my own knowledge, these are all my own knowledge. The case of O'Donnell is the only case in which I am at fault. There were hotel bills £4, and the small balance of the £50 remained in my hands until I accounted for it with Mr. Munster, when I squared up with him. I gave various sums to Mr. Michael Laffan, which are here at different dates; the 16th October, £20; 17th, £20; 20th, £75; the 30th, £19; November 2nd, £54 15*s.* 7*d.*; November 2nd, £75; November 9th, £50; November 14th, £50; November 19th, £100; November 23rd, £50; that is the end of Mr. Laffan's cheques.

1410. That is £513 15*s.* 7*d.*?—Exactly, sir.

1411. Were those sums given to Mr. Michael Laffan for expenditure for election purposes?—They were, and for other purposes besides election purposes, such things for instance as the telegraph office and other matters which Mr. Laffan will explain, no doubt.

1412. And this £513 is included in the accounts furnished?—There is a good deal of it included there. The sum of £306 13*s.* 6*d.* is included, beginning with car-drivers, £19 19*s.* 2*d.*, and ending with £155 15*s.* 0*d.* paid to messengers, &c. That makes £306 13*s.* 6*d.* which he accounts for in this account. The rest he will explain, I suppose. That £306 13*s.* 6*d.* forms part of the money handed to Mr. Laffan by my cheques. The rest of it, I believe, was expended in other things, which he will explain. The next cheque is the Dean of Cashel for rent of house in John-street, £15.

1413. Was that house taken in connexion with the election?—No, it was for a residence for Mr. Munster.

1414. What is the next?—Captain Stuart, £25.

1415. Is that in reference to the election?—No, he was a friend who came over to see Mr. Munster during the election, and Mr. Munster paid his travelling expenses. He has no connexion with Cashel at all that I am aware of. On the 20th there is £55 for a horse bought from Dr. Moloney. I don't find that cheque returned amongst the other cheques, therefore I cannot explain how it is not so, but it was given for that purpose by me.

1416. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You did not get back the cheque?—I don't think it is come back from the bank. I do not know whether he got the money or what became of it; it was given by me.

1417. When did you get back the cheques?—Soon afterwards, when the banking account was closed.

1418. They had not got it at the time?—They had not got it, or it is mislaid.

1419. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is the amount of the cheque debited to the account?—I cannot say. I have no banking book.

1420. What is the next?—Mrs. Corcoran, on account, £30, the 20th October. That is for the hotel bill. The next is £20, which Mr. Munster made a present of to my wife. Then there is Cunningham, £30, the 20th October.

1421. Who is Cunningham?—He was an agent here for us. Pat Cunningham, I think his name is.

1422. Did you give that cheque to Cunningham yourself?—I believe I did. Captain Byrne, £25; Mrs. Corcoran another sum of £30, dated 31st October; Mr. White, for advertisements in the Cashel Gazette, £30. The sum of £10 for silver brought over from Manchester.

1423. Do you mean silver coin?—Yes, silver coin—shillings. Mr. Munster wanted change and it was brought over, and a cheque drawn to pay for it. The next, excepting Mr. Laffan's, is 16th November, for a horse.

1424. When you say not referring to Mr. Laffan, do you mean the cheques you have already mentioned?—Yes.

1425. To whom was the cheque given for the horse?—It was handed by me to a party to purchase the horse. It was dated 16th November.

1426. To whom did you give the cheque?—I gave it to Mr. Leahy.

1427. Proceed?—One hundred guineas for myself for my fee for acting as Mr. Munster's agent; Mrs. Corcoran, £30, dated 17th November; the under sheriff on the 20th, £15; two sums of £5 and £6 drawn by myself.

1428. For yourself?—For myself, for my own purposes. Coffey for a house, £20, dated January the 8th.

THIRD DAY.
October 6.
Mr. George Richardson.

1429. That, I suppose, was given by you after your return to Manchester?—It was given when I was here. I came back again and gave a cheque for it.

1430. Proceed?—For small bills for work at Abbeyview, £7 10*s.* 11*d.*, and £16 2*s.* 6*d.*

1431. Did you pay that money yourself or hand it to some person?—I handed these to Mr. Biggin. Mr. Biggin paid these. I handed him the cheques themselves.

1432. Do I understand you to say that you gave these cheques as the election expense agent of Mr. Munster, or in what capacity have you paid these; it was in that way I understood your giving all these cheques?—You wished to know all the cheques I have paid. I am giving you those faithfully. I am explaining to you how they were appropriated.

1433. Go on?—John O'Brien for cars, £6 10*s.* These are all dated the 8th January. All these cheques I am now speaking of are dated the 8th January. Denis O'Kearney for taking care of the court-house during the election, £5; Patrick O'Brien, the telegraph office, £6.

1434. Who is he?—He had something to do with the preparing of the telegraph office, and we thought he ought to have that for his trouble.

1435. Is he the clerk in the telegraph office?—I do not think he is.

1436. Is he a voter?—No, I believe not; it is carpenter work. Thomas Cunningham for cars, £19 12*s.*; Mrs. Corcoran, £168 1*s.* 8*d.*, hotel account; Matthew O'Ryan, for cloth, £6 12*s.*; Mr. Boyton, of Thurles, for cars, £4 5*s.* 9*d.*; Freeman's Journal, £4 13*s.* These are still the 8th of January. All the cheques at that time were 8th January. Nation, £11 16*s.* 6*d.*; Falconer, for printing in Dublin, £4; the Irishman, £12; myself £50; Torr & Co., agents—it is for law money paid to my agents in London, £3 5*s.* 6*d.* That is the entire of the money I paid in cheques.

1437. Did you fill any capacity here but that of expense agent of Mr. Munster?—No.

1438. The entire amount, I think, you told me of those cheques is £1,513 16*s.* 11*d.*?—I gave you two sums that added up to that, I think.

1439. Do you know anything about Michael Ryan being paid a bill for cloth?—I think it would be for some household expenses.

1440. You do not know anything about it?—I was told to pay that cheque.

1441. And in the same way you were told to pay Cunningham a cheque; to give Cunningham £30, and you gave it?—Mr. Laffan told me it was right to pay him £30, and I paid it to him.

1442. And several of those cheques that you have told me of, you gave in the same way, not seeing exactly their direct application?—I cannot say that. I believe they all found their destination; principally I gave them to the parties almost in every instance, except these last cheques, which I handed to Mr. Biggan, and he paid them away.

1443. Is that all the explanation you have to give us?—That is all, I think, that I have to give you.

1444. I have to ask you, in very general terms, but of course, you will understand the sense in which the question is put to you, if you know of any application of money during the election for any of the purposes into which we are directed to inquire here?—No, nothing whatever. Oh, by the by, I should mention, in addition to those claims that I have mentioned, I believe another newspaper has been paid, and that a man named O'Sullivan has received £100.

1445. Who is O'Sullivan?—He is a shopkeeper in town; it was for a debt.

1446. Did you pay it?—I did not pay it.

1447. Are you speaking of your own knowledge?—You asked me if I knew of anything else. I have heard that that was paid.

[Mr. Munster here hands a letter to the witness.]

1448. Read the letter?—It is signed "Michael O'Sullivan."

"Cashel, March 8th, '69.

"SIR,—From the great pressure of my commercial creditors, I am reluctantly forced to apply to you for the payment of my bill. Sir, before I do so allow me to say that I was one of your warmest and most zealous advocates, and, indeed, were it not for the pressure that is placed on me, I would not have applied now or annoyed you so far. For my vote I have never got nor will I ever take anything; but my bill of treating being legitimate, and the judge, in his report, not having made any comment on that matter as being extensive, I am of opinion, sir, with all respect to your superior knowledge, that the payment of my bill is legitimate, even pending a Royal Commission of Inquiry. Sir, my bill was supplied by orders from Mr. Pat Laffan, and the understanding from Mr. Michael Laffan that I was to supply drink where I thought it necessary; and having a great influx of, recourse to, and influence on a great number of voters both in the Commons and in the town, that, coupled with the circumstance of being your most warm advocate, naturally caused my bill to be £98 4*s.* 4*d.* Sir, hoping you won't regard this as being obtrusive or doubtful of your honor's justice,

"I have the honour to be, sir,

"Your devoted and faithful servant,

"MICHAEL O'SULLIVAN.

"Henry Munster, esq., John-street House.

"P.S.—Sir, this is written in the strictest privacy, no living being knowing anything of it save myself, and would never have been written were it not for the circumstance of being pressed myself to pay for a puncheon of whiskey and other drinks got last October, only three months being the usual time given. Sir, again apologizing,

"I am, faithfully yours, &c.,

"M. O'S."

1449. Is there anything else, Mr. Richardson, you can communicate?—I have nothing more to communicate.

1450. If we have to telegraph to you to Manchester I suppose you will return again?—Yes.

[Mr. Munster suggests that the witness should be asked, in order to clear up about the missing cheque, if the cheques were ever in Mr. Munster's possession before that one was found to be missing.]

1451. Were those cheques in Mr. Munster's hands before the time when that cheque was found to be missing?—I got the cheques from Mr. Biggin, and it was missing then.

Mr. Michael Joseph Laffan.

Mr. Michael Joseph Laffan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1452. I wish to know where your brother Mr. Patrick Laffan is?—I cannot say.

1453. When did you hear last of him?—I heard from him some four or five weeks ago.

1454. Not since four or five weeks ago?—Not since.

1455. Did you get a communication from him then by letter?—I should think so.

1456. Are you not sure?—I believe I have the letter. I don't know whether he wrote the letter or another brother I have; but I am sure I got a letter from him four or five months ago. I recollect he asked for money.

1457. Where was he then?—He was in Dublin.

1458. What was his address then?—His address was 5, Nelson-street.

1459. Do you know his address at present?—I do not.

1460. And have you not heard from him since that time?—I have not heard from him since that time.

1461. Are you able to give the Commissioners any assistance in discovering where your brother is?—I can express a belief of it; but beyond that I cannot go. If I am asked my belief I would say he is in Dublin.

1462. At 5, Nelson-street?—No, I don't say that.

1463. Did he write to you from 5, Nelson-street?—Yes, at that time.

1464. What has occurred since to make you believe he is not there?—Because my brother, the doctor, left that place, with whom he was staying.

1465. Then you have another brother, a doctor?—Yes.

1466. What is your brother the doctor's name?—Thomas.

1467. What is his present residence?—I don't know; he only left this town—on Saturday night, I think it was.

1468. He only what?—Left Cashel. He was staying with his father during the vacation; with me or with his father here.

1469. You say he is a doctor?—Yes.

1470. Does he practice in Dublin?—I cannot say he practices; he is connected with the medical school of the Catholic University.

1471. Does he hold an appointment in connexion with that?—Yes; he is a Demonstrator of Anatomy in the school, and he is the Registrar for the Medical department.

1472. I suppose he is a young man and has not got a settled residence in Dublin?—No, he has not got a residence.

1473. Have you any reason to believe he is gone back to Nelson-street?—I have no reason to believe whether he has or has not; but if the place is open to him it is very likely he would go to it.

1474. Have you or your family any friend or acquaintance that you know received any communication from your brother Patrick?—Not to my knowledge.

1475. To your belief?—I believe the doctor, that is Thomas, has had a communication from him.

1476. Do you believe that any person in Cashel has had a communication from him?—I should say not.

1477. Do you know if any person in Cashel has communicated with him; I do not want to confine you to strict legal knowledge, I want every assistance from you by belief or otherwise, not limiting yourself to what comes strictly within your knowledge?—I don't know, and have no reason to form any belief that anybody has communicated with him.

1478. Is your brother Patrick a medical student?—He is.

1479. And is he pursuing his studies?—Pursuing his studies.

1480. Do you know if he is attending any school of medicine in Dublin?—The Catholic University School of Medicine.

1481. Then, in short, your belief at present is that your brother Patrick is in Dublin?—That is my general belief.

1482. Will you have the kindness to write to your brother Thomas, and see if he will spare himself the necessity of being obliged to come here. It may be inconvenient. It may be also attended with expense to him, because it is quite optional with us to give expenses or not. Perhaps he would get your brother Patrick to come down?—I shall write to him.

1483. Perhaps you have read or heard what I have said here as to our power of adjournment, and that any person who persists in staying away will not be doing right?—Yes.

1484. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do I understand you to say your brother Patrick was living with your brother Thomas when you last heard?—Yes.

1485. When did your brother Thomas come last to Cashel?—He came in the latter end of July or the beginning of August.

1486. And up to the time he came had Patrick been living with him?—I believe so.

William Maloughney sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

William Maloughney.

1487. Are you the father of the young man who was examined yesterday?—I am, sir.

1488. He told us you got £25 before the election of 1868. I wish you to tell us from whom you got it?—The last election! I didn't get anything, sir, at the last election.

1489. Did you get £25 some short time before the last election?—No. Oh, I did, sir! about six weeks or two months before the election.

1490. Attend to my questions and be careful how you answer them?—I will, sir.

1491. You say that six weeks or two months before the last election you got a sum of £25?—I did, sir.

1492. From whom did you get it—from Mr. Johnson?—Oh no, sir, but from Mr. O'Beirne's man.

1493. What is his name?—I don't know his name; his valet that he had above in the house where he lodged, above at Mr. Dunn's.

1494. How were you paid that money; was it in notes?—It was, sir, in notes.

1495. Where were you paid it?—Above at Mr. Dunn's.

1496. In the house was it?—Yes, sir, in the house.

1497. In what part of the house?—On the lobby, sir, on the stairs.

1498. What time of the day was it when you were paid it?—I believe it was about one or two o'clock, sir, but I am not sure what time of the day it was.

1499. Previously to getting that money had you been with Mr. O'Beirne?—I had not, sir, I wasn't more than once or twice there all through.

1500. Did you see Mr. O'Beirne before you got that money, I did, sir.

1501. Was it the same day?—No, sir, but some days before.

1502. What carried you to Mr. Dunn's house that day?—I went up that way, sir; I often go up that way.

1503. What carried you into the house?—To know would I see Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

1504. What did you want to see him about?—About that money that he owed me, sir.

1505. Had you spoken to him the day you saw him before about it?—I wasn't speaking to him at all about it up to that time.

1506. Had you ever written to him?—No, sir.

1507. Do you mean to say you never had spoken or written to him about this money until the day you got it?—Firm and flat, until the day I got it, I didn't.

1508. Did you speak to anybody else, or send any message?—I did not, sir.

1509. Did your son?—I don't know that he did. I know he didn't speak to him.

1510. How had the valet come to bring you the money if you did not speak to Mr. O'Beirne?—My son may have spoken to him.

1511. Do you mean to say you never spoke or got any one to speak, or write, or send a message to him?—Except my son may speak to him.

1512. To whom did your son speak?—To Mr. O'Beirne.

1513. Did he tell you he spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about being paid that money?—He did, sir, about being paid it; but when I got the money I didn't let him know anything about it for some days after getting it.

1514. Is it the son that was here yesterday that told you he spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about it?—Yes, sir.

1515. His name is Michael, I believe?—Yes, sir.

1516. How many times were you with Mr. O'Beirne before you got the money from his valet?—I was once or twice.

1517. Are you sure you were twice?—I was there twice, sir.

1518. What were you speaking to Mr. O'Beirne about; was it about the election?—No, sir. I went up there one evening—he sent for me about nine or ten o'clock at night, and I went, and the voters were all there the same night.

1519. Were there many people there?—There were a good deal of people there.

THIRD DAY.
October 6.
William Malloughney.

1520. Had you any private conversation with Mr. O'Beirne there?—I had not, sir; they were only taking a glass of punch.

1521. Had you promised to vote for him at that time?—I had, sir.

1522. When did you promise to vote for him?—When he came to town.

1523. Did he call on you to canvass?—He did, sir, and I promised him my vote.

1524. Did you vote for him afterwards?—I did, sir.

1525. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For him, sir.

1526. Your son told us yesterday that he was engaged for Mr. Lanigan that year?—He was, sir, but I knew nothing about it.

1527. You had some other sons engaged for Mr. O'Beirne?—I had, sir, at the time.

1528. How much were they paid by Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—£25 they were to get.

1529. Were they paid the £25 in '65?—They were not.

1530. Were you paid any money in '65?—I was paid £25 for my house.

1531 Do you say it was for your house you were paid the £25 in '65?—It was, sir.

1532. Was it the same house you had then that you have now?—It is, sir. Mr. Johnson took it from me in '65.

1533. Is your house in the town or any way out of the town?—It is in the town, sir.

1534. Is it not on Golden-road?—It is, sir, on the square below.

1535. What sized house have you—how many storeys?—A large house, sir.

1536. Are there two storeys over the shop?—No more than one, sir; it is a cottage, like.

1537. Was there any use made of your house in '65?—There was not, sir.

1538. Does your son live with you?—He does, sir.

1539. Who paid you the £25 in 1865; tell me the truth?—Mr. Johnson paid it to me in 1865, sir.

1540 If you tell me the truth, entirely, freely, and honestly, nothing can happen you; don't be afraid to tell the truth?—I will.

1541. Mr. Johnson paid you that £25?—Yes, and I passed him a receipt for it.

1542. Were you promised any more in 1865?—I was promised £25 more for the boys that were playing in the band and going about acting for him. There were three engaged with him in the election.

1543. Was your house taken at the last election?—It was not, sir.

1544. Were you satisfied when you got the £25?—I was not, sir, sure that had nothing to do with the last election.

1545. Did you ask any more money than £25?—I did not, sir.

1546. Did you offer your house, or ask to have your house taken?—I didn't, nor speak a word to him at all about any money at the last election.

1547. Did you tell your son to speak to Mr. O'Beirne, or to anyone about that £25?—I didn't.

1548. And do you mean to say that it was of his own accord, and without any directions from you that your son spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about it?—Surely, I know he was speaking to him about it, but that had nothing to do with the last election.

1549. I did not ask you whether it had or not. I want the facts from you. Did you tell your son to say anything to Mr. O'Beirne about the £25?—I did. I desired him to speak to him about it.

1550. And to ask him for it?—Yes, sir.

1551. How long was that after Mr. O'Beirne came to the town?—I believe it was about six weeks or two months before the election.

1552. I see that Mr. O'Beirne came to the town on the 10th October. It must have been immediately after Mr. O'Beirne came?—It must, sir.

1553. Was he a day, or two days in the town before you sent your son to speak to him?—He was about one or two days.

1554. You told me you did not ask Mr. O'Beirne yourself for it?—I didn't.

1555. And I think you told me you never wrote to him about it?—I didn't.

1556. And you never made any demand on him from 1865 to 1868?—I didn't.

1557. Did your son, to your knowledge?—No, sir, any way that I know he didn't ask it. If he was written to himself he wouldn't answer any letter.

1558. How do you know he would not answer?—I heard many a one say he wouldn't answer any letter that would be wrote to him.

1559. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you not know that day that you went to the valet you would get the £25?—I did, sir.

1560. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Who told you you would get it?—My son told me.

1561. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he tell you to go up and you would get it?—I didn't know that I would get it when I went up, but he sent me up to know would I get it.

1562. What did he tell you when he was sending you up?—He told me to get the money.

1563. Whom did he tell you to speak to?—To his man, or any of them I would meet.

1564. When you went up to Dunn's whom did you speak to?—I met the valet, and I spoke to him.

1565. What did you say to him?—I told him what I wanted, and he went up stairs and desired me to stay there.

1566. How long was he up stairs before he came down?—He was not long, sir.

1567. Did he call you up on the stairs?—He did, sir.

1568. What did he say when he was giving you the money?—There was the £25 that was coming to me.

1569. Did you show the money to your son Michael when you went back?—I didn't; I believe not for a few days.

1570. Did you tell any of the children about it?—I did not tell any of them about it.

1571. Did they ask you about it?—They did not.

1572. Did you ever vote for John Lanigan?—Never.

1573. Whom did you vote for in 1859?—I believe it was for Mr. Lanigan I voted in 1859; it was.

1574. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was your house taken in 1859?—It was not, sir. I never, in all the elections that were here, ever got a penny for a vote.

1575. Did you get £25 for your house from Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—I did, sir.

1576. The other £25 that you say was due was for your sons' going with him in the band?—Yes, sir.

1577. Why was that not paid to you since?—Because I believe he went out of town at the time.

1578. Why was it not paid to you when he came back?—Because he didn't come there after.

1579. How many of your sons went with Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—Three, sir.

1580. Are not two of them here still?—They are, sir.

1581. Why was it you that went for the £25, and why was the £25 paid by Mr. O'Beirne to you, and not to the sons?—Because I was the master of the house.

1582. Have the sons votes?—They have not; they work with me.

1583. You got your house taken for £25 in '65; did you not think it very unfair of Mr. O'Beirne not to take your house in '68, when you were voting for him again?—He didn't, sir.

1584. Why did you not ask him to take your house, as he had done before?—Because I was inclined to vote for him, and there were parties coming to me from the other side, and they were wanting my vote, and I would not give it.

1585. What parties were coming to you from the other side for your vote?—Mr. Munster's party.

1586. Who came to you from Mr. Munster?—The two Laffans.

1587. That is Michael and Pat Laffan?—Yes, sir.

1588. When did they come to you?—The time of the election.

1589. How long before the election?—I believe it was only about a week.

1590. Was that after you got the £25 from Mr. O'Beirne?—Oh, yes, a good while before that. I got the money a long time before that.

1591. It was about a week before the election they came to you?—Yes, sir.

1592. Was it Mr. Michael or Mr. Patrick Laffan who spoke to you?—Both of them, sir.

1593. Did they come together?—They did.

1594. What did they say to you?—They wanted to make an agent of me, and I told them I didn't understand anything about agency.

1595. Did they offer you money?—They did.

1596. Did they give you a cheque?—No, sir.

1597. Had you heard that they were going about giving cheques to voters?—I did not, sir.

1598. Did they ask you to vote for Mr. Munster?—They did.

1599. Did they tell you that you would get anything by it?—They did.

1600. What did they tell you you would get?—They were saying I would get £10, and to make an agent of me.

1601. What did you tell them?—I told them I was disposed to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

1602. Did they say anything to you at all about your house?—They did not.

1603. Did they ask you whether Mr. O'Beirne had taken your house this time, as he had done before?—They did not. They didn't say anything to me at all about that.

1604. Did you tell them that Mr. O'Beirne had paid you the £25 that was so long due?—I did, sir.

1605. Did you say you did not like to vote against a gentlemen after behaving so well to you?—I did, sir.

1606. Did you not think it wrong to vote against Mr. O'Beirne when he paid up that old account?—It would not be right.

1607. It would not be honest?—It would not be right.

1608. Did Mr. Pat Laffan ever go to you by himself?—He did.

1609. Was it when he was by himself, or when the two were there that he offered you £10?—Both times.

1610. Did he ever offer you more than £10?—No.

1611. Did you say that was too little?—No, but I said I wouldn't vote for him.

1612. Did Cunningham ever go to you?—He did not.

1613. Did anybody else except the two Laffans come to you, asking you to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, sir, only Mr. Munster himself came to me one day, and I didn't go into the carriage to speak to him when I wasn't going to vote for him.

1614. When did you promise Mr. O'Beirne your vote?—When he came around.

1615. Was it before or after your son had spoken to him about the debt that Mr. O'Beirne came round to you?—It was after it.

1616. When the Laffans offered you £10 and to make an agent of you, were you to be paid for being an agent besides the £10?—I told him I would not vote for him at all, sir.

1617. You understood that they expected you to vote for Mr. Munster if you accepted that offer?—I told him I wouldn't, and even when I was asked up to the hotel I wouldn't go there either, as I wasn't determined to vote for Mr. Munster, for he sent a letter to invite me up to Mr. Coffey's hotel, and I didn't go there.

1618. How long was it before the election that you were asked up to the hotel?—About a fortnight, I suppose.

1619. Did the two Laffans offer you £10 for being an agent?—They did, sir.

1620. By Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it offered to you for being agent, or for anything else?—Only for being an agent, sir. I told them I didn't understand what was being an agent.

1621. By Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know what the effect would be of being agent at an election?—I do not, sir.

Michael Maloughney recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Michael Maloughney.

1622. Were you asked yesterday if you knew who paid your father the £25?—I was, sir.

1623. Did you say you did not know?—I did, sir.

1624. Is that true?—I knew it was Mr. O'Beirne paid it, but I never knew who paid him the money, but I knew 'twas there 'twas got.

1625. Is it true that you did not know who gave £25?—I didn't.

1626. Do you know now?—I asked him, and he told me 'twas Mr. O'Beirne's man.

1627. When did you ask him?—I asked him last night, but I knew 'twas at Mrs. Dunn's he got it.

1628. Do you mean to say that you did not know until last night who gave him the £25?—I knew it was from Mr. O'Beirne, but I didn't know who gave him the money.

1629. Your father swore to-day that you told him to go to Mr. O'Beirne's man for the £25; is that true or false?—That I desired him to go! I told him to go to Mr. O'Beirne's man and he would bring him up; but I didn't know whether he had the money to give him or not, only to see Mr. O'Beirne.

1630. Your father swore here to-day that you spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about this £25 before you told him to go to Mr. O'Beirne's man. Did you speak to Mr. O'Beirne about it?—Oh, I did long before then, sir, and he told me he would see it all right, that is all he ever said to me.

1631. Why did you not tell me that yesterday?—When I wasn't asked it, sir.

1632. Did you think you were complying with the obligation of your oath when concealing that?—I didn't conceal it.

1633. Did you tell it?—I didn't, when I wasn't asked it. I wasn't thinking of it at the moment. Everything in the world I knew I told it.

1634. When did you speak to Mr. O'Beirne about it?—I believe it was a few days after he came to town—four or five days after—I went in there on a message: he spoke to me and said, "Well Maloughney, I know there is money due to you since Mr. Johnson's time, and I'll see you all right."

1635. Your father says that was before Mr. O'Beirne canvassed him?—Oh, long before it, sir; as far as I can recollect it was about two months before it. I can't recollect how soon he came to town before the election, but it was about that time.

1636. Did you speak to Mr. O'Beirne first about this money?—No.

1637. Did you speak to him first, or he to you?—I can't say who spoke first, but he said "there is money due to you."

1638. Your father says he never wrote to Mr. O'Beirne, and you never wrote to Mr. O'Beirne, and never asked him for the money from '65 to '68, therefore, I apprehend you spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about it?—From '65 to '68 he never spoke to Mr. O'Beirne about it, no more than I would speak to Mr. Johnson about it in Dublin.

1639. Mr. Johnson was dead in '68?—He was.

1640. When you went to Mr. O'Beirne, and when you had the talk about the £25, was it not you that spoke to him first, and said that this money was due to your father?—I may speak about it first, but still he knew the money was due.

1641. And then he promised you to pay it?—He did.

THIRD DAY
October 6.

Michael Maloughney.

1642. Did he tell you to send your father to his man?—He did not.

1643. Did he tell you he would give the money to his man for you?—No; he said he would see me all right.

1644. Did he say anything about giving the money to his valet for you?—He did not.

1645. Then why did you tell your father to go to his valet?—Because when you would go to Dunn's the first person you would see would be his man. You wouldn't be allowed up stairs until you would see his man.

1646. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You were to have got £20 from Mr. Laffan in '65?—Yes, sir.

1647. That was for yourself?—For myself, sir.

1648. Then there was £25 given by Mr. O'Beirne for your brothers and yourself for their being in the band, and all those services?—At this time when I agreed with Mr. Laffan—this was the day Mr. O'Beirne was coming to town, that was the day they were going to meet him, all the town—I agreed with Mr. Laffan for £20, that I would act for him, and I would act for him were it not for the day of the proceedings, coming into town, there was such murdering, and even two horses were thrown down and the band scattered.

1649. The £25 was for yourself?—Yes.

1650. Your father let his house?—So he told me.

1651. Why was the £25 not given to yourself?—If I went myself I would get it.

1652. Why did not Mr. O'Beirne give it to you the day he said he knew all about it?—Perhaps it was not convenient that day.

1653. Why did you send your father and not go yourself?—I told him to go and he would meet the valet there, and he would usher him up to him.

Mr. Henry Munster.

Mr. Henry Munster sworn at his own request; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1654. You wish to state something?—I gave directions, which were not observed, that a separate account should be opened for Mr. Richardson, and a separate account for me, which was to pay all the household things. I was obliged to have somebody to pay everything for me. In part my directions were followed out, because Mr. Richardson had a separate account; but Mr. Richardson, instead of having a separate account for a certain time, drew cheques on my account, which are distinguished in the banker's accounts.

1655. Do I understand that Mr. Richardson signed his own name or yours to the cheques?—His own name.

1656. And they were debited to your account as if they were your cheques?—As if they were my cheques. After a time, when I came, I put a stop to that, and he finished with a separate account of his own with the Bank of Ireland at Thurles, in his own name. This is my pass-book, with my cheques and Mr. Richardson's, except the cheque that was missing. This is my book of cheques which I also hand in. He paid a good many things for not election expenses at all, and Miss Sterne paid one or two election expenses by mistake. This is Miss Sterne's book and cheque-book. Mr. Biggin was many years my private secretary, and now is Mr. Richardson's articled clerk.

[The witness hands in the documents referred to.]

Mr. George Richardson.

Mr. George Richardson recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1657. Mr. Richardson, do you wish to say anything of this cheque on the 8th January for £459 8*s.* 6*d.*, drawn in payment of sums paid by you which were not election expenses?—Those sums were paid to me to form the nucleus of the subsequent accounts. After the money there mentioned I believe I paid all these accounts that are here, handing over the balance to Mr. Munster.

1658. This cheque then was put to your credit?—Yes.

1659. That sum does not make any of the sums you mentioned—£513 15*s.* 7*d.* was the amount—as the several items you gave Mr. Laffan?—That does not affect it at all. It only shows how the money was put to my credit.

John Meenahan was called, but did not answer.

Edmond Canavan.

Edmond Canavan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1660. I believe you are not a voter?—No, sir.

1661. What is your occupation?—A carman.

1662. Were you engaged for either of the candidates at the last election?—By Mr. O'Bierne, sir, I was.

1663. Have you been frequently engaged at elections before the election of '68?—I was.

1664. Whom were you engaged for in the election before that?—For Mr. Lanigan, sir.

1665. What was your occupation for him?—I used to be about the streets, sir.

1666. What were you paid by Mr. Lanigan in '65?—I couldn't give a correct account of that, sir.

1667. Go as near it as you can?—I suppose about £20, sir.

1668. Was that for yourself?—I believe I got nearly the amount of £20 myself.

1669. For yourself?—Yes, sir.

1670. Have you any person connected with you that is a voter?—No, sir.

1671. Have you a father, or brother, or brother-in-law, or any relative or connexion, a voter?—There is an uncle of mine at present in the town a voter.

1672. What is his name?—His name is Ned Long; he had no vote in '65.

1673. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you live with your uncle?—No, sir, I live with myself.

1674. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is Ned Long a married man, having a family?—He is, sir, an aged man.

1675. What did you do in '65 for the £20?—I used to be about the streets for a while, and I had a list for a while, paying the men a few days.

1676. How much money did you get from Mr. O'Beirne in 1868?—I got £24 10*s.* one day, and I got a good deal of money from that out. I could keep no correct account of it, because I used to be paying it every day mostly.

1677. Was it in cheques you were paid?—No, sir, but in money.

1678. Who paid it to you?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

1679. Was it at Dunn's hotel he paid you?—Yes, sir.

1680. Did you give him a list at the time he paid you the money?—I did, sir; I gave him a list of 135 men, I think.

1681. What were you to pay them each?—Half a crown, sir.

1682. Did you make out the list yourself?—The other boy that was with me made out the list. It was I kept the money.

1683. Who is the other boy?—His name is Meenahan.

1684. Is that the man who was called a few minutes ago?—Yes, sir.

1685. Did he keep any accounts of the money he had?—He didn't, sir.

1686. Were those men only paid for screeching and making a noise?—That was all, sir.

1687. What is the most you ever paid: 135 was it?—Yes, sir; I used to give most of them 5*s.*, because I had them employed two days.

1688. What is the largest sum you paid to any man?—Five shillings; I gave 6*s.* to one man. That is the largest sum I ever paid to any man in my life.

1689. You never paid a pound or more?—No.

1690. Did you ever get any cheques?—I never got a cheque, only a cheque I got for myself. It wasn't at that election, but before it.

1691. No cheque at the last election?—No, sir.

1692. Did you see a cheque in any man's hand during the election?—Not one, sir, nor after.

1693. Or did you hear anything about cheques?—I heard something about them, but I never seen one of them, sir.

1694. Tell me what you heard about cheques?—I heard they had cheques, and they were no good.

1695. Who did you hear had the cheques?—I heard they had them, but there are so many told me they had them that I can't recollect any.

1696. Tell me the name of any one man?—I couldn't, if the head was cut off o' me, tell the name of one man.

1697. You say you heard of so many having cheques that it is impossible for you to recollect some of them?—It is impossible.

1698. If a man hears a great number of names it is next to impossibility that he won't recollect some of them?—I heard a good many had them, but I cannot name one of them.

1699. Do you mean to say persons told you they had got cheques?—No people told me they had them, but there was a rumour that such a man and such a man had them.

1700. Can you not give me the name of "such a man"?—I cannot, sir.

1701. Mr. MOLLOY.—It is not so long ago that you should forget it?—Faix, I used to be drunk half the time, sir.

1702. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear of Tracey having a cheque?—I never heard it until I heard it yesterday, sir.

1703. Did you hear of a man named Hogan having a cheque?—No, sir; I did not.

1704. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Were you organizing any people out about the Commons?—I never went to the Commons at all; I used only to be about the streets here.

1705. Were you employed to watch any of the doings of Mr. Munster's people?—No, sir.

1706. Was that any portion of your duty?—No, sir; I took no active part in it at all, sir.

1707. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where used you to order the drink for the mob?—I never ordered any drink, sir; only all the drink they used to give me I used to take it, sir.

1708. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you get any orders for drink from any person?—I got an order for a gallon of whiskey from Keeffe.

1709. Was that all you got?—That was all, sir.

1710. Did he tell you where to go with it?—He did, sir.

1711. Was it a written order?—No, sir; but he came and ordered it himself.

1712. Where did he order it?—I think it was at Mr. Condon's, if I don't make a mistake; but I can't be sure of it, though.

1713. Was that the only order you got for drink?—That was all, except the drink I got myself.

1714. Did you get an order for any quantity of drink from any man except Keeffe?—Not more than that, sir.

1715. Mr. MOLLOY.—Used the people you paid the 2*s.* 6*d.* a day to get drink?—They used. I gave them a portion of it.

1716. Who gave the orders in the houses to get the drink?—Keeffe in general.

1717. Who else?—I don't recollect, indeed, sir.

1718. You understood that he was the person to give the orders for the drink?—Mostly, sir. He used to get orders from Mr. O'Beirne's man, and he used to give them to us then.

1719. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Although you did not get an order, I suppose you shared the produce of some of the orders—that you shared what was got on other orders?—I don't think I did, sir, more than once.

1720. You had 135 men in your army?—For two days, sir.

1721. For how many days had you a lot of people collected at all?—We had men for I suppose about six or seven weeks.

1722. Would you be able to make out about how much money you got altogether, £50, or £60, or £80?—I think I did more, sir.

1723. Did you go beyond £100?—No; about £80 or £90.

1724. And the largest sum you got at any time was £24 10*s.*?—Yes, sir.

1725. How long were you getting all this money?—About seven or eight weeks, while the election went on.

1726. During the whole course of the election, from the time Mr. O'Beirne came until it was over?—Yes, sir.

1727. And the whole of that money was spent on men forming the crowd?—It was.

1728. Was there anybody else having men hired for Mr. O'Beirne besides these: Keeffe had these?—Keeffe's and mine were all one.

1729. Did you actually pay them?—No, sir; I never paid a man but once. I paid them 5*s.* a piece for two days. I got that money altogether.

1730. That was for 135 men?—Yes, sir.

1731. That was £24 10*s.*?—That was the money got and paid, sir.

1732. What about the £80 or £90?—I got money afterwards, sir, myself, and the other man used to get money for himself and for myself.

1733. What other man?—Meenehan.

1734. Then you got more than £24 10*s.*?—I don't know that I did, sir. I didn't give some of them more than a half-crown.

1735. You told me you got from first to last in or about £80?—I did, sir.

1736. And that was going on during all the election?—It was, sir, between myself and Meenehan.

1737. Are you counting any of this as money that Meenehan got?—I am, sir, for I received all the money. I gave some to Meenehan.

1738. You only gave Meenehan his own share?—Yes, sir.

1739. Did Meenehan get any money to pay for men?—Not to my knowledge. I think he got it one day to pay some women.

1740. Were you and Keeffe paying those men at the same time?—He would pay it without me: any time I wanted men I would go to the house to him.

1741. Keeffe told us he paid £150: were they the same men?—They were the same men.

1742. Do you mean to say that £150 and £90 were paid amongst 140 men?—I don't know what they got, sir.

1743. Was it not Mr. O'Beirne himself that paid you?—He paid me the £24 10*s.* himself.

1744. Where did you get the rest?—I got it from the valet.

1745. What was the valet's name?—Leonard was his Christian name.

1746. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get all the £80

THIRD DAY. October 6. Edmond Canavan.

or £90 from Leonard except the £24 10*s.* that you got from Mr. O'Beirne himself?—Yes, sir.

1747. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You say there were lists made out by Meenehan?—Yes, that was all the lists I ever handled, sir.

1748. Was the money paid without giving any account of it?—I handed in the lists to Mr. O'Beirne.

1749. That was only one list: you say you never got more than one list?—Yes, sir.

1750. Then at least over £50 were got at other times. Did you get that money without handing in any list?—Never, sir, for I used to get subsistence money, as it was called.

1751. Were there any voters amongst those men?—No, sir.

1752. What did you do with the list?—We tore it up after paying the men.

1753. Are you quite sure that there was no voter amongst them?—No, sir, not one.

1754. What men were they?—Men of the town.

1755. I ask you again, are you quite sure that there were no voters amongst them?—Sure we would have no voters in such a common list, sir.

1756. Why?—For they wouldn't take half-a-crown.

1757. Mr. MOLLOY.—How do you know they would not take half-a-crown; did you try?—I wouldn't try them with it, sir.

1758. Why would you not try them with it?—Because I would be ashamed. I couldn't say would they take anything.

1759. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know what the name of Mr. O'Beirne's valet was; are you sure it was Leonard?—Leonard was his name, sir.

John Meenehan.

John Meenehan sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

1760. You were employed at the last election?—Yes, sir.

1761. For what purpose were you employed?—For protecting the person of Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

1762. Who employed you?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

1763. What did he tell you when he was employing you?—He told me to have an eye to him through the streets and to see him over the poll all right.

1764. You had people assisting you?—Yes, of course.

1765. Did he tell you how those people were to be paid?—He did not.

1766. How were they paid?—They were paid half-a-crown a day.

1767. Who paid it to them?—Canavan.

1768. You used to make out the list?—I made one list for Canavan.

1769. When was that?—In or about the 17th or 18th October.

1770. How many persons were on that list?—One hundred and thirty-six.

1771. How many days had you them?—Only one day.

1772. Where did you get the money to pay them?—I don't know where Canavan got it.

1773. You were not with him when he got it?—I was, sir, but I didn't see him getting it. When he came outside Dunn's hotel he told me he had the money to pay the men, and I had the list in my pocket.

1774. How much money had he?—Twenty-two pounds. There was two pounds of it, a pound a piece for each of us, subsistence.

1775. How many weeks were you employed?—From the 15th October to the 20th November.

1776. How much did you get in all?—As far as I can recollect I got £5, and he the same.

1777. At different times?—Yes, weekly. We skipped one week. We had a right to get £6.

1778. Who gave you this money?—About three times I got £1 from Canavan, and I got £1 at each time three times from Mr. O'Beirne's valet.

1779. What is his name?—Henry Raven.

1780. Did Mr. O'Beirne tell you Raven would give you the money?—He told me himself he would see me paid decently when the election would be over, and that he would subsist us from week to week.

1781. When the election was over did he pay you?—No, sir; he made his exit without paying.

1782. Where did the men get the drink?—At Maher's, Ryan's, Grace's, Condon's and Joe Ryan's.

1783. Used they pay for it there?—No, sir.

1784. Who paid for the drink they got?—I couldn't say was it Mr. O'Beirne's valet or Mick Keeffe.

1785. Who used to give the orders for the drink?—Michael Keeffe and the valet.

1786. How many orders did the valet give?—I couldn't tell you how many; there was a good many.

1787. When you wanted an order you could go to him?—Yes, or to Keeffe.

1788. He used to send it in writing?—He used to send it in writing.

1789. How many orders did Raven give?—He could not give less than twenty or thirty.

1790. They were not all to the same place?—No.

1791. To your knowledge he gave between twenty and thirty orders in writing?—Yes, he did.

1792. You are able to read and write?—Yes, sir.

1793. Used he direct the order to one of those persons you have named, on the order itself?—Yes, sir.

1794. You read some of them, I suppose?—I did.

1795. Tell us what was in them?—"Give the bearer, John Meenehan, an order for two gallons or a gallon of whiskey, or twenty glasses," according to the quantity would be walking the streets daily.

1796. And he used to divide the orders between the people you have mentioned?—Yes.

1797. What would you do when you got an order? I would go to the shop it would be on and give an order, and get the drink for the men.

1798. The orders that Keeffe used to give, were they the same as Raven's?—No, sir; Keeffe would go personally to the shop, and tell them to give it to me or another man, on his account.

1799. Did you ever go to Maher's with an order?—No.

1800. Did you to Ryan's?—I did.

1801. Where did you get that order?—From Raven.

1802. How many orders did you give Ryan?—I can't say.

1803. Did you give four or five?—I did not.

1804. Did you give two?—There was an order for two gallons of whiskey the night of the nomination. I can't recollect whether it was Raven or Keeffe that went down to order these two gallons of whiskey. I was the man who was directed to take out the whiskey and bring it to my house to distribute it. Any order I got on this place was a small order for about twenty glasses.

1805. Did you see Canavan get any of those orders?—I did not, sir. He may get one. There was an order to Pat Meara given by Michael Hanley, and he is deceased now.

1806. How much was that order for?—It was for half a gallon of whiskey. I drank some of it; I knew it was to be got.

1807. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear of any money being given to any persons who were voters?—I did, sir.

1808. Whom did you hear it about?—I heard that money was given on the part of Mr. Munster.

1809. To whom did you hear it was given?—Begor, 'tis a very tedious account of all of them, sir. I only heard a rumour.

1810. Did you hear any names?—I heard Micky Noonan, a butcher, of Lady's-well-street, and James Carroll, of Lady's-well-street, a dealer.

1811. Did you hear of anybody else?—I did.

1812. Whom else?—John Reilly, of Lady's-well.

1813. Anybody else?—Rody Fogarty, sir.

1814. Those are all butchers?—Yes.

1815. Anybody else?—Yes.

1816. Whom else?—Ned Long, of Lady's-well.

1817. Anybody else?—Frank Dwyer, Lady's-well.

1818. Anybody else?—Bill Quinlan, Lady's-well; John Rochford, Canopy-street.

1819. Whom else?—Tom Connor, the cooper, living in Bohermore.

1820. Anybody else?—Johnny Hanley, of Boscabèll.

1821. Anybody else?—I think, as far as I can recollect, James Mulcahy, of Bohermore.

1822. Is that all you recollect?—That is all, sir.

1823. Do you remember hearing whether any money was given by Mr. O'Beirne at all?—I did, sir.

1824. Who did you hear got it?—The Commons men, sir.

1825. What Commons men?—I don't know the Commons men at all, sir.

1826. What did you hear they got?—£25 or £30 a man.

1827. Did you hear who gave it to them?—I did not, sir.

1828. Did you hear any talk about it?—I heard that they were getting it from Mr. O'Beirne or his agents.

1829. Did you hear at all what it was?—No.

1830. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you not ask who was giving the money?—I had no communication with the agents, but only the town talk.

1831. Did you hear who was giving all that money?—I heard it was given by Mr. O'Beirne or his agents, I can't say who they were.

1832. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know how many of the Commons men voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—As far as I recollect, twenty-nine or thirty.

1833. Did you hear who was the man who distributed the money?—No, sir.

1834. Do you know a man named John Ryan?—I know a man of that name.

1835. There are two John Ryans; do you know John Ryan that lives on the Race-course?—I do.

1836. Is that at the Commons?—I suppose it is; I never was on the Commons.

1837. Did you hear he had anything to do with giving money to people?—I did not, sir.

1838. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where does Thomas Connor, the cooper, live?—I cannot exactly say is it Bohermore or Canopy-street. I believe it is Canopy-street.

Michael O'Sullivan was called, but did not appear.

William Lamb and Thomas Kennedy answered to their names, and were put outside the court-house, and a constable directed to keep them from communicating with anyone.

Simon Tracey recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1839. You are already sworn?—Yes.

1840. Mr. Kennedy, who was here, is a connexion of yours?—Yes.

1841. What connexion is he of yours?—My wife is his sister-in-law. We are married to two sisters.

1842. Is Mr. Lamb any connexion or relation of yours?—No.

1843. Had you any communication with Mr. Kennedy with reference to the election, during the course of the election?—I had.

1844. Of what character?—To vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

1845. Did you canvass him?—Yes.

1846. Were you directed by anyone to canvass him?—I was not particularly directed to him. As brother-in-law I solicited his vote.

1847. Did Mr. O'Beirne make a public canvass?—He did.

1848. And I suppose he canvassed your brother-in-law?—Yes.

1849. Did he canvass your brother-in-law before you canvassed him?—I don't know.

1850. What time did you canvass him?—Generally all the time that Mr. O'Beirne was in town I was speaking to Kennedy about it. In fact there was no occasion to canvass Kennedy because he was always to give his vote.

1851. Why did you canvass him then?—Because I was always in with him.

1852. Did you swear you canvassed him?—I did.

1853. Have you told me now there was no occasion to canvass him?—I only say it nominally, sir.

1854. If he was all along inclined to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, I want to know why you went to canvass him?—I am always in with Mr. Kennedy and we would be speaking about the election, and I asked Mr. Kennedy wouldn't he give his vote to Mr. O'Beirne.

1855. Did you know at that time that he was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

1856. And still you asked him would he not vote for him?—Yes, I would.

1857. When did you first know that Kennedy would vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He was always inclined to vote for him.

1858. When did you first know it?—This many a day.

1859. Did you know how Kennedy would vote in '65?—I did.

1860. How did he vote then?—For John Lanigan.

1861. Had you a vote in '65?—No.

1862. For whom were you engaged in '65?—For no person.

1863. Did you not take any part in the election of '65?—No.

1864. Mr. O'Beirne was the candidate against Mr. Lanigan in '65?—Yes.

1865. And Kennedy voted against him?—Yes.

1866. In any of the conversations you had with Mr. Kennedy, did you speak about any money or cheques?—No.

1867. Did you ever speak, directly or indirectly, about money being going for voting at this election?—No.

1868. Or of any cheques being going?—No.

1869. Did you tell him you had got a cheque for £60?—I don't know I did.

1870. Try and recollect?—I didn't.

1871. Are you quite positive; if you cannot answer any question tell me so; but recollect Mr. Kennedy will be examined?—To my knowledge I don't recollect telling Mr. Kennedy. I may have told him, but I don't recollect telling him.

1872. You do not recollect telling him that you had got a cheque for £60?—No.

1873. Was there any reason you should not have told him?—No.

1874. Have you any recollection one way or the other about telling him?—No.

1875. Are you on very intimate terms?—Yes.

1876. The most intimate terms?—Not more so.

1877. And your evidence is, that you have no recollection of telling him of having got so large a sum as £60 for your own personal use?—I don't know; I may have told him.

THIRD DAY. October 6. Simon Tracey.

1878. I do not want to disparage your position, but I suppose getting in a day £60 is not a matter of every-day occurrence, and therefore is a matter of some importance?—Yes.

1879. It would take a long time in the ordinary course of your business to earn £60?—Yes, sometimes; sometimes very short. I mightn't earn it in five months, or in three days, or a week.

1880. You do not recollect having told your intimate friend of having got this £60?—I don't recollect.

1881. Did you tell anybody?—I didn't tell anybody to my knowledge.

1882. Did you tell your wife?—I did tell my wife, of course. It was on the eve of the election I got that order, that is about October. I believe I was incorrect yesterday when I said February. I was incorrect, and contradict that.

1883. You did swear you got it in February, and I showed you you were wrong?—The excitement I was in at the time led to it.

1884. Do not be excited now; did you tell your wife you had got it?—I did; that I got £60 from Mr. O'Beirne for an agent, for the services I had done Mr. O'Beirne.

1885. On what day did you get it?—I got it some time in the month of October.

1886. What services had you done Mr. O'Beirne then?—Canvassed parties about the town.

1887. Mr. O'Beirne did not arrive until the 26th of October?—It is in November I got it, sir; that time I got that cheque, the election took place about the 18th or 20th November. I got that cheque the week before, or a few days before the election.

1888. And did you tell your wife the day you got it?—I don't know I told her the day I got it. I told her some time afterwards. I put the cheque in a cabinet drawer some time afterwards. I didn't put the cheque in the box, but the cabinet drawer.

1889. Had you any communication with Lamb about the election?—I asked him for his vote.

1890. When did you ask him?—Some time during the time of the election; some time during the election.

1891. Do you know how Lamb voted in '65?—He had no vote in '65, I believe. I don't think he had.

1892. Do you know that Mr. O'Beirne canvassed Lamb?—I know me and Mr. O'Beirne in person went to Lamb's house, and Lamb was not within.

1893. When did you call again?—This was on the eve of the election.

1894. Had you been with him before then?—I suppose Mr. O'Beirne saw him.

1895. Had he been canvassed by him?—No.

1896. Was Lamb doubtful?—I believe he was in favour of Mr. O'Beirne.

1897. Was he doubtful?—I couldn't tell.

1898. If Mr. O'Beirne had canvassed him before and got his promise, was there any necessity for you to see him again?—I couldn't tell.

1899. Did you go to see him again?—I seen him at Kennedy's house; he is a relative of Kennedy's.

1900. When did you see him at Kennedy's house?—Some nights after this.

1901. Was this on the occasion that you had a talk with Kennedy about the election?—I don't know that it was.

1902. Did you see the two of them together there?—I did.

1903. Did you see them more than once?—I seen him there several times; he is there often.

1904. Did you see him with reference to the election?—I don't know exactly with reference to the election.

1905. Did you canvass him in Kennedy's house?—I asked him would he vote for Mr. O'Beirne, and he said he would.

1906. Was Kennedy present?—I believe he was.

1907. Did you tell Lamb anything about the cheque?—No.

1908. You are quite sure of that?—Yes.

1909. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say yesterday with reference to the services you had done for Mr. O'Beirne, that you didn't work very hard?—I didn't work very hard.

1910. Then there were a great many persons who did as much work for Mr. O'Beirne as you did?—I suppose that they did.

1911. Did he give anybody else £60?—I don't know what he did.

1912. Did you hear of his giving anybody else £60?—No, sir.

Thomas Kennedy.

Thomas Kennedy sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

1913. Have you been out of court just now, during Mr. Tracey's examination?—Yes, sir.

1914. Were you within hearing of Mr. Tracey's evidence?—No, sir.

1915. I believe you were in court yesterday during Mr. Tracey's examination?—I was, sir.

1916. We are told that you are a brother-in-law of Mrs. Tracey's?—Exactly, sir.

1917. And that Mr. Tracey canvassed you at the last election?—He did, with Mr. O'Beirne; Mr. O'Beirne and himself.

1918. Had you been previously canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

1919. What answer did you give to Mr. O'Beirne on the first occasion?—I told Mr. O'Beirne that in consequence of his parliamentary career, that there was no gentleman that would ever put up in Cashel I would vote for before him.

1920. Did Mr. Tracey come to convass you after that?—Yes, with Mr. O'Beirne.

1921. Although you had given him that pronounced answer on the first occasion?—Yes, sir: the reason Mr. O'Beirne called the second time was, the opposing candidate, Mr. Munster, was pleased to deal with me in my business, and left me a good deal of money, and a report was circulated that I had changed my opinion, and Mr. O'Beirne took the liberty of calling on me with Mr. Tracey. I told Mr. O'Beirne that I would not change my opinion for any money.

1922. What is your business?—I deal in new and second-hand clothes.

1923. And Mr. Munster purchased from you?—Yes.

1924. What did he purchase?—Some of the clothing I had, for some of the poor people of the town.

1925. To what extent?—In or about £30 worth I believe. Not so much, but not very far from it; between £20 and £30.

1926. Did Mr. Munster purchase from you personally?—Yes.

1927. Did he come to your shop?—Yes.

1928. Did he purchase those altogether?—No; it was at different times.

1929. I suppose you have an account of it: do you keep a set of books?—No; I keep no books.

1930. That is not a prudent thing?—I think it a very prudent thing in our way, for when we get our money we put it into the bank, and that is all we want.

1931. Have you any entry of the sales you made to Mr. Munster?—No, sir; Mr. Munster sent me the money, and I thought no further about it.

1932. Mr. Tracey is a very intimate friend of yours?—Oh, yes.

1933. Did he tell you of the £60 cheque he got?—He did, sir.

1934. When did he tell you?—The day that he got it, and I seen the cheque.

1935. You saw it?—Yes.

1936. Where did you see it?—With Mr. Tracey.

1937. In his own house was it?—In my house.

1938. He came to your house and showed it to you?—Yes.

1939. Did you see it more than once with him?—No, but once.

1940. You had conversations about it more than once?—I don't think I ever spoke again about it. The time after Mr. O'Beirne appointed him agent he showed me the cheque. It was drawn in his own name.

1941. Perhaps you could tell us the date of the cheque?—The exact date, as near as I can guess, was about a week I believe or better before the day of nomination: that is as near as I can guess.

1942. It was on the very day that he got it he showed it to you?—Yes.

1943. Did the date of the cheque correspond with the day on which it was shown to you?—I could not swear that; I can't exactly say.

1944. Was it in or about that day?—In or about that day.

1945. Was the date of the cheque, that day or the day before?—I believe it was the very day he got the cheque he showed it to me.

1946. Mr. Lamb is your brother-in-law?—Yes.

1947. Was he present then?—He was, to the best of my knowledge. Yes, he was.

1948. And the cheque was shown to him as well?—I think it was shown to him.

1949. And you talked about the matter?—No great conversation at all; we only talked and looked at the cheque.

1950. The three of you looked at the cheque and talked about it?—Any conversation about the cheque I can't recollect: we were perfectly satisfied when Mr. Tracey was to be paid for his services.

1951. Do you know if Mr. Tracey did not give any service?—I believe he did give service.

1952. Did you not hear him say that he gave very little?—What he had to canvass was me and my brother-in-law; whether he canvassed any more I don't know: I used to be from home at times.

1953. Was the cheque given to him for canvassing you and your brother-in-law?—I can't say, sir.

1954. Was the cheque given to him for canvassing you and your brother-in-law?—I really couldn't swear that.

1955. Were you to get any part of the cheque?—Not at all.

1956. Was there any conversation as to getting part of it?—Not the least. There was not a farthing to be given to me, nor really did I expect a farthing.

1957. Was there any conversation with you about it?—No conversation whatever.

1958. You voted in '65 for Mr. Lanigan?—I did.

1959. And against Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

1960. I suppose Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you in '65? He did.

1961. Had you voted against Mr. O'Beirne before that again?—I had not a vote on that occasion.

1962. On the former occasion, when Mr. O'Beirne was a candidate?—Yes, Mr. Griffith's valuation was reduced from £8, but in '52 I was rated at £9.

1963. Are you a married man?—I was married, but I am a widower now.

1964. Was your wife alive at the late election?—No, not for the last fourteen years.

1965. Had you any communication with your sister-in-law, Mrs. Tracey, with respect to the cheque?—No, we both live opposite each other in the same street.

1966. And you are in constant communication?—Yes; very friendly.

1967. You spoke with her about the cheque, doubtless?—I can't swear that I ever spoke to her with respect to the cheque. It would not suit me to leave my establishment to be going to other houses.

1968. Are you not constantly going over and having a chat with her?—Not very often then.

1969. I am quite sure that if you think of it you will find that you spoke to her about the cheque?—I don't see the object I would have.

1970. As a mere matter of gossip: £60 is a large sum of money; and Mr. Tracey getting £60, making a large increase in his income for the year, would be a matter of congratulation to your sister-in-law?—I couldn't swear I was speaking particularly to her as to the cheque.

1971. Did it come incidentally into conversation at any time?—I don't think I ever spoke of the cheque to Mrs. Tracey.

1972. Did she know of the existence of that cheque?—I suppose she did. I suppose her husband wouldn't deny such a thing from his wife.

1973. Did you hear her speaking to anybody else about it?—No, sir, I didn't.

William Lamb sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

William Lamb.

1974. You are brother-in-law of Mr. Kennedy?—Yes.

1975. You are a voter in Cashel?—Yes.

1976. And voted at the last election for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

1977. Had you a vote in the previous election?—No, sir.

1978. That was the first time you had a vote?—Yes.

1979. Do you recollect being in the shop of your brother-in-law, Mr. Kennedy, any day and seeing a cheque for £60?—Yes.

1980. And you had a conversation with him about it?—No.

1981. Did you hear anything about it?—No.

1982. You saw the cheque in his hand?—Yes.

1983. And he said nothing?—He held the cheque; and "here is a cheque," says he, "I am after getting for £60."

1984. Then there was some conversation—you first said there was not any conversation at all?—There was no conversation between him and Kennedy and me when he drew out the cheque and said, "There is a cheque I am after getting for £60."

1985. Was that all that was said?—That was all that was said. I returned then, and went home.

1986. Did you hear any more about it before?—I never heard of the cheque until I seen it with Mr. Tracey.

1987. Did you hear he was going to ask for the cheque?—I did not.

1988. Did he say what the cheque was for?—He did not.

1989. And do you mean to say, that he did not say what the cheque was for when he showed it?—I swear on my oath he didn't say what it was for.

1990. He did not say it was for himself?—Not to my knowledge in any way.

1991. Did you see the amount of the cheque?—I did. I seen the number of the cheque for sixty pounds.

1992. Do you recollect the date of it?—To the best of my belief it was from the 16th to the 20th November.

1993. You swear he did not say what it was for?—No, he did not.

1994. When you saw the cheque for £60, payable to Mr. Tracey, is it not a strange thing that you did not ask what it was for?—I was called by one of the children to go home.

1995. Is that the only reason that you did not ask what it was for?—I had not time.

1996. Did you know what it was for?—No.

1997. Did you suspect what it was for?—No.

1998. Had you any conversation before that with Tracey about it?—The Saturday night before, Tracey came to me and asked me what way would I go, and I said I would vote as my brother-in-law would vote.

1999. Did he say he had any conversation with his brother-in-law about it?—He said no such thing, sir; what occurred between Tracey and me occurred before Mr. Kennedy.

2000. Mr. Kennedy was not present when this conversation took place, was he?—He was; it was at night after coming home about eight o'clock. I said any way my brother-in-law would go I would go with him.

THIRD DAY. October 6. William Lamb.

2001. Had you and your brother-in-law any conversation about voting at any other time?—No, we had not.

2002. None at all?—Mr. Kennedy and me agreed with each other to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, as being the best member for the country.

2003. Then you had some conversation?—That was all the conversation we had. I believe it was on the same night.

2004. Do you mean to say you never had any other talk with Mr. Kennedy except that?—There was general talk, but that is all I can recollect. I said wherever he would go I would go, and he said Mr. O'Beirne was the best man, and he was promised three months or six months before that for Mr. O'Beirne. I believe that on the last occasion he came to Cashel he said he would vote for him.

2005. Mr. Kennedy told you all this?—Yes.

2006. Was there any talk of money going for votes?—No.

2007. At any time?—Not between him and me.

2008. Do you know of any between him and anybody else?—No, I was not in town.

2009. Did you hear anything about cheques?—No, I had no business in Cashel, and I was not in Cashel, I was out in my employment. I am a gardener by trade, and I could not spare time to be in Cashel.

2010. A man would come in to have half an hour's talk?—I couldn't come in five miles, I was at Mr. Murphy's, of Woodford.

2011. Were you in employment about the election time?—Up to the Saturday before the election.

2012. What brought you to Cashel the day you were there and saw this cheque?—That was, I believe, the Monday or so before the election.

2013. What brought you in that day?—I stopped at home that day to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, because the day after that would be the nomination.

2014. You could not stop at home three or four days to vote. You told me you could not come in from your work to have a conversation with Mr. Kennedy, and still you admitted that you were there and saw this cheque?—I go out on Monday and come in on Saturday.

2015. What brought you in the night you were with Kennedy and saw Tracey?—That was on Saturday night when he called to Kennedy's house, and on Monday I seen the cheque, to the best of my opinion.

2016. Did you see Tracey that day before you saw the cheque?—Not to my knowledge.

2017. Did Kennedy tell you he had been speaking to Tracey?—No.

2018. Did you hear anything about any conversation with Tracey until you went in and saw the cheque?—I didn't.

2019. What time of the day was it?—To the best of my opinion about 12 or 1 o'clock.

2020. You said that one of the children came to call you?—Yes.

2021. Whose children?—My children.

2022. To call you where?—To go to my own house.

2023. How long had you been in Kennedy's at the time you were called?—From ten to fifteen minutes.

2024. Were you sent for to go to Kennedy's?—No, I went on my own accord there. If I don't get my expenses I will summon Mr. Munster for six days I lost here before on his business.

Simon Tracey.

Simon Tracey recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2025. Did you hear this witness swear you showed him a cheque?—I did.

2026. Is that true?—I don't recollect that I showed it to him.

2027. Did you swear to me that you never showed that cheque to this man?—I did.

2028. Is his evidence true or false?—I can't say.

Michael O'Sullivan was called but did not appear.

Michael Quirke.

Michael Quirke sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

2029. You are a voter?—Yes.

2030. Were you a voter previous to the last election?—No, sir.

2031. What were you at the previous election?—Check clerk for one of the candidates.

2032. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

2033. Do you know Mr. Laffan?—I do, sir.

2034. Did you get a cheque from one of the Messrs. Laffan before the last election?—I did, sir.

2035. Which of them?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

2036. Why did he give you the cheque?—He gave me the cheque by way of retainer; I could'nt vote.

2037. Was it a written document?—It was a written document.

2038. When did he give it to you?—Previous to the polling.

2039. How long was it after the nomination?—No, it wasn't after the nomination.

2040. How long before the election was it?—A couple of days.

2041. Had he previously canvassed you to vote for Mr. Munster?—No.

2042. He never asked you to vote for Mr. Munster?—Never.

2043. Had you promised to vote for any party before that?—I promised Mr. Grace to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

2044. Did Mr. Laffan know that?—He did.

2045. What did he say to you when he came?—He gave me the document. I was writing for Mr. Laffan the day previously for the county, and he gave me the document.

2046. Was Mr. Michael Laffan engaged in the county election too?—He was.

2047. For whom was he engaged in the county election?—The Honorable Charles White, I think.

2048. You were writing for him in connexion with the election?—I was.

2049. What did he say when he gave you the document?—Not a word.

2050. What was the document that he gave you?—A cheque for five guineas.

2051. What had you asked him for?—I asked him for some money. I went across to the bank and cashed it. When I found it was to break my vote I returned it the next morning.

2052. Did you spend any of the money in the meantime?—I spent 1*s.* 6*d.* of it, which I had to supply.

2053. Did you know anything of money going at the last election?—Not a word, sir, only that I did not get a shilling of it at either side.

2054. Did you hear of any people getting money?—I did. I heard that young Carroll got £35; he showed it to me. It was not a cheque he got, but notes.

2055. Did you know that money was given to the Commons people?—I did not.

2056. Did you know that money was given at the previous elections?—I did. I recollect the election when John Carden was a candidate, and no one voted for him that was not paid.

2057. Do you know anything about money having been going at the election of '65?—I do not, sir. I couldn't say, although I was check clerk.

2058. I suppose you often heard that the Commons people used to get money for their votes?—It was a common rumour, sir, but I never saw it.

2059. Did you ever hear by whose hands it was distributed?—No, sir.

2060. Mr. MOLLOY.—You were working for Mr. Laffan at the last election?—I was, sir.

2061. You asked him for some money?—Yes.

2062. What was the money for?—For what I earned.

2063. And what did he give you?—This cheque.

2064. Had he the cheque written out?—It was for money I asked him.

2065. Did he do anything but hand you the cheque when you asked him for money?—He told me to follow him to Corcoran's hotel; and he gave me this cheque, and I cashed it.

2066. Did you follow him to Corcoran's hotel?—I did.

2067. Did he write it there?—I can't tell.

2068. Did you look at it?—I did.

2069. What was it for?—For £5.

2070. Did you expect £5?—No.

2071. Did you ask him for £5?—No.

2072. You say Mr. Laffan knew that you had promised Mr. O'Beirne to vote for him?—I didn't see Mr. O'Beirne.

2073. You said that Mr. Laffan knew you had promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne. How did he know that?—He knew I was always in the habit of writing for Mr. Grace, who was the conducting agent of Mr. O'Beirne, and that I would not vote against him: that is the only way he knew it.

Michael Quirke.

2074. Were you ever canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—No, but Mr. Grace.

2075. When did Mr. Grace canvass you?—Before Mr. O'Beirne came to town I asked him for some employment about the election. "Oh, I can give you no employment," said he, "for we will want your vote."

2076. After you got this £5 cheque from Mr. Laffan, did any person call on you on Mr. O'Beirne's behalf?—No, there didn't.

2077. No person?—No; my own sister said, "Did you hear what Mr. Laffan told Con Carroll, that your vote was broke now, and that you can't vote for Mr. O'Beirne."

2079. Did you get anything for your vote at the last election?—Not a shilling, sir.

2080. Did you get any money on account of the last election?—Not a penny.

2081. Did you get more than a penny from anybody?—I did not.

2082. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That will do; you may retire.—Will I be paid for my loss of time here, sir?

2083. Did you get any offer of work that you have lost by being here?—I couldn't account for that, sir; but I may earn 5*s.* 6*d.* a day.

2084. I am not going to let any person make money of this inquiry.

Thomas Farrell sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Farrell.

2085. Are you a voter in Cashel?—No, sir; I have no vote.

2086. I believe you are very busy, generally about elections, though?—Very little, sir.

2087. Were you engaged about the last election?—Never, sir.

2088. Did you do anything?—Whatever I done it was by my own accord I did it, sir.

2089. Take care of the way you are answering. I asked you were you engaged at the last election?—By nobody.

2090. Did you expect to be paid by anybody?—No, sir; when I was not engaged I could not expect to be paid.

2091. Do you know anyone of your name in the town of Cashel?—I do, sir.

2092. Any man of the name Thomas Farrell?—No, sir; there is no man of the name of Thomas Farrell belonging to me in the town of Cashel.

2093. I did not ask you "belonging to you." Do you know any other man whose name is Thomas, Farrell in the town of Cashel?—No, sir.

2094. Do you say that you were not engaged for any one in Cashel at the last election?—No, sir, no one employed me.

2095. Answer my question. I asked you were you engaged for anybody at the last election, and you said, "I was employed by no one." I recommend you not to quibble. I again ask you were you engaged for any one, or doing anything for anyone at the last election?—No one engaged me at the last election, only Mr. Munster's party asked me to go to the Commons, and I went when they were going.

2096. Did you send in a bill to Mr. Munster?—I did.

2097. Was it for £15?—I didn't get it, although I sent in the bill.

2098. Did you send in a bill to get £15?—I sent in a bill for services.

2099. Now, Mr. Farrell, do you know Michael Ryan?—I do, sir.

2100. Were you present in Michael Ryan's house when Patrick Cunningham was there on one occasion?—I was, sir.

2101. Did you see Murnane there?—I did, sir.

2102. Did you see any money given by either of them to the other?—No, but I remember the Saturday morning previous to the election—before the election. I was coming up the street from the Lowergate, passing to the upper end of the town. Some party met me, and told me Mr. Munster's supporters were to attend that night at Ryan's, and besides the same part of the day Michael Ryan went to look for me where I was doing business for myself, and didn't meet me there. He met somebody that told me they wanted me, and I went to Michael Ryan's house, and Michael Ryan said to me, "I am getting more money from Mr. O'Beirne's men than Mr. Munster is giving me, and if you see anybody belonging to Mr. Munster, will you tell them to that effect?" "I will," says I. I came out about the street then, and saw nobody belonging to Mr. Munster. I met Pat Cunningham and told him what Michael Ryan told me. "Did you take Michael Ryan and Murnane's house?" says I. "Yes," says he. "Well," says I, "Michael Ryan is after telling me he is after getting more money than what you were giving him." "That couldn't be possible," says Pat Cunningham, "for he has half notes, and a written receipt from me for the remainder." "I don't know," says I. "That couldn't be so," says Pat Cunningham again. "Come with me," says I "and we'll know the difference." I went with him, and they drew down the subject. He called us into the hall and said, "Isn't this bargain concluded." Pat Cunningham said that. "No," says he, that's Ryan, "Murnane isn't satisfied without getting £10 for himself." "I could do no such thing," says Pat Cunningham. Michael Ryan went out to the shop and brought in the half notes, and Ryan handed him back the receipt that was between them.

2103. Did you go to Ryan's house after that?—I did, when I saw Mr. O'Beirne's name placarded on the walls for a tally-room. I went to the house and drank half a glass of whiskey, and I said, "You have the house set." "I have," says he. "Will you take £70 for the house," says I, out of a joke.

2104. Did you say "out of a joke," on your oath?—Yes, sir.

2105. Recollect yourself. Did you use the words "out of a joke"?—No, sir.

2106. Tell me the words you said?—This word.

2107. Did you say out of a joke that you had been sent by one of Mr. Munster's agents or friends?—I did not, sir.

2108. If he swore that you said you had been sent by one of Mr. Munster's agents, would he be telling the truth?—I would be telling the truth; I wasn't sent by anyone.

2109. You went to him?—Yes.

2110. And you were not sent by anyone?—No.

2111. Did you go anywhere else during the election to canvass for Mr. Munster?—I never asked a vote of any man, except I might say to a person "it will be better to return Mr. Munster than Mr. O'Beirne." I might say that.

2112. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you alone that evening that you say you made the offer of £70 to Ryan?—Not one went in with me but myself.

2113. Were you not in Ryan's more than once after you saw the money given back?—I am in Ryan's every day since he came to Cashel.

2114. Were you not in Ryan's house more than once after you saw the money given back: were not the boys with you?—Never, sir; not one.

2115. Do you know Edward Duggan?—I do.

2116. Was not he with you?—No, sir; I could take the height of that of oaths that I never met him in Ryan's house.

2117. What is his right name?—I couldn't tell you whether it is Looby or Duggan. I know the man well.

2118. Were you ever with him in Ryan's house?—Never.

2119. Were you ever with him in Ryan's company anywhere?—Never, anywhere.

2120. Why did you tell Ryan that if he went with Mr. Munster he would get £70?—I told him no such thing, but I said, "Will you have £70," out of a joke.

2121, You say you did not tell him he would get £70?—No; he knew what he was doing better than me. "Will you have £70," said I to him out of a joke, when I took half a glass of whiskey and walked out again.

2122. Were you employed by Cunningham?—No.

2123. Why did you tell Cunningham that Ryan said he was offered more money?—Ryan sent a messenger for me, and told me if I met any of the parties to tell them he had more money to give them than Mr. Munster's men were giving. I delivered the message to Cunningham.

Mr. Edward Henry Biggin.

Mr. Edward Henry Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2124. Mr. Biggin, do you produce the claim this man has put in?—I do.

Thomas Farrell.

Thomas Farrell's examination resumed.

2125. Mr. MOLLOY.—To whom did you send the bill?—I sent it in to Mr. Laffan. I believe it was Mr. Patrick Laffan that got it, to the best of my belief.

2126. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is this your own writing?—No, sir.

2127. Whose writing is it—who wrote it for you?—I think it was John Duggan, to the best of my belief.

2128. You swore to me that you were not engaged by anyone, and did not expect to be paid by anyone, and yet I find a bill for £15 for services rendered at the election?—That is all right, sir.

2129. Did you render any services to Mr. Munster?—Never; but the day he went to the Commons I chanced to say a few words in the Commons.

2130. Do you mean to say that you tried to get £15 from Mr. Munster for doing nothing?—I never expected it, although that bill going in. I can swear that positively. Although that bill going in I never expected it.

Michael O'Sullivan.

Michael O'Sullivan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2131. Are you an elector of Cashel?—I am, sir.

2132. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster.

2133. What business are you in?—General business, grocery and meal and flour, and the bakery way.

2134. This is your letter, I believe—[Is handed his letter to Mr. Munster, dated 8th March, 1869]?—Yes, that is my letter.

2135. Were you paid any money for the last election by Mr. Munster?—I was, sir.

2136. How much were you paid?—£98 4*s.* 4*d.*, the bill of treating for Mr. Munster, with a mob of parties who came round to me time after time.

2137. Did you furnish any account but this?—I did.

2138. To whom did you give the account?—To Mr. Michael Laffan, Mr. Munster's solicitor.

2139. When did you furnish the account?—Really I could not tell—I suppose some time after the 20th November—that was the day of the polling, I believe—some time after that.

2140. About how soon after it?—I suppose about three weeks or a fortnight. I could not tell particularly. It was before Christmas.

2141. You say it was before Christmas?—It was.

2142. Are you quite sure it was before Christmas?—It was in fact a month after the election.

2143. I suppose this is your letter also—[Is handed letter dated 8th November]?—Yes, that is my letter.

2144. I want to know did you send in a bill?—I told you I did.

2145. Besides that letter headed from your shop?—I did, a different bill.

2146. Did that account contain items of the subject of your claim against Mr. Munster?—It contained what I gave the drink for. Of course I did not give the items day after day.

2147. Was it only one general sum, £98 4*s.* 4*d.*, or did it contain several items?—It contained the whole money: no different items.

2148. I see you state in your letter here, that your "bill was supplied on orders given from Mr. Patrick Laffan, and the understanding from Mr. Michael Laffan?"—In fact though I said that in the letter, I had very little understanding from him, but had from Patrick though.

2149. Did you receive orders from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I did, several.

2150. Had you any understanding with Mr. Michael Laffan?—Though I said that in the letter I had not at the time, but I wanted to get paid the money. I don't think I had. I had no understanding from Mr. Michael Laffan, but I had orders from Patrick, he gave me many orders; though I said it in that letter I had no understanding with him.

2151. Do you mean to say that you deliberately wrote a lie in that letter?—I do; I wanted to have Mr. Munster pay me, and I said in writing the letter that he—in fact in writing to Mr. Munster I said he gave me many orders—that Mr. Michael Laffan did, and he might have done it too.

2152. Is this true or false—"Sir, my bill was supplied by orders from Mr. Pat Laffan, and the understanding from Mr. Michael Laffan that I was to supply drink where I thought it necessary?"—It is true.

2153. Is this true: "Having a great influx of, recourse to, and influence on a great number of voters, both on the Commons and in the town?"—Well, they are very generally in my house; that is very correct too.

2154. Now, you furnished that letter of the 8th November?—Yes, that is my letter.

2155. You furnished the account on that date. You furnished the account on the 8th November?—Yes, that is the date of that letter.

2156. Did you demand payment of it in the interval between that and the time you were paid?—At the moment I wrote the letter to Mr. Munster?

2157. Answer my question: "yes" or "no" answers it?—Say it again.

2158. Did you demand payment of the amount of your account between the date of this letter, 8th November, and of this letter, 8th March?—I furnished the first account to Mr. Laffan.

2159. That is not an answer to my question. My question, which I repeat for the third time—and it ought not be necessary with a gentleman of your intelligence—is this:—Did you demand the amount of your account between the date of that letter, 8th November, and this letter, 8th March?—I did frequently; of course I did. From Mr. Laffan alone though; but that is a letter to Mr. Munster. I did several times. I was up there almost every night—every second night at least.

2160. At Mr. Laffan's?—I was up there, and often since then; I was often up there too.

2161. And you very frequently demanded the amount of your account?—I would say to Michael Laffan, "Michael, can't you get our account settled?"

2162. Did you frequently demand the settlement of the account?—Sure I knew he couldn't pay it.

2163. Answer my question; you will have the goodness to answer my question?—You will have the goodness to let me explain the matter.

2164. Have the goodness to be silent?—I knew Mr. Laffan couldn't settle my account.

2165. Be silent, sir. Do you know what it is to be committed for contempt of Court?—Oh, but I don't deserve it.

2166. Attend, sir, and answer my question?—I will, sir, but you must let me explain it.

2167. I will allow you to explain when you answer, but you shall not avoid answering. Did you demand payment of your account in the interval?—I did.

2168. From whom did you demand payment of your account?—From Michael Laffan.

2169. Did you demand it from anybody else?—I did not.

2170. Now, if you wish to offer any explanation you are at perfect liberty to do so?—No, sir. If you propose a question I will answer it.

2171. Who gave you the money in payment of that account?—Mr. Munster handed me a cheque in my own house; I gave him no receipt for it.

2172. How soon after the receipt of that letter were you paid the amount?—The morning after.

2173. Is that the 9th March?—No, I wrote at night. Mr. Munster met Mr. Laffan, and came to me in the morning, and the morning after he brought me a cheque for it.

2174. Is this one of the accounts you furnished?—[Is handed document dated 8th December, 1868]—Yes.

2175. That is dated 8th December, '68?—I can't give you dates at all.

2176. I can read it there?—I can read it myself too.

2177. Then did you send an account previously with that of the 8th November?—Really I forget. I suppose I did; really I forget which; it is so long ago that I forget it. If Mr. Laffan was here he would produce all the documents, for I gave them to him.

2178. You say in your letter of the 8th November: "I withdraw my previous bill of the 4th November, as not containing the amount due to me, in consequence of having since discovered other items of value given to said classes of mob, &c., which were in my bill of 4th instant overlooked?"—Yes.

2179. Are you able to tell me what the difference between the two bills was?—I will tell you. I gave a lot of drink, and Patrick Laffan gave me orders for them.

2180. Are you able to say the difference in the amount?—Of course I am.

2181. How much is it?—It ought to be £49 and I made it £50.

2182. Then at the date of the 8th of November the amount was only £50?—The amount was what I furnished. At the time I was drawing up the first bill there was a lot of orders, and I had a lot of slips of paper in the shop, and orders of Patrick Laffan—he gave orders for £49 worth more, and I withdrew the first bill and furnished the second.

2183. Then it was not a difference of £1, but I presume of £49 or £50?—It was a difference of £1.

2184. It is not easy to understand you?—If you allow me I will just tell it to you.

2185. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was the amount of the first bill £97?—No, £48.

2186. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Then you altered it and made it £49, or thereabouts?—I made it £49 additional. Of course that wouldn't make £98.

2187. Take it in your hand. At the date you find on that what was the amount?—Really I couldn't tell you the date that account is.

2188. Do you know how much was your account on that date?—I know it now.

2189. How much?—It was £98.

2190. What are you talking about £49 for?—I first supplied Mr. Laffan with an account for £48 4*s.* 4*d.* I then went and I began to think over the matter, and I found I had a lot of bills of Patrick Laffan for £49 in addition, and then I withdrew the account and named instead of it £49 9*s.* 8*d.* I just charged one additional pound.

2191. Have you those orders still?—Indeed I have not; I never keep orders for election matters. I would be very sorry to keep orders about election matters.

2192. Mr. MOLLOY.—You say you sent in an account on the 4th November?—That was the one I withdrew.

2193. How much was that for?—£48. I withdrew it, and the letter went to Mr. Richardson to Manchester, and I wrote to Mr. Munster afterwards for the money.

2194. Did the bill you sent in on the 4th November include any drink supplied on the order of Pat Laffan?—It did, and the subsequent bill too.

2195. Why did you not put them in?—Because they were in my desk. I thought it ought to be more than that.

2196. What became of those orders you had in the desk?—I never took them down in the book.

2197. What became of the orders you had locked up in the desk?—I don't think I have one of them.

2198. What became of them?—I suppose I destroyed them. I don't keep unnecessary papers.

2199. When did you destroy them; you took the precaution of putting them into your desk?—Why not? I gave value.

2200. When did you destroy them?—The moment I was paid. I don't want slips of paper about election matters.

2201. I want to know from you whether the £98 was due on the 8th November or not?—It was due after the election.

2202. Was it due on the 8th November, or was some of it incurred subsequently?—It was all before the election; that is, I believe, the 20th November.

2203. Have you got any books?—I have, of course.

2204. Did you enter those in your books?—Indeed I did not.

2205. Why did you not enter them?—Why should I enter election matters in the book?

THIRD DAY. October 6.

Michael O'Sullivan.

2206. You were selling drink?—On slips of paper I took down the account.

2207. You were selling drink on credit?—I was.

2208. And you keep books?—I do.

2209. And you sold £98 worth without making any entry in your books?—When I had slips of paper why should I make any entry in my books? Sure these would pass away in a few days.

2210. Is it your habit to sell £98 worth without entering it in your books?—I sold drink at Lanigan's election, and Captain White's also, and never took an entry of drink in election times; I would write it on slips of paper.

2211. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Why did you not keep an account in your books?—I would not keep an account for anyone who was not a regular customer. Would I put that into a ledger?—indeed I would not.

2212. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you think you could in any way answer my question whether the whole of the £98 was incurred when you sent in that account on the 8th November?—It was.

2213. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you supply no drink after the 8th November?—I did not.

2214. Between the 8th and 20th November, did you supply further drink?—Show me that paper.

2215. That account is dated 8th November; the polling was on the 20th?—There is a mistake in this—in the date of it, for I never wrote at all to any party until after the election.

2216. Do you mean to tell me that you made a mistake in it, when the date was altered from 7th to 8th?—I did; it was a great mistake, and Mr. Laffan will tell you that.

2217. Do you see that that date is actually corrected from the 7th to the 8th November; do you see that?—It is not.

2218. Look at it, sir; put that torn bit of paper in its place, and you will see that it is?—I don't see the 7th there at all.

2219. Do you see where the piece of paper goes in? Do you see the 7th corrected to the 8th?—And do you see it?

2220. I do; if you give this sort of answers you will see what being committed for contempt of Court is?—Try it again, though; you will see, sir, that you make a great mistake.

2221. It is corrected from the 7th to the 8th; do you see that there is a figure altered?—I don't see a figure at all altered.

2222. Were there any orders given after the 8th November?—I suppose there was; oh, after writing?—there was not. I told you that there was a mistake in the date of that letter: now I find it. Show me Mr. Munster's letter, the one that I wrote to himself.

2223. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—It does not refer to that at all?—Show me the date of it, though.

2224. The 8th March, '69?—I gave no drink after the election.

2226. On whose orders?—Patrick Cunningham's.

2227. Of anybody else?—Well, I don't think I did.

2228. Mr. MOLLOY.—Who told you that Mr. Munster would pay you the amount of Cunningham's orders?—I didn't care which. I was going to support Mr. Munster, and if I never got the money I could live without it.

2229. You have not answered the question. Who told you that Mr. Munster would pay you the amount of Cunningham's orders?—I gave it on my own responsibility.

2230. How did you know that Mr. Munster would pay the amount of Cunningham's orders?—I didn't know that at all; I ran the risk, and if I didn't get it I would do without it: that is the way it was. Mr. Munster never gave me an order, nor authorized anyone to give me an order.

2231. You cannot tell that?—Sure I can tell you that he never gave me an order.

2232. But you cannot tell me that he never authorized anyone to give you an order?—I can't tell you that; but he didn't do it to myself personally.

Edward Duggan was called, but did not appear.

Patrick Maher.

Patrick Maher sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2233. You live in the Main-street, Cashel, I believe?—Yes.

2234. Are you in business there?—Yes.

2235. In what business are you?—Grocery and spirit store.

2236. Were you engaged about the last election?—No, sir.

2237. Did you take any interest in that election?—No, sir.

2238. No interest?—No, sir.

2239. None whatever?—None whatever, sir.

2240. Were you at all interested in either candidate against the other?—No, sir.

2241. Would you as soon have voted for one as for the other?—I would sooner vote for Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

2242. Then you were interested for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

2243. Then what did you mean by telling me that you were not interested in either candidate; you are not there to joke?—No, sir.

2244. Were you very much interested for Mr. O'Beirne?—I gave him my vote; the second day after he coming to town I went up to him, and I said I would give him my vote.

2245. I ask you were you very much interested for him?—No more than that, sir.

2246. Do you know anything of any money having been paid, or any cheques, or sort of value given, during the last election?—Nothing more than that there were houses taken.

2247. Nothing more than that?—Nothing more than that.

2248. Do you know Pat Cunningham?—Yes, sir.

2249. Was he acting for anyone at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, I heard, sir.

2250. You had some conversation with him before the last election took place?—I had, sir.

2251. And you asked him, "What are you going to do for me?"—No, sir, he sent for me.

2252. Where did you go to when he sent for you?—To Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

2253. That hotel was engaged for Mr. Munster at the election?—Yes, sir.

2254. When he sent for you, and you went to him, what occurred?—He offered me £30 on a bill if I would vote for Mr. Munster.

2255. You refused it?—I refused to give him a bill.

2256. You refused to give him a bill?—I refused it altogether, sir.

2257. Did you say to me that you refused to give a bill?—I do, sir.

2258. Do you imply by that, that that was all you refused?—I wouldn't have voted for Mr. Munster at all. I refused him point blank, and wouldn't vote for him at all.

2259. Had you any communication with Cunningham before he sent for you?—I never spoke to him before about the election.

2260. How did he come to send for you then?—There was a boy named Carroll, and he said that if I went up, he would have something to say to me.

2261. Had you any conversation before with Carroll?—None, sir.

2262. And did Carroll volunteer this?—He told me this.

2263. You understood that he was to treat with you to bribe you for your vote?—He didn't say that.

2264. But you understood it?—I had nothing else to give him.

2265. Therefore you could understand nothing else: you understood then that he was to treat with you to bribe you?—I suppose it was for my vote.

2266. Do you mean to say that Carroll did that without having any previous communication with you?—We were often speaking about the election, but never about anything such as that.

2267. Is that Cornelius Carroll?—Cornelius Carroll.

2268. Were you always determined to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He was only in town two days when, the second night, I went up and told him I would vote for him.

2269. Did you know Mr. O'Beirne before he came the time of the last election?—I did, sir; I knew him since the former election; I knew him while he was in Parliament.

2270. Had Carroll writing materials?—He had pen and ink on the table.

2271. Had he a bill stamp?—I could not swear.

2272. Did you see any money with him?—No, sir.

2273. Were you not at all engaged in canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, sir, I was not.

2274. Were you at all engaged in looking after what was going on?—Nothing in the world, sir: I was determined to vote for Mr. O'Beirne before he came to town at all.

2275. You did not go to Cunningham on that occasion, in the way of trying to entrap him?—No, sir.

2276. And you were not trying to collect information for Mr. Grace?—I never gave Mr. Grace any information.

2277. You know Captain Graham?—Yes.

2278. Had you any conversation with him?—No.

2279. You knew that he was canvassing?—I heard that he was canvassing, but I had no conversation with him in my life.

2280. You supplied some drink at the election?—I did, sir.

2281. How much did you supply?—Between £5 and £6 worth, sir.

2282. At the election petition you thought you supplied between £6 and £7 worth?—Well, it was about that.

2283. And did you never inquire since how much it was?—No, sir.

2284. Have you been paid since?—No, sir.

2285. Have you any expectation of ever being paid?—No, sir.

2286. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you doing business in '65?—I was in business, doing business for Mr. Power, tobacco manufacturer.

2287. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—On whose orders did you give those £7 worth of drink?—Michael Keeffe's, and the late Michael Hanley that died.

2288. Did you get written orders, or were they only verbal?—Verbal.

2289. Did you get any written orders at all?—No written orders at all, sir.

2290. I ask you in the spirit of candour and fairness if you know of anything about any money having been given at the last election; I want to see if you can give us any assistance in coming at the truth; do you know or have you heard anything of any money having been given at the last election?—Only the money that was given for the houses. There was £35 given to a boy named Carroll, he says himself 'twas for his vote, and Mr. Munster's party say 'twas for his house.

2291. Do you know of any more than that?—I know no more than that, sir.

2292. We have heard that there was an action brought against Mr. Carroll—I have been requested to ask you if you were a witness in that case?—I was.

2293. And you were examined on it?—I was.

2294. Do you know anything of that transaction?—No, sir, only what he told me.

2295. Only his own statement?—Only his own statement.

2296. And you understood him to say that the £35 was given to him for his vote?—For his vote, sir.

Edward Looby [known also as Duggan] sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

2297. Do you know Michael Ryan?—I do, sir.

2298. Were you ever in his house along with a man named Thomas Farrell?—Never, sir.

2299. Do you remember the time that his house was being taken for Mr. Munster?—I do, sir.

2300. Were you present at any of the arrangements about it?—I was not, sir, but Mr. Pat Laffan told me if I see any voters to send them to Michael Ryan's, because they had his house taken.

2301. Was that the day the bargain was broken?—Yes.

2302. You were to send voters to Ryan's?—To Ryan's, sir. I met old Murnane, the father-in-law of Ryan, and I told him "you would want to have the house prepared when the dinner to the voters of Mr. Munster will be given there."

2303. Who was giving the dinner?—I don't know, sir, I was only having a joke at him.

2304. You said he ought to prepare the house against the dinner that was to be given to the voters by Mr. Munster?—Yes.

2305. Who told you that there was a dinner to be given?—I heard that both sides were all going to get a dinner, sir. I don't remember who told me in particular.

2306. You do not remember any body that told you in particular: did you hear it from any of the voters?—I did not, sir.

2307. What did Murnane say?—He told me that Mr. Munster's men were too late: that Mr. O'Beirne had it.

2308. What did you say to that?—I met then Mr. Pat Laffan coming, and I told him "What made you say that you had the house taken from Murnane?" "Sure we have," says he: so Cunningham came up to me and said, "Did he tell you such a thing as that?" "He did," says I: "Come down with me," says he, so I went down with him.

2309. Was Farrell there?—He was not, I never seen Farrell at the house at all.

2310. You went down?—We went down, and Ryan said he wouldn't give the house—that he set it too cheap.

2311. Did you stay in the shop during the conversation?—We did first, he went out then in the hall to speak to Cunningham.

2312. What occurred while you were there?—When I got the two in conversation I said, "Let ye settle it as ye like," and I left them there and went away.

2313. You heard nothing further about it?—Not a pin'sworth more, sir; I had something else to do as it was a Saturday, and I went to go to sell my meat.

2314. You are Edward Looby?—Yes, sir.

2315. You are not a voter?—I am not, sir.

2316. Have you friends voters?—I have, sir.

2317. Any relations?—I have, sir.

2318. Loobys?—Yes, sir, there are friends and neighbours.

2319. Are they any relatives of yours?—No, sir.

2320. Any connexions of yours?—No, sir.

2321. Is John Looby anything to you?—No, sir.

2322. Or Thomas Looby?—No, sir.

2323. Or Maurice Looby?—No, sir.

2324. Or another Thomas Looby?—Thomas Looby of Lowergate is, but I don't know how near.

2325. Is that the Tom Looby that sold the jennet to Munster?—I see Mr. Munster riding Tom Looby's jennet, and I don't know whether he sold him or not.

2326. Is that the same Tom Looby?—That is the Tom Looby.

THIRD DAY.
October 6.

Edward Looby.

2327. Where does he live?—At Lowergate, sir.

2328. Are you a good judge of the value of animals?—What sort of animals, sir?

2329. Jennets?—No, sir; I am a good judge of the value of a cow or a sheep.

2330. Do you know anything about money going at the last election?—I do not, sir.

2331. Did you see or hear of any cheques?—I did not.

2332. Did you know of any money going about the Commons?—I did not, sir.

2333. You know the Commons?—I do.

2334. Did you hear of any money going there at the last election?—I did not, sir; not during the election.

2335. Did you before or during the election hear of any money going there?—Not during the election, nor before it.

2336. Or since?—I will tell you, sir. Before that, I was coming down street one day, and I have a first-cousin by the name of Duggan that has a vote, and I got a letter from Cunningham to put it in my pocket for him. It was about fourteen days after the election, and he told me to give it to him. I put in my pocket and left it there; and the seal of it broke in my pocket, and I opened it, and there was £30 in it.

2337. Who was the letter for?—I got it from Cunningham.

2338. For whom? to whom was the letter addressed?—He told me to give it to Johnny Duggan.

2339. Has John Duggan a vote?—He has.

2340. Where does he live?—He lives in Lowergate.

2341. What was the £30 in?—In the letter, sir.

2342. Was that the day fortnight after the election exactly?—I think it was, sir; but I can't swear, sir.

2343. In what form was the £30?—In three £10 notes.

2344. Of what bank, do you know?—I don't, sir.

2345. What did you do with them?—I gave them to his sister, for he was drunk; and he told me to lend him a pound. I gave him a pound, and I changed one of them and took the pound out of it, and gave the £29 to his sister.

2346. What is the name of his sister?—Mary Anne, I believe.

2347. She is not married?—No.

2348. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you read the letter that contained the notes?—I did not, sir.

2349. Do you know whose writing it was?—I do not, sir.

2350. But there was a letter?—It was an envelope, sir.

2351. Was it enclosed in a written letter, or were the notes only in an envelope without any writing?—In a big envelope without no writing.

2352. Was the envelope written on, outside?—I didn't look. I only put it in my outside coat pocket, and indeed I didn't know there was anything in it, for if I did I wouldn't leave it so careless that way.

2353. Did he tell you what was in it?—He did not.

2354. What did he say?—To give it to Johnny Duggan.

2355. Is that all he said?—That is all.

2356. Where did you change the £10?—At Power's; and I gave him a pound of it. He had a drop in.

2357. What Power's?—The tobacconist in the Main-street.

2358. Do you recollect was it Mr. Power himself that gave you the change of the note?—I don't know, sir; I can't think.

2359. Did Cunningham ever say anything to you about it afterwards?—He did not, sir.

2360. Or did Duggan?—No, sir; he did not.

2361. Had you never the curiosity to ask what the £30 was for?—I never asked what it was for.

2362. I suppose you made a guess?—I knew he was very busy doing business for Mr. Munster.

2363. You did not ask either of them what it was for?—I did not indeed.

2364. Perhaps you thought the less you knew about it the better?—I didn't want to know anything about it, for I wasn't to gain anything by either of them.

2365. Do you know anything else like that transaction?—I got a letter from Cunningham to give to Heffernan, and I gave it to him.

2366. Where does Heffernan live?—In Friar-street.

2367. Was that a letter in an envelope?—A letter like the same.

2368. Was there anything in the envelope?—Indeed I don't know, sir.

2369. You would know surely whether an envelope was empty or not?—It had a bulk of something.

2370. Is Heffernan a voter?—He is, sir.

2371. What is his Christian name?—Denis.

2372. Did you take any other letters?—No other letters, sir. I know nothing else about it.

2373. Is it Denis Heffernan, of Friar-street?—Yes, sir.

2374. And you gave the letter to Heffernan?—I did, sir.

2375. And never asked him what was in it, and did not know what was in it?—No, sir.

2376. And you say Cunningham did not tell you what was in it?—Not a word.

2377. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When did you get the last letter?—The same day I got the two, sir.

2378. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—And was it at the same time?—The same time, sir.

2379. And were you paid anything?—I never got a shilling from either of them. From all the members of Parliament that ever came here I never got a glass of whiskey.

2380. Did you make a claim of £20 on Mr. Munster?—After the election, sir?

2381. Say "yes" or "no"?—Not to my knowledge, sir. I got sick after the election, which Doctor Russell got a pound to attend me, and there was five men, and what bill they sent in I don't know.

2382. Do you mean to say that nobody did it by your direction or knowledge?—I heard from the other four men that they put in a bill of £20 each: we expected to get £20 a piece, because we earned it.

2383. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it as a mob, or in what way was it that you earned it?—We were guarding him, sir.

2384. How long?—From the time he came to Cashel until the election and petition and all were over.

2385. Do you live in the town?—I do, sir.

2386. Where did you give Heffernan the letter?—In Cunningham's house. Heffernan was there when I got the two of them from Cunningham, and I reached him one of them.

2387. In what part of the house did Cunningham give you the letter?—Up stairs. He called me down street where he met me, and said he wanted me to come down. "Give this letter to John Duggan," says he, and I put it in my coat pocket, and he then gave me the other for Heffernan.

2388. Was Heffernan there when you got the other letter for him?—I can't say. To the best of my knowledge he was not.

John Kingsbury.

John Kingsbury sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2389. You are an elector of Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

2390. Are you many years an elector?—I am, I think, forty-eight years—not here, though, but in Belfast and other places.

2391. How long have you resided in Cashel?—Thirty-six years, sir.

2392. Did you vote at the last election here?—Yes.

2393. For whom?—For Mr. Munster.

2394. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, sir.

2395. Were you canvassed by any person on his behalf besides himself?—Well, I can't say that I was. I met him just walking through the town, and he asked me to vote for him.

2396. And he then asked you to vote for him?—Yes.

2397. Was that a very short time after he came to the town, or how soon after he came?—I suppose eight or ten days after he came.

2398. When were you canvassed first by Mr. Munster?—Mr. Munster never canvassed me—never.

2399. Then did you vote for him without being canvassed to do so?—You could scarcely go into a shop in this town that you were not canvassed by some person; but Mr. Munster never spoke to me on the subject.

2400. Did anybody ever canvass you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne; except himself?—I can't recollect, but I don't think they did.

2401. I suppose when Mr. O'Beirne asked you to vote for him, you told him you had promised to vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

2402. Did he take the one refusal and never try you again?—Never.

2403. Were you tried in any way afterwards?—Never. I was not. No person induced me after that.

2404. Or made any attempt to induce you?—No, indeed, they did not, sir; oh, no.

2405. Do you know of any persons having been induced to vote for either party?—Indeed, I do not. I know very little about the thing. You could scarcely, as I have said before, go into a shop that there was not some person asking you would you vote with them.

2406. Do you recollect meeting Captain Graham?—I do.

2407. Did he solicit you?—He did, but I told him I was undetermined, and that I believed I would not vote with his party—that is, for Mr. O'Beirne. We parted, and that is all about it.

2408. Did you ever see Captain Graham more than once?—Never on that subject.

2409. And nobody—neither Captain Graham nor any other person—ever offered you any inducement to vote?—They did not, indeed, sir.

[Adjourned.]

FOURTH DAY.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1869.

John Kingsbury recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2410. You were sworn yesterday?—Yes, sir.

[The shorthand writer reads questions and answers numbered 2406, 2407, 2408, and 2409.]

2411. I asked you yesterday if Captain Graham or any other person ever offered you any inducement to vote?—I didn't hear you ask that question, but I suppose you did, sir. I will tell you how that occurred. After I was speaking to Captain Graham on a Saturday, sir, a number of people ran up to me and asked me what I was to get, and so on, in a funny way.

2412. You said you did not mind my question yesterday; mind it to-day?—I do.

2413. My question is, did Captain Graham or any other person offer you any inducement to vote?—He did not, sir.

2414. He did not. You say Captain Graham never offered you any inducement?—I never got a farthing of his money.

2415. I did not ask you that—and I am rather surprised that a gentleman of your intelligence would not answer me in a straightforward manner. I ask you did he offer you any inducement to vote. That is a very general question, and does not mean money only. Did he offer you any inducement to vote?—He did, sir, say that I would be remunerated.

2416. He said you would be remunerated?—Yes.

2417. If you voted for whom?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

2418. Did he say what remuneration you would get?—No, sir, he did not.

2419. Did he intimate to you in any way what remuneration you would get for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, sir, he did not.

2420. Did he even not mention, or let you understand in any manner, any sum of money that you were to get?—No, sir, he did not.

2421. Or did he intimate to you in any way what the remuneration was to be?—No.

2422. Where did that conversation occur?—In the street, sir.

2423. Was it near your own house?—No, sir; he never called to my own house this last election; he called before.

2424. Was that the time at which you told him that you were undetermined, and that you did not believe you would vote for his party?—The last time, sir.

2425. At the time when he said you would be remunerated, is that the time that you said you were undetermined how you would vote?—Yes, sir.

2426. Do you recollect when he said that to you?—What?

2427. That you would be remunerated if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—What month it was, sir?

2428. Yes?—It is nearly a year ago.

2429. How long before the election was it?—I suppose it was two months, sir.

2430. Do I understand you to say that there was no one present when he said that to you?—Yes, sir; nobody but ourselves—he and I.

2431. I think you told me that at that time you had not determined to vote for Mr. Munster?—No.

2432. How soon after that did you determine to vote for Mr. Munster?—Immediately after that, sir.

2433. Which of Mr. Munster's friends or agents did you see in the meantime?—It was a gentleman that was going to vote himself, sir, and I told him.

2434. What is his name?—Mr. Cahill. I told him that whatever way he voted I would vote. I didn't see any agent at that time of Mr. Munster's.

2435. What Mr. Cahill is that; what is his name?

[A person in court stood up and stated that he was the person. He was requested to leave court, and a constable directed to see that no one communicated with him outside.]

2436. Where did the conversation take place between you and Mr. Cahill?—In his own shop, sir.

2437. You were asked yesterday did Captain Graham solicit you, and you answered "he did, but I told him I was undetermined, and that I believed I would not vote with his party, that is, for Mr. O'Beirne; we parted, and that is all about it;" is that the truth?—Yes, sir.

2438. Did you say, "we parted, and that is all about it"?—Yes, sir.

2439. Did I ask you to-day did Captain Graham or any other person offer you any inducement to vote, and did you answer me by saying that Captain Graham said you would be remunerated if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

2440. Did you tell me that yesterday?—No, sir, I did not.

2441. Do you think you gave your evidence yesterday as a truthful man?—I think I did.

2442. I am sorry to say that I entirely differ with you?—Well, sir, I can't help that.

2443. Tell me, as well as you can recollect, the exact words that Captain Graham used to you, and tell me every word, not leaving anything out because I do not ask you?—He commenced—"Mr. Kingsbury, haven't you a vote?" "Yes." "Well, won't you vote for Mr. O'Beirne?" "Well," says I, "I have not determined about that, but I will think of it," and he then said that I would be remunerated for my trouble—any trouble I would put myself to that he would repay me for it—of course that is what he meant.

FOURTH DAY. October 7. John Kingsbury.

2444. Did you say to me before to-day, that what he said was, "I would be remunerated if I voted for Mr. O'Beirne?"—Yes.

2445. Is that what you mean now?—Yes, sir; I considered it so; he mentioned Mr. O'Beirne's name; he said he wanted my vote for him.

2446. Did you ever tell anybody that Captain Graham had intimated to you any amount of remuneration?—Well, no sir, only in a joking way.

2447. What did you say?—I said he had offered me something.

2448. What did you say he had offered you?—He didn't offer me anything.

2449. My question is, what did you say he had offered you?—I can't recollect, sir.

2450. Did you name any sum of money?—Well, I don't think I did, sir.

2451. We will come to the conversation with Mr. Cahill; you say you saw Mr. Cahill in his own shop; were you sent for by Mr. Cahill?—I was not, sir; I was in there every day two or three times.

2452. Do I understand you to say that you went into Mr. Cahill's shop without any previous message or intimation?—Yes.

2453. From him or from anybody else?—From him or anybody else, I go there to meet him.

2454. Did you hear that he had anything to tell you about voting or anything connected with it; did you hear in any manner or way that you would learn anything about voting, or about your vote, from Mr. Cahill?—No, sir, I did not.

2455. At the time that you went to Mr. Cahill you said that you had not made up your mind how you would vote?—Yes.

2456. Now, sir, you understand the spirit in which this question is to be answered; was there any inducement offered to you in any way, by Mr. Cahill or any other person, to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, sir, nor I didn't get any.

2457. I did not ask if you got any, but I asked you was there any inducement offered to you?—No, sir.

2458. Was it intimated to you in any way that you would get any reward for voting for Mr. Munster?—No, sir, it was not.

2459. Did Mr. Cahill solicit your vote for Mr. Munster?—He did, sir, when it was mentioned first that there was to be an election here.

2460. On that occasion, when you went to his house, what did Mr. Cahill say to you about your vote?—He told me that he was going to vote for Mr. Munster, and he asked me if I would vote with him, and I said I would, and I did.

2461. Did you tell me that at that time Captain Graham had been with you?—I don't think Captain Graham had been with me that time, sir; I am not sure whether he had been there or not, I couldn't mind those things, sir.

2462. Now, recollect yourself; I think you are mistaken in that: you already told me that your mind was not made up at the time that Captain Graham called on you?—Yes.

2463. Therefore the interview with Mr. Cahill must have been after that?—Very well.

2464. When you saw Mr. Cahill in his house did you tell him that Cunningham had been with you to canvass you for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

2465. You told Mr. Cahill that?—I did, sir.

2466. Did you tell Mr. Cahill that Captain Graham had told you that you would be remunerated if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I don't think I did.

2467. But you tell me you told him that Captain Graham had been canvassing you for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, I did.

2468. Did Mr. Cahill in any way know that you had been offered money by Captain Graham; when I say, "offered money" I mean to say, did Mr. Cahill know that Captain Graham had told you you would be remunerated?—I don't think he did, sir, at all; I don't think I ever mentioned the circumstance to Mr. Cahill.

2469. Do you know if he knew it from anybody else?—He might.

2470. Did Mr. Cahill ever speak to you about it?—I think him and I spoke over it, sir.

2471. Let me have that quite right. Mr. Cahill and you spoke about Captain Graham's having told you that you would be remunerated if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

2472. Did you speak of it more than once?—Oh, I don't know that I did; perhaps I did; I am not certain, sir; it is twelve months ago; I believe I did.

2473. When you say you "believe," do you believe you did speak of it more than once?—Very likely I did, sir.

2474. Where does Mr. Cahill live?—He lives in the main street, sir.

2475. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is it No. 3, Main-street?—I believe it is, sir.

2476. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—How soon after Captain Graham told you that did you tell it to Mr. Cahill?—I declare I could not say, sir.

2477. Had you ever promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, in the former election, sir, do you mean?

2478. I do not sir; you know I do not?—I don't know.

2479. Had you promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—When?

2480. At the last election?—No, sir; I told him I would not.

2481. Did you vote for Mr. O'Beirne at the previous election?—No, sir; he called on me.

2482. For whom did you vote at the previous election?—For Mr. Lanigan, sir; I came from Dublin to vote for him.

2483. Do you know a voter of the borough named Squire?—I do, sir.

2484. Is he in Court?—He is, sir.—[Witness points him out].

2485. Had you any conversation with Mr. Squire about voting?—No, sir, never.

2486. With reference to the last election you had no conversation with Mr. Squire?—No; we talked over the election, sir, several times, Mr. Squire and I.

2487. And about the way you would vote?—Yes, sir. When you are done with me, sir, I would beg leave to say a few words to the Court.

2488. Presently, you shall have every opportunity of saying anything you wish. When you and Mr. Cahill had this conversation was it intimated to you in any way that you would not lose anything by voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—By Mr. Cahill?

2489. Yes, or anybody else?—No, sir.

2490. At any time?—At any time.

2491. Did Mr. Cahill say anything to you about his own vote, and why he voted for Mr. Munster?—He told me he was going to vote for him and asked me would I go with him.

2492. Did he say anything more about it?—No, sir, he did not, indeed. He is a very careful, cautious man about what he says.

2493. Did he say anything about what persons who voted for Mr. Munster might expect or might get?—No, sir; he did not. I say, "Blessed are they that expect little, they will not be disappointed."

2494. You say Captain Graham did not mention any sum of money?—No, sir.

2495. Did he write down any sum of money?—He did not, sir.

2496. Did he show you written down any sum of money?—He did not, sir. I heard that yesterday for the first time, from a person I want to speak about; that is a falsehood.

2497. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Would you have voted with Mr. Cahill whatever way he had voted?—I would, sir; I would, sir.

2498. Did you consider that one candidate was preferable to the other?—No, sir; they were both of the same politics.

2499. And one as good as the other?—Just as good, sir.

2500. And you just went to Mr. Cahill, and said you would vote whatever way he did?—Long before there was any talk about it, when it was first spoken of in Cashel. I was in the habit, and I am in the habit of going in two or three times there every day. He asked me what way I would vote, and I told him whatever way he voted. At that time we didn't know who would be up, or who we would vote for.

2501. I have no further questions to ask you?—Your worships, I have to say this, that I think there is a great number in this town that wish to censure Captain Graham by some means, and to cast a stigma on him, and any dealings that ever I had with him, either pro or con, when he was in my house, he behaved himself most kind and courteous, and was a gentleman in every respect; the persons that want to cast a stigma on him are like every animal—they are fond of company—and I say that Captain Graham never gave me any money, and I swore that yesterday, and I will swear it now again, nor ever did I get a farthing from him consideration—never. Have you anything more to say?

2502. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I have this to say, that my brother Commissioners and I have consulted very anxiously together, as to whether we should not have committed you to prison for tampering with your oath, in answering me yesterday?—I am an aged man, sir.

2503. You withheld the truth from me yesterday, in direct answer to the questions you have answered this morning?—If I did, sir, it is more than I wished to do.

John Kingsbury

George Squire sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

George Squire.

2504. You are a voter of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

2505. And you voted at the last election for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

2506. Do you know the last witness, Mr. Kingsbury?—I do, sir.

2507. Were you ever canvassed by Mr. Kingsbury to vote for Munster?—Canvassed to vote for Mr. Munster!

2508. Canvassed to vote for Mr. Munster: yes?—I don't know was it for Mr. Munster.

2509. For anybody else?—He asked me to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

2510. Was that at the last election?—Yes; it was before the election.

2511. About what time before the election was it that he canvassed you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I suppose about a month or two months. Captain Graham was down here then.

2512. Were you canvassed by anybody else, Mr. Squire?—I was canvassed by Mr. Munster, and one of the agents, called Mr. Richardson—I think Mr. Richardson.

John Kingsbury recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Kingsbury.

2513. Did you hear Mr. Squire swear that you canvassed him to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Perhaps I did, sir.

(Mr. Squire.—I think I have had to deal with Mr. Kingsbury twenty-five years; I think his memory is very bad.

2514. I hope so?—

Mr. Squire.—It is indeed, I assure you; his memory is very bad.

2515. I hope so for his own credit?—

Mr. Squire.—I know in business ways it is.)

2516. Did you hear Mr. Squire swear you canvassed him to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I didn't hear him swear it.

2517. He swears it?—Perhaps I did.

2518. Was that after your interview with Captain Graham?—Really I couldn't say, sir.

2519. Was it after you saw Mr. Cahill and had promised to vote for Mr. Munster that you asked Mr. Squire to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I don't know.

2520. I wish you would explain how it is that you were canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne, when you told me on the table that you had never made up your mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne yourself?—I didn't make up my mind to vote for anyone. I thought I wouldn't vote at all.

2521. And yet you were canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne?—If Mr. Squire says it, it is correct; but I don't recollect it, sir; my memory is very bad.

George Squire's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

George Squire.

2522. Was there any allusion to an interview with Captain Graham?—Mr. Kingsbury told me that Captain Graham had been with him. Mr. Kingsbury and I are employed in the same profession together. I am in the habit of going to his house. He told me he was inclined to vote.

2523. Did Mr. Kingsbury say that Captain Graham had been with him?—Yes, and that he was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, and he asked me to go with him.

2524. Did Mr. Kingsbury tell you he was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He did, sir, that morning.

2525. And did he tell you what Captain Graham had said?—Oh, not a word, sir.

2526. Did Captain Graham ever come to you, Mr. Squire?—Oh, yes.

2527. Tell us what took place between you?—The morning that Captain Graham called to me he said he called to ask me for my vote for Mr. O'Beirne. I told him I had not made up my mind to vote for any of them, for I said all three candidates were of the same principle—that they were all for the disendowment of the Church, and I had a right to go for either of the three of them. He then said if you can possibly vote for any of them, I will take it as a favour that you will vote for me. I said in my own mind, that I had been always employed by Captain Graham's family, and I will vote for Captain Graham.

2528. I put my question in general terms, and you understand that I want an answer to the fullest extent—did Captain Graham allude to anything of the same nature as that which took place between him and Mr. Kingsbury, as you have heard here?—There was never anything passed between Captain Graham and me but what I tell you.

Mr. Pierce Grace sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Pierce Grace

2529. You were agent for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes.

2530. You acted for him also at the petition?—I did.

2531. And in the petition as I recollect, you had a recriminatory case against Mr. Munster?—Yes.

2532. Have you the briefs that you gave your counsel on that occasion?—I have.

2533. Will you have the goodness to send them to me?—I will, but of course you will not press me to do anything unprofessional. I imagined that those things were privileged. In looking into the Act of Parliament I see that no privilege is taken away except the privilege of refusing to answer any question. Perhaps I am wrong: I am quite in your hands. I have no personal object, but I do not wish to act unprofessionally.

FOURTH DAY. October 7. Mr. Pierce Grace.

2534. There is no question as to privilege except in answering?—That is all, and, therefore, what I would submit is that the privilege as to documents still remains with me.

2535. No, Mr. Grace?—Of course I merely put it before you to have your direction.

2536. I understand the spirit in which you put it. I know you are doing perfectly right in submitting what you believe to be the privilege attaching to your honourable and confidential profession. My brother, Mr. Griffin, was going to mention to you a fact that will satisfy you that we have considered this matter, and that we do not rely on our own judgment alone. If we had to rely upon our own reading of the Act alone, we feel that we would not be doing our duty unless we required them. There is, however, already precedent for this course; and in England, the agent of a candidate has been compelled to bring in the briefs which he had put into the hands of his counsel?—I am quite ready to obey your order, and will have the briefs sent to you.

James C. Cahill.

James C. Cahill sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2537. Mr. Cahill, you are an elector of Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

2538. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

2539. You know Mr. Kingsbury who was here as a witness?—Well, sir; he and I are intimately acquainted.

2540. Have you been in communication with him since he was examined?—No, sir.

2541. Or with anyone touching his examination?—No, sir.

2542. You were out of court?—Out of court; any person that attempted to speak to me I sent him away.

2543. I wish to know the names of any persons that attempted to speak to you?—It was persons coming into court not knowing it.

2544. Mr. Kingsbury tells us that you and he had several conversations with reference to voting at last election?—Yes, sir; there is scarcely a day that he doesn't call to see me some part of the day.

2545. He said that you and he had several conversations with reference to voting at the last election?—So we had, sir.

2546. And you and he had some conversations as to what occurred between him and Captain Graham?—Well, I don't recollect anything about that.

2547. Try and recollect; Mr. Kingsbury tells us that Captain Graham said to him that he would be remunerated if he voted for Mr. O'Beirne; and Mr. Kingsbury says that you and he spoke about that conversation with Captain Graham?—Oh, yes, sir, he did, but he never mentioned to me any sum that was promised.

2548. But he told you that Captain Graham had spoken to him about his vote?—Yes.

2549. And you and he spoke about it?—Yes.

2550. More than once?—He calls to me almost every day. I am at my business and he walks about and calls in almost every day.

2551. Did you know that Mr. Kingsbury was promised to Mr. O'Beirne?—He told me he was partly promised, sir, but nothing binding.

2552. Do you know that he was canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne?—Mr. Kingsbury or Captain Graham?

2553. Mr. Kingsbury?—I am not aware, sir; this is the first I ever heard of it; I never heard anything about that before.

2554. He told you that he was partly promised; did he tell you that he had promised Captain Graham?—He told me he was partly promised, but at the same time that he had not pledged himself; there was nothing binding.

2555. I believe Mr. Kingsbury is not of the same politics or religion as Mr. Munster?—No, sir.

2556. And that as between Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Munster there was nothing binding on Mr. Kingsbury's principles?—No, sir, I think not.

2557. You induced him to change his intentions?—Yes, sir, I did; because whatever side I ever took at an election I would wish to have as many as I could go the same way.

2558. You are an ardent politician, I suppose?—I am not a lukewarm supporter of anything I would join.

2559. And you were a great friend of Mr. Munster's; more than of the other?—I was always opposed to the other, in consequence of our late friend John Lanigan.

2560. But you were a great friend of Mr. Munster's?—Yes, sir.

2561. And working hard for him, I suppose?—As far as conversations and things that kind of way went.

2562. Did you hold out any promise to Mr. Kingsbury?—No, sir? I hadn't it in my power to make a promise to any person.

2563. Wait until you hear me; did you hold out any promise to Mr. Kingsbury, of doing anything for him or of doing your best for him?—I advised him to vote for Mr. Munster and leave matters to Mr. Munster and to his agents after.

2564. When you say "leave matters to Mr. Munster and to his agents," do you mean remuneration?—When he gave me to understand he was promised remuneration at the other side, I thought Mr. Munster would be the best to promote the interests of this unfortunate town, and I told him to leave all matters in the hands of the agents until after the election.

2565. When you say "all matters," do you mean remuneration for his vote?—Yes, sir.

2566. Did you, Mr. Cahill, lead him to understand that he would not be at any loss by not accepting the remuneration which it was supposed he could get from Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Yes, sir; I advised him to vote and leave all matters until afterwards.

2567. Just attend to my question again. Did you lead him to understand, and lead him to believe, that he would not be the worse by not accepting the remuneration?—Well, yes, sir; that he would lose nothing by it.

2568. I suppose you communicated to some of the agents of Mr. Munster that Mr. Kingsbury had got this offer, or quasi offer, from Captain Graham?—Well, I cannot exactly say that now, sir, on my oath; I have no recollection of it. I might have done so, but I am now on my oath, and I can't exactly say which.

2569. Your impression now is that you did?—Well, sir, I can't say.

2570. Surely if you recollect for a moment you can tell me?—Well, as I stated before, on my oath I can't say positively, because I had no opportunity of going and meeting people. I was at my business, and whenever there was a committee meeting at night I used to go there, but no other time.

2571. Were you not constantly meeting Mr. Munster's friends?—Yes, sir, at night.

2572. You knew Mr. Pat Laffan?—Yes.

2573. And met him several days?—Perhaps some days I would not meet him at all.

2574. And other days you might meet him a dozen times?—No, sir; I never saw him unless he called to me.

2575. But you met him at the committee-rooms?—During the canvassing I met him perhaps a dozen times.

2576. And you saw Mr. Michael Laffan and all the other supporters?—Yes, any of us that met at the committee rooms.

2577. Is it not a most probable thing that you did tell that this offer had been made to Mr. Kingsbury?—It is likely I did.

2578. Would you pay out of your own pocket to Mr. Kingsbury?—No, sir.

2579. Did you take upon yourself to say what you did to Mr. Kingsbury?—I did not.

2580. You did not undertake to say it without communicating with some person?—I did not, sir.

2581. Whom did you communicate with?—If I communicated it at all it must have been with either of the Laffans.

2582. Who authorized you to say to Mr. Kingsbury that he would not be a loser?—I can't say.

2583. Whom did you communicate with before you said that?—It must have been after saying it.

2584. Well, after it, whom did you communicate with?—It must have been to either of the Laffans, but I can't say which of them.

2585. Do you not believe you did?—I can't swear that I did.

2586. Do you not believe you did?—It is very likely I did; it is nearly a year now.

2587. And people try to forget those things as rapidly as possible?—I don't know that a person will try to forget them; we often forget more important things than that, and can't help it.

2588. Did you hear anybody else say anything about an offer of money? I put this question in the widest sense. You are not to confine yourself to coin when I say money, but to mention any sort of remuneration with reference to voting at the election?—No, sir.

2589. You did not hear a word with reference to any other person?—No; I had nothing to do with it.

2590. Nothing at all, directly or indirectly?—I don't recollect that I did.

2591. Try and recollect. You know, Mr. Cahill, that you are to tell us everything honestly?—I might have said to a few others to vote for Mr. Munster, but I can't recollect any of them now—to leave it to Mr. Munster and his agents when all would be over.

2592. I believe your son was employed?—There was some arrangement between he and Mr. Michael Laffan.

2593. Does your son live with you?—Oh, yes, he does; he does business for me.

2594. He does business in your shop?—Yes.

2595. And I suppose he is in Cashel at present?—Oh, he is; he is in my house, I believe, this present moment.

2596. Have you more than one son?—No, sir; nor never had.

2597. He was engaged by Mr. Laffan?—I believe he was, sir; yes, there was some arrangement between he and Mr. Michael Laffan. I don't know what it was, but I had my mind made up what to do and how to vote before there was any arrangement made.

2598. You were not present at any arrangement?—No; I believe it was in Mr. Laffan's house.

2599. Your son told it to you?—He might have told me.

2600. Surely he would not keep it from his father—what was it?—There was no sum mentioned for him, nor was it, I believe, mentioned what he was to do; he was, I believe, doing writing for Mr. Laffan at several times.

2601. And he was attending to your business at the same time?—Yes, but it took him a good deal away from my business.

2602. What was he to get?—I don't know; he cannot tell it himself.

2603. Did he get anything?—I believe he got something as a retainer.

2604. How much did he get as a retainer?—I think he told me £4.

2605. Is that all he told you?—Yes, I positively swear that that is the only money he ever told me he got.

2606. Mr. MOLLOY.—Has your son been settled with yet?—No, sir, not to my knowledge.

2607. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—To your knowledge does he still remain unsettled with?—Yes, sir.

2608. Has he told you he has not been settled with?—He told me he has not been settled with, and he got that money as a retainer.

2609. And that he is to get more?—Yes.

2610. And he has not got it yet?—Not to my knowledge; he told me he did not.

2611. I want you to tell me who were those persons that you said the same things to as to Mr. Kingsbury, as many of them as you recollect?—I don't know whether I stated it to any of the country people or not, but there is only one man in town that I said it to, that is Thomas Tierney. I had conversations with different country people.

2612. Where does Thomas Tierney live?—He lives in Friar-street. That is the only person I can recollect I had conversation with.

2613. That is the only one of the townspeople; who were the country people you stated it to?—There were some of the Commons' people in that day at my place; I believe I expressed myself in the same way to them, but I can't recall their names.

2614. Are they customers of yours?—Some of them are.

2615. I suppose it was to your customers you said it?—Yes, people that do business with me.

2616. And they have accounts in your shop, of course?—Some of them, sir.

2617. When you go home and look into your books you will find that you sold some things about the time of the election; you will see who were in your place about that time, and that may help your memory; we will not mind that subject more at present. You are in the drapery business I believe?—Yes, nothing but the drapery business.

2618. Could you give me anything more of the particulars of the conversation with Tierney?—No, sir, I have given it as closely as I possibly could.

2619. Where did it occur?—In my own house.

2620. Did you send for him?—I believe I did: I think I did.

2621. And do you recollect why you sent for him?—Well, I cannot, sir.

2622. In what room in your house was it?—In the shop, sir.

2623. There was no one present of course at the conversation?—No one: there was not: there might have been persons in the shop.

2624. But you did not say it in the hearing of any person?—No, sir.

2625. Did Tierney tell you that he had been canvassed by any person for Mr. O'Beirne?—He did, sir.

2626. Did he tell you that he had promised to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, sir.

2627. Who did he tell you had canvassed him?—Well, I believe, Captain Graham canvassed him, and he was in the employment of Going and Smith at the same time. I believe the principal person there—a man named Ryan—canvassed him—at least he told me so.

2628. That he canvassed him for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

2629. What trade are Going and Smith in?—In flour and meal and bread—a very extensive store in town.

2630. And baking, I believe?—Yes.

2631. Was there a man named Michael Coffey?—Yes; I believe he is gone to America.

2632. When Tierney told you he had been canvassed by Captain Graham, he told you something similar to what Mr. Kingsbury had said to you?—If he did tell me anything I can't recollect a word of it.

2633. You would not have told him that he would be remunerated by Mr. Munster, unless you believed that the other side were going to do something for him?—He told me he was canvassed, but I can't think there was any engagement.

2634. Do you think you would have told him he would be remunerated by Mr. Munster unless, the other side were doing it?—It was a general belief that the other side were very liberal.

2635. You were not going round the streets and saying that to every one: it is only to the persons that you thought were acted upon that you said it?—I did not make myself particularly active: it was only those that came in to me.

2636. Have you any doubt that the other side were going to give Tierney money?—There was a public report through the town that such and such things were doing.

2637. I want you to tell me what you heard?—Very often gossip as true and very often not. Everything a man hears he can't swear to. One-half of what I hear in Cashel I don't believe at all, and the other half I doubt.

2638. You will tell me, if you please, did you hear that Tierney was acted on, or to be acted on by the other side?—Well, I can't recollect. I have no interest in the world but to tell it out plump, but I can't recollect.

2639. Having no interest in not telling it out, of course you will. Would you send for Tierney and tell him that Mr. Munster would remunerate him for his vote unless you believed that you were counteracting the other side?—I don't know, sir: anything I did, I did it voluntarily.

2640. How did Tierney vote?—He voted for Mr. Munster.

2641. Did you see him after the election?—I did, several times, sir.

2642. You had a conversation with him, I have no doubt, with reference to what you said to him that time?—I had.

2643. Do you know did he get any money?—Not to my knowledge.

2644. Did he never come to you for it?—He often complained to me that he didn't get it.

2645. Did he ever come to you to remind you that you had said to him that Mr. Munster would remunerate him?—He did.

2646. Was that more than once?—Oh, it was.

2647. Did it happen constantly?—I suppose about three or four times within the last nine or ten months.

2648. When was the last time?—I should think about a month since.

2649. Did you tell him that you would do your best for him?—I didn't latterly, because I washed my hands completely out of them latterly.

2650. Did you say anything about our coming here?—No, sir; since the election was over I didn't meddle or interfere in one way or the other.

2651. But he has been with you four times?—Yes, I think in or about that.

2652. Did you give him the same answer every time?—I did.

2653. And still he persisted in coming to you?—The poor man didn't come to me nor tease me, but I often met him.

2654. You held out some sort of hope to him?—Latterly I did not, sir; I saw no prospect of his getting anything, nor did I trouble myself about it either.

2655. And he is the only man whose name you recollect as having spoken to in a similar manner?—Yes, sir; but I can't recollect any other.

2656. Did any other persons besides Tierney come to you complaining that they did not get money?—Well, I believe Mr. Kingsbury was expecting it.

2657. Mr. Kingsbury came back to you?—He did, sir.

2658. And did he complain that he had been badly treated?—Yes, he did; it is only now that I recollect it.

2659. Mr. MOLLOY.—Badly treated in not getting money?—Yes.

2660. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Mr. Kingsbury complain to you more than once?—Yes, sir, he did.

2661. How many times did you see him?—Well, I think three or four times; if I thought it would have ever come to this I would have taken a note of it.

2662. Did anybody else besides Mr. Kingsbury come to you complaining that they had been badly treated?—No, sir, to my knowledge.

2663. Try and recollect, now?—I can't, sir; it isn't in my power.

2664. Did any of the Commons' people?—No, sir.

2665. The Commons' people were properly dealt with; they did not come back complaining that they were badly treated?—I can't say, sir; I know nothing at all about them; I am more or less mixed up with elections, and never knew anyone to get a penny for a great many years.

2666. That is to say you never saw it given?—Nor never knew it to be given; what we learn from public hearsay I take no notice of.

2667. Mr. Kingsbury is a friend of yours?—We are intimately acquainted, though of different ways of thinking in politics and that.

2668. Mr. Kingsbury came to you to complain three or four times, and Mr. Tierney came to you to complain three or four times?—Yes, but they didn't come purposely; it occurred in the course of conversation.

2669. Did they, in point of fact, three or four times each of them, complain to you that they had been badly treated?—Yes.

2670. Did they complain to you besides that you had said to them they would be remunerated?—I had influenced them more or less.

2671. To whom did you convey their complaints?—I conveyed it to Mr. Michael Laffan, and his reply was each and every time that he could do nothing for them.

2672. Did you ever convey them to anybody else; I have no doubt, although you were not bound either legally or in honour, that still you were anxious that what you had said might be made good?—I was anxious as I influenced them, and perhaps prevented them from getting money at the other side, that it should be made good, as I had the misfortune to interfere at all.

2673. Was that the reason you went to Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes; I didn't exactly go to him.

2674. You conveyed the complaint to him?—Yes, I did.

2675. And to Mr. Munster?—No.

2676. Or to anybody else for Mr. Munster?—I did, to Mr. Leahy, a particular friend of his. I think not more than once.

2677. How long ago was that?—Well, I think it is six months since I spoke to Mr. Leahy, at least.

2678. Was it after the election petition?—Oh, yes, it was.

2679. After the election petition?—Yes.

2680. Did Mr. Leahy say that he would try to do anything for them?—He said there could be nothing done for them at present.

2681. At present?—Yes.

2682. Was he living at that time with Mr. Munster, do you know?—I can't say was he ever living with him; he used to visit him here in Cashel occasionally.

2683. Do you recollect where the conversation took place with Mr. Leahy?—In my house, sir; Mr. Leahy generally called to see me when in town, for we were old acquaintances when we were young.

2684. You knew that he was intimately connected with Mr. Munster with reference to the election?—Yes.

2685. And that it was he who in point of fact induced Mr. Munster to come to Cashel?—I can't say anything about that.

2686. But you knew that he was intimately acquainted with Mr. Munster and with his candidature in Cashel?—Yes.

2687. Did Mr. Leahy say anything more than that nothing could be done for them at present?—Nothing that I recollect.

2688. Did he convey, when he thought they could do anything for them?—No, sir.

2689. Did you get any letters from Mr. Leahy or from any person at all with reference to the election?—No, sir; I never received any letters unless the addresses at the time of the election, and they are the only letters I ever received connected with the election.

2690. Mr. Laffan said that nothing could be done for them?—Yes, sir.

2691. Did he say that nothing could be done for them at present?—Yes, sir.

2692. He added that—"at present"—as well as Mr. Leahy?—Yes, sir.

2693. That is Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes, sir, he did; and he told me at the same time that he was not the person to pay it—that he had nothing at all to do with them things.

2694. Did he say who was the person to pay them?—No, sir.

2695. Did he not refer you to anyone to speak to?—No, sir.

2696. Did you ask him to whom you should make this remonstrance?—No, sir, I don't recollect that I did. I thought he was the person to apply to for them, and when I found he was not I made no further inquiries.

2697. Then the only persons to whom you did apply were Mr. Laffan and Mr. Leahy?—Yes, sir. The reason why I did apply for these people at all was that they shouldn't say I acted dishonourably towards them, and prevented their being paid elsewhere.

2698. You say you are a cloth merchant?—Yes, sir.

2699. Has Mr. Munster been dealing with you since he came to Cashel?—Yes, sir; not latterly, though.

2700. But he has been dealing with you?—Not much, sir; not as much at all as with other parties.

2701. How much?—To the best of my knowledge, from the beginning to the end he left me about £35, and he got those goods the same as the most humble person coming to my house would get them.

2702. You felt strongly against Mr. O'Beirne in this election?—Yes, I did, sir. I told you before that I was never a lukewarm person about anything.

2703. I am now only asking you as to rumours, and you are not swearing positively as to your certainty. I want to know the rumours that you heard as to who were giving the money for Mr. O'Beirne, or making promises?—I can't say anything about that.

2704. You did not hear any talk about it?—No, sir, I did not. I had no money payments with them, and couldn't learn anything about it.

2705. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know Nicholas Burke, of Bank-place?—I do.

2706. Did you ever hear that he was promised any money for the election?—Never.

2707. Was it from you that Mr. Leahy purchased a quantity of cloth about the time that Mr. Munster first came to Cashel?—Mr. Leahy never purchased anything from me—never. The first thing he bought was a hat the first day; he had it sent to the hotel. I didn't know at the same time who he was, although we were old acquaintances, until I learned afterwards.

2708. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I am bound to say that we are of opinion that you have given your evidence very fairly and frankly, and as a gentleman ought to give it, and if you require any certificate from us we shall be very happy to give it to you?—As it is your kindness, sir, I shall have no objection.

2709. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When Mr. Laffan and Mr. Leahy said that nothing could be done for those people at present, did they say anything about this inquiry?—No, sir.

2710. Neither of them?—Neither of them.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C., in handing a certificate to the witness observed—You get it because the Commissioners believe that you have told them freely all that you knew. If we were of opinion that you had withheld anything, we should have declined to give it, and you would be liable to consequences.

John Duggan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Duggan.

2711. You are a voter, I believe, in Cashel?—Yes, sir.

2712. For whom did you vote at the last election? For Mr. Munster, sir; and would do so in the morning again.

2713. Now just confine yourself to answering the questions that I put to you?—Yes, sir.

2714. We were told yesterday that three £10 notes were sent in an envelope to you. I want to know by whom they were sent?—I don't know, sir.

2715. Who gave you the money?—I didn't get it, sir; I got £1 in my office, from a man of the name of Looby or Duggan, in my own office.

2716. Do you know that he had three £10 notes for you?—No, sir.

2717. Did he only give you £1?—Yes, sir.

2718. Did he offer you only £1?—That is all, sir.

2719. Did you tell him what to do with any of the rest of the money?—No, sir, to the best of my recollection; on my oath, I did not.

2720. I believe you were not sober at that time?—I was in the habit of taking a drop at that time.

2721. And you were not sober at the time he came to you?—I was not.

2722. And you will swear positively that you did not receive three £10 notes from him?—I will swear positively.

2723. Do you mean to say that you were too drunk to see it?—No, sir.

2724. Do you know that your sister got it?—She told me she got it. It was I believe a week or ten days after the election. It was, I believe, the Saturday week after the election.

2725. What do you mean by the Saturday week?—I mean the declaration of member was on Saturday, and I believe it was that day she got the money.

2726. And she kept it: did she?—Yes; when I went home that night she told me; she mentioned Looby or Duggan left £29 with her.

2727. Your sister lives with you?—Yes, sir.

2728. May I ask what is your occupation?—Weighmaster under the Town Commissioners; public weighmaster.

2729. Are you a married man?—No, sir.

2730. Then your sister is your housekeeper?—Yes.

2731. And you support the house?—Yes.

2732. And that money was used in your house?—Yes.

2733. Now tell the Commissioners frankly and freely all about that money?—I shall, sir. I will put you to no unnecessary trouble about it. At the approaching election here, Mr. Michael Laffan acquainted me with regard to a candidate to be coming for the borough of Cashel against Mr. O'Beirne, or any other person who may come; and I acquainted Mr. Michael Laffan, that whoever would come the way, I certainly would support him, as far as I possibly could, in preference to Mr. O'Beirne, no matter who he may be—if it was Old Nick I would vote for him in preference.

2734. I will have no levity?—I will drop it, sir.

2735. You need not go into any irrelevant or immaterial circumstances?—No farther, sir.

2736. Keep yourself closely to the story, and make it as short as you please?—Consequently Mr. O'Beirne came on his canvass, and he asked me for my support, and I told him I would not give it. After that I was asked by the friends of Mr. Munster—by Mr. Laffan—who I would support, and I told him I would vote for Mr. Munster, and did so; all the mobs that was about the place and everything, I being reared in the meat market, and connected with the shambles, I stuck with the mob, at every occasion that was required, and supported Mr. Munster, and voted for him. There and then, I didn't ask Mr. Laffan or any of Mr. Mun-ster's agents for any money going about, or anything, until this money was sent on that day that I state; but of course it isn't to throw it back again; and I didn't know from whom it came, nor neither did I inquire, and to the best of my belief at present that I never asked Looby who he got it from.

2737. Now, Mr. Duggan, my two friends here and myself, do not at all believe that that money was sent without a purpose, and we do not at all believe that it was sent by mistake to you. All that you have said to me about it was, "I did not ask Mr. Laffan or any of Mr. Munster's agents for the money." That is perfectly true, perhaps. Which of them told you that you would get it?—Told me I would get it, sir?

2738. Told you that you would get any money?—None, sir.

2739. Do you want us to believe that that money was sent to you without your having heard anything directly or indirectly about it?—No, sir; I positively swear that.

2740. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you expect money?—I hadn't the slightest doubt of course if it was their kindness to send it to me.

2741. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Would you not have felt badly used if you had not been sent something?—On my oath I would not.

2742. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Will you swear that you did not expect it?—I swear positively I never expected it.

2743. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you swear that you expected money on account of the election?—Well, I did.

2744. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Now, Mr. Duggan, you are not answering so far, candidly or straightforwardly; you admit that this money came to you, and that you took it?—I do.

2745. You are not in a very safe position; I would recommend you to tell us exactly the truth. You now admit that you expected you would get money. If you want to be protected tell me candidly and honestly what words or what thing was it that made you expect money would be sent to you, and who was it that said the words or did the thing that made you expect it?—I expected when I did vote honourably for Mr. Munster, if the like were to be going the way that of course I would be entitled to it, and on them grounds that is the reason that I did expect it.

2746. You are not telling me that any person said anything to you, or wrote anything to you, or made some sign, or did something that made you expect that you would get £30. I will not ask you another question if you do not answer me?—I did expect to get money.

2747. You are not telling me what was said or written, or what sign was made, that led you to expect money?—Patrick Laffan said to me that he would see me all right.

2748. See what a long time it took to get that from you?—And at the same time whether he did or not, sir, I would vote for Mr. Munster.

2749. Where did Mr. Patrick Laffan tell you that?—To the best of my opinion, sir, it was on the Main-street.

2750. When?—It was in or about the election commencing, sir.

2751. Did he say the words "thirty pounds" to you, or write it, or how was it?—Not a word, sir.

2752. Is that the only conversation you had with him?—That is all, sir.

2753. You saw him again?—I saw him different times, but on my oath we never spoke again about it.

2754. That is not all that happened then; tell me what else occurred?—Nothing more.

2755. Do you mean to say that he walked up to you and said those words to you, and that you never said anything?—I met him in the street, and in a careless sort of manner he spoke to me and said, "I will see you all right."

2756. Is that the only conversation you had with him?—I never used the words with him with reference to the money.

2757. Or with any other person?—No, sir. I spoke to him on another occasion at Corcoran's, and he asked me did I know how Michael Noonan was going to vote, and I said I didn't know.

2758. You say that you spoke to him one night in Corcoran's hotel, and that he asked you how Noonan was going to vote?—Yes.

2759. Did you hear that night that the amount was £30?—No, sir, not on his part of it.

2760. From whom, then, did you hear it?—He spoke to me with regard to Noonan.

2761. I want to know when it was that you heard the sum named as £30; you said it was not that night but some other night?—Thirty pounds, sir.

2762. That that was the figure?—Not for myself, sir; I didn't say that.

2763. I want to know when you did hear it?—It was previous to the election.

2764. From whom did you hear it previous to the election?—From Mr. Patrick Laffan.

2765. That £30 was the figure?—Yes, sir.

2766. Where did you hear that?—At Corcoran's hotel, sir; he didn't speak it to me.

2767. He wrote it?—Yes.

2768. Where; in the room at Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, sir.

2769. What did he write it on; was it on a small piece of paper, or a letter, or what?—I think it was on a piece of paper.

2770. What was done with it; did he tear it up, or what?—I can't say, sir.

2771. Do you recollect the words that were on it?—£30 figure, I think, sir, was on it.

2772. There were no words written then, only the £30?—No.

2773. And he wrote £30 and handed you the bit of paper?—He did not hand it to me.

2774. To whom else?—He only showed it in his hand that way.

[Witness makes a descriptive gesture.]

2775. Another night he asked you how Mick Noonan was going to vote?—He did, sir.

2776. What did you say about Michael Noonan?—I told him I would see him, sir, 2777. Did you see him?—I saw him, and we were walking up the Main-street; I told him I was going to Corcoran's and I asked him would he go in there.

2778. The time that he was asking you about Michael Noonan was after he showed you the paper?—That was at the beginning of the election.

2779. He showed you the figure previous to the conversation with Noonan?—It was after Noonan was in conversation with me.

2780. How long after; was it the same day?—I think it was the same night.

2781. Was Noonan there?—He came in with me, and I left him talking to him, and I don't know what occurred between them.

2782. What I ask you is, was Noonan there when he showed you the figure?—No, sir.

2783. There was nobody but yourself?—Myself and Mr. Patrick Laffan, and there was some other man sitting in the room; I don't know who he was.

2784. Was he a stranger to you?—He was.

2785. Have you ever seen him before or since?—No, sir.

2786. Were you long in the room with Noonan?—I didn't go into the room with him at all, sir.

2787. I thought you said you went in with him?—Into the house, sir; I went into Corcoran's house with him, and I left him talking to him on the lobby.

2788. What is Noonan?—He was a butcher and a jobber, but I believe he is in America now.

2789. How long is he gone to America?—I suppose he is four or five or six months now, to the best of my knowledge.

2790. Did you know Noonan very well?—I did, sir.

2791. You told him of course that you got £30?—No, sir.

2792. You did not tell him?—No indeed.

2793. Did he tell you that he got £30?—No, sir.

John Duggan.

2794. Mr. Molloy.—Did you tell him what the figure was?—To Noonan, sir?

2795. Yes?—No indeed.

2796. Try and recollect?—I did not tell him.

2797. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Perhaps you wrote it to him?—No, sir.

2798. Did he tell you what the figure was?—Was?

2799. Do you say you don't know that Noonan knew what the figure was?—On my oath I don't know; I never made the inquiry since.

2800. Your sister told you that Looby said the money came from Cunningham?—I can't swear that indeed, sir; she may have told me for what I know of it.

2801. Did you see Cunningham since then?—I did, very often.

2802. Did you tell him that you had got a letter?—No, sir.

2803. Did he say anything to you about a letter?—No, sir.

2804. Directly or indirectly?—No, sir.

2805. Did he write to you about it?—No, sir; of course it was reasonable and natural that when the cousin got it he would bring it safe.

2806. Looby is your cousin?—He is.

2807. Mr. Griffin.—How soon after Mr. Patrick Laffan said he would see you all right, had you the conversation with him in the hotel?—It was before the election, sir.

2808. But it was after he told you he would see you all right that you saw him in Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, sir.

2809. About how long after was it?—I couldn't be accurate.

2810. When was it he asked you about Michael Noonan?—It was in two or three evenings, to the best of my knowledge, previous to the polling.

2811. How long was it before you went to Corcoran's hotel that he asked you about Noonan?—It was on the same evening that I spoke to Noonan.

2812. After he had spoken about Noonan, you met Noonan the same day?—Yes.

2813. You had a conversation with Noonan of course?—We walked up the street.

2814. You asked him to come to Corcoran's hotel with you?—Yes, sir.

2815. Did you tell him what it was for?—No.

2816. Did you tell him it was to see Mr. Pat Laffan?—No.

2817. Did you tell him that Mr. Pat Laffan said he would see you all right?—No.

2818. Did you tell him it was for the election?—I did, sir, and when we went in he met Mr. Pat. Laffan, and I left them together.

2819. Are you sure you did not tell him that Mr. Pat. Laffan said he would see you all right?—To the best of my knowledge I did not.

2820. You told him that it was to see Mr. Pat Laffan you wanted him to go to Corcoran's hotel?—It was, sir.

2821. Was it after you had both gone to Corcoran's hotel that Mr. Pat. Laffan showed you this piece of paper?—It was after he being in conversation with Noonan and leaving him, sir.

2822. Did Noonan remain in the room?—I can't positively say.

2823. Did you see Noonan again after you had seen the piece of paper?—No, sir.

2824. Not that evening?—No; and he was all day about the place, and I never asked him again, directly or indirectly.

2825. Did he ever say anything to you about having seen a piece of paper?—No.

2826. Did you ask him would he vote for Mr. Munster?—I did not, indeed, sir.

Mr. Waters, Q.C.—We shall have to examine you again as soon as Mr. Patrick Laffan is here. The opinion we have arrived at is, that although you did not give your evidence very satisfactorily at first, you have told us the truth as regards yourself; and if on future examination you will tell us in the same way, we shall give you a certificate that will free you from the consequences of your acts at the election. I do not give it to you at present, because we may want you again.

Ellen Duggan sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Ellen Duggan.

2827. Do you recollect Looby; he is a cousin of yours, I believe?—He is, sir.

2828. Do you recollect his coming to you?—I do, sir.

2829. Some time after the election?—Yes, sir.

2830. And giving you £29?—Yes, sir.

2831. I suppose he told you whom he got the letter from?—No, sir.

2832. Was it in a letter?—No, sir, but he counted it to me.

2833. He counted it to you?—Yes, sir.

2834. He told you it was for your brother?—No, sir, he did not; he only just counted it to me.

2835. Do you mean to say he only just counted it and said nothing?—He told me to put it up.

2836. To put it up?—Yes.

2837. Did you give it to your brother?—No, sir, but when he came in I told him I got it.

2838. And you told him who left it there?—I did, sir.

2839. Did not Looby, your cousin, tell you where he got the money?—No, sir, he did not.

2840. Or what it was for?—No, sir.

2841. Or anything about it at all?—No, sir, I only just took it, and asked no more about it.

2842. Did he say whom it was for, or whom the money belonged to?—No, sir, he did not.

2843. And you put it up?—I did, sir.

2844. You used it in the house?—Yes, sir.

2845. And your brother used it?—Yes, sir.

2846. And do you mean to say that you never knew what it was for?—No, sir, I did not.

2847. Or whose it was?—No, sir.

2848. Or where it came from?—No, sir; I knew no more about it.

2849. But you used it as your own?—I did, sir.

2850. And your brother did?—Yes, sir.

2851. Did Looby say anything about having given £1 of it to your brother that day?—No, sir.

2852. Did he say that your brother was not sober, and that he did not like to leave the money with him?—No, sir.

2853. Did he say anything else except what you have told us, that he came and said to put it up?—Nothing else, sir.

Patrick Cunningham was called but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mortimer Shea.

2854. Do you know Patrick Cunningham?—Well, your honour.

2855. When did you see him last in Cashel?—I didn't see him since the day of the races.

2856. He was here, then?—Yes.

2857. That was some day in last week?—Yes, sir.

2858. Do you know where he lives?—I do, your worship.

2859. With whom does he live?—He lives with his father, Thomas Cunningham.

FOURTH DAY.
October 7.
Mortimer Shea.

2860. You got a summons to serve on him?—I left it with the father yesterday evening late.

2861. What did the father say?—I asked him was he at home; he said not; I asked him, "Where is he? can I see him?" "No, he is gone to the fair yesterday."

2862. Where was the fair?—There was a fair in Clonmel yesterday. I asked him then when did he expect him home. "I can't tell," says he. I told him "here is a summons to him, to attend at eleven o'clock to-morrow."

Denis Heffernan.

Denis Heffernan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2863. You are a voter of Cashel, I believe?—Yes.

2864. And voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—I did.

2865. How many pounds were in the letter that Looby gave you?—There was £30 in it, sir.

2866. Was it three £10 notes?—It was not, sir; there was some gold in it, and a £5 note.

2867. Was there any letter along with it?—No, sir.

2868. It was only in an envelope?—An envelope.

2869. Was the envelope addressed to yourself?—Yes.

2870. Do you know the writing that was on the envelope?—"Denis Heffernan," that was all.

2871. Do you know in whose handwriting "Denis Heffernan" was?—I do not, sir.

2872. Do you know who sent it to you?—I do not.

2873. Oh, you do; sure I know that?—I do not, sir.

2874. Who sent it to you?—By gor, I don't know who sent it to me.

2875. You are on your oath to tell the truth?—I will answer everything I knows.

2876. As you are a butcher, was it sent to you for meat?—It was not, sir.

2877. Was it sent to you for your vote at the election?—I don't know, sir.

2878. Tell me the truth like an honest man; if you tell me the truth you will come to no consequences for it; if you do not tell the truth you may be sent to prison for two years?—If I thought it was for my vote I wouldn't take it.

2879. Tell me the truth; was it for your vote?—I knew I had no other value to give for it; I had nothing else to give for it.

2880. Do you not know it was Patrick Cunningham that sent it?—I don't, sir.

2881. Do you mean to say that you do not know who sent it?—I don't know who sent it.

2882. Did you ever hear who sent it?—I did not, sir.

2883. You are not recollecting yourself; you know who sent it to you surely?—I do not, sir.

2884. Did you not hear that it was sworn here yesterday?—I didn't, sir; I was in Clonmel yesterday.

2885. Do you mean to say that you did not hear that it was sworn here yesterday that Patrick Cunningham sent that letter to you? surely that was talked of last night in Cashel?—It was Neddy Duggan that gave it to me, sir.

2886. Do you mean to say that you did not hear that it was Patsey Cunningham who sent you that letter?—I did not, sir.

2887. Did you take the letter from Duggan?—I did, sir.

2888. Without asking where it came from?—I didn't ask him anything at all, sir; I only opened it.

2889. You knew what it was about?—I partly guessed, sir.

2890. You asked no questions, but put it in your pocket?—Put it in my pocket.

2891. And I suppose opened it in some private place?—Begor, I didn't go very far, sir, when I opened it. I often opened letters in the street, more precious than that was.

2892. And you counted the £30 in it?—I did, sir.

2893. Was Looby near you at the time?—He was not, sir.

2894. Did he turn away from you, or where did he go to?—I couldn't tell where he went.

2895. You say you "partly guessed" what it was about; when you saw it was £30 you knew of course what it was for?—I did.

2896. You knew what it was sent for?—I couldn't think anything else when I didn't ask it.

2897. At any rate you were so satisfied it was for your vote, that you did not go to Looby and ask him who gave it to him?—I didn't, sir.

2898. Was it Mr. Patrick Laffan that told you what the figure was?—He didn't tell me what the figure was, sir, nor I didn't ask him.

2899. Sure somebody told you; you might as well tell it at once?—I didn't ask what figure was going.

2900. Did he tell you?—He did not, sir.

2901. Or anybody?—No, sir; I asked Patrick Laffan was any money left, and he said not; I said he ought to make me out some if he had any.

2902. Where did this conversation occur with Mr. Pat Laffan?—Above in the father's house, sir; I went up there.

2903. Was it in the hall, or where?—In the hall.

2904. Was there anyone present?—There was, sir; Pat Cunningham was present.

2905. Anybody else?—No, sir.

2906. And what you said to him was, that if he had any money left he ought to make you out some?—That is what I said, sir.

2907. You knew he was giving money?—I did not, sir.

2908. Why did you say "if he had any money left;" sure you knew that he was giving it out, as you said, "if he had any left"?—How could I know that?

2909. You said to him, "if you have any money left you ought to make out some for me"?—I didn't see him giving any.

2910. Who told you to go up there?—I was often up there.

2911. Is that a fair answer to my question?—No one told me; I went up there out of my own head.

2912. With Patrick Cunningham?—No, sir.

2913. Did you go by arrangement?—No, sir.

2914. You only went by chance?—Only by chance.

2915. And in Cunningham's presence you said to Patrick Laffan, "If you have any money left you ought to make out some for me"?—Yes, and he said he would if he could.

2916. Is that what he said?—Yes, and I told him to give it to Patsey Cunningham, and I don't know where it came from after.

2917. That is not the first time you saw Mr. Patrick Laffan about the election?—Oh, it was. I see him every day, but I was not speaking to him about the election.

2918. You often saw him during the election?—I didn't ask him anything, sir.

2919. You were often speaking to him about money?—I was not, sir.

2920. Did Mr. Laffan say he would see you all right at any time?—No.

2921. Did he ask you to vote for money?—No, sir.

2922. Did anybody ask you to vote for money?—Nobody at all, but Mr. Michael Laffan came to me and said that Mr. Munster was coming, a good Catholic and a very rich man, and I ought to vote for him, and I said I would vote for him.

2923. Mr. Michael Laffan said that Mr. Munster was coming, a good Catholic and a very rich man?—Yes.

2924. Did he say what he would do for the town or anything that way?—He did not, sir.

2925. Did you hear any talk at all about five or six thousand pounds in the National Bank?—I did not, sir.

Denis Heffernan.

2926. None at all?—No; I didn't go near him at all.

2927. Mr. Laffan did not say anything about that?—He did not, sir.

2928. I am very much afraid you are not telling me all you know?—I am telling you all I know, sir, as far as I can think.

2929. I am very much afraid you are not. It will be better for you to tell the truth?—I wouldn't like to conceal anything, sir.

2930. It will be much better for you not. When did you go to Mr. Pat Laffan to his father's house?—About a week after the election. I said, by the same token, "If you give it to me now it wouldn't be no bribery, for my vote is gone."

2931. You made a very great mistake in that?—'Twas ignorance, sir.

2932. You will not be excused for that ignorance; the law will not excuse you. Any person who shall directly or indirectly give, lend, or offer payment, or who shall procure or endeavour to procure, or shall corruptly do any act aforesaid (that is the giving of money), on account of any voter having voted, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall also be liable to forfeit the sum of £100, and the punishment for a misdemeanour is two years' imprisonment; and the person who takes the money is just as bad as the person who gives it, and it does not matter a bit if you had voted five years before. So you see what a mistake you made, and what a position you stand in at present. Now, you say it was about a week after the election?—Yes, sir.

2933. Now, if you had no conversation with Patrick Cunningham you had with somebody else before the election about what was going at the election, or what was likely to be done, or what was the figure?—I had not, sir.

2934. With any one?—No, sir.

2935. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you vote in 1865?—I did, sir.

2936. For whom?—For Lanigan, sir.

2937. Mr. Laffan was his agent then?—Yes, sir.

2938. Did you get no money at that election?—No, sir.

2939. Or after the election?—No, sir.

2940. You are quite sure?—Yes, sir.

2941. You voted in '59?—I did, sir.

2942. For whom?—I think Lanigan.

2943. Who was his agent then?—I believe Mr. Laffan's father.

2944. How does it happen that this was the first election at which it occurred to you to go to Mr. Laffan after the election, and say you ought to get some money if there was any left?—It ran into my mind.

2945. Do you not think you had as good a right to it in '65 as in '68?—I didn't look for it, sir; I went on chance for it.

2946. How did it happen that you did not go in '65?—I can't tell you.

2947. If you tell us the truth we can give you a certificate; if you tell the truth nothing can be done to you even if you took a bribe for every one of the elections; but if you do not tell us the truth you are liable to be prosecuted for having taken bribes, and it can be proved by other persons; therefore, consider whether you had not better tell the truth?—I am telling the truth, sir.

2948. Did you never ask anybody at any of the previous elections whether there was any money left?—I did not, sir.

2949. Or that you would like to get payment for voting?—I did not, sir.

2950. How did it happen that you did it the last time?—By chance only; I chanced to go up to the office.

2951. Why did you not chance to do it at any previous election?—Because I didn't know it.

2952. You would rather have got £30 than nothing?—I wouldn't have it, sir.

2953. You expect us to believe that although taking £30 the last time, you would not have taken it on a previous occasion?—I wouldn't vote if I thought I was to sit on this chair.

2954. If you did not think you were to sit on that chair would you have taken money in '65?—I wouldn't have it from Mr. Lanigan.

Mr. William James O'Brien sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. William James O'Brien.

2955. I believe you are teller in the National Bank?—Yes.

2956. Do you know of any persons having come to the bank to inquire with reference to cheques of Mr. O'Beirne's?—Yes.

2957. Tell me their names?—Simon Tracey was one of them. I think one or two more did call, but I don't remember their names.

2958. Simon Tracey did call?—Yes.

2959. Do you recollect when he called and what he said about it?—I am not quite sure was it before or after the election. He presented a cheque of Mr. O'Beirne's for £60: he didn't want cash for it but he wanted to know "was he honourable," that is the expression he used.

2960. The cheque I believe was post dated?—I don't remember; he presented it afterwards and we had not cash to pay.

2961. Had you received any communication in the interval from Mr. O'Beirne, directing you not to pay any such cheques?—I think there was a letter received by the manager, not to cash any more cheques. I am not quite sure, but I am under the impression that there was.

2962. That letter I suppose is preserved?—I am not quite sure, but I think the manager keeps those letters.

2963, Mr. MOLLOY.—The second time that he came with the cheque did he want to cash it?—Yes.

2964. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you able to say what interval occurred between the first and second visit he paid?—I should say about three weeks or a month.

2965. Do you recollect at what date the account was closed?—The account was finally closed on the 28th December—we close all our accounts then, and there was only a few shillings to his credit.

2966. But previous to that you had received a letter from Mr. O'Beirne, directing not to have any more cheques paid?—That is my impression.

2967. You said that others had called as well as Mr. Tracey; what was the latest of these calls?—I think about the same time—during the election.

2968. I forget if you are able to fix the time of the first visit of Mr. Tracey?—I think it was about the election week, or in the early part of November, the 11th or 15th of November; I think it was some time about that week.

2969. And the other would not have been until December?—About a month.

2970. And other applications of a similar nature were made to the extent of three?—I think one, or two, or three other cheques were presented.

2971. Do you not recollect the names of any of these parties?—No.

2972. Are you not a long time living in Cashel?—Not a long time.

2973. Did you call attention to the fact of those people coming?—Yes, I always used to show cheques.

2974. To whom do you show them?—To the manager, Mr. Barron.

2975. And have you had no conversation with any person in the bank since, that would recall to your recollection who the parties were?—No.

2976. Does the manager sit in the same office as yourself?—Yes.

FOURTH DAY.
October 7.

Mr. William James O'Brien.

2977. Then he could see the persons who presented the cheques?—He could.

2978. Do you recollect any conversatien they had with the manager?—No, I think the account was overdrawn, and we said we could not pay them.

2979. If you do not recollect the name, do you recollect the amount of any of those cheques?—I think they were all between £10 and £20.

2980. Do you recollect when the latest of those applications was made?—I really could not tell, but about that time.

2981. Was there any made since the election petition was tried?—None whatever.

2982. Any cheques presented?—None.

2983. Or just before it?—I think not since Christmas.

2984. You do not know it yourself, and you have not heard?—I have not heard it, and they were not presented in my presence; they may in my absence.

2985. Did you hear from your colleagues in the bank?—They are all of opinion that none were presented.

2986. Mr. Munster, I believe, kept an account in the bank also?—Yes.

Hubert J. Cahill.

Hubert J. Cahill sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

2987. You are son of Mr. James Cahill, I believe?—I am, sir.

2988. You are assistant in your father's business?—I am, sir.

2989. You are not yet in partnership with him?—No, sir.

2990. Do you know that your father was examined here to-day?—I do, sir.

2991. And he told you to come up?—He did, sir.

2992. Now, I want to know from you what arrangement was made about your services with Mr. Laffan during the election?—None at all, sir, but he told me he would pay me liberally; that was all the arrangement.

2993. Which Mr. Laffan said that?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

2994. And what was your occupation with him?—The first was seeing to Mr. Munster's house in John-street, getting it fitted up and furniture into it three or four weeks, and the remainder writing for the election.

2995. Used you to be there often?—Very often.

2996. Had you any settled hours at which you went?—No, whenever I was sent for I went.

2997. You did not go every day?—Mostly every day; nearly every day, only on Sundays.

2998. Where did you write?—I wrote in Corcoran's hotel, in a room Mr. Munster had engaged.

2999. At what time did your engagement commence?—The 21st September, sir, about two months previous to the election.

3000. And how long were you occupied?—Two months, sir, exactly.

3001. We are told you have been paid only £4?—That was all, sir.

3002. Was it paid at the time?—It was paid about six days after being engaged.

3003. I need not say you do not consider that liberal remuneration?—If I thought I would get only £4 I would not have taken the employment at all.

3004. Have you asked for more since?—I did.

3005. What answer did you get?—I got no reply, sir; I was told it could not be paid for some time, but nothing as to the amount.

3006. When was that last said to you?—Several times since the election.

3007. About how many times?—I suppose about four times.

3008. And who said it to you?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir; I applied to no one else.

3009. Anybody else?—Nobody else, sir.

3010. Was it in Corcoran's hotel that the arrangement was made?—No, sir, it was in my father's shop.

3011. Had Mr. Laffan or Mr. Munster commenced his canvass at that time?—I believe he had, sir; I am not sure.

3012. And Mr. Laffan was canvassing for him actively?—He was.

3013. Was your engagement with Mr. Laffan in writing?—No, sir, verbally.

3014. Did you get a cheque for the £4?—No, sir, four single pound notes.

3015. Did you give any receipt for them?—No, sir, nor was not asked.

3016. Where was the payment made to you?—In the office, in his father's house, by Mr. Patrick Laffan.

3017. From the time that you went to Corcoran's hotel, when you were sent for almost daily as you say, your work was all concerning the election?—It was, sir.

3018. And portion of the employment you were engaged in, I understand, in the beginning was of a private nature about Mr. Munster's house?—Everyone saw me going in and out.

3019. I mean private, as not connected with the election?—It was, sir.

3020. Portion of the work you were employed in was that, in the beginning?—It was, sir.

3021. How long did that last?—About three weeks, sir.

3022. You said you applied about four times for payment; was the answer to you on each occasion to the effect that you could not be paid for some time?—That was the reply, sir, and that I would not be forgotten.

3023. Would you be able to give me with any sort of accuracy the words Mr. Laffan used?—I don't think I could, sir.

3024. Could you not go closer than "it won't be for some time, but you won't be forgotten?"—I don't think of any more, sir.

3025. He did not say that he was short of money?—No, sir.

3026. And he did not imply that Mr. Munster was short of money?—No, sir.

3027. Did he give no reason?—I don't think of any reason he assigned.

3028. Can you recollect if he said anything in the course of conversation which would lead you to infer his reason?—I could not; he told me himself was not paid.

3029. You saw Mr. Richardson often?—I did.

3030. Constantly?—Yes.

3031. And you knew he was paying the election agents?—I did not.

3032. Did you not know he was the expense agent?—I didn't hear it.

3033. You knew he was acting here for Mr. Munster?—I did.

3034. Did you know that Patrick Cunningham was paying money?—I did.

3035. Whom did you know that Patrick Cunningham paid?—I don't know who he paid, but I heard a rumour that he was paying.

3036. Did you hear that Mr. Pat Laffan was paying money for Mr. Munster?—I did not; I only knew that he was an agent, but nothing more.

3037. Mr. MOLLOY.—When the £4 was paid, were you told that that was only a retainer?—I was, sir.

3038. What was said about its being only a retainer?—I understood I was to get £5 for a retainer, but when I went for the money there was only £4.

3039. Who told you you were to get £5?—Mr. Laffan, sir.

3040. What did he say about it?—He told me that he would pay me liberally, but at present he would only give me £5 as a retainer.

3041. Well, then, when you went for the retainer, having only given you £4 did you say anything?—Not a word, sir; I only took what I got.

3042. This occurred, I believe, in your father's shop?—The engagement was in my father's shop.

3043. I suppose Mr. Laffan was canvassing at that time?—I know that he was canvassing about that time.

3044. Do you recollect that he was canvassing your father?—I do well.

3045. Have you any doubt that he was canvassing then?—At that time the canvass was not public; it was only in a private way.

3046. You must have known that he was canvassing?—I did.

3047. And you knew that he canvassed your father?—I did, sir.

3048. And was that the same day?—Oh, he canvassed my father previously, or perhaps after that.

3049. Did Mr. Laffan say anything to you about your father being a supporter of Mr. Munster's?—Never a word, sir, and he didn't know at the time that my father would vote for Mr. Munster.

3050. Had your father not promised at first?—He did not, sir, nor up to the entire time of canvassing.

3051. Then he was in entire doubt?—He was, sir.

3052. Had your father put him off?—Oh, he had not, sir, but he would not give him an answer.

3053. Mr. Griffin.—When did Mr. Laffan tell you that you could not be paid for some time?—I am sure it is three weeks ago.

3054. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—The engagement occurred in your father's shop?—It did.

3055. Was your father present?—He was not; there was no one but both of us.

3056. Was your father in the shop at any time during the time Mr. Laffan was there?—He was not in the house at the time.

3057. He had canvassed your father before that?—I believe he had, sir, but I cannot say it truly.

3058. Mr. Griffin.—Did he say to you about the election petition that it could not be paid for some time?—He did, sir.

3059. Since the election petition?—Yes, sir.

3060. Did he say anything about this inquiry at all?—Not a word, sir.

3061. Do you know when your father made up his mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—I think he didn't until the day he canvassed him personally.

3062. What day was that?—I don't know what day it was; he went round in his carriage to every one.

3063. You had been a considerable time acting for Mr. Munster then?—I had, sir.

3064. Some weeks?—Some weeks, sir.

3065. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—You do not appear to have sent in a claim on Mr. Munster?—I did, sir; I sent a claim to Mr. Laffan, but not to Mr. Munster.

3066. Mr. Griffin.—For how much?—£60.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

3067. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Mr. Biggin, have you this claim?—I have not got the claim, sir; but I have got a record of it. (Record handed in.)

Hubert J. Cahill's examination resumed by Mr. Griffin.

Hubert J. Cahill.

3068. Mr. Griffin.—Does your father pay you any salary?—No, sir.

3069. The time during which you were employed for Mr. Munster was two months?—About two months, sir.

3070. Mr. Molloy.—What was the writing that you were doing at Corcoran's hotel about?—It was connected with the election; I don't know the exact meaning of it.

3071. But it was connected with the election?—Oh, it was.

3072. Mr. Griffin.—It was after you had sent in this claim that you had the conversations with Mr. Laffan?—Before and after.

3073. You had conversations with him after?—Yes, sir.

3074. And all that passed was that you could not be paid yet?—Yes; "I was not paid myself yet."

3075. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—I suppose you did not receive any letter about it?—No, sir.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

3076. Whose handwriting is this (record of claims on Mr. Munster) in?—It is all mine, sir. I don't think anything has been written in it since.

3077. Is this list in the same handwriting?—It is; I think everything in it is mine.

3078. What do you call this book?—I call it a ledger, sir. I made it up since the petition.

3079. That "J. Cahill, number 31," is the old gentleman that was examined—the father of Hubert?—I suppose it refers to him; it is taken from the claim; everything is taken from a claim.

3080. Where is that claim?—I have not that either, I think; all that I found are here.

3081. Have the goodness to have search made for those two claims for me?—I have done so, sir.

3082. Mr. Griffin.—When was this list written?—It will be dated at the beginning of the book, at the first page.

3083. There is no date?—Well, it is since the petition I began that book.

3084. You began it in March, I suppose?—It will be immediately after the election petition.

3085. You had the claims?—I had the claims, and had them numbered as they are there.

3086. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Do you think you will be able to find those?—I was looking last night and this morning.

3087. To whom did you give them?—I left them at Abbeyview; we did all our work there. I was very glad I made the record of them.

3088. This one is blank; how did that arise?—There would be a name sent in without any money, or the money the same without any name.

3089. Mr. Griffin.—Were those claims numbered according to the order in which they were sent in?—I think so; Mr. Richardson and I numbered them: we numbered them about Christmas, before the month of December was up.

Thomas Cunningham sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

3090. Where is your son?—I sent him on Monday to pay for cattle that I bought three weeks ago, to a cousin of my own. He lives in Clogheen, and he went there to pay him the money.

3091. When will he come back?—I expected him back yesterday, for there was a fair in Clonmel, and he didn't come there; my man didn't see him there.

3092. You have got a summons for his attendance here as a witness?—I got it last night, sir, for him.

3093. You had better make exertions to have him come here?—I wrote to him when I got the summons last night; I expect him this evening.

3094. If you find there is anything else you can do to get him here you had better do it?—Oh, there is no doubt of that, sir.

FOURTH DAY.

October 7.

Mrs. Catherine Tracey.

Catherine Tracey sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

3095. You are the wife of Simon Tracey?—Yes, sir.

3096. Do you know Mrs. Mary Rochford?—I do, sir.

3097. Did she come to your house one night before the election?—She did, sir.

3098. What brought her up stairs?—She asked me, sir, to go up stairs with her.

3099. She asked you to go up stairs with her?—Yes, sir.

3100. What did she say when she asked you to go up stairs with her?—When she came in first she asked me was my husband within, and I said not; she asked me did I know where he was; I said not. She asked me could she speak with me, and I said she could; she asked me then to go up stairs.

3101. Were there any persons in the shop when she came in?—There was not, sir.

3102. Is there a room in the back of your shop?—No, sir.

3103. Is the whole ground-floor occupied by the shop?—Kitchen and shop.

3104. Who was in the kitchen?—No one.

3105. Have you a servant?—No, sir.

3106. No one but yourself?—I have a sister living with us.

3107. Where was she that evening?—I am not sure was she in, sir.

3108. Mrs. Rochford wanted you up stairs you say?—Yes, sir.

3109. Did she tell you for what purpose?—Up stairs she did.

3110. What did she tell you?—She told me she heard my husband could give money, that he was canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne, and she was promised from Mr. Munster's side, and if she got as much she would rather vote for Mr. O'Beirne than for Mr. Munster.

3111. Did she shut the door when you went up stairs?—No, sir.

3112. What room was it in?—A bedroom.

3113. Was it in a front or a back room?—Front room, sir.

3114. Was that where your husband keeps the money?—It is, sir.

3115. What did you say to this observation of hers?—I told her I didn't think it was in my husband's power to give her any money.

3116. State the whole of the conversation that passed between you?—That is the whole of what passed.

3117. No more?—I don't recollect any more.

3118. Did Mrs. Rochford say who was offering the money on Mr. Munster's side?—She said on Mr. Munster's part.

3119. Did she name any person? She did not, sir.

3120. Did you say your husband could not give money?—I said I didn't think he could.

3121. What more passed?—Nothing more to my recollection.

3122. What was then done?—She came down stairs and went out saying she would go to look for my husband.

3123. And did nothing occur between you but what you have told us?—Nothing occurred, sir, but what I have told you.

3124. Did you produce any money or cheques in the room up stairs?—No, sir.

3125. Where was the money kept up stairs?—In a box, of course, sir.

3126. Where was the box?—In the same room.

3127. Was it in any other box?—There was a cabinet in the room and there was money in it.

3128. How much money was in the cabinet?—A sixty pound order.

3129. Anything else?—Nothing else.

3130. Where was the rest of the money?—In another box.

3131. What was in the other box?—I had cheques or deposit receipts.

3132. Do you not know the difference between cheques and deposit receipts?—I had no cheques but deposit receipts.

3133. Did you not produce money that night in the room?—I did not, sir.

3134. Did you produce a cheque?—No, sir.

3135. Did you produce any papers at all?—I produced no papers at all, sir.

3136. Did you tell Mary Rochford that you had the money there?—I didn't, sir, tell her at all.

3137. And that you had cheques for two friends?—I told her no such thing, sir.

3138. Did you say there was a cheque for £60 for two of your friends that would vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Never, sir.

3139. Your husband went away before the election petition?—He did, sir.

3140. Did you know that he was summoned for it?—I did, sir; there was no date to the summons. I think that was the reason he went.

3141. And he went away because there was no date to the summons?—He wanted goods, sir, and he went to London on business.

3142. Why did he remark that there was no date to the summons; did he think he could safely go away because there was no date?—I don't know what he thought.

3143. Did he intend to go before the judge?—I don't know, sir; I can't say.

3144. Did he tell you whether he did or not?—He did not.

3145. Did he tell you about the summons?—No.

3146. Did he tell you there was no date to it?—I heard him say there was no date.

3147. Then did he not speak to you about it?—I saw no date to it myself.

3148. And you heard him say that there was no date to it?—I am not sure, indeed.

3149. How long after he got the summons did he go away?—I can't say, sir.

3150. Try and recollect?—I can't, indeed.

3151. Whom did he go and consult about going away?—No one, to my knowledge.

3152. Did he tell you that he would speak to any person to know if he could safely go away?—No, indeed.

3153. How long was he away?—He was over a month away.

3154. When did he come back?—After a month.

3155. How long did he remain at home when he came back?—A couple of days only.

3156. Did you tell him that his name had been called in court while he was away?—I did.

3157. What did he say to that?—He thought he might go back and finish his business in London.

3158. What business had he that took him away again?—He had money dealings with his brother.

3159. What was this £60 cheque about?—That is a cheque Mr. O'Beirne gave him for his services, I suppose.

3160. How long did he remain at home when he came back the first time from London?—A couple of days.

3161. Was he stopping at home in the house with you?—He was, sir.

3162. And he was two days in it?—He was not two days in it; he was two days at home, but he didn't stop in the house them two days; I don't think he did.

3163. When did your husband get that £60 cheque?—I declare I can't tell you; I can't, indeed; I can't tell.

3164. Whom did he get it from?—From Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

3165. What was it for?—Of course, sir, for going about canvassing for him, as being his agent like.

3166. Did he tell you what it was for?—Of course I knew what it was for.

3167. Did your husband tell you what it was for?—He did.

3168. What did he say it was for?—For being agent and canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne.

3169. When did he tell you that?—I believe when he got it.

3170. Did he show you the cheque?—He did.

3171. What did he do with it then?—I think he went to the bank to know could he get it cashed, and he found that he could, and then he didn't want the money.

3172. Did you read the cheque?—I did not.

3173. Why had you not the curiosity to read the cheque when you read the summons and saw there was no date?—I saw it was a £60 order.

3174. At what time of the day did you see the cheque?—I couldn't say; some part of the day.

3175. Was it put up in the cabinet then?—It was, sir.

3176. Did you put it up in the cabinet?—No.

3177. Who keeps the key of the cabinet?—The drawer is always open. We have no servant, and aren't particular about having it locked.

3178. If your husband told you he got the cheque to canvass Kennedy and Lamb, would it be true?—He never told me no such thing, sir.

3179. He did not?—No.

3180. Is not Kennedy your brother-in-law?—He is my brother-in-law.

3181. What did Kennedy say to you about the cheque?—He didn't say anything to me about the cheque.

3182. He did not?—No; what occasion?

3183. I do not know what occasion?—He didn't say anything to me about it.

3184. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did he never mention it to you?—I don't think we ever spoke of it.

3185. Mr. MOLLOY.—We know what Kennedy said here yesterday?—I have no doubt of that.

3186. Is he not constantly in your house?—He is very often in my house; he lives opposite.

3187. Do you say that your brother-in-law did not speak to you about the cheque?—Not to my recollection.

3188. Could you have forgotten it?—We never had one word about it, neither Kennedy nor me.

3189. How often did you see it?—I never seen it more than once. It was in a separate place, and I didn't mind looking about it.

3190. Do you keep charge of your husband's money?—It is both our money.

3191. Do you keep charge of your husband's money?—I do; I put it in the box and let it be so.

3192. Would you leave £60 go losing?—I wouldn't wish sir.

3193. Did you not lose the £60?—It was lost by some mistake or other.

3194. Did you ever get the £60?—Never.

3195. Why did not your husband get the £60?—When he went for it he couldn't get it.

3196. Did he tell you that?—He did, sir.

3197. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did your husband tell you that?—He did, sir; he went once with it to the bank and I think it was all right, and I think he went then and wouldn't get it.

3198. And you are aware that there was a month between the first and second time that he went?—I am not, indeed.

3199. Mr. MOLLOY.—Why did he not lodge the money in the bank with the other deposit receipt?—He didn't want it, sir.

3200. Would you not like to have the interest?—We didn't want the interest: it wouldn't be much.

3201. Would not the money be safer in the bank?—We keep no servant, and it was safe.

3202. What did he say when he was bringing the cheque over to Kennedy and Lamb?—I don't know; I didn't see him bring it.

3203. Had Mrs. Rochford any business in your house that night except to get money from Mr. O'Beirne?—She only asked me was my husband in.

3204. Did you not hear that your husband brought the check across the street to Kennedy's?—I don't know, sir.

3205. Did you not hear it?—I didn't hear it, sir.

3206. Had you any conversation with your husband about what Kennedy and Lamb said here yesterday?—No.

3207. Did he tell you they were examined?—I knew they were examined, of course.

3208. How did you know they were examined?—Of course I knew it.

3209. How?—Didn't I know they were examined when they came home.

3210. Did they tell you?—I don't think they did.

3211. Had you any conversation with Kennedy or Lamb last night?—I had with Kennedy.

3212. What did Kennedy tell you?—He didn't tell me anything about it: he was reading the journal.

3213. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you mean to swear that neither your husband nor Kennedy said one syllable to you about their examination here yesterday?—I dare say my husband did.

3214. Why did you not tell us that?—I am so puzzled, sir: gracious God, what ——

3215. Mr. MOLLOY.—Tell us what Mrs. Rochford said that night that she called on you?—She asked me was my husband in, and I said not: she asked me would I go up stairs with her, and I said I would: when we went up stairs she told me that she heard my husband could give money, and that if he could get as much as Mr. Munster she would rather go with Mr. O'Beirne.

3216. Was she, on two occasions, in your shop that night?—No, sir, not that I can recollect.

3217. What did you tell her about your husband?—I told her I didn't think it was in his power to give any money.

3218. Did you tell her that your husband had no authority to give her money?—I told her I didn't think he had authority to give anybody money.

3219. Did you tell her he had no authority to give her money?—I said he had no authority to give anybody money.

3220. Did you say "I told her he had no authority to give her money" when you were examined at the petition?—I told her my husband hadn't authority to give anybody money.

3221. Did she ask you that night where your husband was?—She did, sir, and I told her I didn't know.

3222. At what time of the day, or evening, did this occur?—I believe about between 6 and 7, or it may be later.

3223. There was nobody else in the place?—Nobody at all, sir.

3224. Then why did you leave your shop empty and go up to the bedroom?—She asked me up, sir.

3225. Why did she ask you up to the bedroom?—Because our place is a very public place, and because, perhaps, she expected there might be some one going in or out.

3226. Did you tell her that you had that cheque?—I did not, sir.

3227. Or that your husband had it?—I did not, sir.

3228. You did not tell her that the cheque was in that drawer?—No, sir.

3229. Did you ever say that you could not tell her?—I didn't say no such thing.

3230. Did you not tell her that you had a cheque?—I did not.

3231. Do you remember being examined before the judge?—I do.

3232. Do you remember being asked, and that you said you could not tell her?—I said I couldn't tell her.

3233. What did you mean by that?—Because I couldn't think he had them—because he hadn't them.

3234. Did you not know he had a cheque?—I knew he had a cheque for himself.

3235. You did not tell her he had that cheque?—No.

FOURTH DAY.

October 7.

John Rochford.

John Rochford sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

3236. Do you remember hearing from your wife that she had been at Mrs. Tracey's?—Yes, sir.

3237. What did she tell you occurred?—She told me that she saw some cheques, and that if I voted for Mr. O'Beirne I would get one of them.

3238. Did she tell you that Mrs. Tracey had told her that?—Yes, sir.

3239. How long was that after she said she had heard it from Mrs. Tracey?—I believe it was the same night, sir.

3240. Immediately when she came back?—Yes, sir.

3241. Did she tell you anything else about what occurred at Mrs. Tracey's?—No; I don't recollect anything else.

3242. Did you see Simon Tracey that evening?—Yes, sir.

3243. Was that after your wife had told you this conversation with Mrs. Tracey?—No, sir; he was passing by and he came in before my wife came.

3244. Did she come in while he was still there?—She did, sir.

3245. Was she then coming back from Mrs. Tracey?—I don't know exactly whether it was from Mrs. Tracey.

3246. What was Tracey saying to you?—He was advocating for Mr. O'Beirne and I was advocating for Mr. Munster.

3247. Did he say anything of the same kind that his wife said to your wife?—Not a word, sir.

3248. When your wife came in had he a conversation with her at all?—He may have it in a few minutes after she coming in.

3249. Do you remember their going into the back yard?—To the best of my belief they did; but I can't exactly say. We were excited at the time; he was arguing for Mr. O'Beirne, and I was arguing for Mr. Munster, and there was another man besides by that came in.

3250. Who was that other man?—His name was Meara, I understand.

3251. You are sure now that his name was Meara?—Yes, sir; he was a cooper.

3252. Did he take part in the conversation?—No; but he was only listening on. I don't think that he did.

3253. Your wife and Tracey went into the back yard?—They may, but I couldn't recollect it.

3254. Did you hear anything yourself besides what your wife told you about Tracey's having cheques or money?—I didn't, sir; I didn't know he was canvassing at all till that same night; 'twas shortly before the election, it was.

3255. How did your wife happen to go to Tracey's?—Oh, I don't know, sir, indeed.

3256. Did she hear before she went there, anything about money?—Perhaps she did.

3257. Did she not tell you she did?—I don't recollect she did, because I was very seldom at home; I was always out at work.

3258. Was it that evening after Tracey going away that she told you what Mrs. Tracey told her?—Yes; after he going away, she was at Tracey's, she said.

3259. Did she tell you what part of the house she was in with Mrs. Tracey?—She said she was in a room with her.

3260. Did she say that Mrs. Tracey took her up there, or that she asked Mrs. Tracey to take her up there?—I can't say that, sir; I couldn't say which of them asked to go up there.

3261. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Mr. Munster.

3262. Who canvassed you for him?—Mr. Laffan.

3263. Is it Mr. Pat Laffan?—Both of them; they came to the house for me; my wife sent for me out where I was at work out about three miles. I went up to Mr. Laffan's, and he talked to me about some employment Mr. Munster had about telegraph wire, in the way of the telegraph line that he was going to erect. "I don't know what I could do at that," says I.

3264. What trade are you?—A carpenter.

3265. Which of the Laffans was speaking to you about this work?—Mr. Michael I was speaking to first. "Oh," says he, "you will be able to do something at it." The second time they called again I believe Mr. Pat Laffan called. She sent for me again, and I came and asked what they wanted me for, or what form would I go to work for them, because I was very busily employed; whatever answer they made they made no answer to that. "Well now," says I to Mr. Michael Laffan, "I find 'tis my vote you want, and if it is you'll get it through your uncle the archdeacon; and I think Mr. Munster would be a very good man for the borough; if he would give employment; that is what I want."

3266. What did they say when you said "I see 'tis my vote you want?"—They said of course 'tis my vote.

3267. Who said that?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

3268. When you said "I see 'tis my vote you want," what did he say?—He said it was.

3269. What did you say then?—"Well, you must get it," says I.

3270. Then you said Mr. Munster would be a good man for the borough?—Yes, a good man, being a rich man, as I heard.

3271. Did you find you were wanted at the telegraph?—No, I found there was none of my business wanted.

3272. Did you do any carpenter's work for Mr. Munster?—I did; I made a bin for him.

3273. How much did that amount to altogether?—Twenty-five shillings.

3274. Did your wife sell feathers to him?—She did, five stone of feathers.

3275. For how much?—A pound a stone, sir, that is £5.

3276. What connexion was there between the work at the telegraph and your vote?—I suppose it is to induce me to give a vote they would give me employment.

3277. To vote for the man who would give you the work?—'Tis employment first; I thought there was some great employment.

3278. Mr. MOLLOY.—That evening that you were with Meara, was he not in your shop?—He was.

3279. Did your wife come in at the time?—She did.

3280. Did not your wife and Simon Tracey go out of the shop?—They may, but I couldn't distinctly recollect; I think they did, to the best of my belief, go out into the yard or the kitchen, and me and Meara stopped in the shop, as far as I can recollect.

3281. Was the last election the first at which you had a vote?—It was, sir.

3282. You had not a vote in 1865?—No, sir.

3283. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you get any money since the election?—She got some money for feathers.

3284. Did you get any money?—Not a penny.

3285. Did you hear that money was going?—Not more than a rumour.

3286. Did you hear about Heffernan getting any money?—I didn't know of anybody getting money; I couldn't say who got it or didn't get it.

3287. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you expect that any money would be given to you after the election?—It was not promised to me.

3288. Did you expect it?—If there was a great deal given, of course I would expect it.

3289. There being a rich man a candidate, had you any expectation that if you voted for him you would get some of his money after the election?—I couldn't be sure.

3290. Had you any expectation?—If he was good enough, of course I would take it.

3291. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Mr. Patrick Laffan ever hold out any inducement to you?—Never.

3292. Was he with Mr. Michael Laffan, his brother, when you were talking about the work?—No, sir.

3293. Was there anyone with Mr. Michael Laffan at the time?—I don't think there was, sir.

3294. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did your wife tell you soon after she had been to Simon Tracey's house?—It is after Tracey going she told me she was in.

3295. Did she tell you that she was at Simon Tracey's, and that she saw some cheques there with his wife?—She did, sir.

3296. Did she tell you that she would get one if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, and I told her that if she took a cheque or money that I would lose it, and I promised Mr. Laffan and wouldn't break my word.

3297. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear Mrs. Tracey saying that your wife said you would get £10 from Mr. Munster's people?—I never heard a word about it.

3298. Were you here when your wife was examined at the petition?—No, sir, I wasn't present.

John Rochford.

James Brown sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

James Brown.

3299. You are a voter in Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

3300. And I believe you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

3301. You know Captain Graham?—I do.

3302. He had rooms in your house?—He had.

3303. Did he dwell in them?—He did.

3304. At what time did he take the rooms?—I cannot fix the date exactly.

3305. Did you not make any entry of it?—I did not.

3306. Did you receive any money from him?—I did.

3307. Did you make any entry of that?—I did not.

3308. Do you keep books?—I do, but not for such transactions as this.

3309. How much money did you get?—£20.

3310. Have you any document or anything that would enable you to tell the time at which you let the rooms to Captain Graham?—No.

3311. What rooms did you let him?—A bed-room and front parlour, what we call a drawing-room.

3312. If you cannot tell me exactly, will you tell me approximately, or as near as you can, the time you let the rooms to him?—About a fortnight previous to the election.

3313. Did he live more than a fortnight in your house?—He did.

3314. How long after the election did he continue to occupy them?—About a fortnight; he was off and on; he went to Dublin and came back; he went visiting round the country and came back again; I think he kept the rooms about six weeks from the time he came to the time he left, that is including seven days in the week.

3315. Did you make an arrangement as to what he was to pay?—I did.

3316. What was that arrangement?—£20.

3317. For what time?—Two months.

3318. How long have you resided in Cashel?—About seven years.

3319. Was the last election the first time you voted? It is the first time I had the honour of voting.

3320. Did you know Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

3321. Did you know him before the election?—I did, sir; I knew him at the previous election.

3322. Were you canvassed by Captain Graham for Mr. O'Beirne?—No.

3323. Never?—No.

3324. Do you say he never asked you if you were going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I do.

3325. Did you tell him that you would vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—No; it was on a distinct understanding, if he took my rooms, that he should not expect my vote.

3326. That is very odd now; you did vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

3327. It is sworn to us that Captain Graham was canvassing right and left through Cashel, and you say he never asked you how you were going to vote?—He never did; he might have surmised.

3328. Tell me what occurred at the time you were setting the rooms?—He asked me what I would give him the rooms for; I wanted in fact more than he was inclined to give; I wanted £25, and he said he would give me £20, and I agreed to give them then.

3329. That is not all though?—If you be kind enough to ask me any other thing ——

3330. That is not all the arrangement?—I don't know of any other arrangement we had.

3331. Did you not tell me that you let the rooms on the distinct understanding that it was to be entirely independent of your vote?—I did.

3332. Then that was mentioned?—It was.

3333. You omitted that?—If I have equivocated it was not with any intention.

3334. I do not say you equivocated; tell me how it was done?—I put it to him, "People might be under the impression that from the fact of your taking my rooms, people might think Mr. O'Beirne would expect my vote, but I wish you to understand that you need not expect my vote."

3335. Then you had not made up your mind?—I had.

3336. Did you know that he was a friend of Mr. O'Beirne's?—I did.

3337. And what was the meaning of your telling him that the taking of your rooms was independent of taking your vote; what was the meaning of that, when you had made up your mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I had made up my mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne before Captain Graham came to town at all.

3338. And you said to Captain Graham, "I will vote for any man I like," although you had your mind made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I wished Captain Graham to understand that it was not because he took my rooms I was to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

3339. Did you tell him you were to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did not.

3340. What was the meaning of telling him that then?—For the purpose of not allowing him to suppose that it was not because he took the rooms from me that I should vote for him.

3341. Do you not know that persons votes were influenced in Cashel by their houses being taken?—They may have been, but mine was not.

3342. Did you understand that; was it because you knew that that was a way of influencing votes that you said to Mr. Graham your vote was not to be influenced in that way?—It was.

3343. In short you wanted to let him know that you would not be bribed?—Yes.

3344. And you understood that that was a common way of doing it in Cashel?—Yes; I meant to show Mr. O'Beirne I promised my vote previous to Captain Graham taking my rooms.

3345. Did you see many persons in the room with Captain Graham?—There were a lot of persons there sometimes.

3346. You know that Captain Graham took a very active part for Mr. O'Beirne?—I am under that impression.

3347. Tell me the persons you saw coming to him there?—I saw persons that I supposed to be his tenants.

3348. Any others; any townspeople?—There were, your worship.

3349. Who were they?—Patrick Mackay was there, and Pat Maher was there; Mr. O'Brien of the bank called up there one night, I think.

3350. Was Mr. Kingsbury there?—No, your worship; I didn't see him; I think he was in Dublin that time. I think Mr. Kingsbury came up from Dublin specially the day of polling to vote as far as I recollect; I may be wrong, but I think so.

3351. Mr. GRIFFIN.—At the time that you let those lodgings to Captain Graham, had Mr. O'Beirne commenced canvassing?—He had.

3352. How long had he been here?—I think about a week.

3353. How often was Captain Graham at your rooms before he took them?—Twice.

FOURTH DAY.
October 7.
James Brown.

3354. Was it the third time that he took them?—It was, your worship.

3355. What interval was between the first and the third time?—One day.

3356. He came twice one day then?—He came twice one day; he came once on two days successively.

3357. And did he take them on the third day?—As near as I recollect.

3358. Did you hear of any money going at last election?—John Kingsbury told me he got £10 from the agent of Mr. Munster.

3359. Is that the man that was examined here this morning?—I believe so.

3360. An old man?—Yes.

3361. He told you he got £10?—As a retainer.

3362. From whom?—From Mr. Laffan; he afterwards contradicted it.

3363. Mr. MOLLOY.—From the agent of Mr. Munster or of Mr. O'Beirne?—Of Mr. Munster.

3364. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was that Patrick or Michael Laffan?—I don't know which.

3365. It was from Mr. Laffan he told you he got it?—It was, sir, after the election.

3366. Was it long after the election?—A couple of months ago.

3367. He told that to you a couple of months after the election?—No, but a couple of months ago.

3368. That he had got £10?—Yes.

3369. When did he contradict it?—A couple of days after.

3370. Did he come for the express purpose of contradicting it?—No, he lived in our house at the time.

3371. Is he in the habit of making mistakes of that kind?—I am not aware.

3372. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was he living in the house at the same time Captain Graham was there?—No, your worship; his wife died about twelve months ago, and he dissolved his house and went to Dublin; after he came from Dublin he was living with us.

3373. At the time that Captain Graham was living with you where was Mr. Kingsbury living?—In Dublin, I believe.

3374. When was he living in your house?—It is my impression Mr. Kingsbury came from Dublin about the day of the polling, to vote for Mr. Munster.

3375. When was he living in your house: was it after or before Captain Graham was there?—Afterwards; it is twelve months since Captain Graham was there.

3376. Did you hear of anybody else having got money?—No, your worship.

3377. Did you hear of anybody at all?—I may have heard flying reports, but nothing authentic.

3378. About whom were the flying reports?—I couldn't exactly bring to mind; there were so many reports.

3379. Did you hear reports about the people of the Commons?—No, your worship, only what I have heard in court, and at the election petition.

3380. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Captain Graham go into occupation of the rooms immediately after taking them?—He did, your worship, and his son also.

3381. If Captain Graham said that he took the house in September for two months, would that be the case?—He took them from the time he took them two months hence.

3382. Was it in the month of September he took them?—I am not aware; it was about a week previous to the election, I think.

[The witness asks for a certificate].

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You have not said anything for which you require a certificate. If you require one we shall be happy to give it to you.

Mr. Thomas Edmonds Close.

Mr. Thomas Edmonds Close sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3383. I believe you are an elector of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

3384. And voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

3385. What is your occupation?—Professor of music, and vicar choral of the cathedral.

3386. Some time before the election took place you had a concert in Cashel?—I had, sir.

3387. And Mr. Munster took a number of tickets for it?—He did, sir.

3388. How many?—One hundred tickets amounting to £12 10*s*. I wish to explain that.

3389. What do you wish to add?—There was rather a wrong construction put upon that during the petition, about those tickets that I sold to Mr. Munster. I want to explain that it was from no wrong purpose whatever. It was merely because the town was full at the time that I got up the concert. It was an encouragement to me to get up the concert at the time I did, because Mr. Munster had already bought over £40 or £50 worth of tickets from some amateurs who exhibited the same week for the benefit of the Vincent de Paul Society, and I thought it would be a good time for me to give a concert on my own account. That I had not the chance of explaining during the petition.

3390. You say Mr. Munster had bought tickets for a concert?—Yes, a concert for the Society of Saint Vincent de Paul.

3391. Was it a concert?—A theatrical performance, and the young men kindly gave me one of their nights for my own concert in the middle of their night's entertainment.

3392. Do you know how many tickets Mr. Munster took for it?—I don't, I had nothing to do with it.

3393. You got up your concert and Mr. Munster took 100 tickets?—He did.

3394. You impartially applied to both sides?—I did, sir; I didn't ask Mr. O'Beirne, but I asked Captain Graham; it was not a party thing at all.

3395. And Captain Graham did not take them?—He did not, sir.

3396. You are able I suppose to tell the week of the concert?—It was I think the day of the nomination, it was on a Tuesday evening; I think it was about the 18th November; I have not one of the programmes left or I could show you the date.

3397. At that time were you pledged to vote for anyone at the election?—I had promised to vote.

3398. For whom?—For Mr. Munster, more than six weeks; I had made up my mind to vote for Mr. Munster before ever Mr. Munster came to Cashel.

3399. To whom did you promise six weeks before?—I didn't make a special promise to anybody; but Mr. Leahy, Mr. Munster's friend—I met him at a breakfast in a convent in Thurles where I teach; the Reverend Mother introduced me to him as Archbishop Leahy's brother; it was only after I had left the convent that I knew he had come about the election. I followed him to the Archbishop's palace and said I would be very happy if I could do anything for him and his brother the Archbishop who was always a patron of mine in my profession, and any way I could show my gratitude I would be happy to do it, and I made up my mind on that moment to vote for him.

3400. Did you know at that time that he had come over with reference to the election?—Until that time I did not.

3401. Did you at the time you said those words?—I did.

3402. That was in fact tendering your vote for his friend?—I didn't exactly tender the vote, but I said anything at all that I could do.

3403. You did not in terms tender the vote, but you meant it?—I meant it, sir.

3404. After that were you canvassed by Mr. Munster himself?—No, sir; I was never canvassed by Mr. Munster or any of his agents.

3405. Were you asked by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

3406. How soon after the interview with Mr. Leahy?—I was not asked exactly by Mr. O'Beirne first, but I was asked by Captain Graham first.

3407. Are you able to fix the date of that?—I cannot tell the date, but I can tell a circumstance which will bring the date to the mind of anybody in court. The first time I had an interview with Captain Graham and Mr. O'Beirne together was the Saturday after the Presentation bazaar was held here in Cashel.

3408. You saw Mr. O'Beirne and Captain Graham together on that day?—Yes.

3409. Was that the first time you had seen Captain Graham at all during the election?—It was not.

3410. How soon before that had you seen Captain Graham?—I think it was in or about the month of August. I was going down the street and Captain Graham called me into the barrack square. He said there would be sure to be an election, and he says "you will vote for Mr. O'Beirne." I don't exactly know what I said; I might have said that very likely I would, but I never knew that Mr. Leahy or Mr. Munster were coming at the time; I am sure it would be as far back as August. He asked me to speak to one or two—Squires, and one or two persons I knew, but I don't think I did.

3411. After that did you see Captain Graham again?—No, sir, not to speak to him. I didn't about the subject until I saw him at Mr. Dunn's.

3412. When did Captain Graham learn you were going to vote for Mr. Munster?—I suppose he learned it when I refused the £20 he offered me at Dunn's.

3413. Did he learn it before that?—I can't tell.

3414. Had you any conversation in the interval between the time you saw him with Mr. O'Beirne, and this conversation about the £20?—No, sir.

3415. Had you a letter or anything?—No.

3416. Then the next was a message from him?—No, I never had a message from him. I met Mr. O'Beirne and shook hands with him; he said, "Why don't you come up and see me?" and I said "I am only just come up from Thurles; I will go up and see you." On the Saturday morning afterwards I went up to Mr. Dunn's, merely to call, not about the election at all; myself and my son were walking up the street, not thinking of going there, having nothing to do, and I said "Harry come and see Mr. O'Beirne."

3417. At that time you had thoroughly made up your mind how to vote?—I did.

3418. And you went in and saw Captain Graham?—Captain Graham, and Mr. O'Beirne, and one or two others were there. I was talking to Mr. O'Beirne, and I said he was looking very well; there was a little commonplace between the two of us; he was asking—Mr. O'Beirne was asking about my son, said he was growing very much, and some commonplace things like that. We went out of the room then, Captain Graham followed us on the lobby, and he called me towards a little window; my son went towards the stairs; and he said, "Would you like to get some employment for your son during the election?" I said, "Well, Captain Graham, I don't think he will be here, for he is under nomination for the civil service." "Oh, well," says he, "you know what I mean." He wrote on a slip of paper with a pencil twenty in figures, and I left and I said "I will see more about that."

3419. Is that all you said to him?—That was all he said.

3420. Is that all you said to him?—"I will see more about it;" some commonplace that way.

3421. Did the conversation end immediately then?—It did.

3422. And you went down stairs then?—We did.

3423. Had you any other communication with Captain Graham after that?—No, I had not; I never went near their house again, and I should not have gone then if it had not been for mere common politeness to Mr. O'Beirne after his asking me to call on him; I had not any idea of going.

3424. Did you tell Mr. O'Beirne then, or during the time that you were there, that you were going to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did not; I told him some time afterwards; a short time before the election I met him at the cross of the Lower Gate, and he said he was very much surprised I deserted him; I said he need not be surprised, that I was under no compliment to him, and that it was not because I had voted for him before I should vote then.

3425. How long are you an elector of Cashel?—Only the two last elections I think I voted. I voted for Carden once. This is the third election I voted.

3426. And at the time Captain Graham offered you this money you did not tell him you were going to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did not.

3427. To whom did you tell Captain Graham's offer of money to you?—I told it to a great many people. I told it to the Reverend Mr. Fishbourne the same night or next day. I told it to another friend of mine in Thurles.

3428. Did you tell it to any of Mr. Munster's friends?—I did not; I didn't speak to Mr. Munster about it at all.

3429. Did you to any of his friends or agents?—I never did. The first time I heard that it was public was only the Saturday before the petition; I heard it from Mr. Munster himself, and I had not the least idea he knew anything about it, and it came out afterwards that it was a gentleman in this town told him of it, to whom my son told it.

3430. Your son was afterwards in Mr. Munster's employment?—He was after the election.

3431. How much did he get from Mr. Munster for the employment?—He was getting two guineas a week while he was there.

3432. Did he live at home with you during that time?—He did, sir; he was very irregular in his hours when he was living at home; sometimes he was in Dublin two or three days, or in Portarlington and other places; it was very seldom he lived at home.

3433. How long was he in the employment?—He could not be more than a month.

3434. Was he employed by Mr. Munster during the election?—He was not, sir.

3435. When first did he enter Mr. Munster's employment?—I couldn't tell, sir, but Mr. Biggin can tell, for he was under secretary with Mr. Biggin.

3436. It was after the election, at any rate?—It was, sir.

3437. He after that went to London?—He did, sir,

3438. Where did he live in London first?—Mr. Munster sent him to a house of his own for a few days until he could suit himself with lodgings.

3439. How many days was he there?—He was not there above four or five days, but I thought he was there longer, but he was not more than four or five days. I think I said at the time of the petition he was nine or ten days, but he was not there so long, not more than four or five days.

3440. Did he get some present in the way of clothes from Mr. Munster?—He did, sir.

3441. While he was in his employment?—Yes.

3442. Or to prepare him for going away?—I suppose when he sent him to Dublin—he was stopping at the Gresham hotel—he didn't think he was smart enough, and he got him a suit of black clothes.

3443. Is that the only compliment your son received?—The only thing I know of, with the exception that when he was going away, it being after Christmas, I had not money to send him to London, and he asked Mr. Munster for the loan of £5, which he lent. I had not money enough to send him.

3444. You do not know of more than the clothes and £5 that your son got?—No, with the exception of his salary.

3445. Did you yourself receive any compliment beyond the 100 tickets?—No, sir, with the exception of teaching in his family since, for which I get no more compensation than an ordinary person. I get more from other people, and was teaching Miss Ade two quarters, for which I got two guineas a quarter.

FOURTH DAY.
October 7.

Mr. Thomas Edmonds Close.

3446. Your son is in England, I believe?—He is, sir, at Wells, in Somersetshire.

3447. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you mention that occurrence about the £20 immediately?—I did, sir, the same day, as far as I recollect.

3448. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Had you any conversation with Mr. Kingsbury?—I never had any conversation with him about the election until last night, after he gave his evidence.

3449. Did he say anything to you last night?—He did, sir.

3450. What did he say?—I walked down the street with him. He said, "Didn't I get off very well?" I said, "Yes, but I don't think you are done with it yet." He said, "Why?" "Because," I said, "I don't think you said all you could say."

3451. What did he say then?—I said, "Didn't you tell Mr. John Davis White that you were offered money by Captain Graham, and that he wrote it down," and he said he never did. Mr. White was going into the library at the time. "Come back to Mr. White," said he. I said, "Come back and ask him." He wouldn't go any further, but turned to go home. "Do you call that being a friend," he says. I said, "If you had been a friend you would have justified what I said at the petition, when Captain Graham offered you in the same way as he did me." I never knew a word about it until the day after the petition was finished.

3452. Mr. GRIFFIN.—From whom did you hear it the day after the petition was finished?—Mr. John Davis White, sir.

3453. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What did Mr. Kingsbury say when you said this?—He is a very excitable man, and he got in a passion, of course. I was rather indignant, because it touched my own character more closely than I could explain, because there was no connexion between Mr. Kingsbury and his evidence; and the circumstances between Captain Graham and me, and Captain Graham's offer to him were so much the same, that I was very much annoyed he didn't tell it out to clear the slightest stain on my evidence.

3454. Until last night Mr. Kingsbury never said anything to you?—No, and I never changed one word with him until last night.

3455. When you asked him to come back to ask Mr. White, did he do anything except turn away?—He turned partly round and would not go.

3456. Did he say anything?—I said, "Wasn't an offer made to you by Captain Graham, and don't you know there was an offer made the same as to me?" and he said, "I don't know whether it was £20 or £25."

3457. Did he say that to you last night?—He did.

3458. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he say why he did not tell it at the Commission?—No, he did not.

3459. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—All he said with reference to it was, "Didn't I get off very well to-day?"—That was the first thing he said to me.

3460. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You heard immediately after the petition was over that Mr. Kingsbury could have given evidence similar to yours?—I heard so, sir.

3461. Have you met him again since?—Oh, yes, we are in the same church and same choir; he is a vicar choral, the same as myself.

3462. Did you never speak to him before about his having been so unfriendly?—I did not, sir.

3463. You were very much annoyed?—I was, and since I knew the Royal Commission was coming down I was only too glad of the opportunity of clearing myself.

3464. You never spoke to him about it?—Never, until I heard his evidence last night, thinking he would say what he ought have volunteered before.

3465. How did you know he would be summoned at all?—I had not the least idea he would be summoned.

3466. And though you did not know he would be obliged to give evidence of this kind, you did not think it necessary to speak to him?—No; I should have done so if he wasn't summoned, and it was not without asking the advice of my best friends that I didn't do so.

Mr. John Davis White.

Mr. John Davis White sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3467. Have you been in court during the examination of Mr. Kingsbury and Mr. Close?—I have.

3468. You heard the evidence of both?—I did.

3469. Will you have the goodness to tell me if Mr. Kingsbury made any statement to you with reference to any conversation between him and Captain Graham about the time of the last election?—He did.

3470. When was that?—I could not tell you the date, sir. He told me that Captain Graham had taken a piece of paper and written, to the best of my memory, £25 on it. He told that to me in confidence, and I didn't break his confidence; I merely, when I found that my friend Mr. Close was calumniated as a perjurer, told Mr. Close "Money has been offered in the same way to a certain party in Cashel, and find out if you can who the person is." I didn't tell him Mr. Kingsbury's name, and he found it out some other way. I never would have mentioned it but for the fact of Mr. Close being publicly stigmatised as a perjurer, and I believe Mr. Close.

3471. I believe there was a conflict of testimony between Captain Graham and Mr. Close at the petition?—There was. The judge considered he should give the weight to Captain Graham.

3472. Mr. Kingsbury said that to you, and you are unable to tell us when it was. Are you able to say was it this year or last year?—I could not, sir; but it was before the trial of the election petition; that is all I could say. I did not tell Mr. Close it was Mr. Kingsbury at all; I told him to try and find out.

[Mr. Close.—That's just it, sir. Mr. White never mentioned Mr. Kingsbury's name; I guessed it.]

3473. Are you not able to say any further, Mr. White? Could you say it was in the end of last year or beginning of this year?—I could not possibly charge my memory.

3474. Do you recollect the circumstances under which he made the statement to you?—I think it was in my own house.

3475. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did Mr. Kingsbury go back to Dublin after he told you?—I could not charge my memory with any circumstance as to what his movements were. I can't say he went immediately after.

3476. It was not immediately after the election he made the statement to you?—I can't say, sir. I think it was two months, in fact, before the election he told me that. I should not wonder if it was two months before the election he told me; I can't swear positively.

3477. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Have you any doubt of the fact of his having told you?—I have no doubt.

3478. Did he go through the pantomime of describing, or did he only tell you?—I think so.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTH DAY.

Friday, October 8, 1869.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

3479. Mr. Laffan, I want the briefs you gave counsel on the trial of the election petition. Where are they?—In Dublin. They are not here.

3480. You will have the goodness to get them?—Yes.

3481. And of course they will be produced in the same state?—Yes. Nothing shall be done to them by my consent. Mr. Grace, I understand, objected to produce his briefs yesterday, and you decided against the objection. There is, then, no use in my entering on an argument on the same point to day except simply to protest against being called on for them. I would ask you to make a note in the evidence, or the shorthand writer can take it down, that I do respectfully protest against being called on for them.

3482. Have you written to your brother?—I have. I have written to the doctor.

3483. Have you heard anything of your brother?—I could not have heard since I wrote.

3484. On what day did you write?—On Wednesday I was examined, and I wrote on Wednesday night. It was just twelve o'clock when I had my letter written on Wednesday night; then, of course, it was not posted until Thursday, and he could not get it until last evening.

3485. Is there not a mail in the morning?—There is, but it is not delivered in Dublin until eight o'clock at night. If he wrote the moment he got the letter, I might have an answer to-day.

3486. Mr. Griffin.—I do not understand why you did not write until twelve o'clock at night?—I didn't write the letter until then. I wrote again last night to him pressing on him to make out and send the address.

Patrick Cunningham was called but did not appear.

Thomas Tierney sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Thomas Tierney.

3487. Tierney, are you a voter of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

3488. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

3489. You know Mr. Cahill?—I do, sir, well.

3490. Do you recollect Mr. Cahill sending for you before the election?—Yes, I recollect I fell into conversation with Mr. Cahill; I fell into talk with Mr. Cahill about the election.

3491. Listen to me, if you please. I did not ask you if you fell into talk with Mr. Cahill; the question I asked you was, do you recollect Mr. Cahill's sending for you?—I do, sir.

3492. Did you go to Mr. Cahill's house?—Yes, sir; I did.

3493. Had you a talk with Mr. Cahill about the election?—I had, sir.

3494. Do you recollect Mr. Cahill's saying to you that if you voted for Mr. Munster you would be remunerated, or some words like that, or something to that effect?—I recollect Mr. Cahill to tell me to vote independent for him.

3495. Was there anyone present at that conversation?—No, sir, there was not.

3496. Do you know that Mr. Cahill was examined here yesterday?—I don't, sir; I was not in court on yesterday.

3497. Do you know that he was examined here; did you hear he was examined?—I hear he was examined, but I didn't see him.

3498. And did you hear that he mentioned your name?—I hear my name was mentioned.

3499. You had better tell me what occurred between you and Mr. Cahill, because we have it all before; was there anything said about money or remuneration?—No, sir, there was not.

3500. Not a word?—Not a word about money any more than Mr. Cahill to tell me to vote independent for Mr. Munster—that he was a good man.

3501. Was there anything said about its being made all right for you, or anything being done for you after the election would be over? Think of yourself, now, and tell me the truth as an honest man should?—Well, I tell you the same, sir.

3502. Well do so. What was said about something being done for you after the election would be over: I do not want the exact words, but as well as you recollect, what did he say would be done for you?—He said that Mr. Munster was a charitable man, sir, and that he may do some good for me, or his agents hereafter.

3503. Did he say anything more than that Mr. Munster was a charitable man, and that he would do some good for you?—No, sir, he said nothing else to me.

3504. Did he say how much he might do good for?—No, sir.

3505. Or what he might do?—No.

3506. Was there any sum named or guessed?—No, your worship; there was not.

3507. Did he say what the figure going was or how much money was going?—I would tell you the figure, your worship, but I don't know what to say. I never had a communication with a vote before.

3508. Do you know what the figure for voters was here at the last election?—I couldn't say, your worship, but I hear they were sworn, on bonds they got £30.

3509. Did you hear before they were sworn, and before this inquiry was heard of, that they got £30?—I did not, your worship, hear any such thing; 'tis very little trouble it gave me.

3510. Where do you live in Cashel?—With Mr. Ryan Going?—I am Mr. Going's clerk.

3511. Do you live in Friar-street?—I do, sir.

3512. Is this the first election at which you had a vote?—Yes, your worship.

3513. Mr. Molloy.—Had any of your family votes at previous elections; had your father a vote?—No, sir, he had not.

3514. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Are you a married man?—I am, your worship.

3515. Is your father living?—My father is dead, your worship.

3516. Have you children?—One son, your worship.

3517. What age is he?—He is fifteen years the 29th March.

3518. What is his name?—Pat.

3519. Was he employed for any person at the election?—He was in the telegraph office.

3520. For Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

3521. How long was he there?—From the first day it opened, sir, up to this present day.

3522. Is he there still?—He is, sir.

3523. What wages does he get in the telegraph office?—Seven shillings, sir.

3524. Seven shillings a week?—Yes, sir.

3525. Was he employed in any way about election matters?—No, sir, he was not.

3526. Do you know any other man of the name of Tierney in Cashel?—No, sir; I don't know only one; that is a pensioner.

FIFTH DAY. October 8.

Thomas Tierney.

3527. What is his Christian name?—I think 'tis Tom again, sir.

3528. Who got your son employed in the telegraph office?—I asked Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir, if there was e'er a messenger wanting, to get him in.

3529. When was that?—Long before the election commenced, and the first time the telegraph office opened.

3530. The telegraph was made by Mr. Munster, was it not?—It was, sir.

3531. And at the time the telegraph was made by Mr. Munster, Mr. Munster was a candidate for Cashel?—He was, sir.

3532. Well, you had some talk with Mr. Pat Laffan as to how you would vote?—Not many words, sir, only to ask him for a situation.

3533. You had talk about your vote?—No, sir.

3534. Do you mean to say Mr. Pat Laffan never said a word to you about your vote?—I do, sir, for certain.

3535. Well, you say that Mr. Cahill told you that Mr. Munster was a charitable man, and that if you voted for him he would do good for you after?—To vote independent for him, and he may do good for me after.

3536. Since then whom did you ask to get something done for you?—Not one, sir, I never asked, only I might fall into conversation with Mr. Cahill, if I met him.

3537. Did you ever go to him and say, "You promised to have something done for me?"—I made a charge on Mr. Cahill, I believe, three times.

3538. Tell me honestly whom else did you make a charge upon?—I made a charge on no other person.

3539. Did you never make a charge on Mr. Laffan?—Never, sir.

3540. Did you ever make application to Mr. Munster, or to any person, for him?—Never, sir.

3541. Did you send in a claim to the agent?—I couldn't send it.

3542. I ask you did you?—No, sir, I didn't.

3543. Did you ever send in any claim for your son?—Never, sir.

Mr. Biggin.

Mr. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3544. Mr. Biggin give me claims 76 and 95?—I have them not, sir.

3545. Why?—When I came to those accounts they were all in a great muddle; I am not answerable for any claims. After I wrote them down I did not take particular care of them. I have been away four months and really I am not answerable for those claims. I don't think anyone has destroyed them.

3546. Have you made search?—I have made every search, sir.

3547. Do you know from whom you got the claim from Patrick Tierney?—I don't know; I lifted them in a lump.

3548. From whom did you get the claims?—From Mr. Richardson, or Mr. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3549. Mr. Laffan, do you recollect getting a claim from a person named Patrick Tierney?—I cannot say, at present, whether I did or not.

3550. Do you know any person named Patrick Tierney?—No, but this man's son.

[Mr. Biggin—76 and 95 in the book, are both Patrick Tierney.]

3551. Mr. Laffan, would you undertake to say there is no man named Patrick Tierney who made a claim?—I would not, but I may tell you, to facilitate matters, that after the election was over, Mr. Cahill very likely, or somebody told me that Tierney would expect something.

3552. Mr. Cahill told you that?—I think so: that is my recollection. Somebody or other told me Tierney would expect something; and before he said he sent in no claim, it occurred to me that there were two or three parties, of whom I said, in making out the list of claims, "we will see if their sons can get anything;" and I may have put in his son's name, and sent it in in the list of claims. I don't actually say I did that, but I know there were two or three such cases.

3553. In which you were told there were voters who expected remuneration for their votes, and in which you put the name of the voter's son, in place of the voter himself?—Yes.

3554. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you put down £35 also?—Oh, certainly, I put down £30 or £35.

Thomas Tierney.

Thomas Tierney's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3555. You say you did not put in any claim?—I did not, sir.

3556. Do you know if Mr. Cahill put in a claim for you?—I have no knowledge of it, sir.

3557. Did he ever say he would put in a claim?—He said he would do some good for me, sir.

3558. Did he say he had asked for money for you, from Mr. Laffan or anybody else?—He told me he was speaking to Mr. Michael Laffan, and that Mr. Michael Laffan told him there could be no good done for me.

3559. Did Mr. Cahill ask your son's name?—He didn't, he knew my son.

3560. Mr. Tierney, when did this conversation occur with Mr. Cahill?—Some time after Mr. Munster canvassing me, sir.

3561. You were canvassed, of course, by Mr. O'Beirne's friends?—I was, sir.

3562. By whom?—By Mr. O'Beirne himself, in person, sir.

3563. And by whom else now—who else besides Mr. O'Beirne himself canvassed you for Mr. O'Beirne?—James Cody, sir.

3564. Anybody else?—I see no one else there at the time, sir.

3565. Not at that time, but at any time at all, were you canvassed by any persons on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne; you say you were by Mr. O'Beirne himself, and by James Cody, were you by anybody else?—I was, sir, by Mr. Ryan.

3566. What Mr. Ryan is that?—Mr. Ryan Going, sir.

3567. Now, which canvassed you first, Mr. O'Beirne's side, or Mr. Munster's side?—Mr. Munster's.

3568. Now, Tierney, tell me as an honest man—no harm will come to you if you tell the truth—were you offered anything, by any person, in any way: you understand what I mean?—I do sir, well.

3569. On behalf of Mr. O'Beirne were you offered anything?—No, sir, I was not.

3570. By none of those parties; now do not conceal anything; if you tell the truth no harm can come to you; tell the truth honestly; we will be examining these people by-and-by and it may be unpleasant to have a different story from them; tell me everything you know?—I was stopped by Tracey, sir.

3571. When was that?—Some time before the election, sir.

3572. That was Simon Tracey?—Yes, sir.

3573. What did he say to you?—He wanted to know would I vote for Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

3574. What did you say to him?—I told him I would not, sir.

3575. Begin at the beginning and tell all the story; where did you meet Tracey?—On my going home, sir, to my own house.

3576. Go on and tell me all that happened between you?—Tracey stopped me, sir, and asked me who was I going to vote for: I said Mr. Munster. He asked me then, sir, wouldn't I vote for Mr. O'Beirne, a tried man: I told him not. No other person tampered with me but him.

3577. Tell me all that happened?—That is all that happened between Tracey and me.

3578. Surely there was more than that; there was no tampering in that much?—I have nothing to tell you but that your worship.

3579. Did you say "No other person tampered with me but Tracey"?—I say that no person tampered with me but Tracey.

3580. Tell me how he tampered with you?—That he wanted me to vote for Mr. O'Beirne instead of Mr. Munster.

3581. What did he say you would get for it?—He didn't say what I would get.

3582. Did he only ask you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—There's all.

3583. Did he say what Mr. O'Beirne would do for you afterwards?—He did not.

3584. Did he say you would be better off by voting for him?—He didn't, but he said Mr. O'Beirne was a tried man.

3585. How a tried man?—That he was a good man in Parliament before.

3586. And no more than that passed between you?—No more than that passed between us, sir.

3587. Did anybody else speak to you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—Mr. Ryan asked me would I vote for him.

3588. I want to know who offered you some money if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was proferred no money by any of his party.

3589. I do not suppose the money was shown to you, but I want to know who made a promise to you if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—No person, sir.

3590. No one at all?—No one at all; they were all telling me he was a tried man, but no money was offered.

3591. Were you told that you would get money or anything for your vote?—I was told there was money going after the election.

3592. Mr. Molloy.—Were you told there was money going?—I was told there was money going after the election.

3593. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Who told you that?—I heard them saying it here and there through the town.

3594. Mr. Griffin.—Did Tracey know your son was employed in the telegraph office?—He did, sir, well.

3595. He was employed there at the time Tracey spoke to you?—He was, sir.

3596. Did you say it would be hard to go against Mr. Munster when he was giving employment to your son?—I said no such thing, sir, but I wouldn't go.

3597. Mr. Molloy.—What did Captain Graham tell you would be done for you if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—That's a man I never changed a word with.

3598. What did you tell Mr. Cahill Captain Graham said to you?—I couldn't tell Mr. Cahill that I changed a word with Captain Graham.

3599. Did you tell Mr. Cahill that Captain Graham canvassed you?—No, sir, I did not.

James C. Cahill recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

3600. Is that man that was on the table just now, the Tierney of whom you spoke yesterday?—Yes, sir.

3601. And that is the man to whom you said that if he voted for Mr. Munster he would be remunerated?—I told him to go independent and leave matters to Mr. Munster's agents afterwards; I made him no promise of anything.

3602. I do not think you used those words yesterday; you did not use the word "independent"?—I might have left it out, sir, but I expressed myself in that sort of way to Tierney.

3603. Tierney of course understood what you meant?—Oh, yes, sir, he did.

3604. And that was, that if he voted for Mr. Munster he would be likely to get money afterwards?—I didn't positively swear he said Captain Graham canvassed him, but I said to the best of my knowledge from what he stated to me, that Captain Graham did canvass him.

3605. Tierney tells us that he came to you three or four times to ask you to interfere for him, or to ask you to have what you told him would be done for him carried out?—Well, sir, I stated yesterday that I didn't think he came specially to me, but sometimes passing by he happened to meet me and we would get into a conversation; I would tell him if it was in my power I would have something done for him.

3606. And you did your best to get something done for him?—I did. I told him I would not act dishonourably to him, for I influenced him to vote for Mr. Munster, and I thought he would have got something for voting for the other party—at least I thought so.

3607. And you went to Mr. Laffan, no doubt?—Yes, sir, I did.

3608. And represented his case?—Yes, sir, I did.

3609. Do you recollect representing it to anybody else?—Yes, I represented it to Mr. Leahy one time, and he told me nothing could be done—it might after the petition. The reason I took an interest in these few persons I influenced to vote was, that they shouldn't say I was the cause of keeping so much out of their pockets, preventing them from getting it elsewhere, deceiving them or decoying them.

3610. I think you told us also that what you said to Mr. Leahy was before the election petition?—Yes, sir, it was.

3611. And that he then said to you that nothing could be done for them at present?—Yes, sir.

3612. Did that answer of Mr. Leahy's apply to this man Tierney's case?—Yes, sir, it did.

3613. And you told us besides that Mr. Michael Laffan also told you that nothing could be done for them at present?—Yes, and he also stated that he was not the person to apply to—that he had nothing to do with the matter.

3614. Were you here in court to-day when Mr. Laffan said something about this man's son?—I was not in court until you sent for me, sir. I remained in the aisle when I came.

3615. Do you recollect, in conversation with Mr. Laffan, saying that this man was a voter, and nothing could be done for himself, but that something could be done for his son?—No, sir, I never recollect any conversation with any person about his son.

3616. You know that Tierney has a son named Patrick?—I know he has but one son, but I don't know his name.

3617. You are living here a long time?—Since '52.

3618. Do you know of any other Patrick Tierney here but this man's son?—No, sir.

3619. Did you happen to put in a claim for this man's son, or for this man at all?—No.

3620. You did not send in a claim for him in the name of his son?—No, sir; if it has been done it was done unknown to me.

3621. Did you send in a claim for anybody?—No, sir, for no person.

3622. Did you send in a claim for yourself?—No, sir; I believe my son sent in a claim.

FIFTH DAY.
October 8.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Biggin.

3623. Mr. Biggin, give me claim No. 31?—I cannot find it.

3624. Or 88?—That is the same thing—these are what I went for yesterday; I have not found them.

James C. Cahill.

James C. Cahill's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3625. [Witness].—After leaving this yesterday I went up for my son to give every information. I didn't put in a claim. If there is an entry there to me it is a mistake; it should be my son's.

3626. There is no mistake at all about it—H. J. Cahill is your son?—Yes, sir, Hubert James Cahill.

3627. Do you know any other person in Cashel named J. Cahill?—There is no John or James Cahill in Cashel.

3628. Is there any other Cahill in Cashel whose Christian name commences with the letter J.?—Not to my knowledge.

3629. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know a William Cahill in Cashel?—There may be a person of the name unknown to me, sir. There was a James Cahill in town; he died, I believe, about two years ago.

3630. He could not have been engaged at the last election?—No, sir; he was dead before then, I think.

Mr. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3631. Mr. Biggin, are you able to give me any explanation of this claim for J. Cahill—a blank claim?—I do not know, sir.

3632. There is a blank in page five, and turning back to this list that you make of them I find "J. Cahill, agent, £40"?—I have not carried it out, that is all.

3633. £40 here, and "J. Cahill, agent," blank. I see a note in the margin; 31 refers to the number of the claims which you numbered with Mr. Richardson?—Yes, sir.

3634. Of course you entered it in this book first?—No, sir; I entered the list first, and copied from the list into the book.

3635. At page 27 amongst the agents you have "J. Cahill, £40;" can you explain how J. Cahill's name is here twice £40, and a claim for him blank in another place—can you tell me who he is?—I don't know, sir.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3636. Mr. Laffan can you explain that to me?—I cannot, sir; there must be some mistake in it; there was no J. Cahill, agent, at the election.

3637. I want to know why it was entered in this book?—I can't tell you, sir.

Cornelius Carroll.

Cornelius Carroll sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3638. Mr. Carroll, you are a voter of this town, I believe?—I am, sir.

3639. And you voted at the last election, I believe, for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

3640. Who canvassed you for Mr. O'Beirne first?—Captain Graham, sir.

3641. You have no doubt been in court before, and you have heard me, more than once, explain to witnesses the power we have of giving certificates freeing them from responsibility, if they answer to our satisfaction?—I have.

3642. When did Captain Graham first canvass you?—I suppose about two months before the election.

3643. Did he ask to take your house?—No, sir; he did not.

3644. Is this the first election at which you had a vote?—It is.

3645. Are you a tenant to Captain Graham?—No, I am not.

3646. Or in any way connected with him?—No, sir.

3647. Did you promise Captain Graham at once to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did; I had my mind made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne before he came.

3648. It is not a usual thing, I think, from what we have heard here, to have electors of Cashel make up their minds very quickly, and I want to know, and I expect an honest answer from you, why you made up your mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I had that liking for Mr. O'Beirne.

3649. You never voted for him before?—No, but I knew his acts in Parliament and his principles.

3650. That is the only thing that induced you?—That's the only thing.

3651. You were examined on the petition, Mr. Carroll?—I was.

3652. Were you asked on the petition: "Then you went to Mr. Coman to get you money at the election," and did you answer "yes?"—Yes.

3653. Were you asked: "For what did you expect to get the money," and did you say "for my vote?"—Yes.

3654. Did you expect to get money for your vote at the election?—I did, but not to keep it.

3655. But not to keep it?—Yes, the reason I did go for it was I was in dread——

3656. You will answer my questions first; at what time did you go to Mr. Coman to ask him for money?—I frequently used to go in there.

3657. When did you go to ask him for money?—It might be two months before the election.

3658. Did you go to Mr. Coman to ask him for money, before you were canvassed by Captain Graham?—I did, sir.

3659. Did you go before?—I might have gone.

3660. Am I to understand that you mean that you did?—Well yes, sir, for I might have gone in there, for I used to go often.

3661. Then is your answer that you did go to Mr. Coman to ask for money before you promised Captain Graham?—I did.

3662. Was that before Mr. Munster was a candidate?—It was not.

3663. But it was before you had promised Captain Graham?—Yes.

3664. Then I presume that your mind was not made up as to how you would vote at that time?—It was; my mind was made up at all times to vote for Mr. O'Beirne—it was.

3665. You said that you did not intend to keep the money if you got it?—Yes: I did get it; I got £35.

3666. You swear that?—I do. My wish was to get the money for several others, for I was afraid Mr. O'Beirne would be put out. It was my wish not to have him put out, and I said I would look for the money in order to prove a case of bribery against him. That is the view I took of it.

3667. And you did that before ever you were canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne at all?—I did.

3668. Two months before the election?—Yes.

3669. Was money very flush two months before the election?—I seen it—it was so. Mr. Laffan told me there was £5,000 lodged in the bank of Cashel for the voters, and for no one else.

3670. Which Mr. Laffan told you that?—Mr. Michael Laffan, and he said he didn't know what way to give it.

3671. When did he tell you that?—I suppose two months before the election—to tell him what way to give it with safety, and he would give it.

3672. And your virtue was shocked at that?—It was.

3673. And you determined in the cause of honesty and truth to make yourself a detective?—I did; that's the whole meaning of it.

3674. And you have sworn twice that you did not intend to keep the money?—I did.

3675. Was there an action to recover the money from you?—There was.

3676. Did you defend it?—I did.

3677. Did you do your best to prevent the money being dragged from you?—I did; for Cunningham swore he took my house, and he didn't; and 'twas proved yesterday he gave £60 to a voter. He put me to the cost of £60 in Dublin, and Mr. Munster didn't look for his cost, it would be £100 but for that; now he is not coming forward it is likely to be falsehood and perjury.

3678. What is falsehood?—What Cunningham said, sir.

3679. But it is no falsehood that you endeavoured to keep the money?—'Tis not, sir; for I proferred the money to Mr. Coman and he wouldn't accept of it, for his name wasn't on the envelope—himself.

3680. He would not accept it because his name was not on the envelope?—No; he told me to go to Cunningham to give up the money.

3681. I believe your defence in the action was that the money was given to bribe you?—Yes.

3682. And that was the way in which you understood it when it was given?—It was, sir.

3683. And it was on that account you took it—be cause it was a bribe?—It was a bribe, for it was plain he didn't want the house. They had four houses bought at the election and didn't occupy one of them.

3684. Tell me the names of the four persons whose houses they had bought?—One of them is Phelan, and Tom Donnell, I think.

3685. What others?—Corcoran's.

3686. Is that the hotel?—Yes.

3687. What is the fourth?—Walsh, the butcher's.

3688. Mr. MOLLOY.—Is Tom Donnell's house in the main street?—It is, sir.

3689. What is Phelan's Christian name?—James, sir.

3690. Where does he live?—In the main street, opposite the market house.

3691. What is Walsh's Christian name?—Edward Walsh, sir.

3692. Where does he live?—In the main street.

3693. What is the fourth house?—Corcoran's, I think.

3694. Is that the hotel?—Yes, sir,

3695. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you recollect having any conversation with Mr. Coman about Mr. Munster?—I do, sir.

3696. Did you ask Mr. Coman to do something for you?—No, but Cunningham spoke to me that he would go to Pat Laffan and get an order for Mr. Coman for whiskey. I said if he did he should get me a receipt in full, that he wouldn't have the power to charge me afterwards.

3697. Was that for your vote?—It was for my vote.

3698. And did you intend to take the whiskey?—I did if I got it.

3699 And, of course, to sell it, and to keep the proceeds?—I suppose so.

3700. When did that occur?—I suppose about six weeks before the election.

3701. Was there any conversation on the subject between you and Mr. Coman and any other person or persons in Cashel together? Tell me how it was introduced, and go through the history of it?—I was standing with Mr. Coman one day at the market-house, and Cunningham came up and asked my leave would he go to Mr. Laffan to get an order for whiskey to Mr. Coman. I said he may, but he should get a receipt in full. Mr. Coman said he would give me whiskey on my own word, but I said I wouldn't have it that way. That is all that happened until Cunningham came down to the house to me.

3702. When afterwards and where did he come to you?—About a month afterwards.

3703. What occurred then?—He came on a Friday evening, and he told me he was talking to Mr. Pat Laffan at Corcoran's hotel, and he said they were talking about giving me whiskey, and he said the third person would be got into it by giving me whiskey; at the same time he read Dean Cantwell's letter for me.

3704. What about the third person—that he would be got into the transaction?—Yes, if I was to get the whiskey.

3705. And that it would not be honest?—Yes, sir.

3706. And that it could not be carried out?—Yes. So he told me to go up to Pat Laffan at seven o'clock that evening.

3707. Was the plan of giving you the whiskey given up?—Yes, sir.

3708. And it was given up because it could not be done with safety?—Yes; the third person would be got in.

3709. And you were afraid it would be discovered?—I was not, indeed; 'twas they were in dread.

3710. You would have taken the whiskey and sold it, and kept the money. You went to Mr. Pat Laffan then?—I did, sir.

3711. What occurred then?—He called me into a dark room and he closed the door, and he asked me how things were getting on. I said the same way, there was no change so far; and he said he was talking to Mr. Coman about the whiskey; and he made the same remark that he didn't like to get Coman into it, that it would be better to do something else, and I said it would. "We rather win at the poll," says he, "and be beat after by a petition." Them are the words he said. "I am going to tell you everything now," says he, "don't tell anyone. Come up to me at twelve o'clock on Monday and I will make you all right." That finished the thing, and I went home then.

3712. Had you and Mr. Pat Laffan any talk about the whiskey then?—He made the same remark that Coman would be got in.

3713. He said that it was better not to have a third person brought in?—Yes, sir, he did.

3714. You are, I suppose, an old acquaintance of Mr. Coman's?—About seven or eight years, sir.

3715. Are you a native of Cashel?—I am, sir.

3716. You have known Mr. Coman then, I suppose, all your life?—I do, sir.

3717. Of course you did not go to entrap Mr. Coman?—No, I had only the one view as I told you before.

3718. Your view at that time was to get the whiskey?—Yes, sir.

3719. When was it that you afterwards came to the determination to find out anything against Mr. Munster's side?—I didn't; they sent for me, sir, that time.

3720. Tell me honestly, and at once, if you got the whole notes that night for £35——?—Sure I did get the whole notes.

3721. Were they half notes?—No, whole notes.

3722. Why was it you gave it up?—That was the whole reason.

3723. You would have taken the whiskey; consider your position, and think that your townspeople are listening to you, and that they have listened to what you have stated; tell out all the truth; you did not want to entrap Mr. Coman, but you would have taken the whiskey; you had no desire to injure or destroy your old neighbour Mr. Coman, yet you would have taken the whiskey from him; £35 were afterwards put into your hands, tell me why you did not keep them?—I done it for no other reason; I can swear that positively; this is the third time with me doing so, and I swear it now.

3724. Then it was through a love of purity of election you did it. I want you to explain why did you try to keep the money afterwards by defending Mr. Munster's action; why did you not give the money to Mr. Munster if you did not want to keep it?—I wanted to make out Cunningham a liar, that he wanted to take my house.

3725. You took the £35; you have sworn it was not for the purpose of keeping it?—Yes.

3726. Mr. Munster asked you for the money afterwards?—No, sir.

3727. Were you asked for the money?—Mr. Coman told me to give it back, and Mr. Munster wouldn't go on with it.

3728. Was there no demand made on you before?—No.

3729. Who was the attorney in the action?—Mr. Grace.

3730. Your attorney?—Yes.

3731. Who was Mr. Munster's attorney in the action?—Mr. Laffan, I believe.

3732. Do you mean to say that Mr. Laffan or any person did not ask you to pay him back?—No, sir.

3733. When the writ was served why did you not say—"I only wanted to entrap Mr. Munster; it was through love of purity of election I took it; I didn't want to soil my fingers with it; here is your money for you." Why did you not hand back the money if you were such an honest man as you represent yourself to be?—I left it to Mr. Grace.

3734. Did Mr. Grace tell you to keep it?—He did.

3735. Did he give you the advice that you might keep that money?—He did.

3736. To keep it altogether for yourself?—He didn't care what would be done with it, but not to give it back; the money wouldn't be given back in any case.

3737. Who was to keep it if you were not?—I couldn't say, sir.

3738. Is that the only explanation you can give me of this transaction?—As far as I know anything, I am not keeping it inside: that is in my power to tell you.

3739. You were defeated in that action, I believe?—I was, by one man's evidence, Cunningham, which he is not making his appearance now.

3740. Did you make yourself busy about any other case at the election?—No, sir, I did not.

3741. Did you not look out for anybody else, or make any inquiry about anybody else?—No, sir, I did not.

3742. Did you apply your detective talent only to one case?—To one case.

3743. Mr. Munster wishes to ask, through the Court, these questions, and we have no objection to ask them. Did you say in answer to a question, on the trial in Dublin, that you would have given the money in charity?—I didn't care what would be done with it.

3744. Is that the answer you gave at the trial?—I don't recollect.

3745. You may have said it?—I don't recollect; I didn't care what would be done with the money, or whether I would get it or not.

3746. Did you after the action make any assignment of your goods?—Never.

3747. Have you made any assignment?—No, I am the owner of what I have in the world.

3748. You have already said that Mr. Munster forgave you the costs?—He did, his own costs.

3749. Have you paid back the money to Mr. Munster?—I did; I got forty-eight hours to pay.

3750. Mr. Munster forgave you the costs?—He did, his own costs.

3751. Who paid your own costs in the action?—My own pocket, sir, which was very hard on me, too. I am sure the man that did it wouldn't do it only he expected money—that was Cunningham. He thought he would come by the £35.

3752. Mr. Carroll, were you ever canvassed by anybody but Captain Graham on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, by Mr. O'Beirne himself.

3753. Were you offered any inducement of any kind whatever; were you led in any way to believe that you would get any sort of remuneration for your vote?—No, sir, I was not.

3754. Were you offered any inducement by either the one or the other?—Neither Captain Graham nor Mr. O'Beirne did.

3755. Did anybody else?—No, sir.

3756. Did anybody else speak to you about money?—I am telling you the truth—they didn't. There is no one has any influence on me, to speak to me about voting for them.

3757. Did you ever receive any sort of communication about money—that is a wide question, and I expect you to answer it—did you ever receive any communication about money from Mr. O'Beirne?—Never.

3758. And your evidence to me is, that you—the man who went to look to get whiskey for your vote, admitting that if you got it you would have taken it, and made use of it, and kept the proceeds of it—that you got £35 afterwards—that you voted for Mr. O'Beirne and gave up the £35 without ever having had any promise of any kind of remuneration from Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Never, and I could point out to several people that I did say the same to during the election.

3759. Do you know Mr. Simon Tracey?—I do, sir.

3760. Have you had any conversation with him about the election?—No, sir.

3761. Do you say that you never spoke to him at all about it?—Never, nor did I know he was employed in any way, until he ran away at the petition.

3762. At the time you got the £35 I believe there were £40 there, were there not?—Yes, he had £40 in his hand.

3763. You asked him to make it £40?—I said he might make it £40 as he had it in his hand; he said it was against the order.

3764. At that time you only wanted to get proof of bribery?—Yes.

3765. Would the £5 additional assist you in proving such a case?—No.

3766. Then why did you demand the £5 more?—As he had it in his hand.

3767. Your only object being to get proof of bribery, you asked him to increase the sum from £35 to £40?—I did.

3768. And you say it was only a passing remark?—A passing remark.

3769. Begin and tell me the whole of the circumstance connected with Mr. Coman when you went to him about the money?—The money was put into an envelope at Corcoran's hotel by Cunningham. He asked me would I leave it in Mr. Coman's hands; "but Mr. Coman wouldn't have anything to do with it," says I; "we'll try him," says Cunningham; we went to Mr. Coman's; they called me in when I went to the door; Cunningham asked me to take a glass of brandy, and I said I wouldn't take anything; he asked me then would I leave the letter in Mrs. Coman's hands, and I said I wouldn't; so Coman was sent for them to the Market-house, and he came over, and as he was coming in the door, Cunningham had the letter, and I told him, "I have a letter here and £35, will you keep it?" he said he would not, to "be off out of that," he would have nothing to do with it. "Now, Cunningham," says I, "didn't I tell you that would be the way." So I was going home and Coman called me back to the kitchen, and I said I wouldn't stop any longer; so he went up the lane, and whatever conversation happened between him and Cunningham, Cunningham told me after; he said wouldn't I trust him with the letter; so Cunningham followed me up with the letter and gave it to me with the £35 in it. I told him at that time when I got the letter, "Make out all the information you can," says he, "and it will not be trusting to that;" "I'll make out no information," says I, "I'll vote for Mr. O'Beirne."

Cornelius Carroll.

3770. Were you satisfied that the money should be held in Mr. Coman's hands for you?—I was not, sir; if he accepted it I wouldn't agree to it.

3771. Did you swear you went up to place it in his hands; did you go to Mr. Coman's to leave it in his hands?—I wouldn't agree to it if he took it.

3772. Did you go to him with Cunningham?—I did.

3773. You said to Cunningham, "he won't accept it?"—I did.

3774. Did you hear Cunningham say "we'll try him?"—I did.

3775. Do you swear you did not intend to leave it in his hands?—I do, positively; I wouldn't leave it in Coman's hands if he accepted the letter and money.

3776. Do you understand my question thoroughly?—Yes, sir.

3777. You were examined before Baron Fitzgerald on the election petition?—I was.

3778. Did you say this to Baron Fitzgerald—"Mr. Coman was sent for, and came up the lane; we were standing in the parlour; he came in; Cunningham and I were standing at the door; I spoke first, and said Cunningham has a letter here for £35, will you keep it; I said to Coman, will you keep it till four o'clock on Friday evening?"—No, I didn't say what was in the letter. He asked Mrs. Coman to send for Mr. Coman.

3779. Did you say this, "I spoke first and said Cunningham has a letter here for £35, will you keep it till four o'clock on Friday evening?" will you swear to me now on your solemn oath that you had no intention whatever of leaving it with him?—I do; if he agreed to keep it I wouldn't leave it to him.

Mr. Pierce Grace recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Pierce Grace.

3780. Did you hear the last witness swear that you told him to keep the money himself?—I told him that I thought the money could not be recovered back from him as it was given as a bribe.

3781. Did you tell him to keep the money?—The money was in my custody, and I intended to hold it until after the action, and then of course I would hand it back to him. I did not know what he would do with it. What I stated was, that if the jury believed that it was a bribe they would find for him, and if they believed that it was a bona fide transaction they would find for Mr. Munster. They did so find, and then I sent back the money to Mr. Munster's attorney, Mr. Scallan.

3782. What occurred the evening that he came up to you when he got the money?—He came to my office. He had an envelope in his hand sealed. He said, "There are £35 in this that I got from Cunningham for my vote."

3783. Was that all that occurred?—That was all that I recollect occurred.

3784. Did you ask him to leave the money with you?—He handed it to me with the view of my keeping it, at least that was what I understood, and on my opening the envelope I found it was as he said. There was £35 in it, and that £35 remained in my hands until after the trial of the action.

James Phelan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

James Phelan.

3785. You are an elector of Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

3786. I see your valuation is only £4 10*s.*, was the last election the first at which you had a vote?—Yes, sir.

3787. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

3788. Your house was taken, I believe?—Yes, sir.

3789. When was it taken?—By gor, I don't exactly know, sir, what day of the month it was taken.

3790. I do not want the month or the day, but tell me about what time it was; was it taken in the month of October or November or September?—It was taken about two or three days before the ——

3791. The election?—Oh, not the election, but before the members were called on here.

3792. That is before the nomination?—Yes, before the nomination.

3793. About three days before the nomination?—Yes, sir.

3794. You got £30 for it?—Yes, I got half notes, sir.

3795. From whom did you get them?—From Cunningham.

3796. Who gave you the other half notes?—I didn't get the other halves, yet sir.

3797. Half notes for £30?—Yes, sir.

3798. Were they £10 notes?—£5 notes.

3799. That is halves of six £5 notes?—Yes, sir.

3800. Did you ever ask Cunningham for the half notes since?—I did, sir.

3801. Did you ask him often for them?—I suppose about three times, sir.

3802. When did you last ask him for them?—About three weeks ago, I think. I don't exactly recollect, but I think it is about that time.

3803. Did you ever ask anybody since?—Mr. Laffan. I went up to him; I went up to him into the parlour. When I went in he asked me what could he do for me. I asked him about the half notes, and he said he knew nothing about them. He said no more.

3804. Did you tell him your house had been taken?—I did, sir; sure he knew that himself.

3805. He knew it before you went to him?—Yes, sir.

3806. And he said he knew nothing about it?—Yes, sir.

3807. Is Mr. Laffan the only person you asked?—I asked no more but Mr. Laffan and Cunningham. I never went near Mr. Laffan but once.

3808. Are you anxious to get the £30?—Eh, gar, I don't know, sir, if I have a right to get them or if I haven't.

3809. Are you anxious to get the £30? answer the question, sir. Why did you ask for it four times unless you were anxious to get it?—I asked for the money, sir.

3810. Are you anxious to get it? Did you ask for it four times?—Either three or four times, I am not sure which.

3811. Are you desirous then of getting the money?—I thought I would get it; he promised it to me in two days after.

3812. Are you anxious to get the money?—I'll take it, sir, if I get it.

3813. Are you anxious to get the money?—I am not one bit anxious any more than all the others, sir; but if I get it I will take it.

3814. Did you hear of any persons processing Mr. Munster for houses taken from them, for which they were not paid?—I heard no one.

3815. Did you hear of its being done?—It was rumoured, sir, but I am not sure that Coffey done it, and that is all I know about it.

3816. I want to know why you have lain out of your money from last November to October—eleven months; tell me honestly why have you lain out of it so long; have you got any promise of it?—I have, sir, got a promise of it.

3817. From whom have you got a promise of it?—From Cunningham, sir.

3818. From anybody else?—Nobody else.

3819. Are you trusting to Cunningham's word during those eleven months?—Yes.

3820. What is your business?—A carpenter, sir; I have a shop in the town, sir.

3821. If he owed you a month's wages for your

FIFTH DAY. October 8.

James Phelan.

carpentry business, would you leave it remain due all that time?—'Tis often a lot of it remains for two years.

3822. That is not an answer to my question; would you leave it with Cunningham all that time?—Well, I would, sir, leave it.

3823. You had better answer the question straightforwardly. Did you abstain from pressing for this money because you were afraid it would be said it was a bribe?—No, sir, but he said he couldn't give me any money until after the petition would be over.

3824. Did Mr. Laffan say it could not be paid at present, or anything like that?—He said nothing but what I tell you, sir.

3825. That he knew nothing about it?—Yes, sir.

3826. I want you to tell me now why you did not apply to Mr. Munster himself—you know he is very well able to pay all demands on him; and here is an amount of £30 due to you nearly twelve months for the hiring of your house, yet you did not apply to Mr. Munster for payment of it. Why did you not say to him, "Your agent, Cunningham, is keeping me out of it?"—I thought Cunningham himself would give it to me every week; I didn't want the money too badly.

3827. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes. Mr. O'Beirne came to my house; I was not at home—I was working in the country then.

3828. Were you canvassed by anybody else for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, sir.

3829. By whom?—By a man named John Hogan.

3830. Is that the man that is a partner of Mr. Ryan's?—Yes, sir.

3831. Do you know where he lives now?—I know nothing about him, sir.

3832. When did he canvass you for Mr. O'Beirne?—He canvassed me a week or about three or four days before I gave the vote to Mr. Munster.

3833. When did you give the vote to Mr. Munster?—Well, about three days before the nomination was here.

3834. That was just when your house was taken?—Yes, sir.

3835. It was on account of the taking of your house that you gave your vote to Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

3836. Was there any use ever made of your house?—No, sir.

3837. Mr. MOLLOY.—What did you do with the half notes?—I have them, sir.

3838. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I suppose you told Hogan that you had promised Mr. Munster when he asked you?—Yes, sir.

3839. Did you tell him your house was taken?—I did, sir.

3840. Did you tell him how much you would get for it?—I don't think now I did, sir; I told him I was promised, and there was no more.

3841. But you told him that your house was taken?—Yes.

3842. And of course he understood at once, when your house was taken, that you could not give your vote away?—I don't know that either.

3843. Would you vote for Mr. O'Beirne when your house was taken by Mr. Munster?—I would not, sir.

3844. You would not consider it right?—I would not, sir.

3845. Mr. MOLLOY.—I suppose if Mr. O'Beirne took your house you would not vote for Mr. Munster?—I had my mind made up all through.

3846. If Mr. O'Beirne took your house would you have voted for Mr. Munster?—I had my mind made up, sir.

3847. If Mr. O'Beirne took your house would you have voted for Mr. Munster; answer the question, sir, we all know what the answer ought to be; answer the question; would you have voted for him?—No, nor I wouldn't think it fair either, sir.

3848. Then you would have voted for Mr. O'Beirne if he took your house?—Yes, if he took my house.

3849. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When Hogan came to canvass you did he tell you anything about having a cheque of Mr. O'Beirne's?—No, sir.

3850. Did he say anything about taking your house?—He didn't, sir; he didn't speak of the house to me, but to my wife; he walked away then.

3851. What did he say to her?—My wife told him I was pledged to Mr. Munster.

3852. He asked her about the house?—Yes, sir.

3853. What else did he say?—That is all that passed between us.

3854. He was offering to take the house from your wife; was he?—Yes, sir, and she told him it was taken by Mr. Munster.

3855. He said no more than that?—No more, but went away.

3856. Did your wife tell you whether he asked how much Mr. Munster would pay for it?—I don't think she told him, or that he asked either, sir.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3857. I want you to explain why this man's claim, £30, is not down here, or any account of it?—Because I never got it.

3858. Did he not come to you?—He did.

3859. When did he come to you?—About a fortnight ago, or three weeks ago.

3860. And never before?—Never before that I recollect.

3861. Did you know that his house had been taken?—I did, some short time before the petition was tried here.

3862. This book has been made up since the petition?—It has.

3863. Then I want to know why the £30 for him is not here?—I only sent in any claims I got. I never got a claim from him until he came the other day and asked me for half notes.

3864. Do you mean to say that you did not know of his claim?—Never. I heard some time previous to the petition that his house was taken, and I heard it confirmed by the evidence of Cunningham at the trial of the petition; beyond that I knew nothing; afterwards he came to me about those half-notes as he says, and I told him I knew nothing about it.

Mr. Daniel Laffan.

Mr. Daniel Laffan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3865. I want to know when you last heard of your son Patrick?—About a fortnight ago I heard through the doctor of his being somewhere in Dublin or about it, but I had no conversation with him or no correspondence with him since he left the town after the election. I was quite displeased with him in consequence of something that happened before the election, so that I would not hold any correspondence with him after that.

3866. I believe, sir, he is a medical student and quite a young man?—He is, rather; he has taken his degree though.

3867. But he is not yet in a position to support himself?—No.

3868. And I presume he is supported by you?—No doubt.

3869. How long has he been away from Cashel?—Since the end of November or the beginning of December.

3870. And of course you have sent him funds?—Not directly. I had no communication with him after that.

3871. But you have sent him funds to maintain him?—Yes, through others.

3872. And you are maintaining him at present yourself?—Yes.

3873. You are aware I suppose that he is very deeply compromised here?—So I see by the reports.

3874. And that if he does not appear before this Commission, he may leave Ireland as soon as he likes, never to come back. If he is to be had in Ireland, or England, or Scotland, or anywhere, you had better get him to come here, and I need not tell you that if he gives his evidence faithfully and honestly to us, we will put him in a position to have nothing to do except to regret what he has done in the past?—If he should come, which I hope he will, there is no doubt he must be candid, and tell the truth if he follows my advice; and if he followed my advice, he would not be employed as he has been.

3875. If he comes and tells the truth he has nothing to fear, but if he does not come I shall have to adjourn this Commission?—I rather think he will, for his brother has written to him to come.

3876. I believe you did not take any part in the election?—Not the slightest.

3877. And do not know anything about it?—Not a ha'p'orth.

3878. You were engaged in previous elections?—I was engaged in '65 and '59.

3879. For Lanigan?—For Lanigan.

3880. Do you know of any money having been spent under the name of taking houses or otherwise in '65?—Not by us: not by Mr. Lanigan's party: not a single sixpence: not a house did he take that time or any of his committee, even the most active of them. There were three or four very active men on his committee who never took a house, and never paid a sixpence to any one.

3881. In how many elections was Mr. Lanigan a candidate here?—In '65 he was defeated the last time; in '59 he was elected, and in '57 he was first a candidate, but I was not concerned then—I was only an amicus curiæ. I did no more than give my vote for him, and I know nothing of what happened then.

3882. You say that in '65 you do not know of any money—not a single sixpence, you said—having been improperly expended on Lanigan's side?—Not a sixpence, as far as I could know. I am positive there was not a sixpence.

3883. You say "as far as you could know," that leads me to ask you did you hear of any persons having expended money improperly, on behalf of Mr. Lanigan?—I did not.

3884. You never heard it?—Never, not on behalf of Lanigan.

3885. On behalf of the other candidate, Mr. O'Beirne, in '65, what do you say: do you know anything of money having been improperly expended in '65?—No, I do not.

3886. That is to say, you have no direct knowledge of it, but you heard a good deal about it?—I did.

3887. How many persons did you hear to have been improperly influenced in '65, on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—I could not count them. All the men on the Commons, with the exception of one, voted for Mr. O'Beirne, and I heard they were all influenced by corruption; and a good many in the town, amongst the first Mr. Fahie, of the post office.

3888. Is he here still?—He is here still, and Doctor Molony and two of the Hacketts of the Green, and several others that I could not count.

3889. All the Commons men, you say?—With the exception of one or two of the Commons men.

3890. I want to get the honourable exception from you?—As far as I recollect his name is John Hickey.

3891. Did he vote for Lanigan?—He voted for Lanigan; there may be another, I am not sure.

3892. But you are sure that this exception amongst the Commons' people voted for Lanigan?—Oh, yes, I have the poll-book here.

3893. Then you might as well give us the numbers that polled on that occasion?—Oh, with pleasure, I have it for you; I have the list of voters.

3894. The number of voters I believe in '65 was 146?—I think so; yes, 146.

3895. And how many polled out of the 146?—136—86 for O'Beirne, and 49 for Lanigan. John Hickey is number 70 on the list.

3896. Did you hear Mr. Laffan—I am asking only if you heard—did you hear who it was that distributed the money amongst the Commoners in '65. Who was the man that managed them, and knew all about them?—Oh, Johnson, that was the solicitor then for O'Beirne.

3897. Was not he the conducting agent?—He was, virtually.

3898. Conducting agents generally are kept out of those things?—Some of them are not.

3899. Do you believe it was Johnson that did so?—That is my belief, but I cannot be positive.

3900. I would like to get your belief as to who managed the Commons people on the last occasion in '68?—My belief of the last occasion is, I think, Keeffe and somebody else—Keeffe was the principal.

3901. You do not know who Mr. Keeffe's colleague was?—No, I could not tell that.

3902. I do not mean that you should tell me as a matter of your knowledge but what your belief is?—Belief is a very strong thing. If you ask me "who did you hear," is that evidence?

3903. It is evidence for us?—I doubt that hearsay is evidence in any court. Is not your reporter taking down what I say? You ask me did I hear so and so; if I say I did, is that legal evidence?

3904. It would not be in an ordinary court; but on the other hand, we are not restricted from taking that evidence. Of course, we could not as conscientious men, if we are such, act on hearsay evidence in coming to any conclusion?—Then you ought not have it reported.

3905. The report is for our guidance by and by?—If you don't send it to Parliament it is all fair.

3906. We want your belief about it—it will not affect us much?—I could not form any belief as to who was with Keeffe, because Keeffe would travel by night as well as by day.

3907. If that is your answer, our discussion is rather useless—did you hear people say who Keeffe's companion was?—In the first place I don't think I did. I have had very little communication with him for the last four or five years. I hardly go out unless when I drive out, and I don't have an opportunity of conversing with people, and I don't know what is going on as well as I did in '65.

3908. But as you are an old hand at this sort of work people would come and tell you how your successors were getting on?—Not at bribery though, because in '59 and '65, when I was concerned, we never gave a sixpence.

3909. You never gave a sixpence at all?—Never. Mr. Lanigan never gave a penny, nor any of the active members concerned for him—the late Mr. Carroll, an active supporter of his; Mr. Coman, a very strenuous supporter of his; and a few other respectable men in town—Mr. Phelan and others; they could not have that great influence where money was concerned in '65.

3910. In '59 Mr. O'Beirne was again a candidate?—No, he was not—Mr. Hemphill, Mr. Carden, and Mr. Lanigan.

3911. And was not Mr. O'Beirne a candidate?—No; signs on—there was no money then.

3912. Mr. GRIFFIN.—He was a candidate in '57, I believe?—He was for a moment; he merely was proposed, but he withdrew.

3913. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you mean to say that there was no money going in '59?—Not a farthing—Lanigan never paid a farthing in '59.

3914. Did any of the other gentlemen?—I think not; for the number that voted for payment was so small they could not be bribed much. There were only eight for one and ten for another—for the late Mr. Carden ten; but I should not wonder Carden would not get any if they knew his history, for he was the greatest exterminator in the world.

FIFTH DAY.
October 8.
Mr. Daniel Laffan.

3915. We will not go into that—do you know anything of the election of '57?—No, I do not.

3916. I rely on it for your son's sake that you will see the necessity there is for his coming here?—There is no doubt he will be here, so far as my influence goes. If he took my advice he would not be in the position

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

3917. You have been sworn already?—Yes, sir.

3918. Of course you know that you are under the same obligation of your oath to-day?—Yes, sir.

3919. Have you heard from your son?—I have written to him, sir, and got no answer.

3920. When did you write?—Early last night.

3921. How far is the place from this?—Where I sent him with the money is seventeen miles.

3922. How far is the place where he is now?—Where he is now I can't account. I mentioned in the note to send for him.

3923. How far is the place where you guess he is?—Seventeen miles.

3924. What is the name of the person he went to?—Michael Hickey he went to; that is the man I bought the stock from.

3925. Where does he live?—Clogheen.

3926. You are a voter here in Cashel?—Yes, sir.

3927. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

3928. And I understand that you voted at the preceding election in 1865 for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir, I did.

3929. For whom did you vote in the election of 1859?—I couldn't say who I voted for that time.

3930. The candidates then were Mr. Lanigan, Mr. Hemphill, and Mr. Carden?—If I voted for any of them it must be for Mr. Lanigan.

3931. Why were you a friend and supporter of Mr. Lanigan?—I chose to vote for him at the time, but I disrecollect it now; but I know at the time I would vote for him, sir, before any others.

3932. Why did you not vote for Mr. Lanigan in '65—you say you would vote for him before any others in '59?—My son was engaged with other people of course.

3933. Your son was engaged with Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

3934. And, of course, you would not vote against Mr. O'Beirne then?—Of course, sir, I would not.

3935. What did your son get for his services in '65?—I can't exactly say; the place was taken, and I gave refreshments in my own house; and whatever was given I had the giving of it.

3936. How much did you give?—About £65. I didn't get it for two years afterwards; my son was obliged to go to London for it.

3937. But besides that your son was paid money?—I can't say was he paid anything with the exception of that. I couldn't say but what I know myself.

3938. Did he give you any money?—No, sir, with the exception of what was due to me.

3939. Does he live with you?—Yes, sir.

3940. He does not occupy a house of his own?—No, sir.

3941. What age is he?—About 26 years.

3942. Do you mean to say that if he got £20 or £30, you would not have got it from him?—If he did it may have been included in the bill.

3943. In the bill for refreshments?—Yes, sir.

3944. Did you furnish an account of the drink?—I did, sir. He furnished it afterwards, and he got no orders from Mr. Johnson in Dublin. After his death he was obliged to go to London for it.

3945. Your son was employed by Mr. Munster at the last election in Cashel?—He was, sir.

3946. And you voted for Mr. Munster because your son was employed by him?—Yes, sir.

3947. If he had been employed by Mr. O'Beirne at the last election would you have voted for Mr. O'Beirne as you did before?—I can't say how that is, sir, for he put me to too much trouble before.

3948. Did you not tell me that you voted for Mr. Lanigan?—My opinion is that I did, sir.

3949. You said that your son was employed by Mr. O'Beirne, and that you would not vote for Mr. Lanigan when your son was employed by Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

3950. Mr. Lanigan was a countryman of yours—a Tipperary man?—Yes, sir.

3951. And Mr. Lanigan was well liked here?—Yes.

3952. You voted for Mr. O'Beirne against him because your son was employed?—Yes, sir.

3953. Mr. Munster is a stranger here?—Yes, sir.

3954. Do you mean to say that you voted for Mr. Munster because your son was employed by him?—On that account I did.

3955. You know that your son got £30 from him?—I believe he did, sir.

3956. I believe he was paid some short time before the election of 1868?—The last election? I believe so, sir; he was, sir.

3957. He gave the money to you, I suppose?—He gave me a portion of it, sir.

3958. What do you call a portion of it?—He gave me £20 at least.

3959. That is out of the £30?—Yes, sir.

3960. You keep a shop, but you seem to be engaged in some other business, besides?—I do, sir, in the corn trade.

3961. And of course your son works in your business with you?—He do, sir.

3962. I suppose your son has no means of his own, and has only what you give him?—No, sir.

3963. And I suppose that, being a young man as he is, he does not often have a great deal of money with him?—I don't think he would keep any money at any time, and any time he goes out about corn he hands all the money to me when he comes back, and I don't think he would keep five shillings.

3964. Then he has no resources or money of his own?—No, sir.

3965. And if he wanted money he should come to you for it?—Whatever he wanted he should ask it of me.

3966. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much is due to you now by Mr. Munster?—I couldn't say, sir; I haven't the return of the refreshments.

3967. How much did you send in a bill for?—I didn't send any bill in.

3968. Did you get any money for cars?—I did, sir.

3969. How much did you get for cars?—£19 10*s.*

3970. Did you supply drink on Mr. Leahy's order?—I don't know; I don't think Mr. Leahy gave me an order at all.

3971. Did you send a bill to Mr. Munster for drink supplied on Mr. Leahy's order?—My opinion is I didn't send a bill to Mr. Munster for anything.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. MOLLOY.

3972. Mr. Biggin, would you produce numbers 19 and 20?—I have them.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. MOLLOY.

3973. Did your son Patsy tell you that there was any money due to him for the election?—No, sir.

3974. Did he tell you that he had sent in a bill for £70?—No, sir. All the money I received is £19 10*s.*,

I think, and the cheque I got for car hire ; that is all. I didn't give a bill for anything to Mr. Munster or to anyone else.

3975. Whose handwriting is that?—(Is handed claim.)—'Tis not mine, sir, at least.

3976. Did you send that bill in?—No.

3977. Whose is it ; is it your son's?—I see my name to it ; but it isn't I gave it.

3978. Whose handwriting is it?—It might be his handwriting, but I can't be sure.

3979. Surely you know your son's handwriting?—He writes different hands. I see writing of his in the book, and this is not equal to it.

3980. Whose handwriting do you believe it to be?—When I see my own name here I think 'tis his. I am on my oath ; I couldn't be sure 'tis his handwriting, sir.

3981. Is that amount due to you for drink?—I couldn't say, sir.

3982. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Here is a claim dated Cashel, 7th December, for £42 8*s.* 3*d.*?—[Document handed to witness.]—I know nothing about it.

3983. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Mr. Leahy order any drink from you?—No, any way that I can recollect.

3984. And you got £19 12*s.* for the cars?—£19 12*s.* or £19 10*s.* ; that is all the money I received on account.

3985. That bill is dated 7th December ; that is after the election. Why did you not ask for payment of your bill since the election?—I asked no person for it, sir. I told my son at one time that if there was any money due to him to get some, and he said there was time enough.

3986. When did you tell him that?—I suppose about two months ago. Whether he sent a bill then I can't say.

3987. Who is to pay you for the goods and liquor you have supplied?—I don't know, sir, who is to pay me. He gave orders and so did Mr. Laffan—that is, Mr. Pat.

3988. Who else gave orders?—I can't think of anyone that gave orders.

3989. How many orders did Pat Laffan give?—I can't recollect, sir, indeed ; different times, day by day.

3990. Did he give an order every day?—Well, I don't say he did, sir.

3991. Whom did you tell Pat to ask for payment a couple of months ago?—I didn't tell him about anything, but if there was any money due to get it.

3992. What money?—So far as he was to get for himself, for his time.

3993. And was he not to get yours?—I didn't ask about my own.

3994. Whom was he to ask?—I did not tell him ; he knew best himself of course. He did not say any more to me.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled ; by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

3995. Mr. Biggin, do you produce No. 21 claim for cars, £19 12*s.*?—It has been paid. Mr. Leahy's order £7 5*s.*

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

3996. Perhaps it was an order for something else besides drink. Did Mr. Leahy ever order anything from you. He never ordered anything from me. There was a man of his that stopped there for some time.

3997. What is Mr. Leahy's man's name?—He lives in Cahir, sir.

3998. When was he stopping in your house?—Off and on during the time of the election.

3999. How long was he in your house?—I suppose seven or eight weeks, or more.

4000. Well then you recollect his name of course?—I cannot recollect his name now. He lives in Cahir. He was in the police, but he is out of it now. I think his name is Moran or Murrin ; I think Moran.

4001. What was he doing in Cashel during the election?—I could not say what he was doing about the street during the election. I see him doing nothing in my place at least.

4002. Did he never when he came in at night tell you what he was doing?—Going about the street looking after persons, I suppose.

4003. What was his Christian name?—I think John Moran.

4004. Where was Mr. Leahy himself living while he was here?—I don't know of any certain place he had to live.

4005. While he was in Cashel do you know where he lodged?—[Mr. Munster—He was sometimes at Corcoran's, sometimes at one of my houses.]

4006. Do you mean to say that his man who was stopping in your house did not tell you at night what he was doing?—He did not tell me, sir, because, nor I did not ask him.

4007. Had you ever a talk together?—We had, sir.

4008. Were you afraid to ask him what he was doing?—He did not interest me in the least. I only wanted to be paid weekly, and at the end of the time he said he had no money—that Mr. Leahy would pay me.

4009. And is that claim of £7 5*s.* that you have put in, for him?—I did not put it in.

4010. Well your son did?—He did, I suppose ; I didn't know the amount.

4011. Tell me, Mr. Cunningham, as he was stopping seven or eight weeks in your house, you surely often had a conversation together, and you know very well what he was doing?—I never see him doing anything with the exception of going the same as others.

4012. I think you gave the rest of your evidence fairly, and I am sure you will not stop doing so now ; I did not ask you did you see him doing anything, but if you heard what he was doing?—I did not hear.

4013. Do you think it at all likely that he was walking about the streets seven or eight weeks doing nothing ; did you see him attend Mr. Leahy?—I do not know ; he might be attending him while he was in town.

4014. He dined and had meals in your place?—He did, sir.

4015. Mr. MOLLOY.—Have you any land?—I have, sir.

4016. How many horses have you working on it?—I only have two horses of my own—three sometimes.

4017. You do not hire out cars?—I do ; to go out with cars of my own.

4018. What was this £19 12*s.* for?—I have some cars of my own licensed, sir.

4019. Where were they going?—To the Commons, and several places.

4020. Did any persons get cars from you for the election except your son?—No, sir, on them occasions ; of course any person that hired a car I gave it to him.

4021. For this £19 12*s.* did any person get the cars but your son?—They were used during the election time and after it.

4022. Were there any covered cars amongst them?—No, sir ; but sometimes when I would borrow one.

4023. When did you borrow the covered car?—I did not borrow one during the election, only when I would want it for my own use.

4024. Did your son Patsey borrow a covered car during the election?—He might, sir ; not to my knowledge, though.

4025. From whom used he borrow the covered car?—Different persons in town ; any person that might have it convenient.

4026. Who were the persons you would borrow it

Fifth Day

Thomas Cunningham.

from?—He would get it at Corcoran's or Dunne's, or places, if he wanted it. I do not know of any business he wanted it for.

4027. Mr. Griffin.—This claim put in by your son is for "butchers, voters, &c.;" what voters used to be in your house getting refreshment?—I could not tell you, sir; there may be thirty or forty persons, not voters at all, in my place.

4028. Do you not know all the voters of Cashel?—I know some, but I cannot know all.

4029. Do you mean to say you cannot tell me the name of a single voter that got refreshment in your house?—I could, sir.

4030. Well, tell me the names of those you remember?—Different persons got refreshments.

4031. Tell me who they were?—There was one or two from the Commons, or three, that got it there.

4032. Who were they?—One Moloney from the Commons, John Moloney.

4033. Who else?—There was Dwyer.

4034. Who else?—William Ryan from part of the Commons.

4035. Who else?—I could not know of any more except Denis Ryan from the Commons; I did not mind any of the rest.

4036. Can you not remember anybody else?—No, sir.

4037. Did you see any town voters there at all?—Any way I can recollect, I did not.

4038. Try if you can recollect some of the townspeople?—I cannot recollect, sir; they might be in and I not to know or recollect them; there may be thirty or forty people in the shop at a time, and they go in and out without my seeing them.

4039. They might take a drink at the counter?—They may, sir; and they may take it and I not to be there.

4040. I suppose the three persons you recollect were in oftener than the others?—They might; it is not to say very often they were in; the same persons were often in every day as well as them days; they are people in the habit of dealing with me for corn and every way.

4041. Was it by a bank order that you were paid the £56 in 1865?—Yes, an order on the bank, sir.

4042. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—So far as we can judge, you have given your evidence very freely; but your son is in an exceedingly dangerous position; I suppose you heard that two men swore yesterday that they got £30 each from him?—I was not here, sir, but I was told it.

4043. He has placed himself in an exceedingly awkward position, and if he does not come up here and earn our certificate by telling the truth honestly and candidly—if he remains without our certificate, and if we go away from this town without giving it to him—he will be in an exceedingly awkward position; so that you had better make every exertion, if you value his safety, to get him to come here and tell honestly and openly everything he knows; if you desire a certificate yourself we shall give it to you if nothing occurs before the inquiry is over to alter the opinion we have formed. You will do well to make every exertion to have your son come?—I will, sir.

Mr. John Davis White.

Mr. John Davis White recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

4044. You were a partner, I believe, of the late Mr. Johnson; were you not?—I was.

4045. He was, we have heard, conducting agent for Mr. O'Beirne at the election of 1865?—He was.

4046. Do you know who it was that disbursed the moneys that were used in the election of 1865?—I suppose it was Mr. Johnson.

4047. Do you only say "suppose"?—Only suppose.

4048. Were you a partner of his then?—I was employed by him to see after business connected with the election, but I am not aware that I made any payments myself personally; I do not recollect that I made any payments to anyone.

4049. But were you not his partner at that time?—I should define how far I was his partner, sir; any business that came in this town, that should be transacted in Dublin, I forwarded to him, and took part of the profits; I could not call myself his partner in the full sense of the word.

4050. Did he reside in Dublin?—Yes.

4051. And you here?—Yes.

4052. You then were concerned in the election of 1865?—I was, taking his orders and directions.

4053. Do you know of certain moneys having been paid to people on the Commons?—I know that I discounted bills for some of the voters on the Commons; I believe ten.

4054. I think you said they were ten in number?—To the best of my memory it was ten.

4055. Do you know about how many voters there are on the Commons altogether?—I have heard there are about thirty-five or forty.

4056. We heard to-day from Mr. Daniel Laffan that he thinks all the Commons voters, except one or two, voted for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—I could not affirm that, sir.

4057. But you have no reason to doubt it, I suppose?—I think the great majority of them did.

4058. I wish to be informed if you know of any consideration having been given to voters of the Commons in 1865, except in those ten cases?—I could not say positively, sir; if you ask me my belief, I believe that there must have been more than the ten; but those ten, as I tell you, so far as my dealings with them, had nothing to do with the election.

4059. Do you know who it was that bribed any of the people of the Commons at the time?—I could not tell you, sir.

4060. You are not able to give us any assistance in arriving at the person's name?—No, sir.

4061. In those ten cases that you have mentioned, I believe you witnessed ten promissory notes of £30 each?—I did.

4062. Are you able to give the names of those persons?—I can only remember the names of two that I gave at the time of the election petition. I could identify the men.

4063. Who were those two men?—Those two men were William Meehan and William Cashin.

4064. Those two men you identified?—Those two men I identified as the parties at the time. Those ten men were total strangers to me at the time they came to me.

4065. But you knew that they were voters from the Commons; without having absolute knowledge of it you had no doubt of it?—I believed that they were.

4066. The ten notes were for £30 each?—Yes.

4067. And they were made payable I see to John Phelan?—Yes.

4068. At the time of the petition you did not know who John Phelan was; did you inquire since?—I think I stated at the time that I heard from Mr. Johnson that he was an attorney's clerk in Dublin.

4069. Can you give us any further information on that matter?—I cannot.

4070. Mr. Johnson is dead; is he not?—He is.

4071. And he has left a son?—Yes.

4072. Does he continue in the business of his father?—The son is at present employed I believe in an attorney's office in Downpatrick.

4073. What is his name?—The son's name is Richard Beaton Johnson.

4074. You saw some notes in the hands of Geary?—I did not see them.

4075. Did you hear that he produced some notes?—I heard he gave some evidence with regard to notes, but I do not think I saw any notes.

4076. Are you aware if those notes were any of the ten that you had anything to say to; did you write your name to the ten?—I would say as a matter of business I did.

4077. And your presumption is that you did?—Yes, my presumption is that I did.

4078. After you saw those notes witnessed what did you do with them?—To the best of my memory I sent them to Mr. Johnson; it would be my duty to do so.

4079. You used the expression, "I discounted notes for some of the voters on the Commons?"—I should have said "cashed" rather than "discounted." There was no interest or discount charged.

4080. You gave £30 in each case to the men?—Yes.

4081. From whom did you receive that £300?—My memory is that Mr. Johnson sent me a cheque for £300 on the National Bank here. I think he had told me a couple of days before that, when he was in Cashel, that ten men would call on me, and he sent me I think a cheque from Dublin.

4082. A cheque in his own name?—I think so.

4083. Did you keep any record of this transaction at all?—No, sir, only my memory.

4084. Did you keep Mr. Johnson's letters?—I do not think there was any letter which would give any clue about it. His directions were verbal, before he went away.

4085. Can you tell us exactly the date?—Oh, not at all, sir.

4086. Was it shortly after the election of 1865?—It was before it, sir; I suppose during the time of the election he was ten times backward and forward.

4087. Had he not gone to Dublin?—Yes.

4088. Had you any conversation with Mr. Johnson about it?—I could not charge my memory; I had thousands of conversations with him.

4089. At any rate it was not necessary for you to ask him if this £300 was given to those men for their votes; you understood it perfectly?—I think that Mr. Johnson, as far as he could, avoided giving me information of that sort.

4090. If it was an ordinary transaction you would ask your partner, naturally, what he was giving this money for; it is because it was not an ordinary transaction that you did not ask him?—I don't think it was necessary that I should ask him, because I suspected—I could not give legal evidence—that it was for the election.

4091. I am only asking your suspicion, and strong belief going far beyond suspicion?—Yes.

4092. If you saw persons from the Commons, I dare say you would be able to identify more of them?—There is one man I have seen since, and I strongly suspect he was one of them.

4093. What is his name?—I think his name was Jeremiah Neill. I would not swear positively to him, but I suspect he is the man.

4094. Now, Mr. White, that accounts for only three—do you recollect having seen any more?—I suppose I have seen them since, but I would not undertake to swear that I knew the appearance of any of the others.

4095. Are you able to give me any further information with respect to the election of 1865?—Well, sir, if I were to tell you all I heard, and all I believe, it would take me two or three days to detail it to you.

4096. That would be nearly as long as the history of the ruins of Cashel?—I do not think I could give you much more legal evidence with regard to it.

4097. Do you know anything with regard to any of the townspeople in 1865?—Do you mean of my own knowledge, sir? I do not.

4098. Well, now give us the strong suspicion that you have. The reason we ask this question is that it may lead us on the track of inquiry?—If I tell you of things connected with parties, they may come up and say that I have told an untruth.

4099. Your answer is that you are under the obligation of an oath here, and that you cannot make any distinction of persons; and no just-minded man can say a word to you. I ask you to give me such information in your power as may lead me on the track of getting evidence?—I did hear of parties who were very strongly suspected of having got money, sir.

4100. Just mention their names, please?—There is one party that I know Mr. Johnson told me did get it.

4101. Who is that?—The person Mr. Laffan mentioned a while ago—Mr. Fahie.

4102. Of the post office?—Yes.

4103. Did you hear some other names mentioned by Mr. Laffan a while ago?—I did, sir, but I cannot remember them now.

4104. Just mention any other names you heard of at the time?—I cannot remember anyone else in the town that I was told by Mr. Johnson that got it.

4105. Now we will come to the election of 1868, if you please. Did you take much interest in that election?—I did not take much interest in it, sir.

4106. Whom did you support?—Mr. Munster.

4107. Were you long supporting him—I suppose from the commencement of his canvass?—I believe from the time he came to the town, sir, that I did.

4108. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

4109. Were you canvassed by anybody else on his behalf?—I was.

4110. By whom?—I think Mr. O'Beirne, Mr. James Cody, the late Mr. Michael Hanley, and Dr. Coyle came together to me.

4111. Had you at that time promised to support Mr. Munster?—I had not, sir. I was not canvassed by Mr. Munster; I never promised to vote for him.

4112. What answer did you give to Mr. O'Beirne and his friends?—I told Mr. O'Beirne that he behaved very badly towards me.

4113. You had some private reason?—Yes, there is a large sum of money due by him to me at present.

4114. May I ask what it is for?—In connexion with the election of '65.

4115. How much is it, sir?—I am at a loss of about £60 by Mr. O'Beirne.

4116. Was that money spent for him?—It was spent in carrying out an arrangement between Mr. Johnson and me, by carrying on a newspaper in his interest; according to Mr. Johnson's promise to me that is still due.

4117. You still conduct a newspaper in Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

4118. Was that the only occasion on which you had an interview with Mr. O'Beirne?—I met him at the time of the petition here.

4119. With reference to the election of '68 had you any other interview with Mr. O'Beirne at the time of canvassing?—I believe I met him several times during the time he was here, sir, and he sent for me but I would not go to him.

4120. On that occasion that you told him he treated you badly what did he say?—He did not seem to believe me.

4121. Did he understand the cause of complaint?—Oh, perfectly.

4122. Was there any offer made by him to pay that money to you, or by any of his friends?—I think there was an offer made if I would come to him that he would settle with me, but I refused to go near him.

4123. Who made that offer?—Well, I really cannot tell you, sir.

4124. Was it made by any of those gentlemen that were with him when he came to you?—No.

4125. Was it communicated by letter or otherwise?—It was some person—I would not wonder if it was Keeffe, that met me and told me that Mr. O'Beirne wanted me, and I would not go near him. I would not swear positively as to the party that told me.

4126. That is to the best of your recollection?—To the best of my recollection.

4127. You refused to go—I refused to go. I could see that Mr. O'Beirne by his conduct looked on me as

FIFTH DAY. October 8.

Mr. John Davis White.

both a rogue and a liar, and I had nothing more to do with him. His conduct was an insinuation of that.

4128. What interval occurred between the time you told him he had treated you badly and the message you got from Keeffe or some other person that he wanted you?—About a week, I should think. I cannot be accurate.

4129. And do you recollect if in the interval you had given your support to Mr. Munster?—I had, sir; but I was not professionally engaged for Mr. Munster.

4130. You voted for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

4131. And I suppose you had advertisements for Mr. Munster?—I had, sir.

4132. And you had an account with him, I presume?—I do not think I had for some time after. I do not think I gave any account until after the election.

4133. What is the name of your paper, sir?—The Cashel Gazette.

Mr E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4134. The amount of this claim is blank, Mr. Biggin; how much should it be?—I do not know, sir. [Mr. J. D. White.—About £20. I got it from Mr. Richardson.]

4135. Have you not got the account?—No, sir; I never saw the account.

4136. Give me claim No. 17?—I have not that claim, sir.

Mr. John Davis White.

Mr. John Davis White's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4137. Did you send in a claim to Mr. Munster, or anyone on his behalf?—I do not think I did, unless I was asked for it.

4138. Whether asked or not, you got the money?—I got it.

4139. Did you not get a cheque from Mr. Munster himself?—I did.

4140. For £50?—I did, sir.

4141. You got a cheque from Mr. Munster for £50?—That had nothing to do with the election, sir. I should tell you that I had not promised to vote for Mr. Munster, and need not have voted for him if I did not like; and I just voted the very last person, for to confirm the idea, to show that when my vote was of no use I voted, just to confirm the impression on every one that I was not his agent. I never promised to vote for him.

4142. Did you send in a claim for £50?—No, I did not, sir.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4143. Mr. Biggin, how comes this claim by Mr. White for £50? You told me that you wrote this list from the claims sent in?—Off from a list, sir, I wish to add—a list Mr. Richardson had himself.

4144. I understood you to say it was from the claims you drew up this list, and that they were numbered. When I find No. 17 here it is calculated to lead to the belief that there was a claim having that number?—Yes.

4145. Mr. GRIFFIN.—I think you said yesterday that you and Mr. Richardson numbered those claims before Christmas?—We did, when the claims came in.

4146. Mr. MOLLOY.—The list of claims is headed, "List of claims in the order received?"—Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. John Davis White.

Mr. J. D. White's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4147. Now, Mr. White, amongst this "list of election claims in the order received," numbered from one to ninety-nine consecutively, I find No. 17, which Mr. Biggin says was numbered by him when received, as follows: "J. D. White"—your name—"service, £50; advertising, £20?"—To the best of my belief I never put in a claim.

4148. On the other side there is, "By cheque, H. M., £50," and "By cheque, G. R., £20." At the first item at the other side, that is, "By cheque, H. M., £50," there is a line drawn across the entry, and this observation written above it, "Cancelled by consent." Did you get a cheque for £50 from Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

4149. Was that cheque cancelled by consent afterwards?—Mr. Laffan entered into some sort of agreement with me. [Mr. Munster here expressed his desire to leave court, and accordingly retired.] Mr. Laffan called upon me.

4150. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan, in order to engage the advocacy of Mr. Munster's claims in my paper. I refused to undertake the advocacy of Mr. Munster's cause, for more than a fortnight, as I thought Mr. O'Beirne might possibly in that time pay me what he owed me, and behave as I expected he would. At the end of this interval I agreed with Mr. Laffan that I would, in consideration of £50 do so. When it came to Mr. Munster's ears he repudiated the bargain on his behalf as far as he was concerned, so that that matter was cancelled so far.

4151. But did you not get a cheque from Mr. Munster?—Oh, long after.

4152. For £50?—Long after the election was over. I was entirely at Mr. Munster's mercy in the matter.

4153. Was that cheque for £50 in lieu of the £50 you were to have got for advocating his claims?—Well, I suppose it was, sir.

4154. You have no doubt about it, have you?—Mr. Munster need not have paid me if he did not like.

4155. You have no doubt that it was for that purpose?—I took it in that light, sir.

4156. If it escaped your recollection, of course you have no doubt now that you sent in a claim?—I do not think I did, sir.

4157. You do not think you did?—Except that I might have given a memorandum at the time, or something of that sort.

4158. Hearing the evidence of Mr. Biggin, that he took all the claims and numbered them one after another, do you still think you sent no claim?—I might have given Mr. Biggin a memorandum. I did not send in an independent claim until, being asked to do it, I might have written it then and there.

4159. Hearing the evidence on the matter, do you not believe that you must have done so?—I must have given some memorandum to Mr. Biggin.

4160. Which included £50 for services and £20 for advertising?—I think they were entirely distinct, sir. I do not think they were mixed up together. [Mr. Biggin.—I earnestly believe Mr. White sent in no claim, sir. I believe Mr. Richardson wrote it out on the spot there, and said, "I must put Mr. White's in." I do not think Mr. White put a claim in. The fact about Mr. White was, when Mr. Munster saw that book, and saw Mr. White's name, he said, "I have never given assent to this; I shall not pay it, and you will put over it 'cancelled by consent.'"]

4161. This is a cheque you got from Mr. Richardson in payment of an account for advertising?—Yes.

4162. It is dated November, I think?—It looks more like to be March.

4163. In Mr. Biggan's account it is 2nd November?—I do not remember the date.

4164. You got a cheque yourself afterwards from Mr. Munster?—I did.

4165. Did you cash that cheque?—I did.

4166. And you kept the money for your own use, of course?—Yes.

4167. I suppose you cashed it at the bank?—I happened to be in the town of Tipperary next day, and it was at Tipperary I cashed it.

4168. Do you recollect the date?—No, sir.

4169. Could you say about what time it was?—I could not tell you at all, sir.

4170. Do you recollect on what bank the cheque was?—On the Bank of Ireland.

4171. Is there a branch of the Bank of Ireland in Tipperary?—There is. It is not I who cashed it, I should say. I gave it to another person to cash for me. I wanted to pay some head rent, and the bank was closed, and I asked a friend of mine in Tipperary for to pay the money for me to a gentleman in Cahir I had to pay head rent.

4172. To whom in Tipperary did you give it?—Mr. Thomas Quirke.

4173. Was it a cheque on the Tipperary branch?—I think not.

4174. On what branch was it?—I think on the Thurles branch.

4175. The cheque which you got from Mr. Richardson was on the National Bank?—Yes.

4176. Was the other cheque written on an ordinary cheque, or was it written on a plain sheet of paper?—It was written on a lithographed or copper-plate cheque.

4177. You recollect that?—I do.

4178. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you endorse it, or was it payable to bearer?—I am quite sure I endorsed it.

4179. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I think I understood you to say that you withheld accepting Mr. Laffan's offer for a fortnight?—Yes.

4180. And you gave Mr. O'Beirne that fortnight to see if he would treat you properly, and pay you what he owed you?—Yes.

4181. And you would have supported him and acted for him if he had done so?—If Mr. O'Beirne had not by his act shown me that he believed I was making a false claim on him, no money consideration could have got me to change from Mr. O'Beirne; but I will take an insult from no man, sir.

4182. But was not the fortnight that you gave him after the first interview?—No, before he came to the town at all, sir.

4183. Then you must have written to him for it?—I had written to him several times during the interval between the election of '65, and he did not answer until a short time before the election; and by his letter he insinuated that I had been sufficiently paid for any services I had rendered him, and repudiated Mr. Johnson's bargain with me.

4184. Do you know anything of the election of 1868, or of any money paid to anyone, or any consideration of any kind offered, or any promise given, or inducement held out to any voters?—I do not, sir; I was not an agent of Mr. Munster, and I studiously avoided mixing myself up with it.

4185. Has anything come to your knowledge, or have you heard of anything about the election except what we have had before us here?—I think not, sir; of course many persons came to me knowing that I was mixed up with the previous election; numbers of people came to me to speak about it; in fact I have spoken to more than three-fourths of the electors, and they have asked me this and that thing; I have always said "I am not an agent of Mr. Munster, and I am not authorized to offer or promise anything."

4186. Then persons came asking you was there something to be got?—There did, sir.

4187. Tell me the names of those persons who so came to you?—There was a person came to me and told me that he would take my word, and that forty of the Commons voters would vote on my word if I would give it. I said "I am not authorized to do that."

4188. Who said that?—A man named Timothy Shea.

4189. Is he a voter?—He is not a voter. He said he only wanted my word, and that they would vote for Mr. Munster if I gave it.

4190. Did he say what the figure was to be?—He did not.

4191. Had you the curiosity to ask him how much was expected?—I cannot remember, but I remember that circumstance.

4192. And do you not remember if he told you how much the Commons people wanted for their votes?—I do not think they had made up their minds at the time, sir.

4193. At that time, then, they were in entire doubt, not only as to the side at which they would vote, but also as to the amount that would induce them to go either way?—I think so. A great many spoke to me about it; there was a great deal of talk. I told them that I had nothing to do with it, and that I could tell them nothing.

4194. You told them that you had nothing to do with it, and that you could not tell them anything about it; that implies that more than Shea came to you?—A next door neighbour of mine, who is gone to America now—a man named Noonan—was amongst them.

4195. Do you recollect anybody else?—There were several other persons spoke to me. I cannot remember their names now, sir. It was not exactly demanding that I should see about it, but just common conversation.

4196. I ask you who were the voters that came to you asking your directions as to whom they should go in order to get money, or anything of that kind?—I cannot mention any other person, sir.

4197. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did Jeremiah Meehan come to you?—None of the Commons people came that year.

4198. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where does Jeremiah Meehan live?—In Cashel, not far from this; he is a tailor. He was an active agent for Mr. O'Beirne at a former election under Mr. Johnson, and that is the reason he was so well acquainted with the Commons people, and I suppose that is the reason they trusted him as a messenger. I should say, sir, that it might possibly have been a trap, because he was very much interested for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election, and in both elections he was the sincere friend of Mr. O'Beirne.

4199. At what time did he come to you?—I suppose, probably, a week before the polling. I should not wonder if it was a trap to catch me.

4200. I wish you would try and recollect any other names for me. I shall ask you again?—Very well, sir.

Nicholas Burke sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

4201. Were you employed for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I was, sir.

4202. You were a door-keeper?—I was, sir.

4203. Do you know Pat Mackay?—I do, sir.

4204. Do you recollect being sent on a message to Mackay the Sunday before the election?—I do, sir.

4205. Who sent you on the message?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

Fifth Day.
October 8.
Nicholas Burke.

4206. What was the message that you delivered to Mackay?—I went to Mackay by the order of Mr. Laffan; only "would he stand word for his house," not knowing what the word was. When I went to Mackay, Mackay told me that Mr. Laffan before passed him by down at the other side of the street, not telling him what to do nor coming to console with him, and for that reason that he gave his vote to Mr. O'Beirne, and would not break his word for the full of his hat of gold. I turned on him and I said, "Begor, if I had a house I would give it to anyone," not having any privilege to say it; that is truly what I said; "any money you want for your house you will get it;" just out of my own head I said that, sir.

4207. Mr. Griffin.—Was it Mr. Michael Laffan that sent you?—Yes, sir.

4208. Mr. Molloy.—The message you were desired to give him was, "Would he stand word for his house"?—Yes, sir; and he made the reply to me that Mr. Laffan passed him by and did not come to console with him, and he pledged himself to Mr. O'Beirne, and would not break his word for the full of his hat of gold.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

4209. Mr. Laffan, you have heard what that man said?—Yes.

4210. Do you recollect what he says having taken place?—I do not. I do not like to say it is not the truth, as he is after swearing it.

4211. There was a negotiation between you and Mackay?—If I were asked before I heard his evidence, unquestionably I would say I never sent him.

4212. You are not certain, now?—I am not certain.

4213. There was a negotiation with Mackay for his house?—There was. After Mr. Munster was announced as candidate, and I was retained for him, one of the first things I did was to consider where we would take committee rooms. The first persons applied to were Ryan and Murnane. The negotiation failed there, and then I went to Mackay. This was about the 21st or 22nd September. I asked Mackay would he let us have the rooms, for they were John Lanigan's committee-rooms. He was willing to let us have them, but he wanted to have fifty pounds, which I thought too much. Accordingly the negotiation came to nothing. I read or heard that he said I offered him twenty-five pounds; but I do not think I made him any offer, because I thought the amount too large. I did not go further with the negotiation, and I did not go afterwards about the house. As he says, I passed him by without seeing him about it. We took Mrs. Corcoran's as a committee-room.

4214. You are not prepared to contradict what he says about the offer of £25?—I may have said to him, "Would not £25 be enough."

4215. What did you pay for those rooms when Mr. Lanigan had them?—Twenty pounds. Those were then our committee-rooms.

4216. Mr. Griffin.—You had not agreed to give fifty pounds to Ryan?—I had not agreed.

4217. It was agreed by somebody?—It was agreed. I am quite sure that the first time I sent for Ryan, and we talked about the rooms, I must have made him some offer, but I know he wanted an exorbitant sum.

Denis Geary.

Denis Geary sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

4218. You are an elector of Cashel, and voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes, sir.

4219. You have some bills or notes to give me?—I have, sir.

4220. Produce them if you please?—The number is six, with a draft I got from Mr. Johnson. [He hands them in.]

4221. Do you recollect the date of the election of 1865?—I think it was about the 6th July, 1865, to the best of my knowledge.

4222. These are all bills for £30?—£30 in each case makes £180 the six.

4223. They are all dated 22nd June?—Yes, sir; that is about three weeks before the election, I think.

4224. Did you get the £180 from Mr. Johnson?—I did, sir.

4225. And you paid it, I suppose, in sums of £30 each to each of those men?—I did, sir.

4226. Do you know where those men then resided?—Yes, sir, I do—the Commons, Cashel.

4227. All of them?—I should think so, sir.

4228. Where did Michael Carew live?—He was in the Commons, Cashel, sir.

4229. He was a voter—was he not?—He was, sir.

4230. And he lived in Lawlor's lot?—That is on the Commons, sir.

4231. Who was John Carew?—A brother of his, sir.

4232. He was also of Lawlor's lot, and he was a voter?—He was, sir.

4233. Michael Ryan, rated as John Dwyer and Michael Ryan, was a voter also?—He was, sir.

4234. Did James Dwyer also live on the Commons?—Yes, sir.

4235. And he was a voter?—Yes, sir.

4236. Daniel Dwyer also lived on the Commons, I presume?—Yes, sir.

4237. And was a voter?—Yes, sir.

4238. John Dwyer also lived on the Commons?—Yes, sir.

4239. And was a voter?—Yes.

4240. Mr. Johnson gave you that money?—He did, sir.

4241. And he told you that those men would call to you?—Yes, he called, I believe, on the 22nd, in the morning, about ten o'clock, to my house.

4242. And he left these drafts with you?—He did, sir.

4243. And told you that those men would call?—He called for pen and ink when he came in on the 22nd June, 1865. He walked into my kitchen. I gave him a pen and ink, and he wrote a draft and gave it to me with his own hand in my kitchen. I gave the money.

4244. Have you told us all that passed?—There was nothing more, sir; I had no previous conversation with him about it.

4245. You have told us you say, all that passed when he went into your house?—I did, sir.

4246. You knew what it was done for?—I knew that there was an election pending, and I also knew that I saw an advertisement in John Davis White's gazette; I don't know was it £5,000 was there; and to make application to Charles Frazer Johnson. I had no intimation of whether he was going to give me the money or pass the house.

4247. I assume from your not asking any questions of Mr. Johnson that you knew what it was about?—It was an unforeseen incident.

4248. You did not expect that he was coming?—No; no intimation.

4249. He walked in and gave you £180, and told you that those men would call?—Exactly.

4250. You did not ask him any question?—No question whatever either from him or the voters.

4251. You knew it was for voters, and to be given to them for their votes?—I cannot swear that; I had no intimation previously of the fact.

4252. Listen to me; do you believe that you are alive to-day?—I do, sir.

4253. Do you as firmly believe, that that money was for those voters, for their votes, on that day?—I might guess at it.

4254. Of course you cannot positively swear, because you did not ask any question; but are you not as sure as you are of being alive that that money was a bribe?—If I was to give my belief, I would believe it was for this purpose.

4255. So does every man that hears you believe it to have been. You did not stop any discount?—Nothing whatsoever.

4256. You gave them the thirty pounds each, and even paid for the stamps for them?—Out of my own pocket I did. I never had drawn a bill in my lifetime before, and previously these things were strangers to me. There were stamp bills handed to me by some of the parties; then I sent to the post office for six penny stamps and put them on.

4257. The next time you are going to draw a bill—I do not say for the same purpose, because I do not suppose you will again undertake such a commission?—I do not think I will.

4258. Listen to me; remember the next time that a postage stamp will not suit. These were never intended to be put in force?—I cannot swear that.

4259. They have remained since in your possession?—They did, sir.

4260. Mr. Johnson never asked them from you?—He did.

4261. When?—About three or four weeks after the election he said, "Geary will you give me those bills?" "I will not, indeed," said I; "I think they are in good care." He went down stairs and never said another word.

4262. Why did you not give them to Mr. Johnson when he asked you for them?—On second conclusion I believed something was going to transpire. I saw the position that I stood in, and I was determined that I would not make myself the accomplice of Mr. Johnson or any other man.

4263. Did any of those men whose names are written in those bills, ever come to you and ask you to give them up?—One did.

4264. Who was he?—Michael Carew.

4265. When did he come to you?—I cannot exactly swear. I swore at the election petition about three or four weeks. I cannot recollect everything. He asked the bill however.

4266. Do you know is he a voter now?—He is, sir.

4267. Do you know for whom he voted at the last election?—I swore at the election petition that I did not know who he voted for, but I hear since that he voted for Mr. Munster.

4268. I suppose you know that he voted at the election of 1865 for Mr. O'Beirne?—I heard so; I am aware of it.

4269. This man, Michael Carew, came to you, you say, and asked you for his bill?—Yes, he came to me, and asked me for the bill three weeks before the election. I refused to give the bill.

4270. Before the last election?—Yes, sir, before the last election.

4271. I suppose he did not offer you any money?—No, nor I did not require it.

4272. But he did not offer you any?—Certainly not.

4273. Did he say what he wanted it for?—He did not say particularly what he wanted it for.

4274. What did he say to you?—"Mr. Geary," said he, "you had better give me that bill." "Do you mistrust me," said I; "I will not give it to you." He felt angry and went down stairs.

4275. Did he say how he was going to vote at the election?—He did not say, sir, nor what his intentions were at the time he required the bill.

4276. Did he give you any reason whatever for wishing to have this document?—He assigned no reason, but asked it in a plain demand; that is all.

4277. And he did not give you any reason for wishing to be possessed of it?—He did not state any reason to me. He said, "give me that document; you have it quite long enough."

4278. He did not say that he had paid the amount of it?—Never, and I did not question him either.

4279. You put in here the name, "John Whelan, or order, 44, Main-street," who lived there?—I have never ascertained before or since where 44 Main-street is. I know the house I live in has no number.

4280. Do you know anything of John Whelan?—Never knew anything about him.

4281. Do you know any person of the name?—I know John Phelan, but that is Whelan.

4282. I suppose they are the same?—I think they are.

4283. Who is John Phelan of Cashel?—He deals in cattle, and is also a money lender, I have heard.

4284. Was his name put in these bills because he was a money lender —— ?—I do not know.

4285. To give them the appearance of ordinary money bills?—I do not know.

4286. Did you suspect that?—I never suspected it, I had no cause for suspicion.

4287. Did you take much interest for Mr. O'Beirne in the last election?—In the last election, sir?

4288. Yes, the election of 1868?—I warmly supported him; as warmly as any man in the world could do.

4289. I am sure you will tell me candidly, and at once, if you believed or suspected when Michael Carew came to you to get the bill, that he was going to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did not believe any such thing, sir; I could not, sir.

4290. Did you keep it as a check over him?—If I had done it in my mind, it was an act of my own to hold a threat.

4291. Was it in your mind?—It might have occurred to my mind.

4292. It occurred to me now?—It is just rational, sir.

4293. You wanted to keep it over him in that way, and then he got angry with you for not giving it to him?—He asked the bill before, I will not say several times; but he asked it previous to the election, and I refused it.

4294. In point of fact, according to your belief and suspicion he wanted to be free?—It looked like it.

4295. And that was what you believed?—Well, to a certain extent, I did believe it.

4296. I believe some of those persons are dead?—There are two, sir, I have heard.

4297. Who are they?—Michael Ryan and John Carew.

4298. The names of the others are Michael Carew, James Dwyer, Daniel Dwyer, and John Dwyer?—Yes.

4299. Now tell me candidly if you know of any money to have been going at the last election?—Not to my knowledge.

4300. Some of your neighbours may have told you?—I did not hear of any.

4301. You did not hear of any?—I heard there was money. The fact is there were so many reports about money, it was impossible to know. For eight weeks, previous to the election, there was nothing but the talks of money.

4302. Going on which side?—It was talked of on both sides.

4303. On both sides?—Yes, on both sides.

4304. I suppose you had many conversations with your neighbours, who were voters?—I had, sir.

4305. And was the general conversation about the money that was going?—Some talked of Mr. O'Beirne's career in Parliament, and said it was good; and others said that another was coming to contest it with him.

4306. You frequently heard them speaking of the amount of money would be going for votes: you told me that money was, for weeks, the topic of conversation?—I admit that still.

4307. I suppose that occasionally the amount was named?—Some talked of the old figure of 1865.

4308. What figure did they say?—Some said thirty pounds.

FIFTH DAY.
October 8.
Denis Geary.

4309. Did some say that there would be more than the old figure this time?—I never heard it. I was not in the market of any class to hear what was going.

4310. You are a warm supporter of Mr. O'Beirne?—No more warm supporter.

4311. You admit that you wanted to keep Michael Dwyer to his traces, if you could?—The fact is there was a bill. I never coerced.

4312. Gentle moral pressure?—Well, there might be a great deal of gentleness about it, but I never attempted to exercise it.

4313. As you were such a warm supporter of Mr. O'Beirne, as you state yourself to have been, you might have heard of what was going on at Mr. Munster's side?—I never heard from Mr. Munster. I never spoke to the man. He called to me trying to canvass me.

4314. I did not mean that; what I meant was that you must have heard of the amount of money going on Mr. Munster's side, because it was talked of, according to your own admission, as going on both sides?—Yes, I heard it as street talk.

4315. Did you hear it in conversation with any persons in particular?—The night Carroll came to my shop before the election—I do not swear whether Maloughney came in with him or not—Carroll made a statement about an envelope he had in his pocket with money in it. He went up to Grace's and gave it up the same evening, I believe.

4316. Was there anything else that we have not heard of?—I do not know, sir; I am not aware, sir.

4317. Do you know Simon Tracey?—I do, sir.

4318. I dare say you had some talk with him?—During the election?

4319. Yes, about the election?—Very little I talked to him. I met him during the election.

4320. He was taking an active part for Mr. O'Beirne?—He might be doing the best he could.

4321. He says himself that he was not?—I really don't know.

4322. Did you hear of his getting £60?—I heard it at the election petition.

4323. But you heard it before then surely?—That may be; I don't recollect it.

4324. Would you be surprised at his getting £60 for himself?—I don't know what men might do at the spur of the moment.

4325. Would you not be surprised at his getting it for himself, he not being a voter?—That depends on the means of the man coming into the field.

4326. Would you not be surprised at his getting £60 from Mr. O'Beirne?—I couldn't say.

4327. Were you not surprised at hearing it?—Of course, in the common-sense view of the matter a man would be surprised, seeing the amount of value that might be given.

4328. Did you hear at any time the two voters for whom the money was?—I have not particularly heard it.

4329. Tell me what you heard about it?—After the trial of the election petition it was said Lamb and Kennedy.

4330. Did you hear it before the election petition?—No. There is also another thing—I heard of money being given. There is a man named Coffey, I believe, who is gone to America. There was something assigned to him in the way of money when going.

4331. Tell us of somebody that is here and that is not gone to America?—I assure you my hours of business are rather long and severe, and I attach more importance to my business than to electioneering. I do not go on a platform to make my living by electioneering.

4332. You were one of those who entertained Mr. O'Beirne at a dinner?—Yes, sir, I was.

4333. Was that an entertainment to be paid for by the persons at the dinner?—I thought so, sir. I did pay.

4334. You did pay?—I think so, sir. I gave it.

4335. Did you ever hear that Mr. Munster sent out a bill, and that it was posted and circulated, offering to indemnify all parties who had given illegal bills at former elections, against any action that could be taken against them?—To the best of my opinion I never heard that there was any such placard. I never heard it to my recollection. No, no, no.

4336. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know what houses Mr. Munster had taken in Cashel at the last election?—I couldn't swear, sir.

4337. What houses did you hear he had taken?—Corcoran's hotel I heard in one case.

4338. Did you hear of any other?—I really don't know.

4339. Do you know a Mr. Flynn in Cashel?—I heard Coffey's house was taken.

4340. Do you know Mr. Flynn in Cashel?—No.

4341. Do you know any voter of the name of Flynn in Cashel?—No, I do not. Oh, I do; a poor-rate collector. Yes, I do.

4342. Is his mother living?—I am not aware.

4343. Is he married?—Yes.

4344. Do you know Mr. Jerome Scully?—I do; but he doesn't live in Cashel, if he is the man you mean.

4345. What relation is he to Mr. Denis J. Scully?—Brother, I suspect.

4346. Do you know Edmond Walsh of Main-street?—I do.

4347. Has he a brother named James Walsh?—He might. He has two or three sons in Dublin; but I am not aware he has a brother in Cashel of the name of James.

4348. Is there a James Walsh in Cashel a voter?—There is, sir.

4349. Has Edmond Walsh any member of his family named James Walsh?—I am not aware, sir.

Mr. William James O'Brien.

Mr. William James O'Brien recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4350. Have you got the letter?—I searched for the letter; it is either lost or mislaid; it has not been found; I asked the manager; it was from the Shelbourne Hotel in Dublin he wrote to me not to pay any more cheques at present.

Dr. Daniel Moloney.

Dr. Daniel Moloney sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4351. You wish to make a communication I understand; what have you got to say?—It was imputed by Mr. Laffan, I heard, that I was one of the parties that were bribed in this election, or the last, or both, I do not know which—that there was something to that effect; I am here now to answer any question.

4352. We are here to hear anything you have to say?—Well, I received no money for my vote at either election.

4353. By Mr. GRIFFIN.—For whom did you vote in 1865?—Mr. O'Beirne.

4354. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

4355. For whom in 1859?—I was not in Cashel in 1859.

4356. I presume you wish to be asked whether you received any inducement for your vote at the last election?—No.

4357. No inducement of any kind?—No inducement of any kind. I had an appointment from Mr. O'Beirne made immediately after the election of 1865, to attend the poor people of the Commons, at a salary of £25 a year—everybody knows that.

4358. The voters you mean?—No, he did not mention the voters.

4359. How much did you get for that?—£25 a year.

4360. When was that appointment made?—It was made immediately after the election of 1865.

4361. When was the idea of such an appointment first suggested to you?—After the election.

4362. When did you promise Mr. O'Beirne to vote for him?—The very first day he called on me in 1865; I think I must be amongst the first to promise him.

4363. Before the election did Mr. O'Beirne intimate anything of his intention towards the poor people of the Commons?—No.

4364. Was the first you heard of his intention to provide for their medical wants, after the election?—About an hour or two after his being declared.

4365. What did he say to you when he proposed that appointment?—He said for my kindness and promptness in telling him at once that I would vote for him, he would pay me some compliment or contribute to my dispensary; I told him that the dispensary was under the poor law, and he could not do it that way. "I have it," said he; "I will pay you for attending the poor people of the Commons." I thanked him. "How much shall it be?" said he. "Anything you like," said I. "Well," said he, "let it be £25 a year."

4366. How long have you been paid it?—For two years—1865 and 1866.

4367. How often do your duties as medical officer take you through the Commons?—Very often; it is my dispensary district.

4368. If any of those people were ill, and got dispensary tickets, it would be your duty to attend them as dispensary doctor?—Not to all the Commons; there is a large portion of the Commons not in my district at all.

4369. How large is the portion of the Commons which is not in your dispensary district?—I should say it runs about a mile and a half out of town.

4370. Is it a populous district?—Well it is; like the rest of the Commons.

4371. How often, on an average, does your business take you to that part of the Commons?—There is scarcely a week that I am not out there.

4372. Is there scarcely a week that you are not obliged to go to the Union Dispensary part of the Commons?—I have to go through the other portion to get at the dispensary portion.

4373. Therefore it is in your way to the dispensary portion?—It is.

4374. Do you often stop at the portion of the Commons that is not the dispensary part, without going on?—No, unless I am professionally required.

4375. Have you ever gone to the portion of the Commons not in your dispensary district, without going on to the other portion?—frequently.

4376. Does it occur often?—It occurs in a casual way.

4377. And when Mr. O'Beirne said he would like to pay you some compliment for your kindness in voting for him, he mentioned that he would contribute to the dispensary, and you told him he could not?—I told him he could not; that it was under the poor law.

4378. That it would be better to give it to you directly?—I gave him no hint at all in any way.

4379. I suppose you thought in consequence of his kindness on that occasion, that you ought to vote for him at the last election?—That coupled with other matters—being a useful member.

4380. Mr. MOLLOY.—What is the name of your dispensary district?—Tullansay.

4381. And what is the name of the dispensary which forms a portion of the Commons but is not belonging to yours?—Cashel, I think.

4382. Do you know that the part of the Commons not belonging to your dispensary district is in the Cashel division?—I should say Cashel.

4383. Is not the Commons all in one poor law division?—I think so; I am not sure. Killeenasteera is in it also.

4384. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Who is the medical officer of the dispensary district in which the other part of the Commons is situated?—Dr. Cormac.

4385. Is he a dispensary doctor also?—Yes.

4386. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you ever sell a horse to him?—Not to him, but to Captain Byrne.

4387. That was for Mr. Munster, I presume?—It was.

4388. I suppose you have seen him since?—Frequently.

4389. We are asked to inquire from you how much you sold him for?—£55.

4390. Who paid you that £55?—It was Mr. Michael Laffan.

4391. Was it by cheque?—I think it was a deposit receipt of his own.

4392. You think it was a deposit receipt of Mr. Laffan's own?—Of Mr. Laffan's own, as well as I remember.

4393. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You understand, of course, the difference between a deposit receipt and a cheque?—I swear it was a deposit receipt.

4394. When was the sale made?—I do not recollect the date of the sale.

4395. Did you cash the deposit receipt yourself, or give it back to Mr. Laffan?—No, I got cash for it in the bank.

4396. There is another question we are asked to put to you. What did you give for the horse?—£14.

4397. You made a good profit on him?—I did.

4398. When did Captain Byrne buy this horse from you? It was before the election, of course?—Before the election.

4399. I suppose you would not think it fair to ask you was he worth £55?—He was not worth it at the time, but I think he would make a good strong hunter.

4400. How much was he worth at the time that you sold him?—I bought him not a fortnight before for £14, and his value was not greatly increased, I should say, up to that.

4401. I am requested to ask you did you ever say that Mr. Munster had attempted to bribe you?—I never spoke a word to Mr. Munster in my life.

4402. Did you ever say or circulate that he had attempted to bribe you?—I will not say that I did or did not, because there was a great deal of idle conversation going, and I might have taken part in it.

4403. Do you know to what this question points? Did you ever boast that Mr. Munster had attempted to bribe you?—I am not aware that I did.

4404. Did you ever say it?—I may; I will not swear that I did not.

4405. Therefore it is likely that you did?—It is quite possible.

4406. To what did you refer if you said that Mr. Munster had attempted to bribe you?—I must be referring to the horse—to what was paid for the horse. If I said so I have no recollection of it.

4407. Mr. GRIFFIN.—The Captain Byrne of whom you speak is Mr. Dudley Byrne?—He is called Dudley.

4408. At the time he bought the horse from you had you any conversation about the election?—None whatever.

4409. Does Captain Byrne know much about the value of horses?—I cannot say.

4410. Were you under the impression that the reason you got this price for your horse was with the view of influencing your vote?—Well, I should say Captain Byrne would be the best to answer that.

4411. Do you think his intention in giving you that high price for the horse was to induce you to vote for Mr. Munster?—I should say that that had something to do with it; otherwise he would not.

4412. Do you think he knew it was too much?—I should say he was not worth so much.

4413. Do you think Captain Byrne knew the horse was not worth so much?—I cannot say.

4414. How much did you ask?—£60. I had no horse but one at the time, and from the time the horse went away I had to take a car.

4415. Did he ask you where you got the horse?—I do not think he did.

FIFTH DAY.
October 8.

Dr. Daniel Moloney.

4416. Did he close at once for the horse at £55?—Yes.

4417. How old was the horse?—I could not tell you.

4418. Did you look at his mouth?—I am not a judge of a horse's mouth.

4419. Was he so old that no person could tell his age?—I am not sure. Mr. Munster has him still; I saw him to-day.

4420. Had Mr. Patrick Laffan anything to do with this bargain about the horse?—He was with Captain Byrne.

4421. Is Mr. Laffan a good judge of a horse?—I cannot say I am sure.

4422. You say that Mr. Byrne said nothing to you about the election at the time?—Not a word.

4423. Did Mr. Laffan?—No.

4424. Mr. Laffan was canvassing I believe for Mr. Munster?—He never asked me to vote for him.

4425. But Mr. Laffan was canvassing was he not? I had seen him going about.

4426. He knew you were a voter?—He must have known that.

4427. Did he not take advantage of that opportunity of the purchase of the horse, to say anything to you about your vote for Mr. Munster?—He never said a word about a vote at all.

4428. Were you never canvassed for Mr. Munster?—No, I do not think I was. Mr. Munster left his card at my place when I was not at home.

4429. Were you ever canvassed by any of Mr. Munster's friends, for Mr. Munster?—I will not swear that I was.

4430. Will you swear that you were not?—I have not the slightest recollection of being canvassed by any person, except I might have mentioned the matter to Michal Laffan. He might have said something to me about it.

4431. Was that after the purchase of the horse?—It was before and after.

4432. He asked you both before and after?—He asked me after, I recollect distinctly, if I would go to the Commons with him, and I then told him that I did not intend going to the Commons with a person I intended to vote against.

4433. Did he say, "Then what made you take £55 for that old horse?"—He said nothing of the kind.

4434. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You said that the sum of £25 a year for attending the poor people of the Commons was only paid for two years?—Two years.

4435. Have you continued doing the same duty since?—I gave it up.

4436. You gave it up after the two years?—Not exactly after two years.

4437. If Mr. Munster gave you £40 a year for attending at the opposite end of the town, would you have voted for him?—I swear I would not. I think it would be derogatory to have supported one man but not to continue.

4438. But when your pay was stopped?—I swear distinctly it was not the pay that made me vote for him.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan tenders himself; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4439. What do you wish to state?—Dr. Moloney applied to me for payment for the horse. I had exactly a deposit receipt for the amount, and handed it to him, and I afterwards got the same amount by cheque. I think Dr. Moloney was going to some other fair to buy another horse. My recollection is, that the cheque was drawn before, but that the gentleman to whom the cheque was payable was not there to indorse it.

4440. How were you paid the £55?—By this cheque.

4441. Which cheque?—A cheque drawn by Mr. Richardson, payable to Mr. Edmond Leahy. Mr. Leahy was not there to indorse the cheque. Dr. Moloney told me "You ought to pay me; I want to go to the fair of Clonmel." I had exactly the sum of my own lodged in the bank, and I gave him my deposit receipt. Afterwards they replaced the deposit receipt by lodging the amount of the cheque.

4442. We asked Mr. Richardson about this matter, and he said he gave a cheque in the name of Dr. Moloney for the price of the horse, and that the money was never applied in payment for the horse. It appears that there was a cheque drawn for Dr. Moloney; now what became of that?—I am quite sure the bank books will show it.

James Cullen.

James Cullen sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

4443. What is your father's name?—William Cullen, sir.

4444. Where does he live?—Lower Gate, sir.

4445. He is a voter?—He is, sir.

4446. Were you employed at the last election?—I was, sir.

4447. For whom?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

4448. What were you to do?—To go about the streets.

4449. What were you to be doing in the streets?—Watching Mr. Laffan and all the Munsterites.

4450. Now what were you paid?—One pound.

4451. Was that all you got?—That is all.

4452. Did you get it in one sum?—I did, sir.

4453. Was it the day you were employed that you got it?—No, sir, a few days after.

4454. Who gave it to you?—Mr. O'Beirne's valet, Henry Raven.

4455. Who employed you?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

4456. Did he tell you who was to pay you?—He told me the valet would give me a pound.

4457. When you went to the valet what did you say?—Mr. O'Beirne was after telling him, and I told him I wanted the pound Mr. O'Beirne gave orders to him.

4458. How did your father vote at the election?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

4459. How did he vote in '65?—He had not a vote in '65.

4460. What was your father to get for his vote?—I don't know.

4461. Did he get anything to your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge.

4462. How many days were you employed?—Either ten or eleven.

4463. And you only got a pound?—That's all.

4464. Do you expect to get anything more?—Well, I don't know. I sent in a bill for £5. I don't know whether I will get it or not; but I suppose it is "out of sight out of mind" with Mr. O'Beirne.

4465. Were you promised £5?—No, I was not.

4466. Did the valet tell you that that was only part payment?—He did not; I only chanced the bill.

4467. Had you any talk with your father about how he was going to vote?—I had not.

4468. Did he tell you how much he got on account?—He did not, sir.

4469. Had you any talk about the money that was going?—I had not, sir.

4470. Tell us what talk you had with your father about the money he was to get?—I never said a word to him, nor he never told me.

4471. Did you never talk about the money that was going, and about what he was to get?—He did not tell me.

4472. Did he not tell you, that now he would come in for his share of the money that was going at the election?—He did not tell me any such thing.

4473. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Would your father have taken money if it was offered to him?—It was offered to him.

4474. By whom was it offered to him?—Mr. Pat Laffan.

4475. When?—Before the election.

4476. Were you present when he came in?—He did not come, but he sent for him.

4477. Who came?—Pat Cunningham.

4478. And your father went up?—Yes.

4479. Are you working with your father?—I am, sir.

4480. Is your mother living?—No, sir.

4481. What did your father say when he came back?—I was not there when he came back.

4482. You know that is not an answer to my question. I want you to tell me when you saw your father after he came back, what did he say to you?—I do not think he told me anything about it at the time.

4483. He told you some time or other. Tell me what he said. You know you are sworn to tell the truth. You saw him after he went to Mr. Laffan, and he told you what Mr. Laffan said to him?—I do not think he said anything to me about what Mr. Pat Laffan said.

4484. Well, about what somebody said?—He did not tell me anything.

4485. He told you something about the votes, and money for voting?—I think he said he would get money.

4486. How much?—He did not mention.

4487. Did he say at any time how much?—I think I heard him say once £15 pounds, but not that time.

4488. When was that?—After the election.

4489. Was it to be got from Mr. Munster or Mr. O'Beirne?—From Mr. Laffan.

4490. Why did he not take the £15 pounds from Mr. Laffan and vote for Mr. Munster?—I do not know.

4491. Ah! you do. You may as well tell us at once?—I do not know, sir.

4492. Did you never hear your father speaking of it?—Never.

4493. I think you could tell me if you liked?—I could not, sir, indeed; if I could I would tell you.

4494. When did your father promise to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I think about a fortnight before the election.

4495. Was that before or after Mr. Pat Laffan sent for him?—I believe before it; I am not sure now; I do not know.

4496. You say that your father never told you he was offered any money for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—Not to my knowledge.

4497. Or that you recollect?—No, sir.

4498. Are you sure that you never heard what he was to get from Mr. O'Beirne?—No, I never heard.

Timothy Shea sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Timothy Shea.

4499. I believe you are a tailor?—Yes, sir.

4500. And not a voter, I believe?—No, sir.

4501. You were a very active agent for Mr. O'Beirne, I believe?—Not on this occasion.

4502. Well, on what occasion?—I was busying myself on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne on this occasion, but I was not employed by any person.

4503. That is exactly what I asked you or something tantamount to it. You were actively engaged for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Not actively engaged, sir. I was not engaged. I was not employed, sir, and so I was not very active on his part.

4504. Do you know Mr. White?—I do, sir, this thirty years.

4505. I suppose you heard that he was examined here to-day?—I did not, sir; I heard a rumour of it. I got a summons, sir.

4506. Mr. White told us to-day that you called upon him, and told him that forty of the Commons people would vote if he gave his word?—Well, sir, I have no recollection of it.

4507. Ah, you have?—I have not, sir, upon my word, I will just tell your worship. When I passed the savings-bank and passed Mr. White, himself and myself are very good friends for the last fifteen years, I was at my own door and he was coming to the savings-bank, and I went over, talking to him on the merits of the election, and he says to me, "Are you retained," he says, "yet?" "No," says I, "I am not retained." "Did you get your money," says he, "that was due in '65?" "I got a portion of it," says I, "but I did not get it all." "Well," says he, "what do you intend for to do now?" "I do not know," says I, "I am employed by no person; if I got my money I might change my mind," but I did not change my mind.

4508. That is, the money that was due since '65?—Yes, sir, it was due to me by Mr. Johnson. "Well," says he, "I will endeavour to get you employed if you consent." "Well," says I, "I am employed by no person; but do," says I, "if you can." I said that out of a joke, not intended to be employed by Mr. Munster.

4509. You do not mean to tell me that you would refuse Mr. Munster's good money?—Well, sir, I am on my oath, and before your worships and before God, if Mr. O'Beirne was as poor as a church mouse I would not, I would not renaig him; at the same time I am under no compliment to him.

4510. What is the reason that you were not paid by him in '65, if you had such warm sentiments for him?—He promised repeatedly to pay me, but I believe he was so poor that he could not pay me, and my bill, sir, was suspending; in fact I sent in a bill but I was suspending without payment until '68. Mr. Johnson pledged himself to me that he would pay me.

4511. Were you paid anything in '68?—Not a farthing, sir, but what I earned in '65.

4512. Were you paid any balance in '65?—I was paid £25 in '68.

4513. When were you paid the £25?—A part when Mr. O'Beirne came to town, and part some time before the election was over.

4514. Who paid it to you?—Mr. O'Beirne paid me a part of it. I went up one day, determined for to get it and he sent it out to me by his valet.

4515. How much did he send out?—£10, sir.

4516. Did you see Mr. O'Beirne himself?—I did not. Previous to that I asked it of him in the street.

4517. What did he say?—He says, "Shea," says he, "I will see about it," says he.

4518. Did you say anything to him about the Commons at that time?—No, sir, for I intended not to interfere in it at all only as little as I could. I had to do business over and hither, and I was only going about the town on his behalf, that is all.

4519. And you worked for him?—I did, sir.

4520. But at the time that you were speaking to Mr. White you had not got it all?—The best of my opinion I got the whole at this time.

4521. Finish what you said to Mr. White?—I met him at the savings-bank and he asked me was I retained. "No," says I, "I am retained by no person; perhaps" says I, "you could get me retained; you have no right to go against Mr. O'Beirne this time." We were speaking previous about Mr. O'Beirne and he told me he was badly treated by Mr. O'Beirne, "and you were badly treated," says he, "by Mr. O'Beirne." "We cannot help that," says I, "but you know as a liberal he was superior to any man returned here, and if we want a good representative, and a flowery speaker in the House of Commons, we ought to support him."

4522. What did you say about the Commons people?—"Well," says he, "how does the Commons go?" he says to me, "Well," says I, "I do not exactly know; I was not talking to any of them," says I, "but I think they are inclined to vote for Mr. O'Beirne."

FIFTH DAY. October 8. Timothy Shea.

"Well," says he, "I think the Commons people would depend on me." "Well, I think so," says I. "What do you think?" says he, "I suppose so," says I; "they have a great wish for you; I hear them speaking very respectful of you from time to time."

4523. Then you were talking about the Commons people?—That is all the conversation we had about the matter.

4524. Did you say that you thought the Commons people would take his word?—I did not mean anything in the way of money by it.

4525. What did you mean?—That they would go along with him, that they had a great wish for him.

4526. And that they might rely on his word?—I said that they might. He introduced the matter first. "Well, I suppose so," says I, "I hear them speaking of you repeatedly, very respectful."

4527. At first you told me that you did not say anything about the Commons people at all; but your memory is getting better. Mr. White swore to-day on his oath that you and he had this conversation, and that you said to him that forty of the Commons people would take his word, and vote?—I have no recollection, your worship, whatever, direct or indirect.

4528. If Mr. White swore it you would not contradict him?—Not the Commoners, sir, or people of the Commons. I know the Commons since I was born.

4529. And therefore you know the Commoners?—I was out there on the cars, sir, with Mr. O'Beirne.

4530. When was that?—Previous to the election.

4531. How often?—Three or four times, I suppose; I went out once or twice on the cars, and on another occasion.

4532. What was the figure there for the election of 1865?—I do not know, sir.

4533. Ah, you do, man! Sure we all know it now. Tell the truth, was it thirty pounds?—On my oath I don't know, sir.

4534. Do you mean to swear that you do not know that thirty pounds was given to the Commoners for the election of 1865?—I heard it, sir. It was generally believed, sir; but I had no money to give to no people.

4535. I did not ask you did you give money to any people. I recommend you to listen to my questions and tell the truth. Was it thirty pounds at the election of 1868, the last election?—I don't know, sir.

4536. It was thirty pounds at the election of 1865?—I don't know, sir.

4537. You do, very well?—I heard it, sir.

4538. And you believe it?—I believe it, sir, but I cannot swear what I don't know.

4539. Do you not know that Mr. White paid ten men thirty pounds each?—I heard it.

4540. And that Mr. Geary paid six men thirty pounds each?—I heard it, sir, at the petition.

4541. What was the amount in 1868?—I have stated what I believe to be true. I did not hear any word about any men on the Commons getting money.

4542. Did you hear that I announced here to all the people, that if any man tells me honestly what he knows, he will be rendered free from all responsibility, because we will give him a certificate; but if a man withholds the truth, we will give him no certificate. Now, we will have every man from the Commons up here, and ten times as many more if necessary; and if we find out anything about your having been connected with election matters, it will be brought against you; but if you tell out the truth now, it cannot afterwards affect you. Do you persist in saying that you do not know that there was anything given to people of the Commons in 1868?—I do not, your worship; I persist in that.

4543. Or to any of the electors of the town?—Or to any of the electors of the town. I didn't interfere at all, but as little as I possibly could.

4544. Did you tell me you did not interfere, and a minute afterwards tell me you went out to the Commons with Mr. O'Beirne?—I went and came, but with many others, sir.

4545. Which of the two answers is true, that you did not interfere, or that you went out with Mr. O'Beirne on his canvass. Which is the truth?—I will explain that to your worship. First, when Mr. O'Beirne came to town he went to canvass the Commons. I wasn't paid what I earned in 1865 at this time I wanted to come by my payment, and I went on the cars with the people of the town.

4546. Then your first answer was untrue, that you did not interfere at all in the election?—Not actively, I said, sir.

4547. Do you know Keeffe and Connors?—I do, sir.

4548. Were they going to the Commons any night?—They were, sir.

4549. Did you go out?—I did, sir.

4550. This was a different time from the one you went with Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

4551. What hour of the day or night was it?—To the best of my belief about seven o'clock.

4552. With whom did you go out to the Commons then?—With Tom Connors.

4553. Was there anyone else?—No, sir, but the driver.

4554. Did you go into many houses that night?—I went, to the best of my belief, into six or seven houses.

4555. Recollect now?—That is all I went into, sir, to the best of my recollection.

4556. Did you go into more?—I don't think I did, sir; six or seven, or eight houses; something about that way, sir.

4557. That was twice you went to the Commons?—This was the third time.

4558. Canvassing for Mr. O'Beirne?—Not canvassing on this occasion.

4559. Did you go about the election?—Yes, sir, about the election.

4560. For Mr. O'Beirne?—On behalf of Mr. O'Beirne, at the request of Tom Connors.

4561. When you told me that you did not interfere in the election, was it true?—Not actively, sir; I will explain that to you.

4562. Do you think you are telling me the truth all through?—I think so, sir.

4563. You were examined before, and you were asked how many houses did you go into that night with Connors; were you with Connors?—I told you this instant, six, or seven, or eight.

4564. Were you with Connors?—I was, sir.

4565. Did you go into the houses with Connors?—Not into all the houses with Connors, sir.

4566. If Connors swore he went into thirty, it is likely that you let him go into twenty-three without you?—Connors went out next morning.

4567. No, but that night?—Not that night, sir.

4568. Tell me the names of any of the persons into whose houses you went?—I went into Paddy Duggan's; into Daniel Dwyer's. I don't recollect all the houses now, but I know the houses, sir. I went into Tom Walsh's—I recollect that name, sir. I did not go into John Ryan's of the Racecourse; the driver and myself remained in the field. I went into Billy Meehan's, to the best of my belief. There was seven or eight signed this paper, sir, in one house—in Paddy Duggan's house.

4569. They signed the paper that night?—They did, sir, that night. There was six or seven or eight signed the paper in that house that night.

4570. Did you bring the paper away with you?—I had nothing to do with it, sir.

4571. Did you bring it away?—He brought it.

4572. Who brought it?—Tom Connors.

4573. Were you not with him?—It was he that had the paper.

4574. Did any person sign it in your own house?—They did not, sir. I was walking the street. Tom Connors came to me and asked me would I go to the Commons with him. I think I was speaking to Keeffe that night. "What would I want to the Commons?" says I. "I have a requisition," says he, "to sign, and there is a report that the greater part of the Commons people are going to vote with Munster." With that I went out. Says I, "You must satisfy me what you want me for." He brought me into a house and read a kind of requisition. "Is that," says I, "what you want me for?"

4575. If you thought it was anything about money you would not have gone?—No, sir.

4576. Oh, you would not touch it?—I would not, sir.

4577. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What use were you to be about this requisition?—Just to accompany him on the car. He read the requisition and satisfied me that that was what he wanted.

4578. Why did he want you to go with him?—For company, sir.

4579. Is it not that Keeffe was going with him, and Keeffe met you, and you went instead of Keeffe?—I was standing near Hanley's door when I saw Keeffe, and he came down the street.

4580. Did Keeffe say that you would do as well as himself?—Tom Connors asked me would I go out to the Commons.

4581. Did Keeffe ask you?—To the best of my recollection he did not.

4582. Daniel Dwyer and William Meehan are two of the men who signed the requisition that night?—Yes, sir.

4583. You went out because you heard that the Commons people were going over to Mr. Munster?—Yes.

4584. They signed that requisition?—They did, sir. Tom Connors read the requisition. There were seven or eight signed it in one house.

4585. Will you swear that there was no talk about those votes?—Not a word, sir, not a sentence.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTH DAY. October 8. Timothy Shea.]

SIXTH DAY.

SIXTH DAY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1869.

October 9.

William Gorman sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

William Gorman.

4586. You are a voter in Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

4587. For whom did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

4588. Was the last election the first at which you had a vote?—It was, sir.

4589. Were you canvassed by Mr. Munster or by any of his agents?—Mr. Munster came, but I did not see him. He came to the shambles, but I walked away. He came to my door and I walked away the same way.

4590. You are a butcher?—I am.

4591. Most of the butchers, I believe, voted for Mr. Munster?—I believe all but myself.

4592. How did you come to be an exception to all the rest?—I always considered Mr. O'Beirne to be the best man, and do now.

4593. Who introduced you first to Mr. O'Beirne—how did you come to know him?—By gor, I hear of Mr. O'Beirne and knew him to be here the election before, and I hear of his career since in Parliament, and no fault to be found with him either in town or country. I have recourse to the country and to every one.

4594. Is that the only reason that made you favourable to him?—The only reason, sir.

4595. Who first introduced you to Mr. O'Beirne himself?—I never spoke to Mr. O'Beirne since the last election but one.

4596. Before the last election?—I didn't speak to him but once before the election.

4597. Once only?—Once; that is all.

4598. Where was that?—It was at Dunn's hotel.

4599. What carried you there?—Mr. Pat Laffan sent up for me from Corcoran's hotel, and there were retainers given the same time. I didn't go; I was afraid I might get a retainer by post or any other way.

4600. Would you have been dreadfully frightened at getting any money?—I would be frightened to take any sort of money; I would not take it.

4601. Who came for you from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—One Meagher, from the Kiln, to the best of my belief; the Kiln, at the lower end of Cashel.

4602. Did any person canvass you for Mr. O'Beirne?—Oh, there were several asked me who was I voting for, and I told them Mr. O'Beirne. I told every one before Mr. O'Beirne or Mr. Munster came to Cashel.

4603. Did anyone canvass you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—Mr. O'Beirne came to my house and I did not see him. I was going up the street, and some others stopped me in the street, and they said Mr. O'Beirne called to my house. Michael Hanley asked me who was I voting for. Captain Graham asked me who was I voting for. I told them Mr. O'Beirne.

4604. Did Captain Graham call on you?—He did not call, but he met me accidentally in the street.

4605. He knew you, I suppose?—He knows me well.

4606. How long does he know you?—He knows me this four years or more, I believe.

4607. I believe he does not live in Cashel?—No, he used to live in Cashel.

4608. How long ago?—Gor, to the best of my opinion, but it is two or three years ago, more or less.

4609. Did he know you when he was living here?—He did, sir.

4610. Was there any sort of inducement offered to you by anyone on behalf of either Mr. O'Beirne or Mr. Munster?—Well there was some of the butchers at the shambles wanted me to vote, and said I would get thirty pounds, or something that way. That is all the inducement.

4611. From whom would you have got £30, if you had voted?—I believe it was from Mr. Munster.

4612. Some of the butchers said that to you?—Yes, sir.

4613. Did anybody else say it besides some of the butchers?—No, sir.

4614. Do you recollect what butcher said it to you?—Well, I cannot exactly say. There were three or four of them there together. I could not say exactly which of them that mentioned the words.

4615. You knew, of course, that there was money going?—Well, I heard that at any rate, that the £30 or £35 would be better for me, and I would be a long time earning it; but I said I didn't regard £30 or £35.

4616. You say that you would sooner vote for Mr. O'Beirne than get £30?—I do, and I maintain it.

4617. And no sort of offer was ever made to you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—Never, I never looked for it, nor never wanted to get it.

4618. Are there many of the butchers having votes?—Well, I believe, twenty-five or twenty-six.

4619. They all voted for Mr. Munster except yourself?—They did.

4620. Was there any unpleasant feeling between you and the other butchers on account of your not going along with them?—There was, for some time, but I beared it all.

4621. And you bore it all for Mr. O'Beirne, to whom you had never spoken before?—I did.

4622. You are a married man, I believe?—I am, sir.

4623. Now, who were the butchers that were present when you were told that you would get £30 from Mr. Munster's party?—Well, there were five or six. There was one Pat Connors, often was up at my house.

SIXTH DAY. October 9.

William Gorman.

He was there on the night I was sent for from Dunn's. There was John Butler and Michael Carr, and I do not know how many may be around me at the time.

4624. Is Connors a butcher?—A cattle dealer.

4625. Is he a voter?—No, sir.

4626. Is Michael Carr a voter?—No, sir.

4627. I want the other names?—John Butler.

4628. Were there any others?—I could not swear, but I know them three to be there.

4629. And you say Connors was there when the message came for you to go to Dunn's hotel?—Yes, sir.

4630. When you went to Dunn's hotel, whom did you see?—The message did not come to me but to my wife, to go up, that Mrs. Dunn wanted her, that she wanted chops.

4631. You were not there?—I went afterwards with the meat myself, and delivered it.

4632. To whom did you give it?—I left it in the kitchen with some of the girls; Mrs. Dunn's kitchen.

4633. You were sent for: did you go to Mr. O'Beirne, to Dunn's hotel?—No, I did not, sir, the night I was sent for.

4634. Did you ever speak to Mr. O'Beirne at Dunn's hotel?—I spoke once, the night Mr. Laffan sent for me, and the night I heard of the retainers.

4635. Did you go to Mr. O'Beirne of your own accord that night?—I did. I told him I was afraid I would get a retainer; he told me not to mind it—if I got a retainer, to let him know it.

4636. You told him of the offer of thirty pounds?—No, I never spoke a word of it.

4637. You told him you were afraid you would get a retainer?—Yes.

4638. And you did not say that you would get thirty pounds?—No; it was after that they told me at the shambles it would be better for me to get thirty pounds than give my vote for nothing, and I told them it was not.

4639. That is, that you would not lose by giving your vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

4640. Do you understand that—is that what you said?—Yes; I told them any sacrifice I did not care, and that I would not take any money at all, good or bad.

4641. Did you tell them that you would not lose by voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I told them as much as that I did not consider it as a loss; that it did not belong to me.

4642. Your story is that you were afraid you would get a retainer, and that you went and told that to Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

4643. And that was because you were so much interested for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

4644. To let him know what was going on?—To let him know that I might get a retainer by post or any way.

4645. And afterwards, when you were told you would get thirty pounds, you did not go and tell him that?—I did not. I never spoke to him but once. I never went to any of their hotels, or meeting-houses, or speeches but once.

4646. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you tell any of his friends that you were offered the money?—Never; it never troubled me.

4647. The retainer appears to have troubled you very much?—I would not wish to break my vote by the retainer.

4648. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Who told you that you would get the thirty pounds?—I cannot swear which of them.

4649. Can you form any opinion as to which of them it was?—I cannot form any opinion; even I wanted to go out, and they kept me by the collar.

4650. Who caught you by the collar?—I could not say.

4651. Was it Michael Cahill that said it to you?—I could not say exactly which of them said it to me.

4652. But you are sure it was one of those three men?—I am sure it was one of the three.

4653. What is Connors' Christian name?—Thomas.

4654. Where does he live?—Bohermore.

4655. Has he a vote himself?—No, sir.

4656. Where does Michael Carr live?—I believe it is the Green, here beyond. It is upper Friar-street, sir; it is near the Green.

4657. Where does Butler live?—Ladyswell-street.

4658. He is a voter?—He is, sir. I wish to make a remark. There were bills for butchers put in here for eating and drinking. I wish to be excluded, for I never went to one of their houses.

4659. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You voted only from pure patriotism?—I voted honestly, sir, and no mistake; and if you find my name in any of them over or hither, you may be sure I am honest, sir.

Thomas Looby.

Thomas Looby of Lower Gate sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4660. Are you a voter of Cashel?—Why, I am. I am a butcher in Cashel—a cattle dealer.

4661. And I suppose you voted at the last election?—I did, my lord.

4662. Have you a family, Mr. Looby; have you sons?—I have one son and one daughter, and my wife.

4663. What is the son's name?—Michael Looby.

4664. You voted for Mr. Munster, I believe?—I did, my lord.

4665. You are a cattle dealer, you say?—Butcher and cattle dealer.

4666. Did you sell any cattle or any animal to Mr. Munster?—I did, my lord—not to Mr. Munster, but I sold to Mr. Laffan, my lord, a jennet.

4667. Which Mr. Laffan?—Why, Mr. Pat Laffan, I believe.

4668. When did you sell the jennet to Mr. Pat Laffan?—I believe eight days before the election commenced, my lord.

4669. Now, what price did you get for it?—Twenty pounds, my lord.

4670. Twenty pounds?—Yes, all I got is twenty, my lord. It was deemed seventy-five pounds some time ago, my lord.

4671. Who deemed it seventy-five pounds, now?—Mr. Munster, I am told, at the Commission. Some person here deemed it. I didn't get seventy-five pounds; I didn't get more than twenty pounds, and passed a receipt for it.

4672. You passed a receipt for it?—Yes, my lord.

4673. And who paid you?—Mr. Pat Laffan.

4674. How did he pay you—was it by a cheque?—No, but four five pound notes.

4675. What age was the jennet?—Six years old, my lord.

4676. Did you breed her yourself?—No, my lord; I gave six pounds for her two years previous, and then I could get fourteen pounds within the two years for her.

4677. Fourteen pounds was a high price for a jennet?—She was good, and I wouldn't part with her; but she ran away with herself once or twice.

4678. You fed her too highly, I suppose?—I always feed everything good.

4679. Did you see Mr. Munster riding that jennet afterwards?—Yes; when Mr. Laffan bought the mule and paid me on a Friday, he told me to keep her in the stable five or six days; and I told him I would. I kept her till the day that he brought his man down to take her, and I saw Mr. Munster riding her next day.

4680. What man did he bring?—I couldn't tell you; he was a fellow—I believe they call him Burke.

4681. Is that Nicholas Burke?—He is the very man, my lord.

4682. What is he?—He is a driver; he is everything. He was Mr. Munster's driver.

4683. You gave the jennet to him, and saw Mr. Munster riding him?—I did; I gave my jennet to him, and he took her away.

4684. That must have been the day before the election?—No, I think it was on that day, my lord—on, I believe, the evening of the election.

4685. That the jennet went away from you?—Yes, my lord. On Friday the election commenced, and on the evening I gave up the jennet to Mr. Laffan.

4686. What price did you ask Mr. Laffan for the jennet?—£25, my lord.

4687. Did you know for whom he was buying it? No, my lord.

4688. Did he tell you for whom he intended it?—No, my lord.

4689. Did he say he wanted it for himself?—He came to me. I am sixty years selling cows, horses, jennets, and anything of that kind. I would sell anything and buy anything.

4690. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much was the most you got for a jennet before?—I got £80 for a horse.

4691. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—How much for a jennet?—I got £8 or £10.

4692. But never £20 before?—No, my lord.

4693. And I suppose you do not expect so much again?—If I had her back again to-morrow I would not give her for £20.

4694. Did you often see Mr. Munster riding it?—Only one day, my lord.

4695. Did she run away with him?—No, my lord; when I seen him riding her I rubbed her face with my hand. "Was it you that had this jennet?" said he. "It was, sir," said I, rubbing my hand. "Take care of yourself," said he; so he rode away, and I never seen her since.

4696. Did you ever see the jennet since, or hear anything of her?—I hear she was given away for nothing. I hear she is down towards Carrick in Waterford.

4697. Who was caring her?—A man of the name of Brenan here in town.

4698. To whom did you hear she was given away for nothing?—To Brenan.

4699. Does Brenan live in this town?—He does, sir.

4700. What is Brenan's Christian name?—Tom, I believe. I don't know. I knew his father very well—William Brenan, I believe.

4701. Have you been canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, my lord, twice or three times.

4702. Did you vote in '65 for anybody?—No, my lord.

4703. Had you never a vote before the last election?—I had always since the corporation was reformed. There is a good many times I didn't vote, for I didn't like the parties. I voted for the Pennefathers always and would now, and for Councillor Hemphill.

4704. Did you vote for Mr. Lanigan?—No, my lord.

4705. Are you a Conservative in politics?—I am a Catholic. I don't know what you mean about that.

4706. Why would you not vote for Mr. Lanigan?—Why, my lord, I did not think sufficient. I passed through. There was a gentleman here formerly, Mr. Tuite, and a great many judges. Any man I didn't like I wouldn't vote for.

4707. But you were very fond of the Pennefathers?—Always, and am now.

4708. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever vote for the Pennefathers?—Always, and would now.

4709. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever vote for Sir Timothy O'Brien?—No.

4710. Did you ever vote for Mr. M'Garrell?—No; but Judge Perrin was here one time, and I denied him.

4711. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You never saw Mr. Munster except the day you saw him on the jennet?—Oh, I did, my lord; previous to that, my lord.

4712. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Were you canvassed by Mr. Lanigan when he was a candidate here?—I was.

4713. Why did you not vote for him?—Because I didn't like him.

4714. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—Mr. O'Beirne! No, my lord; I hadn't a vote at that time.

4715. In '65?—In '65, my lord. I had no vote that time.

4716. Well, then, you were canvassed for Mr. Lanigan in '59, I suppose?—Yes, I think I was, my lord.

4717. Mr. Laffan was his conducting agent then—was he not?—I think not, my lord.

4718. Are you Thomas Looby, senior, of Hughes's lot?—I am, my lord.

4719. I find you had a vote in '65?—I think not, my lord.

4720. What is your name?—Thomas Looby, butcher and cattle dealer.

4721. There are two Thomas Loobys?—There are three or four more of them.

4722. Do you live at Loughnafina?—I do, my lord.

4723. That is not Hughes's lot. You were canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne in '68, the last election?—I was.

4724. Who came to canvass you?—Mr. O'Beirne himself came first, and came a second time.

4725. When did he come to you first? About how long before the election?—About ten or twelve days; and Counsellor Scully canvassed me also the same time, the same way.

4726. Mr. O'Beirne came to canvass you ten or twelve days before the election?—He did.

4727. And how long afterwards?—He came in my absence and told my wife I promised him my vote. I met him then in the street coming down. "Won't you stand to me?" said he. "No," said I, "I made one promise and I won't make a promise again."

4728. To whom did you make the promise?—To Mr. Sam Cooper.

4729. Who is he?—He is a gentleman. He is dead now, God be with him; I made him a promise.

4730. When did you make him a promise?—At what election was that—M'Garrell. I made him a promise, my lord.

4731. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you fulfil the promise?—I did, my lord.

4732. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I am asking you about what you said to Mr. O'Beirne. Mr. O'Beirne came to you again you say in the street?—In the street.

4733. And asked you again?—Yes.

4734. When he came to your house the first time did you promise him?—No, my lord.

4735. And he said to your wife that you had promised to vote for him?—He did, my lord, in my absence.

4736. Who introduced Mr. Munster to you?—Why, my lord, all the introduction I ever had I never spoke a word to him. He was driving his carriage through the street and he came to my door, and he introduced meat and broth and everything for the poor of Cashel. There was a poor woman lived next door to me, and her cloak and clothes were in the pawn-office; and "Mr. Munster," says I, "you might as well give them charity." He said, "Has she a vote?" "No, my lord," said I, "and no means for it." He called the woman up and said, "Have you a vote?" "No," said she. He put his hand in his pocket and gave her a sovereign.

4737. What was her name?—I cannot recollect. She lives next door to me.

4738. And you do not recollect her name?—By gor I do not, my lord.

4739. Did you promise Mr. Munster then that you would vote for him?—Never.

4740. You never promised him?—No, my lord.

4741. Why did you vote for him?—Why! because I liked it.

4742. When did you make up your mind to vote for him?—The evening previous to the election.

4743. And up to that time you had not made up your mind?—No; nor nobody in my house knew for whom I would vote; nor never made any promise, though sent for by Mr. Munster several times.

4744. Who sent for you?—Why, some of what I call the meeting mob.

SIXTH DAY.
October 9.
Thomas Looby.

4745. Did you see any person that came to you for Mr. Munster besides Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, my lord.

4746. Mr. Patrick Laffan, I suppose, spoke to you about your vote?—He never asked me, nor Mr. Munster, nor any of his men.

4747. Did Mr. Munster never ask you for your vote?—He did not.

4748. Nor Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No.

4749. Did anybody ask you?—No person in the wide world asked me.

4750. Did any person at all ask you for your vote at the last election?—No, but Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Scully.

4751. Mr. Michael Laffan never canvassed you?—He spoke to me, but never about a vote, on my oath.

4752. He never asked you for a vote?—No, on my oath.

4753. What decided your mind on the evening before the election?—My mind was decided as Mr Munster was so charitable, and I had a wife and family. I was in bed when they sent down for me to go up and I wouldn't go; and my son came, and then my daughter wanted me to go up, and I would not; but I got up the next morning and went and voted.

4754. What did you know of Mr. Munster's charity?—Didn't I see him give a sovereign to the poor woman?

4755. Would that determine you?—I heard he was throwing cash about the town.

4756. What did you hear he was doing?—Throwing money about the town, my lord.

4757. And that was what made you make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—The very same thing, my lord.

4758. Tell me how you heard he was throwing it about?—By gor I couldn't tell you. I heard he was throwing money about the town out of his car. All the charity I ever seen him give was the sovereign to the poor woman next door.

4759. Are you quite certain that no person ever asked you to vote for Mr. Munster?—On my oath, never.

4760. You told me that some of your own family came up to you at night?—The night previous—my wife, my son, and my daughter.

4761. They wanted to know for whom you would vote?—They wanted me to go to the meeting.

4762. To Mr. Munster's committee-room?—Yes, my lord—and I was in bed; so I got up early next morning and went up.

4763. Where was the meeting?—At Corcoran's hotel below, my lord. Several meetings were there; I was never there, though.

4764. Did your wife, or son, or daughter ever ask you to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, my lord.

4765. They never asked you at any time?—They never asked me, but "Why do not you go up when you are called upon?"

4766. Who called on you?—Why, some men, Cashel boys, I believe, came down; I was in bed, my lord.

4767. Do you know Patsey Cunningham?—I do, my lord.

4768. Did you ever see him, or had you ever a talk with him about the election?—Indeed I did. On the same morning of the election I was going down from the polling, and I met him; he brought me to Corcoran's hotel, and up to the top room, and knocked at the door, and there was a man there in his shirt-sleeves and breeches, or trowsers, and short clothes. When Cunningham rapped at the door I went in, my lord, and the door shut again; so I met the man coming out of his bed, and he came, and "Come," says he, "I have some money here for you." "Very good," says I, and I took the money. "Will you count it?" says he. "No," says I, "I can't well see; I haven't my specs." So I put the money in my pocket and went home. I put my name to some document, my lord. When I counted it I had nine £3 notes and three single notes, that is £30.

4769. Was that the morning of the voting?—The very morning, my lord, about seven o'clock. It is with candle-light I got the money.

4770. Did you sign in the hotel "Thomas Looby?"—I did.

4771. To what did you sign it—what was written above where you signed?—I did not read it.

4772. You did not read it?—No; but "Put your name to that," says the man, and I put "Thomas Looby."

4773. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was that the man in his shirt-sleeves?—Yes, my lord, it was.

4774. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know that man?—No, my lord.

4775. Did you ever see him before?—I could not swear; I may often see him, but I never seen him to my knowledge; I couldn't swear to him.

4776. Did you ever hear his name?—No, I never heard one ha'p'orth in the world but what I tell your lordship.

4777. Did Patsey Cunningham tell you his name?—No; he brought me up and knocked at the door, and it was opened, and when I went in it was closed, and the man came out of his bed in his shirt-sleeves and pantaloons and gave me the money.

4778. Did he say anything to you?—Not a word, my lord.

4779. Did he ask your name?—He knew me very well.

4780. If he knew you it is a wonder that you did not know him?—Was it Patsey Cunningham?

4781. No, but the man in his shirt-sleeves?—He did not ask me.

4782. Did Cunningham say anything to him?—No, he did not come in.

4783. You knocked at the door, the door was opened, and you went in and saw this man?—I did, my lord. "Count them," says he. There was nine £3 notes and three single notes, my lord.

4784. He did not tell you what he was giving them to you for?—No, my lord, not a bit nor a ha'p'orth he asked me about.

4785. Of course you knew that it was for your vote?—I ascertained it was, my lord.

4786. How did you ascertain it?—Why, many things. What brought me there but for it? I was brought from my own house to the hotel.

4787. You have told us that transaction. I want you to tell what you went with Patsey Cunningham for?—He told me he wanted me. I met him at his house, midway between the hotel and my house. I walked up with him. He knocked at the door, and the man got up in the shirt-sleeves and shut the door again. I went in and got the money.

4788. Did you know what you were going up with Patsey Cunningham for?—No, my lord.

4789. Did you meet Patsey Cunningham accidentally or on purpose?—I met him on my way from the hotel to my own house.

4790. What brought you there at that hour of the morning?—Why, my lord, as I told you before, I was sent for the night before. I got up that morning to know what they wanted me for.

4791. Were you going to the hotel when you met Cunningham?—No, from the hotel.

4792. Were you up at the hotel before you met Cunningham?—I was.

4793. And did you ask for anyone there?—Indeed I did, sir. Doctor Cormac, Mr. Leahy, Mr. Scully—they asked me to take a glass of wine and I objected.

4794. That was in the morning before you met Patsey Cunningham?—On the very same morning.

4795. Before you met Cunningham?—Yes, my lord.

4796. For whom did you ask at the hotel?—No person. I walked in.

4797. Did you say to anyone "You sent for me last night"?—No.

4798. Had you any talk with any of them?—Yes, with Mr. Leahy. "Come take some wine," said he, "or a glass of punch." "No, I will take nothing," said I.

4799. What other conversation had you with him?—Nothing. I walked out back again, and came home and met Cunningham.

4800. Had you any conversation with anyone in the hotel about Cunningham?—No conversation in the world, but they asked me to take a cup of tea. Mr. Watkins and Jerome Scully were drinking it. I said "I wouldn't give it to my pigs."

4801. Was there any writing going on at the hotel by anyone?—No, my lord.

4802. Do you mean that you met Patsey Cunningham only by chance?—I met him and I going home, and he came back.

4803. Were you going to Cunningham?—No, going to my own house.

4804. Going back from Corcoran's at that time?—Yes, my lord.

4805. Do you mean to say that nobody mentioned anything to you in conversation about Cunningham or the man upstairs?—I think not.

4806. And when you went back with Cunningham did he tell you what it was for?—No, my lord.

4807. What did Cunningham say to you?—"I want you back," says he. He took me up and knocked at the door, the door was opened; the man got up in his shirt-sleeves and a trousers on him.

4808. You know Mr. Leahy well?—I do, my lord.

4809. Do you live near Cunningham's house?—No, I believe about 200 yards.

4810. Did you see a man that was stopping in Cunningham's house here during the time of the election?—No, my lord. I never had any conversation with any man.

4811. It is a wonder Cunningham did not tell you the man's name?—He did not.

4812. What part of the house was the room in?—In the top of the house. There were four or five beds in the same room.

4813. And this was the morning of the voting?—It was, my lord.

4814. Was there anyone in the room but that man?—I could not say.

4815. There was a candle lighting there?—There was.

4816. Would you not see if there was anybody else in the room?—I could not.

4817. Did you see anybody else in the room?—I did not.

4818. Did you look at the beds?—I did not. I cannot well see without my specs.

4819. Could you tell me what sort of a man he was?—By gor, he was a thin handsome man.

4820. Was he tall or short?—Much about my own size.

4821. Was he old or young?—He appeared to me to be old, my lord.

4822. Would you say he was past fifty or sixty years?—I could not say.

4823. Was his hair gray or what colour was it?—I could not ascertain.

4824. Was he gray haired?—Indeed I didn't look at his hair at all, my lord.

4825. And you never saw him since to your knowledge?—To my knowledge since or before, my lord.

4826. Could you guess to his name at all: did you ever hear who he was?—No.

4827. And you never asked anyone?—No.

4828. Would you know the room again?—I would.

4829. Is it in the front of the house?—In the upper part of the front of the house. I could tie my cravat about my eyes and go into the same room.

4830. And that was on the morning of the voting?—On the very morning, my lord.

4831. Did you ever since see the paper you signed?—Never, my lord.

4832. And you do not know what was written on it?—No, but I put "Thomas Looby" on it, my lord; and also I put my name on the price of the jennet; twenty pounds I got for the jennet.

4833. Mr. MOLLOY.—What was the size of the piece of paper on which you wrote your name at Corcoran's hotel?—I couldn't tell you.

4834. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were there any other names on it?—I couldn't tell you. All I can tell is that I got the thirty pounds and put my name to it.

4835. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you mean to say that you had no talk about money, until you got that money from him?—On my oath I had not. "I have a command here for you," said he, handing me a bundle of notes—thirty pounds.

4836. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did your wife or son say anything to you about going to Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, the evening previous to the election my wife and daughter were scolding me "why wouldn't I be at the meeting?"

4837. Did they say anything about voting in the morning?—No. They were in bed, and I got out of bed, and walked up.

4838. You carried home the money?—I did, by gor, my lord.

4839. Does the wife keep the money for you at home?—I keep it myself, my lord.

4840. Did you tell her you got it?—Of course I did.

4841. And you told your daughter?—I brought it down and counted it on the table again.

4842. In your own house?—In my own house, my lord.

4843. Was your wife there when you counted it?—She was, my lord.

4844. And the daughter?—And the daughter—both.

4845. Was your son there?—Why, my lord, I cannot rightly say. I think he was, my lord.

4846. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was that the most money you ever got at an election?—I never took a penn'orth of ale at all the elections.

4847. You never got so much at an election before?—I never got a glass of ale at Pennefather's, or Judge Perrin's, or all of them.

4848. Did you ever get so much money before at an election?—I never got one penny.

4849. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Looby go with the constable to Corcoran's hotel, and the constable will ask permission from the proprietor of the hotel to see the room you will point out?—I will, my lord.

4850. Mr. GRIFFIN.—It was dark when you got into the hotel that morning?—Yes, my lord.

4851. Where were Mr. Leahy, Doctor Cormack, Mr. Watkins, and Mr. Jerome Scully?—In the room below that.

4852. Were they all staying together?—No; one here and another there, and they were all dancing and drinking about the house—ay, by gor.

4853. Had they been at it all night, do you think?—I hear they were, my lord. I wasn't by, my lord. I hear they were all night at it.

4854. Do you remember any other persons that were in the room?—There was a great many there, but I took no notice, except Mr. Watkins, Jerome Scully, Doctor Cormack, and Mr. Leahy; and by the same token, they ate meat that morning—Friday morning it was.

4855. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I must ask you to recollect the position in which you are. If we refuse to give you a certificate you may be imprisoned for two years for what you have disclosed here. Therefore I recommend you to keep yourself quiet?—My lord, if I committed anything wrong it must be against my own nature. I am standing here telling the truth.

4856. Recollect the position in which you are. I will not have any joking or levity. Were you examined as a witness on the petition?—No, my lord.

4857. Where were you then?—I was in Dublin two or three days.

4858. Where in Dublin were you?—With Mr. Cuffe selling cattle.

4859. Had you any communication with Mr. Laffan or Patsey Cunningham before you went to Dublin?—I had, my lord.

4860. What conversation had you?—I went to Mr. Laffan the Sunday night previous, and I asked him was there any danger in my going away, and not being in court, and he told me not.

SIXTH DAY. October 9. Thomas Looby.

4861. Which Mr. Laffan was that?—There he is there. (Identifies Mr. Michael J. Laffan.)

4862. Did you tell him what you knew?—I told him nothing at all, but asked him was there any danger of my going away.

4863. Did you get a summons as a witness?—I am not sure.

4864. Then he knew you were going away?—Of course he did.

4865. What made you go to Mr. Laffan to ask him was there any danger in your going away?—I would be last week at the fair of Thurles unless I was afraid there would be subpœnas here for me.

4866. Did you go to Mr. Laffan to ask him about that also?—No.

4867. But you went to Mr. Laffan before the petition, before you went to Dublin?—I did.

4868. To ask him was there any danger, and if you ought to go away?—Yes, when I was not subpœnaed.

4869. What did he say?—He told me he thought there was no danger.

4870. Did he tell you to stay away until the petition was over?—He did not, my lord.

4871. How long did you stay in Dublin?—I was in Cashel on Saturday. I went on Sunday—Monday—Tuesday I went to Dublin, and I came back on Friday to Cashel.

4872. You went on Tuesday?—On Tuesday.

4873. Did you remain in Dublin on that occasion?—On what occasion?

4874. On the occasion of your going when the petition was tried here?—No, my lord, I did not.

4875. Listen—did you remain in Dublin longer than was necessary to sell your cattle?—No, my lord. On Thursday I sold my cattle, and Friday I was here.

4876. Were you here before the petition was over?—I believe on the day before, I was, my lord. I believe it was over on Saturday, and Friday I was here, my lord.

4877. Are you sure you did not say to Mr. Laffan anything about your being a witness, or what you could prove?—No, my lord.

4878. All you said to him was, "Is there any danger of my going away;" was that what you said?—I said, "Was there any doubt or danger of my going to Dublin with my cattle?" He told me he did not think there was—was I subpœnaed, and I said I was not.

4879. Did anybody tell you to ask him that?—No, my lord.

4880. Is it your son that usually sells your cattle?—I sell my cattle myself.

4881. Do you say that no person told you to go to Mr. Laffan?—No, my lord.

4882. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you send the cattle to the market by train?—What else?

4883. What day did you put them into the boxes of the train?—I put them in on Wednesday.

4884. At what station did you box them?—At Goold's Cross, and formerly Dundrum.

4885. Where were you on Monday and Tuesday?—I was buying cattle on that Sunday and Monday and Tuesday; I have Mr. Cuffe's quotations here—my salesmaster in Dublin.

4886. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What is your wife's Christian name?—Catherine Hayes Looby.

4887. And your daughter's?—Mary Anne Looby.

4888. And your son's?—Michael Looby, my lord.

4889. You will go now and show the constable the room at Mrs. Corcoran's that you were speaking of?—I will, my lord.

Mary Rochford.

Mary Rochford sworn and examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4890. Are you the wife of John Rochford?—Yes, sir.

4891. He is a voter I believe?—Yes, sir.

4892. Is he a carpenter?—Yes, sir.

4893. Do you recollect some short time before the election being at Mrs. Tracey's house?—Yes, sir.

4894. How did you happen to go there?—I went in on the purpose of buying a tick to put feathers in.

4895. Go on and tell me all that occurred?—When I went in she asked me upstairs in the room; I went up with her; she went to a chest of drawers and pulled out a small box out of it with some cheques; she laid it on the table; she told me to sit on a chair convenient to the bed; she laid the cheques on the table; she told me she would give me one of them cheques for £30 if my husband would go with Simon; that Mr. O'Beirne trusted him with his cheques and money; I said in reply that I would rather get the money; she said she would give me the money; I told her then I should go and acquaint my husband, and know would he go; I returned straight, and Tracey was in the shop with my husband and Meara; they were in conversation when I went in; in some moments Simon Tracey came in, and called me out to the back yard; he asked what would I take and have my husband go with him; I said I feared it was useless, that my husband promised Mr. Michael Laffan—at the same time I would speak to him; I spoke to him about it, and asked him would I take a cheque; he said no, that if I took a cheque it would be lost; that he wouldn't go at all, and he wouldn't break his word; that he promised Mr. Michael Laffan, and that he would support his word.

4896. Did you see what cheques Mrs. Tracey had at the time she showed them to you?—She laid them on the table—the cheques; she took them out of the chest of drawers, out of a little box, and laid them on the table; she took up one cheque, to the best of my belief, and showed it to me.

4897. How much was that cheque for?—It was a £50 cheque; I took notice of the plain figures—a £50 cheque.

4898. Did she say what she had the cheque for?—She told me that cheque was for two of her relatives.

4899. What did she say?—To the best of my belief she said, "Here is a £50 cheque I have." I think I looked at it carelessly, and saw £50. "This is for two of my relatives," said she, and "try if you can get John to go with Simon; he is engaged for Mr. O'Beirne."

4900. You did not ask her who the relatives were?—No, my lord.

4901. Is that all that occurred between you on that occasion?—To the best of my belief as far as I think.

4902. Do you recollect Mrs. Tracey's saying anything to you about Mr. O'Beirne's having got money?—She mentioned to me that the cheques were got from Mr. O'Beirne, that her husband got money and cheques from Mr. O'Beirne.

4903. Did you buy a tick from her?—No sir; I returned home then immediately after that; she kept me for some time in the room chatting.

4904. Had you any talk at all about the tick with her?—Yes, sir; when I went in I asked had she a good second hand tick; I wanted to put feathers in it; for generally in election times I had one or two stopping with me.

4905. Did she show you a tick at all?—No, she immediately asked me to come upstairs with her; before I went with her I didn't know what she wanted me for.

4906. Did you go in to ask for her husband?—No, sir, I never mentioned anything about her husband to her.

4907. Mr. GRIFFIN.—£30 she said was for your husband if he would go with Simon?—A £30 cheque, sir, she meant.

4908. Did you see money as well as cheques?—Yes, sir; she pulled out a bundle of notes, and said she would give me the money, and then I didn't like without asking my husband.

4909. Did she take the money from the same box as the cheques?—To the best of my belief she did, and laid it on the table.

4910. Was it out of the chest of drawers she took the box?—Out of the chest of drawers she took a small box.

4911. And you think it was out of the small box she took both money and cheques?—To the best of my belief it was, sir.

4912. You saw the cheque distinctly that she said was for her two relatives?—Yes, sir, £50.

4913. You are sure it was £50?—Yes, sir, I saw the plain figures on it.

4914. The cheque that she said was for two of her relatives?—Yes, sir.

4915. That would be only £25 pounds each?—That is what she told me.

4916. Do you not know that two twenty-fives make fifty?—Yes, sir.

4917. Did you think it queer that she would give more to your husband, who was a stranger, than to her own relatives?—Well, I couldn't say that, sir. She didn't say she would give me £30 in notes, sir; she said she would give me the money in notes. I said I would rather have the money than a cheque.

4918. She was going to give you money instead of the cheque?—I made the remark to her.

4919. When you made the remark she was going to do it?—Yes, sir, she was.

4920. Did she say I cannot give £30 in notes; I can only give £25?—No, sir, no remark of that kind.

4921. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you use spectacles?—Yes, I do, sir; one pair of spectacles between myself and my husband. I neither can read nor write without spectacles.

4922. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You know Mrs. Hackett?—Yes, sir.

4923. You had a conversation with her about the election?—Yes, sir.

4924. Tell me what occurred between you?—She came in the election week—to the best of my belief it was the election week; I think it was. She came in and asked me would I get John to go and vote with James for Mr. O'Beirne.

4925. John was your husband, and James was Mrs. Hackett's husband?—Yes, sir. She asked me would I get John to go with James for Mr. O'Beirne. I made the remark I didn't consider John would, for he was pledged to Mr. Michael Laffan, and I feared he wouldn't break his word. She said if he would go that Mr. O'Beirne had a lot of money; that he got £2,000 at the bank on Saturday morning, and James would get recompensed the same as himself.

4926. Is that all that happened?—That is all, sir.

4927. Did anything more occur between you?—I think, sir, it was that James should be recompensed the same as himself. I said I feared he wouldn't go; that he was a man no way clever to get out of a thing that way. She said Mr. O'Beirne was a clever man, and would get him out of any difficulty.

4928. Did she say anything about Captain Graham?—She said Captain Graham and William Power the tobacconist were with him, and she saw Mr. Power and Captain Graham with Mr. O'Beirne, and they received £2,000 at ten o'clock out of the bank on Saturday morning.

4929. Have you a son?—Yes, sir.

4930. What is his name?—William Rochford, sir.

4931. Where is he?—He is at work with his father, sir.

4932. He is a carpenter, is he?—Yes, sir.

4933. Had you ever any talk with him about the election or about getting money at the election?—By gor, I don't remember ever to speak to him about it, for we never looked for it.

4934. Did you ever hear your son say he was looking for it?—No, sir, for I don't think he interfered with the election, at all, for he was continually at work with his father. I never knew him to be interfering, except a small chap that I have.

4935. Where is your son?—In Rose Green. I believe it is four or five miles from this.

4936. What is the Christian name of the small chap you have?—Paul, sir.

4937. Look at that. [Is handed a claim.] Is that your son's writing?—It is not, sir.

4938. Whose writing is it?—I couldn't say, sir.

4939. Is it your own?—No, sir.

4940. Is it your husband's?—I couldn't say, sir.

4941. Did you ever see that paper before?—Never, sir.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4942. Mr. Biggin, from whom was this document received?—With the other papers I received it from Mr. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4943. Mr. Laffan, do you know anything about it?—I got it in the ordinary course.

4944. Do you know whose writing it is?—I do not.

4945. Do you recollect getting it from this woman's husband or son?—I cannot say from whom I got it; but I am quite certain that it came from one of the family.

4946. Have you any recollection of who handed it to you?—No.

Mary Rochford's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4947. Mrs. Rochford, did you never hear of this before?—No, sir, I don't recollect.

4948. Perhaps it is your son Paul's writing?—I don't think it is, sir; he is not so clever as that.

4949. How old is Paul?—A young chap growing up, going to school.

4950. How old is he?—About twelve years, to the best of my belief.

4951. Did you ever hear that anyone wrote this; it might be that somebody wrote it for them?—I did not hear, sir, to the best of my belief.

4952. Did you ever hear your husband say that he put in this claim?—I did not. To the best of my belief I never heard any remark made on it.

4953. Try and recollect?—If I heard it, sir, I would tell you, but I disremember ever hearing anything about it.

4954. You never heard of either your husband or your son William having sent in this claim?—I did not.

4955. Can you tell me which of them sent it in?—To the best of my belief I never heard anything about it.

4956. Mr. MOLLOY.—In what way was Paul interfering in the election?—He was only running along with the children.

4957. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you ever tell Mr. Munster or ask anyone to tell him, that it was not safe for him to go out after dusk, even in a carriage?—Perhaps I did, sir, I forget. Perhaps I did. There was so much passing round that I forget.

SIXTH DAY. October 9.

Mary Rochford.

4958. What was the meaning of it?—By gor, I couldn't say, sir; but being an Englishman their feelings weren't warmly disposed towards him.

4959. They were not as warmly disposed towards him as Mr. O'Beirne?—No, sir, that was my opinion.

4960. When did you tell that to Mr. Munster?—I never was speaking to him but at one time.

4961. Did you go to his house to tell him that?—I went one time to request him to forgive Simon Tracey, as I was informed he was under the expense to be under a fine.

4962. Was that after the election?—Yes, sir.

4963. Was it then you said it would be unsafe for him to go out after dusk, even in a carriage?—I really forget indeed, sir.

4964. Was it after the election or before it?—I really forget the right time. I might have expressed it when I saw their feelings were bad towards him.

4965. How was it that you came to ask forgiveness for Simon Tracey?—I heard he didn't attend, and that he would be fined.

4966. At the petition?—Yes, sir, and that he would be fined.

4967. And why did you ask Mr. Munster?—I thought he might pay me that compliment to forgive him, for I heard Mr. Munster could forgive the fine.

4968. Sure it was you that gave the information against Tracey?—I should tell the truth.

4969. And you wanted to make it up with Tracey, by asking forgiveness for him?—Tracey didn't ask me, but I thought it was in Mr. Munster's power to forgive the fine.

Thomas Looby.

Thomas Looby recalled by Mr. WATERS Q.C.

4970. Did you point out the room to the constable?—Yes, my lord, I did.

Constable William Lynam.

Constable William Lynam sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4971. Did Looby point out the room to you?—He did.

4972. Is there a number on it?—No. 6.

4973. Is there more than one bed in the room?—There are two beds, sir, and a fireplace.

4974. Whom did you see in the house?—I asked for Mrs. Corcoran, and a servant girl told me she was in. I met the summons-server and brought him back. He told me he could not find Mrs. Corcoran. One of the servants told him she was upstairs. I brought the summons-server back; he was in the room with Mr. Looby and myself.

4975. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is it a top front room?—Top front room, sir. There is a window in front and rere of the room.

4976. Then it extends the whole length of the house?—Yes, sir.

4977. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Have you seen Mrs. Corcoran lately?—Yes, sir.

Thomas Meara of Canopy-street was called but did not appear.

John Bernard O'Meara.

John Bernard O'Meara sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

4978. Your father I believe is a voter?—My father is a voter.

4979. For whom did he vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster.

4980. Were you engaged about the election?—I was, sir.

4981. By whom were you engaged?—On Mr. Munster's side by Mr. Laffan.

4982. Which Mr. Laffan?—I do not know exactly from whom the appointment came, but I was doing business in Mr. Michael Laffan's office over two months.

4983. How long were you doing business?—Well, sir, I think from the 20th September to the day of the polling, from the 20th or 21st, or probably up to the 24th.

4984. Were you engaged every day?—Well, I might say I was engaged every day, sir.

4985. Well, but do you say it?—I do not recollect any day that I did not do some business.

4986. What were your hours of attendance?—That was according to the pressure of business.

4987. What were the hours of attendance?—There were no hours specified.

4988. Who told you that you were to go there, was it Mr. Patrick or Mr. Michael Laffan?—I do not recollect. I was sent for by Mr. Michael Laffan; but previous to that I was in the habit of writing in Mr. Laffan's office, and Dr. Laffan spoke to me about the election and said that probably my services would be required. I said of course if there was anything to be earned I would be happy to earn it.

4989. How long have you been in the habit of working for Mr. Laffan—writing for him?—It is only when Mr. Laffan has any extraordinary business that he requires me at all.

4990. Does he pay you per day, or by the work done, or how?—By the work done I think it is.

4991. So much a folio, I suppose?—Yes, generally for brief sheets he used to pay me $4\frac{1}{2}d.$ or $4\frac{1}{4}d.$ for transcribing.

4992. What was the longest time you spent any day in his office during the election time?—For a single day the greatest number of hours, I think I must have spent from ten in the morning to ten at night. There may have been some intervening hours between them that I would sit later there.

4993. Did you often sit so long as that?—Sometimes.

4994. Did you often sit so long?—Yes, frequently.

4995. I did not understand you to say that you were there every day?—I used often work below at Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

4996. Whom did you see at Corcoran's hotel—were you often writing there?—I was, sir.

4997. You saw Mr. Leahy there?—Yes, and Captain Byrne, Captain Stuart, Mr. Munster some two or three times.

4998. Were you there the night before the election?—I was; I was up all that night.

4999. Were there many there that night?—I could not exactly say how many were there. I could not give a guess. In fact, I did not leave the room scarcely. I had some writing there. I remained there up to two o'clock, and then went to the lower part of the house, where several were in the lower part of the house. I never saw that part of the house. I did not inquire the part they were in. I knew they were in some part.

5000. Did you hear a noise?—Yes, there was a bustle in the lower part of the house.

5001. Dancing and singing?—I heard some music.

5002. Did you not go to see what was going on?—No; there were two or three young men with me, and we played cards.

5003. Do you know in what room you were?—I do, sir.

5004. Do you know room No. 6?—I do not know the rooms by numbers.

5005. Do you know the front room?—The room I was working in that night was, I believe, the largest room in the house. It is the principal room in the house. It is on the street.

5006. On a level with the street, or on the first storey?—On the first storey.

5007. Were the young men that were with you persons engaged about the election?—I believe they were; some of them at least.

5008. Who were they?—A young man of the name of Hubert Cahill; another, Jeremiah Connolly. I do not recollect if there were any others.

5009. You told me there were four or five in the room?—There was another young man in the early part of the night, but he left; he was not well, I think.

5010. Do you recollect any others?—Mr. Laffan and others were in the room.

5011. Who else?—Another young man named Considine. I cannot positively swear was he there or not, but I think he was in the commencement of the night.

5012. Were you writing in the commencement of the night?—I was, from eleven to two.

5013. Were those young men writing?—I cannot swear, but I think they were.

5014. After that you amused yourselves playing cards?—Yes, sir.

5015. And you never went to where the voters were?—No, sir.

5016. Nor where the dancing was?—I went down to the lower part of the house where there was another portion of the voters.

5017. What were they doing?—Amusing themselves—some playing cards, more dancing.

5018. And drinking, I suppose?—I do not recollect that they were drinking. When I went down they were not drinking. That was the later small hours in the morning.

5019. Had they been drinking?—I cannot swear that they were drinking that night, but I saw voters drinking there previously.

5020. Was there no sign of bottles or glasses?—No; there was some speech-making there, I believe. The tables were clear when I went down.

5021. But you know that drinking went on there on other occasions?—Yes, sir.

5022. What did you see them drinking?—Wines—whiskey.

5023. Were they in large quantity?—No, the drink was always very limited there, sir.

5024. You said you know Mr. Leahy and saw him there?—Yes, sir.

5025. And you saw Captain Byrne there?—I cannot swear that I saw Captain Byrne there that night. I saw him there frequently previous to that night.

5026. Did you know a man that was there with Mr. Leahy—we heard his name to be Moran, or some such name?—I do not recollect such a name. As well as I can recollect, Captain Stuart came to the house that night; that was the day previous to the polling.

5027. Did you hear of Moran?—I never heard of a voter of Cashel named Moran.

5028. You know Patsey Cunningham?—I know him well.

5029. Who was the man that was stopping at his house?—I was never more than two or three times at his house.

5030. Do you know a man of the name of Murrin?—I heard of Mullan.

5031. No, but Murrin?—I never heard of him.

5032. Did you ever hear of a man who was stopping at Cunningham's?—No, sir.

5033. Did Patsey Cunningham never tell you of a man who was stopping at his father's?—I never spoke to Cunningham during the election.

5034. How much were you paid for your services?—I was paid £3.

5035. Only £3?—Only. At least I presented a bill to Mr. Laffan for more.

5036. You only got £3?—I swear positively I got only that.

5037. Surely that would not pay you?—Certainly not.

5038. You expected a great deal more?—Of course I expected to be paid.

5039. When did you get the £3?—I went with Mr. Laffan on Monday, and, I think, on the third day after commencing business Mr. Pat. Laffan asked me to go for a package of envelopes; I said I would; they were for the election. He gave me a note in my hand, and says, "This is for you." "Very well, sir," says I. I drew the note out of my pocket and discovered it was a £3 note. I thought he might have made a mistake, and when I went back I said, "Are you aware, sir, of the amount of money you have given me?" "Yes," says he—"it is a £3 note."

5040. Did he say anything more?—He asked me did it satisfy me. I said I was satisfied.

5041. That was when you were three days there?—Yes, about three days.

5042. It was Mr. Patrick Laffan with whom that occurred?—Yes.

5043. You were working in Mr. Michael Laffan's office?—Yes.

5044. Had you afterwards any conversation with Mr. Michael Laffan about that £3?—Yes, Mr. Michael Laffan was aware of it, for I asked him for a small sum approaching the day of the polling, and he said he could not give it to me, but if I presented a bill and mentioned the amount due he would try and get it for me, but he would give no money on account. That is, as well as I recollect, his words.

5045. Did you make any arrangement about what you were to be paid?—Never, sir.

5046. Was there no talk as to the amount you were to get?—Yes; I never spoke of any specified sum. The only amount ever mentioned to me was by Dr. Thomas Laffan; I am sure it was more out of a joke than otherwise. He said one day in the office, "Now, Meara, probably you will earn £20 or £25 about this election!" "If I do," says I, "it is very good." I do not remember to have any sum named to me otherwise than that conversation.

5047. You said you thought he mentioned it as a joke. What was there apparent of joke about it—is it that it was too large or too little?—Well, I do not know, sir. I did not know the amount of work I was to do, and consequently I thought he could not calculate the sum for me.

5048. You thought it strange that he should name a particular sum not knowing how much labour was to be done?—He told me he was aware of the amount of work I was to go through; I was not at the time.

5049. When did that conversation take place?—It was, I am sure, the day on which I went to work to the office, as well as I can recollect.

5050. After being paid £3 by Mr. Patrick Laffan, I presume you applied for the remainder of what you expected to get?—Never, sir; I never applied, with the exception of once or twice I asked Mr. Michael Laffan previous to the election—a small sum, and he refused me.

5051. In what terms did he refuse you?—He said that I could recollect the amount of the work done. I recollect that he said that if I put in my bill, and mentioned the amount of work done, he would try and get me paid, or could pay me himself—I forget which; but he said it would be better for me to let it stand over.

5052. To let it stand over?—I do not recollect positively, but as far as I recollect this was the substance of his words.

5053. Did he give any reason for letting it stand

SIXTH DAY. October 9.

John Bernard O'Meara.

over?—He said if I was paid now—"Probably you know," says he, "we must only pay you now by the ordinary rate; probably you will be better remunerated hereafter."

5054. When did that conversation take place with Mr. Michael Laffan?—As I say, it was some time previous to the election, sir; it must have been in the commencement of November—from that to the 7th.

5055. Of course you understood what he said as to your being paid only the ordinary rate then and more afterwards, had reference to your father being a voter?—I cannot swear that.

5056. I did not ask you to swear it—I asked you what you understood. Did you believe that at the time?—Well no, sir.

5057. Do you entertain the slightest possible doubt that when, as you tell me, Mr. Michael Laffan said, "If you are paid now you will only get the ordinary rate, but if you wait it will be more," it had some connexion with your father's vote?—Probably it had, sir.

5058. You seem disposed to answer me candidly; and although the question may not be a very pleasant one it is your duty to answer it honestly and truly. I am not asking you to say what was in Mr. Laffan's mind, but what you believe yourself. I ask you did you not believe when that was said that your father's vote was meant?—This I can say, that my going to Mr. Michael Laffan's office had no connexion I am sure with my father. My father, I do not suppose, was ever aware what I was to receive, neither did I tell him what Mr. Laffan told me. When I did apply to Mr. Laffan for money I never told my father; it was for my own private purposes I wanted it; neither did I tell my father what Mr. Michael Laffan said.

5059. But still do you not say to me that you understood that that was the meaning of Mr. Laffan's observation?—Well, it is; at least I scarcely could infer otherwise, sir.

5060. You afterwards sent in an application for £35?—No, sir.

5061. For how much?—£30, sir.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5062. Mr. Biggin, give me claim number 94?—I have not that claim.

J. B. O'Meara.

J. B. O'Meara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5063. To whom did you give that claim?—I left it in Mr. Laffan's office.

5064. Do you swear positively that it was £30 you claimed?—I recollect it. That is the impression always on my mind that it was £30, sir.

5065. Can you recollect it with any degree of certainty?—I always recollected it.

5066. You are quite sure it was £30?—Yes.

Mr. M. J. Laffan.

Mr. M. J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5067. Mr. Laffan, can you explain how this comes to be £35 in the book?—I cannot say. If he put in a claim for £30 I did not make it £35 for him. I gave it as I got it.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5068. Do you know, Mr. Biggin, what has become of this claim?—I do not know, sir.

5069. Had you the claim before you when you entered it?—I think I had.

5070. Did you alter it?—I do not think I did, sir.

John B. O'Meara.—I believe Mr. Munster published a notice that the claims were to be in in a certain time. As far as I recollect it was £30. It was my determination to name that sum. I do not recollect otherwise.

John B. O'Meara.

John B. O'Meara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5071. The sum of £3 was paid by Mr. Patrick Laffan to you?—Yes, sir.

5072. And was it on account of services you had rendered in the office?—I understood it so, sir.

Mr. M. J. Laffan.

Mr. M. J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5073. Mr. Laffan, can you explain how it happens that that payment does not appear here?—It has no business to appear there.

5074. Was he not one of the assistants at the election?—Yes, but when I come to account for the £513, that will appear then.

5075. £513 over and above this list of expenses?—Not at all. Mr. Richardson charges me with £513; when I come to discharge myself of the charge, you will find that £3 in the items.

5076. But not included in these items?—There are items put down there, canvassers, messengers, clerks, &c., put down in globo.

5077. And this is included in them?—Yes, quite so.

John B. O'Meara.

John B. O'Meara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5078. Had you any conversation with your father or brother about the amount of your claim? Did you mention to them what you were going to put in the claim for?—They were not aware of the amount of my claim. My father, after I put in the claim, asked me had I put in a claim for my services, and I named something under the sum I put in—considerably lower; I do not know how much, but it was considerably lower, what I mentioned to my father.

5079. Did he make any remark as to the amount being too little, or that you ought to claim £30?—No, sir, he never named a sum to me to claim.

5080. Then who made you alter the small sum that you first mentioned to your father to £30 which you claimed?—This I did of myself, sir.

5081. Did you say to me a moment ago that it was after you put in the claim you told your father a lower sum? Therefore this conversation with your father was after you put in the claim?—He asked me, I recollect, both before, after, and previous to my putting in a claim; but I believe my father was not aware of my putting it in.

John B. O'Meara.

5082. You told him a sum very much lower than the sum you did put in?—Yes.

5083. Did you mention that lower sum, because you thought your father would require you to pay him the sum you were to get?—Probably some motive like that actuated me to do it.

5084. Then you believe that your father would have demanded the money?—I am sure he had a right to it. I must confess I earn little or nothing for my father. I am quite dependent on my father.

Catherine Hayes Looby sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Catherine Hayes Looby.

5085. Your good man here told us that he got £30 at the election?—He did, the morning of the election.

5086. The morning of the election?—Yes.

5087. He told us he does not know the man that gave it to him?—So he told us too.

5088. Did any persons come to you the night before to tell you that they wanted to see him?—They did, sir.

5089. Who came?—I could not tell you who it was, sir, now. I disremember.

5090. Did any person come to you more than once about your husband's vote?—Mr. O'Beirne came one day to me and asked me for it, and I said himself was not there. He said he promised it to him, and I said I did not know which.

5091. Did anyone come from Mr. Munster for his vote?—No.

5092. Do you know Patsey Cunningham?—I do.

5093. Was he with you?—No, sir.

5094. I suppose your husband told you how he got the money?—He told me from a man, and he did not know him, in a room above in Corcoran's; and he did not know who it was, and he had not his specs to see who it was.

5095. What brought him to Corcoran's hotel that morning?—Because it is there all the meetings was.

5096. Did you see him when he got up that morning?—I did, sir.

5097. When he was going away from you did you ask him, "Tom, where are you going?"—I asked him no questions.

5098. You knew where he was going?—I did.

5099. To Corcoran's?—Yes.

5100. What did he go there for?—I suppose to meet the rest of the voters.

5101. You knew he had made up his mind, at that time, to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

5102. I want you to tell me shortly, who was it that told you he would get the £30?—No one, until he brought it down.

5103. Did you ever know or hear anything about it?—I knew nothing about it until he brought it down and gave it to me to keep it.

5104. Were you very much surprised when he gave it to you?—I was not, for I always had plenty of money before it.

5105. I do not mean that—what I mean is, were you surprised at his getting £30 for his vote?—I was not.

5106. Had you heard that he was going to get it?—I did not, until he brought it in and gave it to me to put it up.

5107. Why were you not surprised?—I was not surprised.

5108. Did you know that others got the same amount?—I did not know nor see anyone to get it. If I knew any more about it I would tell you. I was not there, day nor night, to know anything about it.

5109. Was your son there when the old man came back with the money?—He was not, sir.

5110. Your daughter was, I believe?—She was, sir

Michael Looby sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Michael Looby.

5111. Do you know how old the jennet was?—About five years old? five, or beyond it; I could not say which. I am a bad judge of them, sir, unless a cow or a sheep.

5112. We heard that your father got £30 the morning of the election?—Yes, sir.

5113. And your father told us you were pressing him the night before to go to Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, I did, sir, to go to the meeting.

5114. Who told you to try to get him up to Corcoran's?—No one at all but myself.

5115. He would not go up that night?—No, sir.

5116. But he got up in the morning and went there?—Yes, sir.

5117. I suppose he told you how he got the money?—He told me he got the money at Corcoran's hotel, from some person he did not know.

5118. Do you know Patsey Cunningham?—I do, sir.

5119. Had you any talk with him about it?—I had not.

5120. Never?—Never, because I was off and on to Liverpool with cattle.

5121. But you were at home at the time of the £30?—I was at home that morning.

5122. And you were also at home the night before?—I was, sir.

5123. And you knew that Mr. Munster's people wanted to have your father go up to Corcoran's?—I did not know which.

5124. Sure you know that some of the boys came down for him?—No, sir, not to my knowledge.

5125. Why did you press him to go up? What was Mr. Munster to you more than Mr. O'Beirne?—By gor, nothing, sir.

5126. Why, then, did you press him to go up to Corcoran's?—When he was inclined to vote for him.

5127. How was it your father went up and got the money?—I do not know how he got it. All I know he got £20 for his jennet, and £30 after, and that is all I know. There is the truth for you.

5128. You do not know how it was that he was brought up to this man at Corcoran's?—I do not, sir.

5129. Had you any talk with Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Never, sir.

5130. Had you anything to say to the selling of the jennet?—Not a word; I was not at home at all when he was sold.

5131. Did you consider the jennet sold at a high price?—No, I considered the jennet worth ten or twelve pounds; any day we could get that for him.

5132. If ten or twelve pounds was the value, twenty pounds was a good price?—By gor! it was a good price.

Thomas Looby.—I refused £14 for him two years before from a gentleman within a mile of the town.

Sixth Day.
October 9.
Mrs. Bridget Corcoran.

Mrs. Bridget Corcoran sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

5133. Are you the owner of a hotel in this town?—Yes.

5134. Your hotel, I believe, or a portion of it, was taken by Mr. Munster for the last election?—Yes.

5135. The night before the election I believe you had several persons in your house?—Yes.

5136. Do you know who occupied that night one of your rooms known as "bed-room No. 6"?—No, I have no knowledge at all of who occupied it.

5137. You keep books, of course?—Yes, but my place is in the bar, and my servants notice all parties coming into the hotel; and during Mr. Munster's time—during the election—I had no recourse to his rooms upstairs.

5138. Was bed-room No. 6 one of his rooms?—Well, no; but I believe they used that room. Mr. Munster used the lower floor, a large drawing-room and two bed-rooms. Any room they wished they had the use of; I did not prevent them.

5139. Was No. 6 one of the bed-rooms for which you were paid?—No, I was not paid. It was for a large drawing-room and two bed-rooms.

5140. Was No. 6 one of those bed-rooms?—No.

5141. But you stated to me that you had no objection to their using other rooms, and No. 6 was used by Mr. Munster's people?—It might without my knowledge. I had no objection to their using it.

5142. Did you not say that it was actually one of the rooms used by his people?—My servant told me so.

5143. What is that servant's name?—Catherine Duggan.

5144. Have you her still?—She left me after the election.

5145. Where is she now?—She was living with Mrs. Dolan of the Main-street since.

5146. Is she there still?—I do not know.

5147. Did you ascertain why she had left?—No.

5148. Is Catherine Duggan a native of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

5149. Do you know what her people here are?—I do not know, indeed.

5150. What other servants had you in the hotel? I want to find out who was the person that slept in that room. It has been proved that Mr. Thomas Luby went to your house and was taken upstairs to that bed-room; that after knocking at the door the door was opened, and he went into the bed-room; that there was a candle lighting there, and a man in his trowsers and shirt, who seems to have got out of bed, then and there gave him £30?—That was the only servant I had that night to my rooms.

5151. You understand that, however disagreeable it may be to you, it is your duty, under the obligation of your oath, to give us every assistance to find out who that person was. Is there any servant in your house that will be able to give us any information?—There is no servant in my house that knows anything about it.

5152. Had you not a boots?—No, I had only a kitchen maid and servant.

5153. But no man attended?—No.

5154. Was Catherine Duggan the only one who had recourse to the bed-rooms?—Yes, she was the only one that could tell that.

5155. Mr. Molloy.—Who used to attend the dinner-table?—She was the only servant that used to attend the table. The kitchen servant always attended her, brought what she required to the doors, and then she attended the rooms.

5156. Mr. Griffin.—Do you remember, at all, a man named Murrin, or some name like that, who was some servant in the employment of Mr. Leahy?—Yes, I remember him.

5157. What was his name exactly?—I think his name was Morrogh.

5158. What was his Christian name?—I do not know.

5159. He was stopping most of the time at Cunningham's, I believe?—This man that I mean slept at the hotel.

5160. How often did he sleep at the hotel?—He slept there during the time he remained.

5161. How long did he remain?—Well, I do not remember. I am sure he remained for a week.

5162. That was the week of the election, I suppose?—No, I cannot say exactly; I remember him being there.

5163. Do you not remember seeing him there during the election—Mr. Leahy was there then?—Mr. Leahy was.

5164. Do you not remember that this man of whom we are speaking was there too?—I remember him being there, but I cannot say he was there during the week of the election.

5165. What kind of man was he?—A middle-sized, dark-complexioned man.

5166. What age was he—was he a young man?—No; middle-aged—not a young man.

5167. About forty?—Yes, I think so.

5168. What was he doing about Mr. Leahy do you know?—I do not know. I was always in the bar, at my own business.

5169. You saw this man going in and out the hotel?—Yes.

5170. You do not know had he been stopping at Cunningham's before he came to you?—No, I think he came direct to me.

5171. He is not a Cashel man, I believe?—I think not. I believe he came with some of Mr. Munster's party.

5172. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—With whom did you make the arrangement for your house during the election?—With Mr. Richardson.

5173. What were you to be paid for it?—£30 for the use of a drawing-room and two bed-rooms.

5174. During the election?—During the election.

5175. How much money have you been paid by Mr. Richardson or anybody else on account of the use of your hotel and anything consumed in it during the election by Mr. Munster's people?—I have received in all £228, including cars.

5176. How much was the amount for the cars?—I think I furnished the car bill separately.

Mr. E. H Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

5177. Mr. Biggin, have you Mrs. Corcoran's car bill?—No, sir.

Mrs. Corcoran.

Mrs. Corcoran's examination resumed by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

5178. Can you tell me how much it was, Mrs. Corcoran?—I could let you know.

5179. You said £228 was what you got altogether; £30 was for the use of the rooms; the portion for cars you are not able to tell me at present?—No, but the cars are included.

5180. What was the rest of the money for?—For Mr. Munster's party; they were staying from the first time he came to Cashel—they were living at the hotel.

5181. Mr. Leahy was stopping there?—He was.

5182. And his bill was paid by Mr. Munster?—All went in the general account.

5183. Was Mr. Patrick Laffan staying there?—He sometimes dined.

5184. Did he sleep there?—He did, I think, once or twice he happened to sit up late.

5185. Do you recollect if he slept there the night before the election?—I could not recollect.

5186. There were a great number of people there that night?—Yes.

5187. And we understand there was dancing and great hilarity amongst some of the company?—I know they occupied the coffee-room and amused themselves the best way they could.

5188. Were they voters?—I cannot say.

5189. You surely know the voters?—Very few voters I know.

5190. You are a long time living in Cashel?—Yes.

5191. Then you know a great many of the voters of Cashel—you saw them there that night?—There were a great many in the house that were not voters.

5192. And I am sure there were a great many who were voters?—Well, I suppose so.

5193. And you supplied drink to them, I suppose, that night?—There were refreshments that night.

5194. And of course you can tell the value of the drink you supplied that night?—The refreshment given that night was ordered by Mr. Cahill, which I am not paid for yet.

5195. What Mr. Cahill is that?—He lives in the Main-street.

5196. Is that old Mr. Cahill?—Yes.

5197. Do you mean all that was ordered that night?—Yes; he was the principal person that ordered. He said he would be accountable for what went into the room.

5198. But there were several rooms occupied?—There were.

5199. We have it that Mr. John Bernard O'Meara and some of his friends were in one room, and never saw those that were dancing at all?—They were.

5200. But refreshment was sent to that room?—When the servant came to the bar I gave whatever was wanted, and did not mind where it went to.

5201. Do you mean that what was sent to the coffee-room was not included in the general bill?—All went into the general bill; but when Mr. Richardson was paying he would not pay for the supply to the coffee-room, and he deducted it, and I am not paid it yet.

5202. How much was the amount of it?—£20 12*s.* 6*d.*, I think.

5203. I understood that the amount you got was £258?—The use of the rooms was not included in the account. I was paid that after the agreement was made.

5204. Then the £228 was altogether for refreshments and provisions?—Yes.

5205. £20 12*s.* 6*d.* remains unpaid?—Yes.

5206. And Mr. Richardson told you it should be deducted?—Yes, that he could not certify it.

5207. Did he tell you that it would be paid at any future time, or lead you to suppose it would?—No, he said nothing.

5208. Did you ever ask Mr. Munster for it?—I did; I applied for it to Mr. Munster, and got no answer.

5209. Did you apply to anybody else?—I applied to Miss Sterne for the balance of the election account, and got no answer.

5210. Was it by letter you applied?—Yes.

5211. Did you ever apply verbally to anyone?—No, not to any of Mr. Munster's people.

5212. Did you ask Mr. Cahill?—No, I did not ask Mr. Cahill a word about it.

5213. You never asked Mr. Cahill?—No.

5214. I suppose you do not think Mr. Cahill is the person to pay it?—I do not know.

5215. Mr. Munster wishes to know if you had a son in the employment of Mr. O'Beirne in the bank at the time of the election?—Yes, I had.

Patrick Cunningham was called, but did not appear; Thomas Meara was called, but did not appear.

Patrick Hackett sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Patrick Hackett.

5216. Mr. Hackett, you live at Mrs. Dolan's I believe, in this town?—Yes, sir.

5217. And you manage her business?—Yes.

5218. May I ask what the business is?—General business.

5219. Is that the place where Catherine Duggan was lately a servant?—Yes.

5220. Is she there still?—No, she left on Sunday from Mrs. Dolan's, for the purpose of going to England with her husband some day in the week.

5221. Do you know if she has left the town?—I am quite sure she has.

5222. And she has got married since?—She was married previously; I think she got married about the time of the election.

[Mr. Munster.—I am in a position to give some information about that person. I gave the money to enable her to be married, about eight months ago, at a rough guess.]

5223. I believe, Mr. Hackett, that you were interested about Mr. Munster at the last election?—In the very last days of it I was, sir; I refused to interfere in the early part of it.

5224. Are you a voter yourself?—No sir.

5225. But I believe you have considerable influence?—I thought I had, but I refused to use it until the very last day.

5226. But you did ultimately use it?—I did; those on whom I called were pledged, and I did not press the matter.

5227. Who were they?—I sent for one or two, and they refused to come.

5228. Who were they?—Pat Halloran and Jer. Neill.

5229. Are those persons voters of the town of Cashel?—They are voters on the Commons.

5230. Anybody else?—I called on one or two others, and they were pledged also.

5231. On whom did you call?—Dan Dwyer and Edward Keating.

5232. You sent for Halloran and Neill?—Yes, and they refused to come to me; I called on the others and they were pledged.

5233. Did you not call on, or send for, more than those four?—Never.

5234. Do you know anything of any money having been given to any voter at the last election?—Not to my knowledge.

5235. Or given for voters?—I heard of it, but beyond hearing I do not know who got it.

5236. Did you give any money to anyone yourself?—I did, sir.

5237. How much?—I paid two persons two thirty-fives.

5238. To whom was the first £35 given?—One was for John Molony, and the other for Halley.

5239. Is Molony a voter?—Yes, sir.

5240. Where did you pay the money to John Molony?—In Mrs. Dolan's house I paid it.

5241. That was for his vote at the election?—Well, it appears to me that it was, for the money was left with me to dispose of it.

5242. Is that John Molony of Carron?—Yes, sir.

5243. On what day did you pay him that £35?—I cannot say exactly, but I think it was some day in April.

SIXTH DAY.
October 9.
Patrick Hackett.

5244. Was it after the election?—Long after the election—even after the petition.

5245. Who gave you the money to give to him?—It was left to me by Mr. Laffan.

5246. By which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Patrick Laffan. He told me those persons would call on me, and we had no further conversation about it.

5247. When did Mr. Patrick Laffan give you the money?—I think it was some time previous to the election.

5248. Was it long previous to the election?—Not long.

5249. Molony came to you in April; was it by appointment, or how was it?—He saw me some time previously and asked me would I give the money. I told him hold on for some time, that it was all right. Then he came subsequently.

5250. Did he come to you more than once?—He came once, and I told him it would be all right.

5251. Did he say that anybody told him to come to you?—No, never. Oh, I understood that there was an arrangement between himself and some friends of Mr. Munster.

5252. Who were the friends of Mr. Munster with whom there was an arrangement?—I think it must be Mr. Laffan.

5253. On the last occasion that he came to you, when you paid him the money, did any conversation occur between you; did he say that anybody but Mr. Patrick Laffan told him to come?—He did not say then, sir.

5254. Did he at any time?—He never told me that anyone told him come.

5255. Had you any conversation with any person about this money except Mr. Patrick Laffan and John Molony?—Never.

5256. Had you any conversation with any other person interested for Mr. Munster?—No, sir. I never went to their committee rooms, or mixed with them at all.

5257. Was it in Mrs. Dolan's house that Mr. Laffan asked you to keep this money?—I think it was in Mrs. Dolan's garden. I kept it in a private drawer. I had no conversation with others about it. Anybody never spoke to me about it.

5258. To whom did you pay another £35?—To Michael Halley.

5259. Was his name also mentioned by Mr. Patrick Laffan as a person who was to be paid by you?—Yes.

5260. And it was for his vote?—Well, I do not know, sir. It must have been, I fancy.

5261. Did he say it was for anything else?—He did not say it was for anything, but I understood that pretty well. I do not know that they gave any value. I am not aware they did.

5262. Is it Michael Halley?—Michael Halley.

5263. Where does he live?—In Carron also.

5264. Is Carron in the town of Cashel?—On the Commons.

5265. After you got the money from Mr. Patrick Laffan how soon did Halley call?—Some short time after the election, but I refused to give it then, as the petition was talked about.

5266. Did you give that as a reason for refusing to give the money then?—I did.

5267. Then it was perfectly understood between you and those men that they were to get that money for their votes?—I did not tell them; I do not know.

5268. You told them that you would not give them the money until after the petition?—I did.

5269. You were aware that they had voted for Mr. Munster?—I knew they did.

5270. You referred in conversation with them to their having voted for Mr. Munster?—They talked of it.

5271. When did you pay Halley?—The very same time as Molony. I think it was in April, or thereabouts.

5272. Was all the £35 for Halley?—Yes.

5273. That is rather above the usual figure, is it not?—I had nothing to do with the arrangement of the figure.

5274. But it is over it?—I suppose so from what I have heard. I was made the medium.

5275. Is that all the money you got?—That is all. All the money I got I handed back to Mr. Laffan.

5276. How much more did you get?—I kept no account.

5277. How much did you get; give me some idea of the amount?—I got altogether, I think, over £100.

5278. That is including the £70 you have now accounted for?—All inclusive. I handed back the difference to Mr. Laffan.

5279. Did you get all the money together from Mr. Laffan?—I think I got it two different times.

5280. You got £70 in one sum, was that the first?—I did not get any particular sum. I think I got £80 or £90 first.

5281. I understood you to say it was in Mrs. Dolan's garden Mr. Patrick Laffan gave you those two sums of £35 each, and told you that John Moloney and Michael Halley would call on you?—I did not mention that; I mentioned a sum of money; I did not say any particular sum.

5282. You got over £100 in two payments?—Something over £100.

5283. It was given to you in two payments?—In two payments at two different times.

5284. When you got the first portion, Mr. Patrick Laffan said that John Moloney and Michael Halley would call on you, and that they were to get £35 each?—Yes.

5285. What other men did he say?—He did not say any other men, but he was under the impression that I could influence others.

5286. Were there no names mentioned?—No names mentioned.

5287. Was the rest of the money to be applied at your discretion?—I believe so: that I might use it as I pleased.

5288. To influence votes at the election?—I called on those people.

5289. It was given to you to influence votes at the election?—I understood so.

5290. Was it after you got the money that you called on the people you have named?—It was.

5291. Just mention them again?—I sent for Halloran and Neill.

5292. Those were people from the Commons?—Yes.

5293. And you called on Keating and Dwyer?—Yes.

5294. Are these also people from the Commons?—Yes.

5295. Which Dwyer is that?—Dan Dwyer.

5296. Did you mention anything about the money to Keating or Dwyer?—I do not think I did. When I found they were engaged I did not press them.

5297. Did you mention anything about money to anybody else?—I do not think I did; I had no conversation with any others with regard to money or terms.

5298. Had you any communication with reference to votes with the wives, or daughters, or sisters, of any voters?—No, sir. I spoke to another person; I think her name was Alice Stapleton, the daughter of Daniel Stapleton. I asked her would her father vote for Mr. Munster, and she gave me no decided answer. I think her father voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

5299. Did you tell her that something would be received by his voting for Mr. Munster?—I think I gave her that to understand, sir.

5300. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How did Halloran and Neill vote?—I think they voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

5301. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know a man named Cunningham?—I know two of the name, Thomas and Patrick; Thomas is the father of Patrick.

5302. Do you know anyone else named Cunningham?—I do not know a third person named Cunningham.

5303. Do you know Richard Cunningham?—No, sir.

5304. Do you know Richard Cummins?—I do, sir.

5305. Have you seen Patrick Cunningham lately?—Not for the last week or more; some short time.

5306. Cummins, I believe, is a voter on the Commons?—Yes, sir.

5307. Did you ever see him about his vote?—I never spoke to him at all, sir, on that occasion, with reference to the election.

5308. Now, I must ask you if you knew anything of the election of 1865?—No, sir, I mean so far as to interfere, but I did not directly or indirectly interfere by offering a bribe or anything that way. I talked to the people.

5309. I did not ask you very plainly about Dwyer and Keating. When you called on them you found they were pledged?—Yes, sir.

5310. Did you mention to them that there was something to be got by their voting for Mr. Munster?—I did not broach the matter. They were very stern and said they should go with the neighbours.

5311. To whom were they pledged?—To Mr. O'Beirne. I did not press them.

5312. They said they should go with the neighbours; which neighbours?—There appeared to have been a body pledged to vote for Mr. O'Beirne—all the Commons people.

5313. Halloran and Neill did not come to you?—No, they did not come.

5314. You never saw them or spoke to them on the subject?—Not before the election; I did since.

5315. Had you any conversation with them about money?—No.

5316. Or with any others of the Commons people?—No, I never touched on the subject after the election. I kept to my own legitimate business.

5317. You have told us very frankly, I am bound to say. Do you know of any other matters touching this inquiry, than those you have already told us?—No, sir.

5318. Mr. Griffin.—Did you hear of any promises made to voters?—No, sir, I did not mix myself up much with it.

5319. When Dwyer and Keating told you that they were pledged to Mr. O'Beirne, did they say anything about having passed notes?—No, sir, I did not enter it that.

5320. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Can you fix the time when the money was given to you by Mr. Laffan?—I do not think it was more than a week before the election. It was not at all a week, because I refused to interfere at all until after the nomination. After the nomination I got it.

5321. That is, the day before the election?—It must have been after the nomination day, for I refused to have anything at all to say in the matter until after the nomination.

5322. Are you quite sure that it was before the polling was over?—It must have been.

5323. Therefore it was either the day between the nomination and the polling, or it was the day of polling?—Either of these days.

5324. Who pressed you before then to interfere?—I think Mr. Michael Laffan asked me to give a helping hand, and I gave some reasons to him not to interfere.

5325. What were the reasons?—Mr. Vincent Scully was a candidate. There is a relative of mine doing business for them. They called on me to interfere, and I told them I had no influence. As I did not do anything for Mr. Scully I would not do anything against him. When he withdrew I thought I would do what I could for Mr. Munster.

5326. When did you get the remainder of the money from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Immediately after the election.

5327. You got two sums; the first after the nomination day?—Yes.

5328. When did you get the second?—It must have been the day after. I must have got the money first on the nomination day, for I got it on two different days.

5329. On two different days?—Yes, or early on one, and late the same day, I got the two sums.

5330. You got the two sums before the election, and after the nomination?—Yes, sir.

5331. After you knew you would not use any more of the money you handed back the difference?—Yes.

5332. How much did you hand back?—I assure you I could not tell you exactly. I know he kindly pressed me to take something for my own services and I would not have it. I wrote to him to that effect.

5333. You wrote to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I wrote to him to say that I would not have anything for my own services.

James Mulcahy sworn; examined by Mr. Molloy.

James Mulcahy.

5334. Do you live at Bohermoor?—I do, sir.

5335. Are you one of the Commons people?—No, sir, for I live in the town.

5336. Did you vote at the last election?—I did, your worship.

5337. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

5338. You have a family?—I have, sir.

5339. How many sons have you?—Six.

5340. Tell me their names?—I have but five now—Andrew, Thomas, Michael, Edmond, and John. I had James until a month ago.

5341. How old is Michael?—Something about twenty-five years.

5342. Is Tom older or younger?—He is older; but Michael is a clerk in Clonmel; he is not here at all.

5343. How old is Tom?—About twenty-eight or twenty-nine.

5344. What was he doing at the election?—By gor, I see him doing nothing, only running about.

5345. Was he engaged on any side in the election?—I cannot say. I am on my oath on the brink of the grave. I didn't know what they were doing. I always should stay inside, I am bad in my health.

5346. Does Tom live with you?—He do.

5347. And does he mind your business?—Yes.

5348. What business do you follow?—Always at contracts.

5349. Roads?—Roads; every place I can make by a contract.

5350. Is it Tom that always attends to the doing of the contracts for you?—It is himself and two more.

5351. Was Tom employed by either candidate at the last election?—I do not know. He might for what I know. He never told me about it.

5352. Who canvassed you in the last election?—Mr. Laffan's father, old Mr. Laffan, I being his tenant, and he asked me would I vote for his friend, and I told him I would.

5353. Was he the only person that canvassed you at the last election?—By gor he was, and Mr. Michael Laffan and Mr. Munster after that promise came to my room, and I told Mr. Munster that I would vote for him.

5354. As he was Dan Laffan's friend?—Yes.

5355. Did you vote at the election of '65?—I did.

5356. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

5357. Now why did you turn round from Mr. O'Beirne?—Why should I go against my landlord?

5358. Did you not go against your landlord's friend in '65?—I did not, sir.

5359. Did you not vote against John Lanigan in '65?—I did, sir, certainly.

5360. Was not Mr. Laffan supporting John Lanigan in '65?—He was.

Sixth Day. October 9.

James Mulcahy.

5361. And you went against him?—I did.

5362. What did Mr. O'Beirne do to displease you in the meantime?—He did nothing to me, nor I asked him nothing, nor I got nothing from either one or the other this thirty-five years.

5363. Did you vote for John Lanigan in '59?—I did not, sir; I had no vote at that time.

5364. He was a Tipperary man?—He was, sir.

5365. And you would not vote for him?—I did not.

5366. Even for your landlord?—I did not.

5367. What was it that Mr. O'Beirne did to displease you. Surely he did not change his principles or politics after the time you voted for him?—When my landlord asked me to vote along with him, I told him I would.

5368. Did he not ask you in '65 to vote along with him for John Lanigan?—He did not, sir.

5369. He did not?—No, sir, Mr. Laffan did not.

5370. Did Mr. Lanigan himself canvass you in '65?—He did.

5371. And you would not vote for him?—I would not.

5372. Why did you prefer Mr. O'Beirne to John Lanigan in '65?—Because Mr. Laffan asked me and I did not know Mr. Munster's people.

5373. I am asking you Mr. Mulcahy, why in '65 you preferred Mr. O'Beirne to Mr. Lanigan?—It was all to my own wishes.

5374. But why, tell me, did you prefer Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, I don't know.

5375. Come now, tell me why you voted for him. Did you not get money in '65?—Money?

5376. Yes?—This thirty-five years I didn't get the value of that stick, sir, by any election, nor ask it, nor never was promised it, nor never expected it.

5377. Was it not the boys that told you you should vote for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Faith it was not; it was not, your worship.

5378. Did your sons get anything in '65?—Nothing.

5379. Did your sons tell you that you should desert Mr. O'Beirne and vote for Mr. Munster?—I should have my own way.

5380. Is your wife alive?—She is.

5381. You would pay regard to what the Mrs. would tell you, and the boys?—My mind was made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne at that time.

5382. Did any person say to you, "oh, you cannot go with Mr. O'Beirne this time; you must go with the person Tom is engaged for"?—I was checked by no one, nor I am not obliged to do so by no man, either landlord or anybody else.

5383. Did any person tell you you could not go with Mr. O'Beirne this time as Tom was engaged?—No, it was myself that told Mr. O'Beirne when he came to my house, I would not vote for him.

5384. Did Tom tell you that he was to get anything?—No, nor to my knowledge he did not get anything.

5385. Did he tell you he had a claim on Mr. Munster?—I suppose he was running about canvassing for him.

5386. Was he doing it for nothing?—For nothing! faith, I don't know. He got nothing at all events.

5387. You know all about the claim he has on Mr. Munster for what he did for him at the election?—No, sir.

5388. Would you be astonished to find he sent in a bill to Mr. Munster?—He did.

5389. So you know that he sent in a bill to Mr. Munster?—A bill! I can give my solemn oath I do not; on the mortal spot that I don't know it. A bill!

5390. Did you hear that he sent in a bill for his services?—I can give the same oath that I didn't hear it.

5391. Nor that he sent in an account?—Nor sent in an account.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. Molloy.

5392. Mr. Biggin have you got claim number eleven?—Yes. [Hands it in.]

James Mulcahy.

James Mulcahy's examination resumed; by Mr. Molloy.

5393. Are you the person in whose name the contracts are taken?—Yes.

5394. Who sends in the proposal for you? Do you write it out yourself?—My eldest son, Andrew; and I go with it myself.

5395. Tell me, is that Andrew's writing? (is handed claim No. 11)—Begar, I don't think it is.

5396. Tell me whose handwriting you think it is?—Begar, I don't know.

5397. I do not want you to swear positively?—If I was on my oath I do not, sir.

5398. But you are on your oath?—Sure I am, sir. [Is handed claim No. 69]. Begar, that is very like Andrew's writing.

5399. Do you not think both are like Andrew's?—I don't know.

5400. What was he doing for Mr. Laffan?—He was at business for him for over three months.

5401. What was he doing for Mr. Munster during the three months?—Writing and messaging.

5402. How old is Andrew?—I believe about thirty-two.

5403. Does he live with you also?—Also.

5404. When was he employed at those messages for Mr. Munster?—Before the election.

5405. Who employed him?—At the first time that Mr. Munster came to town.

5406. How soon after Mr. Munster came to town was he employed?—I can't tell.

5407. Who employed him?—I believe it is Mr. Michael Laffan.

5408. How much of his time was taken up by this employment?—Faith, I don't know, sir.

5409. You live in the same house?—By my credit I don't know. Part of the days he would be out the whole day; other days a few hours, and so on.

5410. What did he tell you he was to get for that employment?—He didn't tell me anything.

5411. Did you not say to him, "if you go on this way neglecting the roads, it will not do"?—He never handled a shovel nor a spade.

5412. Did he tell you what he was to get?—He never did.

5413. Did he ever speak to you about how you were to vote?—Never to my knowledge.

5414. Had you any conversation with him about how you were to vote?—I had not.

5415. Did you ever speak to him about it?—Never, your worship; I am telling you the truth. I am a man that generally—mostly give all my time, saving your worship's presence, in bed, and I am badly healthed.

5416. Did your son get anything on account of the election?—Not to my knowledge.

5417. Listen to this [claim for £10, dated 7th December, 1868, read]?—It is not the same way with Tom as Andrew.

5418. Was Tom as busy as Andrew?—He was not then.

Thomas Meara sworn; examined by Mr. Griffin.

5419. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election, I believe?—Yes, sir.

5420. You are the father of Mr. John Bernard O'Meara, who was examined here to-day?—Yes, sir.

5421. When were you first canvassed for Mr. Munster?—Well, I couldn't exactly say the day or the week, but Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me before Mr. Munster.

5422. What did you say to Mr. O'Beirne when he went and canvassed you?—I told him I would reserve my vote.

5423. Did you vote in the election of '65?—No.

5424. You had no vote then?—No, sir.

5425. You had not made up your mind how you would vote when Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you?—I intended my vote for Mr. Munster, knowing he would be a fit and proper person to represent our borough.

5426. Had Mr. Munster at that time employed your son?—Not to my knowledge at that time.

5427. Do you remember when that interview occurred?—I have not the day of the month nor the month, but I know some time about eleven months ago, when Mr. Munster came to town. To the best of my knowledge it is nearly eleven months ago.

5428. At the time that Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you Mr. Munster had come to town?—Mr. Munster was in town before Mr. O'Beirne, sir; but Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me before Mr. Munster.

5429. That would be in the early part of November or the end of October?—I don't know, sir.

[Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—It was from the 20th to the 25th October—say from the 18th to the 26th—that was about the time.]

5430. You knew at that time that Mr. Munster was coming?—I heard he was coming.

5431. When you spoke to Mr. O'Beirne Mr. Munster was in town?—Mr. Munster was spoken of before that.

5432. Had Mr. Munster arrived at the time Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you?—I cannot say; I believe not. In a few days, I believe. I cannot swear to it, sir.

5433. Your son told us that he was engaged about the 20th September—that was a month or very nearly a month before Mr. Munster came to town?—My recollection leads me, sir, that Mr. Munster was in town previous to Mr. O'Beirne.

5434. If your son was engaged before Mr. Munster came, he was engaged before you were canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—He was working in Mr. Laffan's office; he was working for Mr. Laffan, I believe, previous to the late election of Cashel, doing his own private business.

5435. Do you remember your son telling you that he was engaged about the election?—I believe it was Doctor Laffan got him the job. I don't know, sir, any more than I knew he spent some time in Mr. Munster's hotel.

5436. That was at the time of the election?—During the election.

5437. Did he ever tell you that he got £3 as part payment?—He told me he got a small sum of money, but I cannot say how much it was.

5438. That was before Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you?—After, sir. Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me long after.

5439. You heard of this employment of your son before Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you?—My son told me he got a small trifle from Mr. Laffan.

5440. It was after your son told you that that Mr. O'Beirne came to you?—I think Mr. O'Beirne came to me, sir, before that, to the best of my knowledge; for Mr. O'Beirne came to me and canvassed the Main-street of Cashel in the first days he entered Cashel; and my son was doing business previous—before that, I believe—for Mr. Laffan.

5441. After the election, do you remember a conversation with him about a claim on Mr. Munster?—I never heard it, sir.

5442. Your son told us that you and he had some talk about Mr. Munster's owing him money for the work he had done during the election?—If my son stated that, sir, I do not believe it to be true; for he and I never spoke about his statement to Mr. Munster.

5443. Did you know that your son had sent in a claim?—I heard he did, sir.

5444. From whom did you hear it?—I heard a rumour in my own house. My son is a schoolboy, sir, and I am a working man. I am from six in the morning to ten at night at work, and I have no communication whatever in the street.

5445. What is your occupation?—I am a tailor by trade, sir.

5446. When you heard this rumour in your house did you say anything about it to your son?—I never interfered, sir.

5447. Did you ask him anything about it?—Never.

5448. Did he tell you anything about it?—Never.

5449. What is your son's name?—John Meara, sir.

5450. If your son said he told you about the claim would he be making a mistake?—I might be making a mistake; but I don't remember it.

5451. Did you ever do work for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

5452. What did you do for him?—I couldn't account, sir. I am working for Mr. Munster and his friends since he was a fortnight in town, up to the present day.

5453. How much do you think you got from him altogether?—I couldn't tell you. Every job of work I done for Mr. Munster I furnished him with my bill, and he paid on the spot. I am a poor man, and I could not let my bill remain three or four months. He always paid my little bills at all times.

5454. Did they come to £50?—No, sir, nor £30.

5455. Did they come to £20?—I don't know, sir; but I am certain they didn't come to half the sum you mentioned.

5456. That is, they did not come to £25?—To the best of my knowledge they did not.

5457. Would you swear they did not amount to £25?—I kept no book account of my bills to Mr. Munster.

5458. What work did you do for him?—I couldn't tell you, sir. Can a tradesman that is dealing with three or four hundred people keep an account of one man's custom? Eh, I ask you?

5459. Mr. Molloy.—Answer the question?—Yes, but that is getting too good.

5460. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—You are able to answer the question very well if you like. Answer the question—what work did you do for Mr. Munster? You had no customer like Mr. Munster, giving you four or five pounds worth at a time?—I had not, sir; and if I had four or five like him I wouldn't care for the gentry of Cashel. I made for Mr. Munster and made for his sons, and made for his servants, and made for his friends.

5461. Mr. Griffin.—You did all his tailoring work?—I did, sir.

5462. When did you first do any work for him?—First—he wasn't long in town at the time.

5463. Was the first piece of work you did for him before or after Mr. O'Beirne came to you?—I think Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me long before.

5464. You told me that Mr. O'Beirne did not come to you until after Mr. Munster?—Yes.

5465. You say Mr. Munster gave you work almost immediately on his coming?—I think to the best of my knowledge Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me before Mr. Munster employed me as his tailor.

5466. Are you positive of that?—I am not positive, but to the best of my knowledge.

5467. Do you provide materials for clothes?—No, sir. I have not means for that, sir; but Mr. Munster purchased in the shop and I worked the materials.

5468. Where did Mr. Munster buy the things, do you know?—He bought them in every drapery house in town. He bought them in Cork, in Dublin, in Thomas Meara.

Thurles, and in Cashel. I don't think Mr. Munster had a select place for buying his goods. [Mr. Munster says it was not with the witness, but with his son Mathew, that he dealt.]

5469. Have you a son called Mathew?—Yes, sir.

5470. What is Mathew?—He is my eldest son, sir. It is he measured Mr. Munster.

5471. He is a working tailor?—Yes, sir.

5472. Does he live with you?—He do, sir. I am the conductor of the house. I know my own business.

5473. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Mr. Munster says it was with Mathew he was dealing, and you say it was with you?—I consider when I am the man of the house it was with me Mr. Munster dealt.

[Mr. Munster.—Would you please to ask the witness, sir, if he ever saw me on his own business in his life?]

5474. Did you ever see Mr. Munster on your own business?—Never.

5475. Mr. Griffin.—Was it your son Mathew that did all the tailoring business for you?—I sent my son on every business to Mr. Munster's. I being the man of the house, my son measured and got his orders.

5476. Do you say you had no conversation with your son about the claim he put in?—No, sir; he told me he put in his claim, and I have no knowledge of it.

5477. He told you he put in his claim?—Yes.

5478. Do you remember whether you thought he asked too much or too little?—No.

5479. You do not remember?—No.

5480. What would you have expected him to do with the amount of his claim, if he got it from Mr. Munster. If he got £20 or £30, do you think he ought to have given any of it to you?—I don't want it from him. I am able to earn.

5481. Would you expect it if he got it?—I don't expect a shilling from him, but he expects a hundred pounds from me.

5482. If he had got the money would you have expected it?—Not a shilling; but I wish he may get money to take him out of the country, because he is a burden in my house.

5483. As he is a burden, I suppose if he got money you would expect it?—I want money from no man. I have hands to earn money.

5484. Mr. Molloy.—Would you not like a little for your vote?—I am not covetous. I have hands to earn money.

5485. Would you not take money for your vote?—If I got money in a fair way I would take it.

5486. Would you not take money for your vote at the election if it was going?—I would, but I was not offered it. I lost the chance.

5487. Mr. Griffin.—How did you lose the chance?—Because I didn't go in the way of getting it.

5488. Mr. Munster is a very charitable man?—I believe he is.

5489. Would you be surprised if Mr. Munster gave you anything now?—I don't expect it, nor I don't want it. I want nothing from no man only my earnings, and that I will get.

5490. Did anyone say he would "make it all right," or offer you any inducement to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not one man connected with Mr. Munster ever made me the slightest promise for my vote.

5491. Mr. Molloy.—Did any person in the world offer you any inducement?—No inducement whatever.

5492. Why, when Mr. Griffin asked you the question, did you say "No person connected with Mr. Munster?"—I am an illiterate man; I might not understand Mr. Griffin. Explain the word, and I'll give an answer.

5493. Mr. Griffin.—My question is, did anybody, on any side, offer you any inducement, or tell you it would be well for you, or offer you any advantage, or tell you it would be all right, or anything of that kind, if you voted for Mr. O'Beirne, or Mr. Munster?—I will tell you, Mr. Griffin. No man at Mr. Munster's side, ever; at Mr. Munster's side, ever made me a promise of a shilling; nor neither did they make me a promise of a shilling at Mr. O'Beirne's side. You are putting the questions very hard to me, gentlemen. Of course I did give my support to Mr. Munster, when I considered Mr. Munster the best man for our unfortunate town.

5494. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—You were getting a good deal of work from him?—I did not know what I would get at the time.

5495. Did you not get work from him?—After the election I earned the most from him; not before the election. No money could induce me, sir.

5496. That is, to vote against your principles?—I couldn't vote for a schemer, and turn my back to an honest man e'er a day.

5497. You would not vote against your principles, but you might vote for a man according to your principles, and take money if he offered it?—If it was legal I would.

5498. Legal or illegal you would take it—we know that very well. Were you not induced to vote for Mr. Munster because he was living here and spending money?—I know the man for a long time.

5499. Answer my question straightforwardly; if you do not, I will do something you do not like?—I don't care, sir.

5500. Answer my question, sir. Were you induced to vote for Mr. Munster because Mr. Munster was living here and spending money, and you expected to get some of it?—I will give an answer to that.

5501. Answer it?—At the time I authorized my son, at the time Mr. Munster came around in his carriage, that I pledged myself.

5502. What did you authorize your son?—I told my son, as being a working man, and not fit to appear in Mr. Munster's carriage, to promise Mr. Munster my support; and the same time I really believe Mr. Munster was not one week in town; nor neither do I believe did I earn £1 of Mr. Munster's money at the present time. It is after Mr. Munster's election whatever I earned I earned it principally.

5503. Go on?—I have no more to say.

5504. That is not an answer to my question. I ask you was it the expectation of money from him that induced you to vote for Mr. Munster?—I am after stating that I considered him the best man.

5505. You only knew him a week. Did he not come here a stranger?—He did, but he bore a character.

5506. From whom?—Do you want to know? I will tell you. From the Bishop of Salford, and from different other clergy.

5507. Did the Bishop of Salford write to you?—He did not.

5508. Mr. Munster was an entire stranger to you?—He was.

5509. An Englishman whom you had never seen or heard of before?—Yes.

5510. And after one week you knew he was the best man for this place?—It was public opinion.

5511. Do you swear it was only public opinion of that kind that influenced you in your vote?—Nothing of the kind, sir. Will you give me a certificate, sir?

5512. Do you know what a certificate is for?—No, but I am told about the town you give it.

5513. Do you not know, on your oath, that a certificate is given to free a man from any penalty incurred by having done corrupt things during the election?—Well, then, I am the last man to do that.

5514. Do you not swear that you gave your vote from high patriotic principle, believing Mr. Munster the best man?—Yes.

5515. Why then do you want a certificate?—I am a working man, sir, and may be called again.

5516. Mr. Molloy.—You were very anxious to have Mr. Munster returned?—It was public opinion, sir.

5517. Did you induce any other persons to vote with you?—No, sir. I work from six o'clock in the morning to ten at night.

5518. I do not want to hear of your work. Did you speak to any persons about voting for Mr. Munster?—Never, sir; I had no influence; nor if I had itself I wouldn't do it. I never done it.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan tenders himself.

Michael J. Laffan.

5519. Witness.—In the evidence of this man's son, my brother the Doctor was brought in—that he said to young Meara this would be a good thing for him. I do not want to have his name mixed up with the election, as he had no part in it. I wish to show what relation he stood in.

5520. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I will hear anything you have to say?—I can state he was not taking any part in the election; that he was merely here on a visit with his father; and that anything he did say was without any authority to interfere in the election, and merely a piece of idle gossip. If the reporter would strike it out——

5521. The reporter for the Commission certainly cannot strike anything out. The others I have nothing to say to. I may say this, however, that I think Doctor Laffan must have an opportunity of saying that for himself, because he must be here unless your brother Patrick comes. If your brother Patrick does not appear we must give the doctor the trouble of coming?—I think my brother Patrick will be here. I have got a letter from the doctor. He does not know where he is, but I have given directions to advertise at the head of the Commission proceedings to find him out.

5522. He was in Dublin a short time ago?—He was, and he is there still, I believe, if he can find him.

5523. If your brother Thomas wishes to be saved the trouble of coming down here, he will do his best to find him.

Mr. John Coman sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

John Coman.

5524. You voted at a good many elections in Cashel, I believe?—Yes, every election since '32.

5525. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—I did.

5526. And took a great interest in his behalf?—Not a bit of it.

5527. You did not?—No indeed.

5528. Did you not take a great interest in the return of Mr. Munster?—No, nor would I vote for him but that I detested the other.

5529. You detested the other candidate?—I detested Mr. O'Beirne for former acts, nor had I my mind made up, good or bad, to vote until I got a letter from Dean Cantwell.

5530. Why did you detest Mr. O'Beirne?—For previous acts in Cashel.

5531. What were the acts for which you detested him?—If I can go back to '57 I will tell you.

5532. We are obliged to go back?—I know Cashel well, and took an active part in the elections here, and I was often proud to be a Cashel man before that election. I saw the greatest men that ever adorned the House of Commons returned from Cashel—Judge Perrin and Chief Baron Woulfe. Until that time I scarcely heard a word, or heard bribery mentioned.

5533. Until what time?—Until '57. I think I heard the late Judge Perrin say that his two elections did not cost him a five pound note. He was first returned in '35. He was not long then when he was made Attorney-General. Poor Woulfe came then, and was returned without opposition.

5534. Was there no contest when Woulfe was returned?—No. There was a contest for Judge Perrin with Pennefather.

5535. Did you hear talk of bribery in Sir Timothy O'Brien's time?—That was in '57.

5536. When was Sir Timothy first elected? was it at the general election of '47?—I believe it was then. He was elected at the time Doctor Stock retired.

5537. Was that Sergeant Stock?—That was Sergeant Stock.

5538. What did you hear about Sir Timothy O'Brien's election in '57?—At that time Mr. Johnson, who was a very celebrated electioneering agent, came to Cashel. He was here two or three years before with two Englishmen, Hughen and MacGarrel. Hughen came first, and could make no way. MacGarrel came afterwards, accompanied with a host of attorneys, and with another rather appropriate name—a Mr. Hook. These came after Mr. Hughen. He left, and then came MacGarrel. They were going about, and they made MacGarrel believe, as he stated at the hustings, that he had a majority of two or three. He went to the poll, and he had only nineteen to vote for him.

5539. Who was Johnson?—An attorney, I believe, in the county of Kildare. I know he had an office in Dublin—Charles Frazer Johnson, I believe.

5540. He is dead?—He is dead.

5541. Was he the conducting agent of Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—He was.

5542. Was Mr. O'Beirne here in '57?—He was, and that was the first time he came here.

5543. Was he proposed?—He was proposed, and made a grand speech; and a great cry went out that he was full of money. He commenced taking houses, and made a great deal of noise. He took Murnane's house. The day of the nomination came on, and there were four candidates—Sir Timothy O'Brien, Mr. Hemphill, John Lanigan the popular candidate, and Mr. O'Beirne. They were proposed and seconded; and going down the street immediately after, I was walking with Mr. Lanigan, Mr. Phelan, of Cashel a respectable merchant, and Mr. Mullins, chairman of the Town Commissioners, when Mr. O'Beirne tapped Mr. Lanigan on the shoulder, and said, "I will retire if you pay my expenses." Mr. O'Beirne did not go to the poll.

5544. In '57 did you hear that there was a petition presented to the House of Commons?—I will give you a long history of that. Mr. O'Beirne stopped in town after the election. In three or four days after he wrote a note across to me to say he wished to see me. I went over. He said, "I know how you feel about the election—that John Lanigan would be returned if there was a fair election. If you allow this election," said he, "to stand you will never have a fair election again. You have it in your power," he said, "to furnish plenty materials; if you assist me I will lodge a petition." I said, "I can give you no answer until I ask." I went to consult Mr. Cahill, Mr. Phelan, Mr. Pierce Grace, and Mr. John Mullins, chairman of the Town Comissioners. They all agreed it would be well to do it. We all firmly resolved to get as much information as we could for Mr. Lyster O'Beirne. He lodged the petition; the day for trying it was named, a committee struck, and fourteen witnesses summoned from Cashel. The petition was against Sir Timothy O'Brien. John Scully came to me with a letter, saying they could not well go on if I was not over: that they did not want to examine me, but to place me in the room. I refused going; I was not in good health. He telegraphed, and had the Speaker's warrant next day. I had, without sleeping a wink, to cut away to London. I arrived at the hotel in Sussex-street at eleven at night. I asked was Mr. Johnson, an Irish gentleman, stopping there, and I was told he was. Mr. Johnson came down, and the first salute he gave me was, "Oh, by the law, we made the fellow bleed to-day." "What do you mean?" said I. "Oh," said he, "the petition is over, and Sir Timothy had to fork down a thousand pounds." "What, you villain, is it for that you dragged me over here?" "Oh," said he, "some of your neighbours will be very glad." I was not three hours at home when I heard from Mr. O'Beirne, saying how much he regretted he did not see me, but that he had £300 to spare that he would send to me to be laid out for the benefit of the town whatever way the committee would wish.

SIXTH DAY. October 9. John Coman.

I showed that letter, and they said not to answer it at all. I never heard a word about the £300. That is the history of '57.

5545. Was the three hundred pounds ever sent?—Never. The next thing I heard was that Mr. Johnson was £316 short of their expenses, or something of that kind.

5546. And there were fourteen witnesses of the Commons?—Fourteen of the Commons and townspeople, the late hotel keeper, James Ryan, and others, in all fourteen witnesses brought over to London.

5547. What were the grounds for the petition against Sir Timothy O'Brien in '57?—It was strongly suspected that he did resort to corrupt practices, and that he was forced to do so from the corrupt course Mr. O'Beirne was taking.

5548. Did you go as a witness to prove corruption?—No; they said they wanted to let me stand in the committee room, that some parties who made some admissions could not go back of it. There were no parties made admissions to me. I gathered a great deal of information from a man named Carew, who is not in the Commons now.

5549. Who is the man named Carew?—His name is Michael Carew. He is not living there now.

5550. Where does he live now?—I cannot tell. He let his little place. He had a small place in the Commons. I happened to be receiver for the Corporation property.

5551. Was the corruption confined to the Commons, or did it extend to the town?—I believe it was principally confined to the Commons, but I believe it extended to the town too.

5552. You first heard of taking houses in '57?—That was the first time I heard of it.

5553. Has the taking of houses become an established practice since?—Indeed it has; and I look upon it as being quite as corrupt as paying a bribe into a man's hand. I never yet knew one of them to take a house that there was not a vote in. Wherever a house was taken there was sure to be a vote.

5554. Was there a contest at the general election in 1852?—No; we had no contest in '52; it was in '59. This is '59 that I am speaking of.

5555. There was a general election in '52, the time James Sadleir and Scully were elected for the county?—I believe it was in '52 MacGarrel stood. Yes, it was in '52. It was a mere shadow of a contest. There were only sixteen conservatives and three liberals voted for him.

5556. Was it at MacGarrell's election that Hook and those other parties came over?—Yes, in '52.

5557. Would you try and recollect which was it in respect of the election of '52, or the election of '57 that the petition was?—'57; '52 was the time MacGarrell stood against Sir Timothy O'Brien. It was a mere shadow of a contest, and he only polled eighteen or nineteen. It was in '57 Mr. Hemphill was here. It was in '57 the petition was.

5558. Did Mr. Hemphill go to the poll in '57?—He did, he was second on the poll.

5559. Come now to the election of 1859?—The candidates then were John Lanigan, Charles Hare Hemphill, and John Carden. That election I am sure was carried on fairly. I heard nothing about bribery. Mr. Hemphill was twice a candidate here, and I never heard anybody speaking of him. Mr. Lanigan polled over ninety I think, Carden, ten, Hemphill, eight. He told me when he saw the time was running against him that he thought it right to stop any more of his friends to vote. He might have polled more, but he saw there was no chance. I think he admitted to some of his friends that there was no chance of a return.

5560. Lanigan was elected?—Lanigan was elected, and would be always elected if there was no corruption. The next election was in '65.

5561. Who were the candidates in '65?—Lyster O'Beirne and John Lanigan.

5562. Do you believe there was corruption at the election of '65?—I have no doubt of it. I am as sure as I am sitting here that Lanigan would be returned by ten to one majority if it was a fair election—a man that was always in the ranks of the people, and one of the leaders of the Irish people at one time, greatly liked, and represented the town six years before.

5563. Was the corruption confined to Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I have not the slightest doubt of it. I am not aware of any corruption at Lanigan's side. I was greatly interested and took an active part, and I am not aware of any corruption on his side.

5564. Did you hear of any case of corruption on Lanigan's side in '65?—I did not.

5565. I suppose if there had been one you would have heard of it?—I think I would.

5566. You never heard of any corruption on the part of Lanigan in '65?—I did not hear that there was a shilling given to anybody.

5567. Or that anything was promised to anybody?—Or hear that anything was promised. However, if such a thing was going, probably I would not be the man people would like to speak to about it.

5568. What was the corruption that existed?—You have it in evidence.

5569. Do you of your own knowledge know of any corruption?—I do not know any more about their election than any in the town. They would not come and tell me.

5570. Did the Commons people in '57 and '59 support Lanigan?—In '59 they all supported him.

5571. How did they vote in '65?—Every man of them went with Mr. O'Beirne, except one of them, a man named John Hickey, that voted for Lanigan.

5572. Were there houses taken in the town in 1865 by Mr. O'Beirne?—I should think so; I think Murnane's; his house was taken and other houses. I am sure they went very openly to work in '65.

5573. Was there corruption at the last election, 1868?—At the last election, I scarcely made a move at all. I did not take any trouble. I went one night to the hotel—the night before the polling—about a few minutes, but I do not know anything at all about it.

5574. Have you known anything of Mr. Munster before 1868?—I never recollect to hear of his name until he came to Cashel; never.

5575. You knew nothing about him until shortly before he became a candidate for Cashel?—I knew nothing at all about him until he became a candidate for Cashel.

5576. And time did not diminish your hostility to Mr. O'Beirne, who put out your friend John Lanigan?—No, indeed. I lay the blame on him of having Cashel so disgraced as it is. I have no hesitation in saying that.

5577. Tell us what you know of the conversation with Carroll about his house?—Cornelius Carroll and Cunningham are always free in my house. They were both customers in my house twenty years. I am a wholesale dealer in the spirit trade, and they are retailers and sell whiskey. They were very often in and out of my house together. Before the election Carroll came several times to me to say, "You should do something for me during this election, and I will be just as active as Patsey Cunningham." I said, "I have no power to do anything for you; I would advise you to mind your business and have nothing to do with elections. I never saw anyone have a day's luck by them." He was frequently coming. He said, "If I get an order on you for whiskey would you give it?" I said, "I will give you any amount of whiskey on your own order, but will have nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with elections." I was speaking with Mr. Laffan and Cunningham one Sunday and he came up. "Now," said he to Mr. Laffan, "as I have you together, will I get an order for the whiskey?" I turned round, "Damn you, didn't I tell you before I would not supply any such order?" Mr. Laffan turned round and said, "What, man, such a thing could not be heard of."

5578. Was that Pat Laffan?—Michael Laffan. He went away then. I did not hear any more about him until one day I was in the newsroom, and a messenger went to me to say I was wanted.

5579. Had he not spoken to you before about your getting something done for him, or getting him employment at the election?—He spoke to me to get his house taken. I said I could not interfere. He said, "You have a great deal of influence with Mr. Laffan." He thought he ought to get something to do.

5580. Was that long before the election?—Eight or ten days I should say.

5581. Was it long before you were sent across for from the newsroom?—Three or four or five days before.

5582. And the conversation about the whiskey was only about that time before it also?—Only about that time.

5583. Proceed if you please?—I was sent for, I came to the shop, and Mrs. Coman said, "there are two inside that want to speak to you." I went in, and being quite free with them I said, "what do you want?" "We want to leave a letter in your hands," said Cunningham. "What letter?" said I. "They took my house and yard," said Carroll, "and they would not trust me with the money." "It must be something about the election," said I. "It is," said they. I said, "you must be a pair of corrupt blackguards, how dare you come to me? You have a great deal of impudence to attempt to come here with such a letter, and I have a great mind to kick the pair of you out of the room." Cunningham gave as his reason, that they had Murnane's house taken, and that they would not give him the money. I said, "I have nothing at all to do with that, but you have a great deal of impudence to come here with a letter of the sort."

5584. When Carroll asked you to get him something to do at the election, did he say that he could get money?—He did. He said, "if I get a letter for whiskey from Mr. Laffan will you give it?" "No," said I, "I will give you any amount on your own order"—and so I would give £100 worth—"but I will have nothing to do connected with the election."

5585. Did you supply any drink on orders during the election?—No. I do not think I did. The night Mr. Munster came to town there was an order sent for five gallons of old whiskey, and a couple of days after an order for two gallons more. The whole amount of my account about the election is about £6 or £7, and that was for old whiskey going to Mr. Munster's house. It was charged to Mr. Laffan.

5586. Was is to Mr. Munster's own house it was sent?—To Mr. Munster's own house. There were two half barrels of porter the night he came in. The boys that came for the order, went away with two half barrels of porter from the door; I would much rather not give it. That is all I gave for election purposes.

5587. You were paid for that porter?—I was.

5588. By Mr. Munster?—They were included in the bill. It was Mr. Laffan I furnished with the account, and they were included in the bill with the rest.

5589. Do you know anything else, Mr. Coman, of any other case, or of anything of a similar character to that of Carroll, in the way of giving money or promising money, at the election?—No.

5590. Do you know anything of the kind on either side?—I think I would be the last person anyone would come to speak to about money.

5591. Did you never hear of any of those cases that have come out on this inquiry?—No.

5592. We have learned some cases here?—There was a trial in Dublin after the election of '65. Mr. Johnson was sued for the penalty of £100 for corrupt practice. Some parties came and told me a most plausible story that I believed at the time, and I think I believe up to this day; and on the strength of these accounts there was an action taken against Mr. Johnson for acts of bribery. Those parties who made the statements swore quite the contrary at the trial in Dublin before Chief Justice Monahan.

5593. Mr. MOLLOY.—Then it went to trial?—It did. It was tried in Dublin. Sergeant Armstrong and the present Judge Morris were at one side.

5594. What was the name of the man who brought the action against Mr. Johnson?—The attorney was a Mr. O'Mahony that lives in Stephen's-green, and he got a young man in Dublin named Ryan to become plaintiff. The late Mr. Carroll, and Mr. Phelan and myself took a very active part. We went to Dublin and were there until the trial came on. Sergeant Armstrong agreed to withdraw the case, because all the parties that swore here they got something swore there they got nothing. Some of the same parties were examined here on this trial and swore here they got something.

5595. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you remember the names of any of those parties that told one story here and another there, or that told you they would give evidence they had got money?—The principal person is William Ryan of the Race-course. He came to me and I said, "sure you cannot want money so soon after the election."

5596. When was that?—In '57. He said he did. "Why," said I, "did not you get money?" "I did," said he. "How much?" "Thirty pounds." "From whom?" "From Mr. Johnson." "Where did you get it?" "In a room at Tom Cunningham's house." Four or five more and myself came to town, that was the principal case I thought we would have against Johnson but he went to Dublin after and swore the contrary.

5597. Is William Ryan there still?—He is, sir.

5598. Do you remember the name of any other person who told you a similar thing?—I do not.

5599. Did William Ryan vote at the last election?—He did, for Mr. O'Beirne.

5600. Do you not remember anybody else?—There were a good many brought up and we suspected a few of them. We tried and Sergeant Armstrong found they were not come up to the mark, and he agreed to a nonsuit. There were not more than three or four or five examined.

5601. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did I understand you to say that some of those were examined before us here?—Some of them were brought up. (Witness hands in his account against Mr. Laffan.) It was Mr. Laffan I charged.

5602. Why were you not paid the whole of it?—They said the porter business was not for the household, but that it would be paid afterwards, and so it was.

5603. When was it paid afterwards?—Long after the election.

5604. After the petition, perhaps?—No, I think it was not after the petition. Mr. Munster came to my house, I believe New Year's Day, 1st of January, and he said a man of his would call for forty bottles of whiskey. It was packed in a hamper, and his man did call, and I think that £1 14*s.*, or something, was included in the price.

5605. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you any other dealings with Mr. Munster?—Not anything.

5606. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Then all the money you received from Mr. Munster is £7 17*s.*?—I will tell you—forty bottles of whiskey at 3*s.* a bottle; that is all the money I received from him.

5607. Mr. MOLLOY.—You have a family?—I have.

5608. Did any of your family receive presents from Mr. Munster?—I am not aware. I heard he purchased at the bazaar, and that he gave one of them a doll worth three or four pence, and another a sixpenny rattle.

5609. Did he give anything else to any member of your family?—Not anything.

5610. Did Mr. Lanigan make you or your family any presents?—Never; on the contrary, I lost a good deal of money by Mr. Lanigan. I went to Dublin three or four times on the trial; I paid my own expenses, and I never got as much as one single farthing for it; every shilling of it was out of my own pocket. I never met the candidate that would not sooner get something than give me anything.

5611. Mr. GRIFFIN.—There was a John Ryan examined at the petition, and I see he lived at the Race Course. Is he any relation to the Ryan you have mentioned?—They are connected by marriage. They live in the same yard. They both pay me rent.

Sixth Day.
October 9.
John Coman.

5612. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—They are men of the Commons, are they?—They are, sir. The place is called Race Course. It is part of Lawlor's lot.

5613. Mr. Griffin.—There are two Race Courses here?—Yes, there is the celebrated Race Course at present, but I mean the old Race Course.

5614. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes to have these questions asked: Did Mr. Munster show by statements he made to you with references he made to Mr. O'Beirne, printed and published, that he had some old grudge, as you yourself had, against him?—Oh, by-the-by, a very wicked pamphlet appeared from him; so much so, that some of the friends of Mr. O'Beirne said they would never know him unless he took an action against him, and some of the friends of Mr. O'Beirne said that only he took that course they would never vote for him.

5615. Were you subpœnaed by Mr. Munster in the action against Carroll?—I was, by Mr. Munster. They subpœnaed me and they telegraphed to me afterwards that they did not want me.

5616. Then you did not go up?—I did go up, but I was not produced.

5617. Mr. Munster wishes to know what party subpœnaed you as a witness first?—Carroll's party.

5618. Mr. Munster.—And then they telegraphed?—They then telegraphed that I need not go. I thought that Mr. Munster having an eye to the telegraph knew that I was not to go, and that he brought me up himself.

5619. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—At the time Carroll made that request of you about taking his house, did he appear perfectly serious, and desirous to make money of it?—He did, but it appeared to me by his conduct afterwards that he was set on to try to entrap me. We were always most friendly. He was always a very valuable customer of mine.

5620. He swore he did not intend to entrap you. Did he appear desirous to make money by letting his house or getting the whiskey?—Quite serious. He would say two or three times a day passing by, "You are a great friend of Mr. Laffan's, and you could get whiskey for me," but I always advised him to have nothing to do with it, that he would be always better off.

Margaret Moloney.

Margaret Moloney sworn; examined by Mr. Griffin.

5621. You live in the Main-street?—Yes, sir.

5622. Are you any connexion or relation of Denis Ryan?—Yes, he is a brother-in-law of mine.

5623. Do you remember his leaving a parcel at your house?—Yes, sir.

5624. For whom did he leave it?—He did not say, sir.

5625. What was the nature of the parcel?—I could not tell.

5626. What did it look like?—A small parcel.

5627. Was it an envelope?—It was not so large as that.

5628. Could you form any idea of what was in it?—Well, no; it felt soft.

5629. As if there were notes in it?—There might; I could not say, but I did not open it.

5630. Would you be surprised if there were bank notes in it?—I do not know why I should be surprised at anything like it.

5631. It looked like bank notes, I suppose?—It looked a small soft parcel.

5632. And light?—Quite light.

5633. What did he say?—He said, "keep that for me until to-morrow; you need not mind what it contains," or something to that effect.

5634. Did he say that anybody would call for it, or might call for it?—No, sir.

5635. Did he not mention anybody's name about it at all?—Not to me.

5636. What became of the parcel afterwards?—He took it away the next day.

5637. Did he see any person at all at your house?—He saw Mr. Laffan.

5638. Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan, I should think.

5639. That gentleman there?—Yes. (Witness identifies Mr. Michael J. Laffan.)

5640. Do you know many of the Common's people?—Well, I do.

5641. Did you see any of the Commons people talking to him in your house?—I do not think I could say that I did. No, not one.

5642. Where does Denis Ryan live?—Out a little on the Commons; on the Common's road about half a mile outside Cashel.

5643. On the road through the Commons?—Yes.

5644. Did he tell you anything about the election?—Nothing, any more than that I knew he was an elector himself, so that he need not have told me.

5645. What day did he leave that parcel at your house?—I cannot say what day it was.

5646. Was it before the election?—I think it was previous to the election; some short time before.

5647. Did he tell you where he got this parcel or from whom?—No, sir.

5648. Did he tell you to take great care of it?—He had no more conversation with me about it than I am after stating to you.

5649. Did you hear anything about money going at the last election?—Of course, everybody heard it.

5650. Did you hear it from Dan Ryan?—I could not say what I heard it is so long ago.

5651. Oh, you can recollect very well; what did Dan Ryan tell you about it?—I could not say he told me anything, but I told him often go for Mr. O'Beirne.

5652. He voted for Mr. Munster?—He did. My feelings were for Mr. O'Beirne.

5653. What reason did he give you for not voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I cannot say.

5654. Did he say it would be for his interest?—I cannot say.

5655. Do you think it was more for his advantage?—Indeed I do not know.

5656. Do you not think he got more from Mr. Munster than he would from Mr. O'Beirne?—I did not know what he got.

5657. But you knew he got something?—I heard he did.

5658. From whom did you hear he got something?—From his wife.

5659. What is her name?—Anastasia Moloney.

5660. Is she your sister?—Yes.

5661. What did he get?—Thirty pounds, I think.

5662. When did she tell you that he got that thirty pounds?—After he received it. I cannot say how soon after.

5663. When did you hear it; was it before the election?—I believe it was after the election, as well as I can remember.

5664. Can you say if it was after the election you heard about his getting that thirty pounds?—I cannot say whether it was before or after the election.

5665. Did you hear whether the money was given to him before the election or not?—I believe it was after the election he received it.

5666. Do you know from whom he got it?—Do you mean the last election?

5667. Yes?—I do not know was it that at all, but the election before of '65.

5668. Did you not tell me he got it for voting for Mr. Munster?—I do not know what he got for his vote. I know he got some money some time ago, not at the last election, but before it. The last election I did not know he got money from either of the parties.

5669. Did you not hear from your sister about his getting money at the last election?—I often heard her say he got no money at the last election.

5670. Did you hear her complain that he got none although it was promised?—I heard he was promised some, but I heard no complaint that he did not get it.

5671. From whom did you hear that he was promised?—From my sister.

5672. Who did she say promised him?—I cannot say whether it was either Mr. Laffan or Mr. Munster.

5673. It was either Mr. Laffan or Mr. Munster?—It was.

5674. Was that since the election or before it?—I cannot say was it before or after.

5675. But it was about the time of the election at all events?—Some time about it.

5676. Where did she tell you this? Was it in your own house?—It was.

5677. And it was about the time of the election?—In or about the time; I cannot say exactly before or after.

5678. You were yourself in favour of Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, I was.

5679. Do you know a person named Stapleton?—Yes.

5680. Did you hear that he got any money?—Yes.

5681. At the last election?—Yes.

5682. From whom did he get it, did you hear?—I cannot say.

5683. Who told you that he got it?—I could not say. It was remarked.

5684. Do you know Alice Stapleton?—I know both Richard and Edmund Stapleton.

5685. Did you hear it from either of them?—No.

5686. Are you sure?—I am, sir.

5687. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know Alice Stapleton?—I do, sir.

5688. What relation is she of theirs?—I cannot say.

5689. With whom does she live?—With her father.

5690. What is her father's name?—Daniel.

5691. Is he a voter?—He is.

5692. Did you hear that he got money?—I heard the daughter got it.

5693. From whom did you hear she got it?—I cannot say.

5694. Who told you she got it?—Indeed I disremember. It did not concern me much, and I do not care to remember them things.

5695. Could you not remember who told you that Alice Stapleton got money?—I heard it from so many that I could not name one more than another.

5696. Did you hear it from Denis Ryan?—I cannot say that I did.

5697. Could you say that you did not?—I would not say that either.

5698. Did you ever hear afterwards what was in that parcel that Dan Ryan brought to your house?—Never. All I heard was, I think I might safely say, that it was intended for some voter.

5699. Then you think it was something that a voter would consider worth having?—At the same time I cannot say it was money.

5700. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—From whom did you hear that it was from a voter?—From Denis Ryan.

5701. For what voter did he say?—I cannot recollect.

5702. Tell us what you believe you heard. Tell the truth?—I would be more anxious to tell the truth than anything else, for I have no interest in it either one way or the other.

5703. I am quite sure that even if you had an interest you would tell us the truth. Did you hear from whom it was?—I cannot say.

5704. But your recollection is, that Denis Ryan told you that it was for some voter?—I am not quite sure he did. I only think he did. I am not quite sure.

5705. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Are you married?—Not married, sir.

5706. Mr. Laffan wishes to have you asked how long before that parcel was left at your house did you see Ryan and Mr. Laffan in your house?—I cannot say.

5707. Was it before or after the election?—It was before the election.

5708. Do you recollect was it before or after Ryan left the parcel with you that Mr. Laffan was in your house?—Mr. Laffan was not with Ryan then; it was long before.

5709. Mr. Munster wishes to know who was the person that told you that Denis Ryan was promised something by Mr. Munster or Mr. Laffan?—Denis Ryan's wife, Anastatia Ryan.

5710. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes that you would tell us, as well as you recollect, the words she said?—She said Mr. Munster promised some money to Denis Ryan, because he was an agent, I think, at the time; at least he was canvassing. She said he was promised some money.

5711. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know how much she said he was promised?—She did not say how much.

5712. She did not say £30?—No.

5713. You do not know of Denis Ryan giving money to anybody?—I never saw him giving money to any person.

5714. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What age is Denis Ryan?—I believe he is sixty years.

5715. Has he a son?—He has.

5716. What is his name?—John Ryan.

5717. What is his age?—About twenty-six.

5718. Has he any relative named Thomas Ryan?—No; not that I know.

5719. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Mr. Munster desires to have you asked, at the time that your sister told you of this promise by Mr. Munster, was there anything said about Mr. Laffan?—Yes, I think it is Mr. Laffan that did make the promise.

5720. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I understood you to say at first that you heard he was promised something either by Mr. Patrick Laffan or Mr. Munster?—Not by either of them, but by Mr. Michael Laffan.

[Questions and answers No. 5671, 5672, 5673, and 5710, are read by the shorthand writer.]

5721. Do you wish to correct your answer and say that it was Mr. Laffan and not Mr. Munster that promised the money?—It was Mr. Laffan and not Mr. Munster. My sister said it was £50.

Thomas Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

5722. Have you heard from your son since?—I got a letter from them to-day from where I wrote. That is the statement I gave you at the commencement. They say he left that to go to the fair of Clonmel.

5723. When was that fair over?—It was Wednesday last, sir. I might be thinking he was going to Waterford, for they invited him there.

5724. I recommend you if he is to be got in Ireland to get him to come here?—I promised you that before, sir.

5725. Do you know anything more about him?—Nothing more, sir; since he left I did not see him.

5726. Did you hear about him?—No, sir.

5727. Did you hear, by word of mouth or by letter anything about him?—Nothing but what I am stating here to you, sir.

5728. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was that man named Murrin, Mr. Leahy's man, who was staying with you, stopping in your house during the election?—He was partly, sir. Sometimes he used to go away and come back again.

5729. When he went away was he stopping at the hotel?—I do not think he was, sir, only going back to Cahir. He had a family and used to go back. I cannot say, but any way I could know, I do not think he was.

SIXTH DAY
October 9.

Mr. Henry Munster, recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Henry Munster.

5730. Mr. Munster, do you know the address of Mr. Leahy?—I do, 21, Carlington-street, Hampton-road, London.

5731. Do you think it would be necessary to send a messenger expressly from this, or that he will come if the secretary communicates with him?—I have no doubt whatever if you intimate a request for his attendance that he will come. I wish to make an application with regard to that transaction of Mr. White. I should esteem it a great favour, if you wish to examine me on that subject, that you would do so at present. I will tell you why. I went out of court not to hear what Mr. White said; I have not seen Mr. White; I want to see him; it is exceedingly inconvenient to me, and I should be glad if you would examine me now.

5732. We will hear anything you have to say now?—I am sworn.

5733. I will tell you what he said?—I do not want to hear what he said. Amongst that list of claims, considered mostly by Mr. Richardson and attested by Mr. Laffan, were two items by Mr. White, one for advertising, some £26—I speak solely from memory—and the other for £50 for services other than advertising in the Cashel Gazette, which he told me was a stipulation, or bargain, or contract he had made with somebody in my behalf; I think, though I am not certain, with Mr. Michael Laffan. I asked Mr. White if he had voted for me, which I thought he had. I was not quite certain, and I pointed out to him that there might be a doubt on the subject of those services, inasmuch as they were not exactly tangible. I pointed out to him also the exceedingly moderate amount of his bill for advertising, compared with other newspapers, and I suggested—perhaps it was improper—that he should reconsider his charges for advertising and withdraw the other. Mr. White declined to do that at all. He maintained his opinion as to his charge, and I then told him that although I coincided with him as a matter of opinion, that his service in writing my cause up was such as perhaps he could charge for; still I held such doubt about it that I would not pay him of my own accord, and if he meant to press that claim he must bring an action and I would defend it. Thereupon he said that he would not insist upon that claim; and then I put it to him as that was the case, if he was willing to rescind that contract altogether, which he said he was, and he did that without any stipulation on my part that I should do anything else in lieu of it; and when he had done that, I, of my own accord, told him I would make a purchase of him of £50 worth of antiquities, which he was not then in a position to deliver, because he had not any of them. That I paid him for, somewhere about I think the month of March, by my own cheque on the bank. That is all I can say.

5734. You did not get any of the antiquities?—No, they are not reprinted yet, and Mr. White said, "I will undertake to give you value for it." That was the last word that passed between us on the subject.

5735. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you mean the book about the antiquities of Cashel?—I so understood him.

5736. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—At any rate the cheque was given. Are you able to say why those words "cancelled by consent," were written on the entry there. It was, of course, after the entry "by cheque" had been written at the credit side of that account?—I do not know at what period exactly this book was written by Mr. Biggin, but my belief is that "by cheque £50 per H. M.," that that was written by Mr. Biggin from my bank pass-book in which that cheque would appear; and that when I saw that entry I said to him, "No, that must not be so; that is not quite correct," and I directed him to insert these words, "cancelled by consent."

5737. In this account of Mr. White's I see on the left hand side "cancelled," in pencil, and on the right hand side, "cancelled," in pencil, and "cancelled by consent" written on the top?—The whole of that was done after the trial of the election petition.

5738. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—The whole of the book?—No, but as far as I am concerned that entry was.

5739. On what bank was the cheque given?—On the Bank of Ireland at Thurles.

5740. Have you the cheque back?—No, the cheque is lying there still. My recollection is that it was the first cheque I drew in my Bank of Ireland chequebook. I withdrew my account from the National Bank in consequence of something that transpired here, so by that I fix it. I will bring that cheque on Monday.

5741. Some other day we may learn the date of that cheque?—I will bring it on Monday.

[Adjourned.]

SEVENTH DAY.
October 11.

SEVENTH DAY.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1869.

Patrick Cunningham was called but did not appear; Mrs. Henrietta Boyton was called but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5742. Did you serve a summons on Mrs. Boyton to attend here?—On Saturday night I went to the house and inquired for her, and was told by the servant girl in Mr. Munster's house that she was at dinner, and I could not see her. At a very late hour I left a summons for Mrs. Boyton; but I saw her with her husband come out from second Mass yesterday.

5743. Does she live in Mr. Munster's house?—She does, your worship, in John-street.

Andrew Meara was called but did not appear.

Mary Moloney.

Mary Moloney sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5744. You are a sister, I believe, of Miss Margaret Moloney, who was examined here on Saturday?—I am, sir.

5745. And I believe Denis Ryan is your brother-in-law?—Yes, sir.

5746. Your sister Anastasia is married to him?—Yes, sir.

5747. Do you recollect Denis Ryan leaving a parcel at your house?—I do, sir.

5748. To whom did he give it?—To my sister.

5749. Were you present when he gave it to her?—Well, I think I was, sir.

5750. What day was it when he left it there?—I cannot exactly say, sir.

5751. Do you recollect the day of the week?—I could not, sir; but a very short time before the election.

5752. Before the election?—Yes, sir. I kept no account.

5753. Do you recollect how long it remained with your sister?—Do I recollect how long?

5754. Yes. Do you recollect how long it remained in the house?—A day or two. I cannot say. I kept no account at all, sir.

5755. Do you recollect what he said it was for?—No, sir.

5756. Did you hear him say that somebody would call for it?—Himself.

5757. Did he say anything else about it?—To keep it safe for him till he would call for it.

5758. Did he say anybody would call for it but himself?—No.

5759. You said that all he said was to keep it safe until he would call for it?—Yes.

5760. What was in the parcel?—I could not say; I never opened it.

5761. What do you believe to have been in it?—I could not say, sir.

5762. I ask you what you believe?—Really I could not say.

5763. Do you believe it was snuff?—I could not say.

5764. What do you believe? You cannot hurt yourself or anybody else by telling the truth. What do you believe to have been in it?—I could not say, sir.

5765. Could you not make any guess?—No, sir.

5766. Do you not believe anything about it?—I could not in the world wide say what was in it.

5767. You have sworn to tell the entire truth, and I am quite sure you mean to do it honestly. You have sworn "So help your God" that you will tell the entire truth. Now, I ask you what do you believe was in it?—I could not say, sir.

5768. Do you think you are answering honestly? I ask you what you believe, and you say "I cannot tell?"—I could not know what was in it.

5769. I ask you do you believe anything was in it?—Anything? well I couldn't say, sir, what was in it. Sure if you gave me a parcel how could I know what was in it?

5770. Do you believe there was anything in it?—I could not say, sir.

5771. Was it an empty parcel?—I don't know, sir.

5772. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where was the parcel put when he gave it?—My sister took it.

5773. Did she lock it up in a box?—She said she did.

5774. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you swear to me that you do not know that there was anything at all in it?—I could not say.

5775. Was it a parcel rolled up in paper?—It was, sir, a small parcel.

5776. Do you believe there was anything inside the paper?—I don't know, sir, what was in it. Do I believe? I could not say what was in it.

5777. You will answer me the truth. Do you believe that there was anything inside the paper that you saw?—Do I believe?

5778. Yes?—I could not say, sir, what was in it.

5779. Listen to me, Miss Moloney?—Sure I could not say what was in the parcel.

5780. I did not ask you what was in it. I have asked you, at least a dozen times, "Do you believe that there was anything in the parcel," and you say, "I do not know what was in it." I will ask you once more, and if you do not anwer me straightforwardly I shall have to commit you. I should be very sorry to do that. Now, I ask you again do you believe there was anything inside that paper that you saw rolled round?—Sure when I didn't open it, sir, I could not say what was in it—when I didn't see the paper opened. I am in doubt, but perhaps there might be money in it. I suppose that is what you want to come at. Is it, sir?

5781. I want to know what you believe, and you will not answer me?—I am in doubt there was money in it.

5782. I suppose you mean that you think there was money in it, or that you suspect there was?—Yes, sir, suspect; but by the way you have asked me I cannot know what was in it.

5783. I asked you did you believe there was anything in it, and you would not answer me straightforwardly at once?—It is a very hard question for me to answer, sir.

5784. It was a very easy question to answer if you wished to tell me the entire truth?—Well, indeed it is with that intention I came here.

5785. You have answered me at last that you suspect there was money in it, but that you do not know?—I do not know, sir.

5786. Did any person come to you or to your sister about that parcel, from the time Denis Ryan left it until he came for it again?—No, sir.

5787. Did you hear Denis Ryan say anything about it except to tell your sister to put it up?—No, sir.

5788. Did you hear anyone since say what that parcel was for, or for whom it was?—Did I hear anyone say who that parcel was for?

5789. Yes?—Well, I am in doubt; I think I did.

5790. Well, what do you think you heard?—That it was for a voter.

5791. What is his name?—Stapleton, I think, sir.

5792. Is that Edmond Stapleton?—Yes, sir.

5793. Now, Miss Moloney, do you recollect from whom you heard that it was for Edmond Stapleton?—Well, I think from my sister, sir.

5794. Your sister Anastasia?—Yes, sir.

5795. When did you see your sister Anastasia last?—On Saturday, sir.

5796. At what hour on Saturday? Was it after your sister Margaret was examined?—Well, I think it was, sir.

5797. And naturally, of course, you had some talk with her about what your sister was asked on Saturday?—Yes, sir.

5798. When did you see your brother-in-law, Denis Ryan, last?—That day, sir.

5799. Where is he, do you know?—He is in town. I cannot say what part of the town he is in.

5800. Was he at your house?—He was, sir.

5801. Did he sleep there last night?—No, sir.

5802. At what hour to-day did you see him?—Very shortly before I came here.

5803. At your house?—Yes, sir.

5804. Had you any conversation with him about that parcel?—I had, sir.

5805. Now, tell me what passed about it?—That he left it to my sister.

5806. Well?—That he took it away then; that he took it away.

5807. Did he tell you what he did with it?—No, sir.

5808. Did you not hear anything more from him this morning or any time?—No more about it.

5809. What was he talking about this morning? Tell me all he said to you?—I told him I was summoned, and I said what a pity to summon me that had nothing to say about this; that it was a curious thing to summon me on this business.

5810. And what did he say to you?—Well, I cannot say indeed.

5811. Try and recollect?—He said what difference did it make to me when I knew so little about it.

5812. He spoke of the parcel that was left?—Yes, sir.

5813. What did he say about it?—Nothing more than what I said, that he left the parcel and took it away again.

5814. He said something more than that about it?—No more.

5815. Did he tell you what was in it?—No.

5816. Or what it was for?—No.

5817. Or any more about it?—No.

5818. Did he not say anything more than what you have now told me?—No, sir; I was greatly guarded against speaking much to him at all.

5819. I suppose you did not wish to know anything?—I did not wish to know anything about it—what did not concern me.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 11.

Mary Moloney.

5820. Did you hear that your brother-in-law, Denis Ryan, got money for the last election?—For the last election?

5821. Yes?—I did, sir.

5822. From whom did you hear it?—From himself.

5823. How much did he get?—Two pounds or two guineas, I cannot say which.

5824. From whom did he get that?—From Mr. Laffan, as an acting agent.

5825. From which Mr. Laffan, do you know?—Mr. Laffan the solicitor.

5826. Is it that gentleman who is sitting there?—Yes, sir, that is he. (Identifies Mr. Michael J. Laffan.)

5827. When did you hear that he got it?—I heard it from himself, sir, to-day.

5828. To-day?—To-day.

5829. Did he tell you when he got it?—When he got it?

5830. Yes?—About the election time, sir, I cannot say exactly.

5831. Did he say that he got any more money?—Not at this election, sir.

5832. Did you hear your sister Anastasia ever say anything about it?—About what, sir?

5833. About your brother-in-law having got money at the election?—At which election, sir?

5834. At the last election?—I did, sir; the two pounds or two guineas, I cannot say which.

5835. Your sister Margaret told me on Saturday that Anastasia told her that her husband was promised money at the last election?—At the last election; not for his vote, but as an agent.

5836. Did you hear how much he was promised?—I did, sir.

5837. How much?—Fifty pounds.

5838. From whom did you hear that?—From whom did I hear it? I heard it from himself.

5839. That he was promised £50 at the last election?—Yes, not for his vote, but for being an agent—an agent, sir.

5840. When did he tell you that?—He told it to me to-day.

5841. Did he say who promised him the £50?—Mr. Laffan, sir.

5842. Is it the same Mr. Laffan?—Yes, sir.

5843. Did he tell you of his having got any money for any voters?—No, sir.

5844. I do not mean to-day, but at any time; did he tell you he had got any money for voters?—No, sir.

5845. Did your sister tell you he had got any money for voters?—No, sir.

5846. Your sister Anastasia?—No, sir.

5847. Did she tell you he had got any money at all at an election except two guineas or two pounds?—No, sir.

5848. Do you know Edmund Stapleton?—I do, sir.

5849. Did you ever hear him say anything about money?—Never.

5850. Or his daughter?—Never.

5851. Or anyone belonging to him?—Never, sir.

5852. Do you know has Edmund Stapleton a daughter?—Really I do not know what family he has, sir.

5853. Do you know is he a married man?—He is, sir.

5854. Do you know his wife?—I do, sir.

5855. Did you ever hear her say anything about it?—Oh never, sir.

5856. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever hear Alice Stapleton say anything?—Never, sir.

5857. Or Alley's father?—Or Alley's father.

5858. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What is Alley's father's name?—Dan Stapleton.

5859. Where does he live?—I think it is in the Commons, sir.

Patrick Cunningham was called but did not appear. Mrs. Henrietta Boyton was called but did not appear.

Mr. Henry Munster.

Mr. Henry Munster comes forward.

5860. Witness.—Sir, in Mr. Coman's evidence something came out about forty bottles of whiskey. I have a man here that I should wish that you examine as to having made a demand on me for drink pending the election, stating that Mr. O'Beirne had a house open to his people; to which I told him go to Mr. O'Beirne and drink if he wanted it. But I afterwards said that I would give forty men a bottle of whiskey each at Christmas, and a bottle of whiskey each on New Year's day, to be consumed in their families, and I eventually did so. The man is here and his name is John Murphy, if you like to call him.

5861. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know the men to whom you gave the forty bottles of whiskey?—Not at all. They were part, I imagine, of what might be called the mob. I made the offer in consequence of a sermon of the Archdeacon, and I solicited the Archdeacon and he consented, though it was not carried out in the way that I wished, that it should be deposited with some person named by him for those men in that way.

James Connors of the Green was called but did not appear.

Thomas Donnell.

Thomas Donnell of Main-street sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5862. Mr. Donnell, you are a voter of Cashel I believe?—Yes, sir.

5863. And you voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, your honour.

5864. Was the last election the first at which you had a vote?—No, sir, it was not.

5865. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

5866. Did you receive anything from Mr. O'Beirne for voting for him in '65?—Got any from him, sir?

5867. Yes?—I did, sir.

5868. How much?—£20, sir.

5869. I suppose Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you at the last election?—Yes, sir.

5870. Mr. MOLLOY.—Who gave you the £20 in '65?—Mr. Johnson, sir.

5871. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—When did Mr. O'Beirne canvass you at the last election?—Really, I do not know. I did not see him at the last election. I do not recollect seeing himself at the last election.

5872. When were you paid the £20 for '65?—Well, I was paid it previous to the election, sir.

5873. Were you offered any money by Mr. O'Beirne for the last election?—No, sir, I do not remember I was.

5874. Or by any person for him?—Well, there was parties came to me influencing me; at the same time my mind was made up to vote for Mr. Munster.

5875. Who came influencing you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—There was Tim Shea and other parties that I did not know their names. I said I would vote for Mr. Munster before that in consequence of he becoming my landlord.

5876. Tim Shea?—Yes, he came to me.

5877. Did he tell you that you would get anything for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I cannot say. He said I would do better if I was to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

5878. Did anybody else come to you for Mr. O'Beirne?—I think there was, but I really forget their names.

5879. Who came do you know?—I really could not say, sir.

5880. Did Keeffe come to you?—He may, but I forget it. I quite forget it, sir. I could not bring to my memory, if he did.

5881. Did Tracey come to you?—Well, no, sir, he did not.

5882. Did Captain Graham call on you?—Well, I don't know did he come on a canvass or no. I don't think he did at the last time. I don't think he did on the last occasion, sir. I am not certain that he did.

5883. You say your mind was made up to vote for Mr. Munster?—It was, sir.

5884. What was the reason you stated?—He became my landlord, sir.

5885. Who did?—Mr. Munster, sir.

5886. Is it for your house he became landlord?—Yes, sir.

5887. Where do you live?—In the Main-street, sir.

5888. What part of the Main-street?—In part of the centre of it; opposite the tank.

5889. When did Mr. Munster become your landlord?—Sometime previous to the election.

5890. It must have been some short time?—It was, sometime before, sir, he bought it.

5891. Do I understand you to say that he purchased your house?—Yes, sir.

5892. Who was the former landlord?—Doctor Butler in Thurles, and he was selling out all his property at the same time. Whatever holdings he had he sold them out to different parties.

5893. Mr. Munster bought your house?—Yes, sir.

5894. What rent do you pay?—£8 9*s.* 1*d.* I paid Dr. Butler.

5895. What rent do you pay, Mr. Munster?—There was no gale come since to pay any rent.

5896. What were your gale days?—November.

5897. Did not May come?—I did not pay any rent in May.

5898. Were you asked by Mr. Munster to pay any rent in May?—I was not, sir, to pay any rent yet.

5899. Your gale days are November and May?—Yes, sir.

5900. Were you asked by Mr. Munster to pay rent in November?—I was not, sir, because it was in the month of November the place was purchased.

5901. In what time in November was it purchased?—I think it was in November, or the end of October.

5902. Are the first of November and the first of May your gale days?—Yes, sir.

5903. Did you pay any rent to Dr. Butler for the November gale?—No, sir; I don't think I did.

5904. You have not paid the November or May rent?—No, sir, I did not.

5905. Had you any conversation with Mr. Munster or any agent of his?—I don't recollect I had with regard to it, but I believe I said at one time all the place was to be sold. I think I said that at one time.

5906. To whom did you say it?—I forget whether it was to Mr. Laffan or Mr. Munster I said it. I don't think it was to Mr. Munster. I think it was to Mr. Laffan. I suppose then they said after that to purchase the place.

5907. Tell me what you said?—That my landlord was selling out his properties.

5908. Well?—That is all I said, sir, and that I would wish that some one would purchase my place that would leave me and would not eject me.

5909. Was it to Mr. Michael Laffan you said that?—I don't think it was. I think it was to Mr. Laffan.

5910. Was it to Mr. Michael Laffan?—I don't think it was, sir. I cannot exactly say.

5911. Was it to his brother Patrick?—I cannot say, sir.

5912. Had you conversations with him?—I had, sir, at different times.

5913. Tell me candidly and honestly at once, what you said about your vote also?—Me, sir!

5914. Did you not say that if Mr. Munster bought the house you would vote for Mr. Munster?—Of course I did, sir; that if I was his tenant I would vote for him. It was not for money though. I never made use of that word.

5915. You ought to listen to my question before you answer.—I never made use of that word.

5916. What did you say?—I pledged myself to him that if I was his tenant that of course I would support him always. That is what I said.

5917. Would you be able to say whether it was to Mr. Pat Laffan you said that—to which of the Laffans?—I could not exactly say now.

5918. The time that you said if he was your landlord you would vote for him, was the same time that you told him Dr. Butler was going to sell the house?—Every one knew it as well as myself, at least a good many parties knew it in the town because it got publication through the newspapers.

5919. You told me that you went to Mr. Laffan and told him your house was going to be sold?—Yes, sir.

5920. Did you ask him to have it bought?—I don't remember that I did, sir.

5921. Did you not say that if Mr. Munster bought it you would vote for him?—No, my lord, I did not. I don't remember that I told him that.

(Questions 5914 and 5916, with the answers, read by the shorthand writer.)

5922. Did you say that if Mr. Munster bought the house you would vote for Mr. Munster?—I may, sir, but I quite forget.

5923. Mr. Molloy.—Had Dr. Butler any other houses in Cashel?—He had.

5924. Are they sold?—They are.

5925. Who bought the rest of them?—The tenants that is in them.

5926. Are they next to yours?—They are.

5927. How many houses had he?—Three of them; they are sold to the tenants.

5928. And are they next to you?—They are, one on both sides of me.

5929. Who lives in them?—Miss Molony and Mr. Daniel Ferris.

5930. Was your house taken in '65 by Mr. O'Beirne?—It was, sir.

5931. What was it taken for?—I suppose for the use of the voters, sir; for a committee-room, I suppose.

5932. Was there any use made of it?—There was not, indeed.

5933. None?—None.

5934. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—You say Miss Molony and Mr. Ferris bought their own houses?—Yes, sir.

5935. I suppose you were not able to buy yours?—No, sir.

5936. And you were afraid of being turned out by some person buying it over your head?—Yes.

5937. And you went to Mr. Laffan and said——?—I did not go to Mr. Laffan, but some people told him besides me.

5938. Did Mr. Laffan come to you?—He came to me and asked me was not it the case.

5939. And you told him if Mr. Munster bought the house so that you would not be turned out you would vote for him?—I was inclined to vote for him, even if the house was not sold at all.

5940. If a man bought your house would you vote for him?—It is likely that I may.

5941. Are you not sure you would?—It is likely that I would vote for him.

5942. Will you tell me have you a son?—I have not, sir.

5943. Have you anyone belonging to you?—No.

SEVENTH DAY. October 11.

Thomas Donnell.

5944. Is there anyone belonging to you named Pat Donnell?—No.

5945. No one at all?—Not one.

5946. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you tell Mr. Munster that you wished him to buy your house, and to give you the option of buying it from him again?—Well, yes, I believe there was something that way in it.

5947. With whom was the conversation?—I forget whether it was with Mr. Laffan or Mr. Munster.

5948. You forget which of them it was?—I really forget which it was I spoke to with regard to it.

5949. How long ago is it since you had the conversation about buying back the house from Mr. Munster?—I suppose it was long before the election.

5950. Was there not any bargain between you and Mr. Munster as to how he would sell you the house?—Not a bargain, sir.

5951. Do you expect to get the house from Mr. Munster?—All I expect to get is that I would not be ejected by his being my landlord.

5952. Do you expect to get it on any terms?—I do not expect it in any form, but not to be ejected.

5953. What did Mr. Munster pay for the house?—£80, and there is over a year's rent on hands for supplies that I gave during the election.

5954. What supplies did you give?—I gave refreshment to his voters, sir.

5955. By whose orders did you give refreshment to his voters?—Mr. Patrick Laffan's, sir.

5956. Was the refreshment drink?—With which there was eating and drinking, sir.

5957. Eating and drinking?—There was.

5958. Mr. MOLLOY.—Have you any account of what you gave?—I have, sir. I gave a bill of it to Mr. Laffan, there.

5959. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Where is it?—I have not it, sir. I gave it to Mr. Laffan before.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5960. Have you that account, Mr. Laffan?—I am sure it is with the others.

Thomas Donnell.

Thomas Donnell's examination resumed; by Mr. MOLLOY.

5961. How much was the amount of the bill?—About £11, sir.

5962. Did you put in the bill in the name of Thomas O'Donnell?—Yes, sir.

5963. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is your name Donnell or O'Donnell?—Donnell, sir.

5964. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you paid any money before the election?—I was, sir, before the election.

5965. How much?—Six or seven pounds, in three payments.

5966. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—By whom?—Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir.

5967. What was it for?—Refreshment, sir, for parties.

5968. Who were the parties?—Various parties, sir, I could not tell their names.

5969. Were they voters?—Some was and some was not, sir. A good many was not.

5970. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you promise to vote for Mr. Munster when he canvassed you?—I did, sir.

5971. That was after the conversation about your house?—Yes.

5972. Mr. Munster wants to know are you sure that when he canvassed you and you promised to vote for him, was after the conversation about the buying of your house. You talked with Mr. Laffan about your house being bought; it was sold, and you said you promised Mr. Munster when he canvassed you. I want to know was the promise to vote for Mr. Munster after the talk with Mr. Laffan about buying the house?—No, before that, sir.

5973. Before it?—Before that.

5974. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know any person in Cashel or about it of the name of Pat Donnell or Pat O'Donnell?—Well, I do not, sir.

5975. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—This is the bill you sent in? (Is handed claim No 7.)—Yes, sir, I believe that is it.

5976. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had you any idea that Mr. Munster would purchase your house at the time he canvassed you?—Not the least, sir.

5977. Did you not say that if Mr. Munster purchased your house you would probably vote for him?—Well, I could not say that for a fact. The man that would become my landlord I wish to support him, that is what I say. It is natural to expect that from anyone—to support his landlord.

5978. If Mr. O'Beirne had bought the house what would you have to say about your promise to Mr Munster?—My promise to Mr. Munster!

5979. Would you have voted for Mr. Munster if Mr. O'Beirne bought your house?—I don't know how that may go. I didn't weigh them things in my mind at the time.

5980. Did Patrick Laffan or Patrick Cunningham, or anybody at all, on behalf of Mr. Munster, or in his interest, offer you any inducement to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not the least in the world. Not the least in the world, nor I don't suppose they had any authority either to do so.

5981. Did they tell you anything?—They did not tell me anything.

5982. Was anything said to the effect that he would not be very hard on you for the rent?—They knew nothing about his business with regard to rent, I suppose. Either Patrick Laffan or Pat Cunningham never spoke one word to me about it.

5983. Did Mr. Michael Laffan talk to you about the house?—He didn't say anything, but that he transacted business for Mr. Munster in the sale of it. All he said to me is "Mind," says he, "that you are Mr. Munster's tenant."

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5984. Are you able to tell me who the Richard Donnell—claim No. 13—is?—He is a different man from this.

Thomas Donnell.

Thomas Donnell recalled at Mr. Munster's request; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5985. Has Mr. Munster engaged to give you the house on your paying him? Is there any engagement of that kind on Mr. Munster's part?—I really forget anything of the sort.

5986. You forget?—I don't remember anything of the sort.

5987. It is a most important matter to you not to be turned out of your house. What about a fixed number of years in which you are to get back the house? Do you recollect it?—No, sir, I don't.

Andrew Meara sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

5988. You are a voter in Cashel?—Yes, sir.

5989. And you voted, I believe, for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

5990. At the last election?—Yes.

5991. What business do you carry on?—Drapery business.

5992. Besides voting for Mr. Munster I believe you actively supported him in the town?—Yes.

5993. You were a very ardent and warm supporter of his?—Not a bit in the world about it.

5994. Did you not care that he should be returned?—I would care he should be returned.

5995. What do you mean by saying that you were not a warm supporter of his?—I did not make anyone vote against his will. I did not press them.

5996. Did you ask anyone to vote for him?—Directly, I don't think I did. As far as I can remember, directly I did not.

5997. I do not understand your use of that word "directly?"—That is, I did not press them.

5998. Did you indirectly?—I might say they ought to vote for him in conversation; but to go to them directly I don't think I did.

5999. But if a person came into your shop on business you might ask him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not directly, I did not. We may have a conversation that I was going to vote for him myself.

6000. Do you know a nam named Carew?—I do.

6001. Was he in your house?—He was, several times.

6002. Did you ask him to vote for Mr. Munster?—I never directly asked him to vote for him plump.

6003. You said something about several times?—Several times we had conversations about it, and I wished he would vote for him too; but to have him vote for him I did not.

6004. I do not understand the distinction you draw. I must ask you to explain that further. Did you ask him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not plainly I did not; but he understood that I was inclined that he would vote for him from our conversation.

6005. Tell me the obscure manner in which you asked him?—I cannot tell; he was often in.

6006. Was there ever any talk of money between you?—Yes, he expected money, I thought.

6007. Which of the Carews was that?—Michael Carew.

6008. Tell me how you surmised that he expected money?—From his own conversation.

6009. Did he ask for it?—Not me. I thought by his conversation.

6010. Did he speak several times of it?—I don't think he said it plumply; but I understood he expected money from what passed.

6011. To whom did you tell that expectation? Was it to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Me! I don't think I ever spoke a word to him.

6012. To whom then did you tell it?—I don't think I spoke a word to anybody belonging to him.

6013. You told it to somebody?—I may tell it to some of my own family.

6014. Who gave him the money?—I could not tell you whether he got it or no, or anything at all about it.

6015. Did you ever hear he got it?—Never.

6016. From himself or anybody else?—Never.

6017. Do you know that he voted for Mr. Munster?—I do not know. I can swear I do not know.

6018. Did you hear he voted for Mr. Munster?—I did not hear or inquire.

6019. Mr. GRIFFIN—Did you hear that Mr. Munster was defeated at the last election?—Yes, of course I did. I thought Carew got a retainer and that he could not vote or something of that kind.

6020. You often heard that I suppose?—I suppose I did: that is what I understood.

6021. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That is Michael Carew, junior, you are talking of?—Yes, that is the name.

6022. Did he tell you how much money he expected?—Not a word about it. I never heard him mention a sum of money; not a penny more than a pound.

6023. You had several conversations?—Several conversations.

6024. Did he in none of them say how much he expected?—Not a word about it. Never.

6025. Did any other men come to you?—Several.

6026. Several others came to you?—Yes.

6027. Were they voters from the Commons?—Yes, some of them were.

6028. Tell me their names?—I think John Moloney was in two or three times, and Michael Halley, I think.

6029. Who else?—I forget.

6030. Had you any conversation with Michael Halley about voting?—Very often; two or three times, I think.

6031. And you in some measure asked him to vote?—I did not, indeed.

6032. Do you mean to say that you never advocated——?—I never asked him such a question.

6033. Listen to my question. You cannot answer it unless you know what it is. Do you mean to say that in the several conversations you had with Halley, you never advocated Mr. Munster?—I did, decidedly; he knew I was for him.

6034. Listen to me. Do you think you were giving your evidence in a very candid way when you said you never asked him to vote?—I never asked him plumply "will you vote for Mr. Munster."

6035. In one breath you say to me "in several conversations with him I advocated Mr. Munster's cause," and in the next breath you say you never asked him to vote?—Not plumply.

6036. Do you think that is giving straightforward evidence?—I think it is, as far as I am concerned.

6037. I think it is not, sir?—Well as I don't know, I could not make it more strict.

6038. Have you been in attendance here before?—Not during the commission; I was not.

6039. Have you read about it?—I have.

6040. You have read of the power the Commissioners have of giving certificates to those who tell them the truth?—Yes, I am giving my evidence as fairly as any man.

6041. I do not know that?—He knew by my manner that I would wish he would vote for him, but directly to say "will you vote for him," I don't think I used the expression.

6042. In the rest of this examination do not hang upon the syllables that I utter, but when I ask you "did you ask the man to vote for him," answer straightforwardly from your heart the truth?—Of course that is what I intended.

6043. Answer the meaning of my question and not the words of it?—Yes.

6044. Michael Halley, you say, was in with you on several occasions?—Yes, two or three times.

6045. Did he talk with you about money?—I thought by his expression that he expected money; I do not know that he ever mentioned money to me.

6046. I presume you know he was paid money?—I heard so since this Commission, but before it I never did.

6047. Thirty-five pounds?—Yes.

6048. Was that the sum named in any of the conversations with you?—Never, sir, any sum, of any amount, good, bad, or indifferent.

6049. Will you have the goodness to tell me, as well as you can, what expression he used that led you to believe he expected money?—I don't know; I couldn't say.

6050. You can recollect something. What expression did he use that made you believe he expected money?—I really could not say. I think whatever side he would vote at he expected money now.

6051. Are you able to recollect any expression?—Indeed I am not, but I knew by his manner and conversations that he expected it.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 11.
Andrew Meara.

6052. And the same from Michael Carew?—Yes.

6053. What other voter came in?—John Moloney.

6054. The men all got £35?—Yes, so I heard.

6055. You said something to me about retainers. You used the word "retainer" with reference to Carew?—I thought he got a retainer and could not vote.

6056. From whom did he get the retainer, as you thought?—From Mr. Munster's side. That is the reason I said I did not know whether he voted or not.

6057. Did he tell you he had got it?—I don't know.

6058. Besides these three men, Carew, Moloney, and Halley, tell me any other men that called on you with whom you had conversations?—A man of the name of William Ryan.

6059. Is that William Ryan of the Race-course?—Yes.

6060. He also, I presume, led you to believe from his conversation that he expected money?—Yes.

6061. Was there any sum named?—No; there was a bill of his due the day of the polling in the bank. The night before that I told him I would have the bill settled for him the next day. I think £25 was the amount of it. That was the evening before the polling. My name was on the bill; that was the reason I took it afterwards.

6062. Was it his acceptance of your draft?—Yes, it was an accommodation for him.

6063. Have you got that bill?—No; I have nothing at all to do with it. He came to me in half-an-hour after this and told me he was pleased at the other side, and preferred voting there; so I didn't see him after.

6064. You told him you would get the bill paid for him?—Settled the next day; that I would see it settled.

6065. He came back the next day?—No, the same evening; about half-an-hour after.

6066. Did he tell you anything more than what you have said?—He said he was pleased at the other side, and that he would prefer voting there. I didn't see him after.

6067. Who subsequently took up the bill?—I never heard a word about it afterwards.

6068. Then you did not take it up?—No, sir.

6069. Mr. MOLLOY.—What was the amount of it?—£25.

6070. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What was the date of the bill?—It was due the day of the polling, whatever day that was.

6071. What was the date?—It was a three-months' bill.

6072. Had it been passed three months before then?—It was due the very day of the polling. It was after three months and three days.

6073. And the time had fully expired?—Fully expired.

6074. Were you on very friendly terms with the man for whose accommodation you accepted a bill?—Oh, certainly. He is a customer of mine. He deals largely with me. I oblige him always when he requires it.

6075. Now, sir, give me the name of another man?—I don't recollect anyone else. I had conversations with several other parties, but I don't know their names.

6076. Come to any other conversation, with any other man, of the same character as those you have told me?—I don't think I had conversations with anybody else.

6077. Had you with any persons in the town?—Oh, I had of course, very often.

6078. Had you any conversations of a similar character to any of these?—Well, I don't think I had.

6079. I suppose you had frequent conversations with Mr. Patrick Laffan during the course of the election?—Yes, I had.

6080. Did you know that he, Mr. Patrick Laffan, was engaged in inducing persons to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did, of course.

6081. Did you know that he had money at his disposal?—I don't think he said that to me. I don't think he said he had.

6082. Had you any conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan about the way of inducing any persons to vote?—Yes; he asked me to do it and I refused.

6083. To do what?—To try to influence them.

6084. And you refused?—I did.

6085. What term did he use?—I don't know. I had no conversation with him about it. I said I would give my vote. I had no more to do about it.

6086. You expected to get Ryan. By your own account you offered Ryan a bribe?—I didn't do it for myself. I spoke to Mr. Michael Laffan, and he said I might settle the bill and they would see it all right for me.

6087. To Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes.

6088. Did you tell him what party it was?—I think I did.

6089. Did you mention the name?—I think I did mention the name.

6090. Did you tell him it was the bill of a voter?—Yes.

6091. Did you tell him you offered to settle his bill if he voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

6092. And Mr. Laffan told you that you might do it?—Yes.

6093. And that he would see you all right?—Yes.

6094. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was the conversation with Mr. Laffan before or after you offered to settle the bill?—Before it, of course. I didn't want to be down for it myself. I couldn't afford to lose so much.

6095. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You wanted to be sure that you did not pay it out of your own pocket?—Decidedly.

6096. Can you recollect any of the persons to whom Mr. Patrick Laffan wanted you to speak?—He did not mention a name in the world, nor was not two minutes talking to me when I turned away and said if I gave Mr. Munster my vote that was all I wanted to know.

6097. Are those four men, Moloney, Carew, Halley, and Ryan, the only persons you endeavoured to influence?—I did not endeavour to influence them only in the one respect.

6098. Do not play upon my words. You have admitted to me that you offered a man to settle his bill?—That is the only one out of the four.

6099. Is there any other case of a similar kind?—I don't think there is.

6100. I would prefer that you would tell me than that I should refresh your memory?—I gave Mr. Michael Laffan that day of the bill £5 5*s.* to give some one. I don't know what it was for.

6101. Have you been paid it?—No.

6102. Did he say what he wanted it for?—He didn't directly say what he wanted it for.

6103. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What do you think he wanted it for?—It looked so like a retainer that I thought it was for a retainer.

6104. Did you hear since to whom he gave it?—Well, I think it was to a man of the name of Rawlins. He came to me himself first, and he would not take it. I was giving it to him and he would not take it.

6105. Rawlins came to you first?—First by Mr. Laffan's directions, and he would not take it.

6106. Did he say he came by Mr. Laffan's directions?—Yes.

6107. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Had you a written order?—Mr. Laffan himself told me to give it to him before that.

6108. Did Rawlins give you any reason for not taking it?—Not a word about it.

6109. Mr. GRIFFIN.—If he was not going to take it, what did he come to you for?—I could not say. He was getting his commands from me.

6110. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What commands?—£5 5*s.*

6111. Did you offer it to him?—Yes, I put it on the counter.

6112. Did he refuse to take it?—He did.

6113. Did he say it was too little?—He took it in his hands and put it back again.

6114. He looked at it?—I believe he did.

6115. And he put it down again?—He did.

6116. I want to know do you believe he laid it down because he thought it was too little?—I could not tell you that.

6117. Do you believe that was his reason?—I cannot say.

6118. You saw the money in his hand?—I think he was afraid to take it, or something or other.

6119. Did you not give him the amount directed?—I did, and he made some observation that he was afraid to take it, or something tantamount to that.

6120. Yet he came to you for it?—He did.

6121. When you gave him the five guineas that you were directed to give him, he did not take it?—I think he knew the amount he was to get before he came to the shop at all.

6122. And he did not take it?—No. Mr. Laffan turned in in a few minutes after.

6123. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you present when he took it from Mr. Laffan?—I could not say: it was not in my place he took it.

6124. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What is Rawlins' Christian name?—Thomas.

6125. Mr. Laffan wishes to have this question put to you, are you quite sure you gave the money to Mr. Laffan or to Rawlins?—I gave it first to Rawlins and he laid it on the counter. Mr. Laffan then entered the shop and I gave it to him.

6126. You have no doubt about it?—I have not.

6127. Mr. Laffan wishes to have you asked, was what Mr. Laffan said to lend him the money?—Yes.

6128. Was what Mr. Laffan said, to lend him the money, and he would be security, or something of that kind?—I should think so—something of that kind.

6129. To lend whom the money?—To himself; but I think he was lending it to the other.

6130. The question implies that Mr. Laffan asked you to lend Rawlins the money, and Mr. Laffan would be security for it?—That is what I understood.

6131. And that is what you call Mr. Laffan's direction to you to pay Rawlins?—Yes.

6132. And when Rawlins refused it you gave it to Mr. Laffan?—Yes.

6133. Did you see Mr. Laffan give it to Rawlins?—I did not.

6134. Were they together in your house?—No; Mr. Laffan came in two or three minutes after Rawlins, and turned out again by himself.

6135. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You told him what occured about Rawlins?—I did.

6136. Did you charge any person in your account with the five guineas?—I do not think I charged him at all. It is more than probable I put it in Mr. Michael Laffan's account, as a debt with me.

6137. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I must trouble you to get me the account. Had you any conversation with him since about it?—I asked him once or twice about it since.

6138. What did he say?—Some other time.

6139. Is that all he said?—I think so.

6140. I believe Mr. Munster has been a tolerably large customer of yours since he came to Cashel?—Yes.

6141. How much money did you receive for goods from him?—His account is not paid up yet, but I suppose I have received over £80 or £90 from him in cash, and there is a good deal due still—some money due still.

6142. What was the money paid for?—For drapery goods, carpetings, furnishing two dwelling-houses.

6143. Were those goods sent to Mr. Munster himself?—No.

6144. To whom?—To some ladies or parties that live with him.

6145. They were all for Mr. Munster?—Oh, no, he bought a lot of cheap dresses for the poor.

6146. To what amount?—I should think £14, or something that way.

6147. Do you recollect a bill of yours amounting to £10 14*s.* 3*d.*?—Yes.

6148. Were the things got for the poor included in that?—I should think there was more than that got for the poor.

6149. Could you tell me exactly?—I could.

6150. Have the goodness to refer to your account, and show me where you have charged the five pounds, and the amount of the goods Mr. Munster got from you for the poor. You will also be able to tell us the whole amount of Mr. Munster's account?—Yes.

6151. Mr. GRIFFIN.—A number of the voters from the Commons used to deal in your place?—Yes.

6152. Were you in the habit of accommodating any of them with bills?—I believe not.

6153. Did you ever put your name to any bill to accommodate any other person except that one man you have mentioned?—I don't think I did.

6154. Are you positive?—I don't think I did.

6155. I do not mean several years, but within the last six months?—I don't think I did. I am certain I did not.

6156. Do you remember the election of 1865?—I do.

6157. Do you remember any money going or any inducement to voters at that election?—I do not.

6158. Are you quite sure about that?—I am quite sure. At the side I voted at all events, I don't think any such thing occurred.

6159. At which side did you vote?—For Mr. Lanigan.

6160. You had not any bills for voters at that time?—No.

6161. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I called your attention to an amount of £10 14*s.* 2*d.* There is here £66 8*s.* 1*d.* in Mr. Munster's bank pass book. Those two sums together would make £77 2*s.* 3*d.* You said there was something about £4 more. That would make about £80?—Well, yes.

6162. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked was not the whole of his account actually settled?—No, it is not.

6163. About how much is there due at present?—Well, I could not say. I can let you know it.

6164. Mr. Munster desires to ask was not the whole of his account paid at Christmas?—Oh, yes, I believe it was. It was my own fault not to send the bill.

6165. Mr. Munster wishes you to state if he owes anything is it not on a running account?—Yes.

6166. Your account has been settled up to Christmas?—Certainly.

6167. I understand that you have not furnished the account that is at present due?—Yes, sir.

Mrs. Henrietta Boyton sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6168. Mrs. Boyton, your husband, I believe is a voter in Cashel?—Yes.

6169. He is Mr. John Boyton I understand?—Yes.

6170. And he voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

6171. I believe, Mrs. Boyton, that you and your husband reside in Mr. Munster's house at present?—Yes.

6172. Mr. Munster also I believe has taken a house from you?—Yes, he has my house—Abbeyview.

6173. That house I believe belonged to the late Mr. Doheny?—Yes; we took it from Mrs. Jordan.

6174. And you have held it from Mr. Doheny's widow?—We hold it now from Mrs. Doheny.

6175. What rent do you pay Mrs. Doheny for it?—£15 a year.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 11.
Mrs. Henrietta Boyton.

6176. When did you let it to Mr. Munster?—The 16th October.

6177. Was the letting made by written or verbal agreement?—A written agreement.

6178. Has your husband got it?—No, I think Mr. Laffan has it.

6179. Mr. Michael Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan, I think.

6180. May I ask what rent he pays?—He does not pay any rent to us at present.

6181. But he is to pay rent?—I do not think he is. We are residing in Mr. Munster's house.

6182. Does the agreement not provide for the payment of any rent?—No; the agreement terminated the 16th January, for three months.

6183. Were you not to be paid any sum for it?—After that, no.

6184. Were you not to be paid any sum for the interval between October and January?—No; it was taken for three months.

6185. And were you not to be paid anything for it?—We were paid for three months.

6186. How much?—Twenty pounds, amount for three months, for a house furnished.

6187. Then was it furnished when you gave it to Mr. Munster?—Yes.

6188. Was it furnished during the interval from October to January?—Yes. I left it to him just as I lived in it.

6189. Since then I presume you have some fresh agreement with Mr. Munster?—No arrangement whatever.

6190. Is Mr. Munster holding it now without the payment of any rent for it?—Yes.

6191. You say that you and your husband are living in Mr. Munster's house?—Yes.

6192. At his house in John-street?—Yes, we are living in John-street.

6193. Did you go to live there at once when you gave up Abbeyview?—No; we went to Miss O'Dwyer's, at the hotel.

6194. How long did you remain there?—I think two months.

6195. Did you then go to John-street?—No; we went to Abbeyview again. John-street house was not ready then.

6196. You then went to live with Mr. Munster in Abbeyview?—Yes.

6197. I am sorry to be obliged to put all these questions. It is our painful duty to do it?—It is no matter.

6198. That house was furnished when he took it?—No, he furnished it but recently.

6199. You and your husband reside in John-street?—I reside in John-street at present; yes.

6200. And your husband with you?—Yes.

6201. Do you reside at Mr. Munster's expense?—Yes; he visits us there.

6202. You know Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes.

6203. You saw him frequently about the election?—Yes.

6204. You know that he was actively engaged for Mr. Munster during the election?—I saw him going about.

6205. You knew he was engaged?—I understood he was. I think he was.

6206. Do you know Patrick Cunningham?—I do.

6207. You saw him repeatedly engaged about the election?—Yes.

6208. With Mr. Michael Laffan?—I cannot say. I saw him going about.

6209. Have you heard anything relative to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No; I have not.

6210. Have you heard anything lately of Patrick Cunningham?—No; I have not heard anything about Cunningham.

6211. Have you not seen him lately. Yes, I did.

6212. When did you see him last?—I saw him last Wednesday I think, last Wednesday week.

6213. Wednesday week, or last Wednesday of all?—Last Wednesday.

6214. Last Wednesday?—Yes.

6215. Who was with you last Wednesday when you saw him?—Mrs. Needham.

6216. Who is Mrs. Needham?—The housekeeper at Abbeyview.

6217. That is, Mr. Munster's house?—Yes.

6218. What time on Wednesday did you see him?—About two or three o'clock; about three o'clock.

6219. Where, may I ask?—At Clogheen.

6220. How far is Clogheen from this?—It is about fourteen miles.

Mr. Munster—Seventeen miles.

6221. Did you tell Mr. Munster that you had seen him there?—No, I did not.

6222. Mrs. Needham was with you and knew that, I suppose?—Yes.

6223. And she is living in the house with Mr. Munster?—She is.

6224. I suppose you have heard that we have been endeavouring to get Cunningham to appear here?—No, I did not hear a word about it.

6225. Where in Clogheen did you see him—I went to Clogheen to pay a visit at Bayville. I did not wish to go by myself, and I asked to have Mrs. Needham allowed to go with me. When I stepped out of the car at the hotel there—no, I was after returning, after paying the visit, when I met him in the street.

6226. Were you talking with him?—No, not above two minutes.

6227. In the hotel, I suppose?—At the hotel door; I did not delay a moment.

6228. No doubt you talked about the Commission?—I do not recollect speaking a word about it.

6229. I understand that you were after paying your visit?—Yes.

6230. Then, were you driving or walking at the time?—I was walking at the time. I was just turning into the hotel, and he was in the street.

6231. Had you any reason to believe that he was stopping in the hotel?—Not the least. I turned into the house to order the car around at once, and he just stood at the door.

6232. And you were speaking to him for about two minutes?—I do not think more than two minutes. I just said, "it was a fine day, and I was surprised to see him there," or something to that effect.

6233. He is not of the class of persons in life that you would stop talking to there. I should like to know what you were talking to him about?—He is not certainly the class in life, and that is the reason I did not stay a moment, but just pass.

6234. You say you were two minutes in conversation?—I was.

6235. Did you ask him where he was going to?—No.

4236. Or why he was at the hotel?—No.

6237. Did you ask where he was going to?—I did not think of such a thing. He was not a person I would ask where he was going. I thought he was only after coming to Clogheen.

6238. This was all on Wednesday?—Wednesday night.

6239. Did Mrs. Needham speak to him?—I do not think she did, unless she bowed her head to him.

6240. She knew who he was?—She did.

6241. She may have spoken to him?—She may; I did not take the least notice, for I was hurried, and was coming away.

6242. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was Mrs. Needham with you on the visit?—No, she was not.

6243. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was Mrs. Needham with Cunningham, or in company with him, at the time you came up?—Oh, no; I do not think she was; I did not mind it a bit; I just saw him as I would any man, and I did not notice him.

6244. And you tell me that you did not hear he was wanted at the inquiry?—No, not a word about it.

6245. You knew he had very essential evidence to give on such an occasion as this?—I did not know anything at all about it, nor think about it.

6246. Did you know that he was examined at the petition?—I did not ask.

6247. Or did you hear of his examination by any chance?—No, I did not.

6248. You have told me that you do not know at all where he is at present?—Oh, no; I do not know anything at all about him.

6249. I must ask you to tell me if you please, who was the servant that drove you that day you went to Clogheen?—I do not know who the driver of the car was.

6250. Was he one of Mr. Munster's servants?—Oh, no; one of Mr. Quirke's men.

6251. Mr. Munster wishes to know did you go to Clogheen to see a priest, a friend of yours, about a meeting at Clogheen concerning Father Sheehy's monument?—Yes.

Mr. Munster.—I would further wish that you would ask if the witness has any reason to suppose that her meeting Cunningham was anything but accident.

6252. I do not think it necessary to ask that, for I am assured Mrs. Boyton would tell me. I feel satisfied she has told the truth. Mr. Munster wishes to ask you, Mrs. Boyton, if, after you left Miss O'Dwyer's and went to Abbeyview, you returned to Miss O'Dwyer's again?—Yes, I remained two days at Mr. Munster's and then returned to Miss O'Dwyer's again.

6253. A further question he wishes to ask you is, do you know how it happened that you remained two days at his house?—There was a lady at Mr. Munster's—a Mrs. Leahy. She came over with a young person that was with Mr. Munster, and she left, and I was invited to stop at Mr. Munster's until Mrs. Richardson came over to remain in Mr. Munster's house as the head of his house. I remained the two days, between the time that Mrs. Leahy left and Mrs. Richardson came. I stopped the two days and returned to Miss O'Dwyer's again.

6254. You were examined, Mrs. Boyton, at the petition with reference to a young man named Ryan?—Yes.

6255. I will ask you to tell me the circumstance from beginning to end, as you recollect it?—I met Mr. Ryan. I was returning over from John-street one day and I met Mr. Ryan, and he asked me could he see Mr. Boyton, as he wanted to speak to him on some business. I said he was detained in the bank at that time late, and that the only time he could see him was about tea hour, when he would be sure to be in; and he said he would call in the evening, and he did come in the evening, and he wanted Mr. Boyton, or wanted to see could we get a horse purchased from him.

6256. Purchased by whom?—By Mr. Munster's agents from him. He had a horse at the time, and he wanted to know, as we were friends, and as Mr. Munster was buying horses that time for his own use, he wanted to know could we get his horse bought; and he asked £70 for the horse; and then after tea there was some conversation about votes. I cannot say I asked him, but I dare say I did, for at the time it was quite usual for every one to say, "who will you vote for." He said he had not his mind made up, but that all the Commons' votes were to be got for Mr. Munster—that is what I understood.

6257. Did you understand from him that if he got a good price for his horse he would vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes, I understood it would make him friendly to Mr. Munster.

6258. Will you tell me the very words he used that led you to believe that; if you can bring to your recollection any particular expression of his, or any words of his, that led you to believe that if he got this long price for his horse, he would vote for Mr. Munster?—I could not recollect that he said anything distinctly that if the horse was bought he would vote; but I understood that if the horse was bought he would vote for Mr. Munster; also, that if he would vote, he would not vote without money.

6259. Where did all this conversation take place?—In the public sitting room in Miss O'Dwyer's hotel.

6260. That person is John Ryan of the Race-course?—Yes.

6261. Is he one of the voters from the Commons?—Yes.

6262. Do you know how he voted afterwards?—He voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

6263. Did all the conversation take place in the sitting room?—Yes, all the conversation, but there was a passage going out, and I spoke to him going along the passage. There was a folding door between it and the drawing room where we were.

6264. Was your husband present?—Yes, he was in the room. There was a newspaper on the table, and I do not think he was much minding what was going on from time to time.

6265. There was a door from the stairs to the sitting room?—There was a door from the stairs to the sitting room, and you went from the passage into the room where we were.

6266. Is there no door from the drawing room to the stairs or landing outside?—No, there is not; you can only enter the drawing room by passing through. That is the way it was that time.

6267. Was he brought to you to the drawing room?—Yes.

6268. I suppose a servant came and said a man wanted to see you?—I could not say that, it being a public hotel, I believe it is usual for people to walk up stairs.

6269. You were in the drawing room with your husband?—Yes.

6270. And this conversation about selling the horse took place in the passage?—No, it took place in the drawing room.

6271. All in the drawing room?—All in the drawing room, and then going away I might still have continued the conversation with him about the matter. He said the Commons' people were divided into sections—ten in each place, I believe, and that he led one section, and that he could bring ten people with him, I think.

6272. Did he say what the figure would be?—Yes, he said £30.

6273. Did he give you their names?—Oh, no, he did not.

6274. You did not go so fully into particulars?—I did not hear a word about it.

6275. Was your husband present?—He may have heard it all; I dare say he did.

6276. Your husband voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

6277. And, no doubt, was anxious for his return?—He was.

6278. This conversation having occurred in the room occurred in such a way that Mr. Boyton could have heard it?—He could.

6279. And he naturally would listen to it if it arose?—Yes, I am sure he would.

6280. Was not your husband examined on the petition?—Yes.

6281. Did he not say that he did not know anything of this?—The conversation?

6282. About the votes?—I do not know.

6283. You are aware of what Ryan swore at the election petition?—Yes.

6284. About your having money there?—Yes, I am quite aware he swore that I had money.

6285. He will be examined again, and I do not know whether he will repeat that or not; but I wish you to have an opportunity of saying anything you can in reference to it?—I never had a shilling belonging to him, nor no authority to offer money.

6286. Mr. Baron Fitzgerald on your examination shortly summed up the statement made by Ryan, and put it in this way. "He says that you took him into a bedroom and showed him a box which, you said, contained £1,225?"—I never said it. I could not have said such a thing.

6287. Did you say anything about any money at all to him?—Nothing of any money. I was going to say that when he spoke of getting £30 a man for the voters, I might have said that one side would give it as well as the other. I did not know there was any harm in that.

SEVENTH DAY. October 11. Mrs. Henrietta Boyton.

6288. Did you say something to the effect that there was money to get those votes at Mr. Munster's side?—I do not say that I did.

6289. You said one side as well as the other?—I said in conversation that I supposed one side would pay as well as the other.

6290. Is that the only thing you recollect to have said with reference to money?—I never said another word. I never kept money. I never had money at all.

6291. All he says was that you said it was there?—I never said the like. I could not assert such a falsehood.

6292. Did you show him a box?—Never. I never showed him a box at all.

6293. And all you recollect to have said to him with reference to money is, that one side would give it as well as the other?—I may have said that, but I do not recollect.

6294. At least the best of your belief is, that you mentioned that if Mr. O'Beirne's side was giving money, it would be procurable at Mr. Munster's side as well?—Yes, I thought it was given. I thought when he said no voters from the Commons were got without money, I took it for granted then that they would not vote without money; but I had no authority from anyone to offer money.

6295. Do you recollect the way in which you expressed yourself about the money being at one side as well as at the other? Do you recollect how you expressed that idea to him: what words you used?—I do not recollect.

6296. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he say that Mr. O'Beirne was giving it?—I do not recollect that he said Mr. O'Beirne was giving it; but he said the votes would not be got without money, and that whoever would give the most money would get the votes.

6297. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Then all you recollect to have said was that one side would pay as well as the other?—Yes.

6298. That meant to convey to him, I suppose, that Mr. Munster's side would be as ready to pay as the other?—I did not know anything at all about Mr. Munster's side that time; for at that time I did not know Mr. Munster at all. I had not met Mr. Munster at that time, nor for over a week after it.

6299. Was your husband a voter in '65 do you know, Mrs. Boyton?—He was not.

6300. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked this question, which is a very pertinent and proper one; can you fix the date of the conversation with John Ryan?—I think it was about the 2nd November—the 2nd or 3rd November; about that time.

6301. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked if at that time his acquaintance with you was anything beyond that of a casual visiter?—I scarcely knew Mr. Munster at all.

6302. You had let your house to him?—Yes.

6303. And had been a couple of days on a visit with him?—No; I had not been in his house at all.

6304. On the 2nd November?—I might have been in his house, but I was not stopping in Mr. Munster's house at that time.

6305. This is a question Mr. Munster wishes to ask, and I have no objection to put it, although I do not see how it applies; is or was Miss O'Dwyer a friend or enemy of Mr. Munster's?—An enemy, decidedly.

6306. This is another question that Mr. Munster wishes to have asked—did Cunningham supply oats to Mr. Munster, and has he a store back of Abbeyview gate?—I know he has a store. I saw his father often standing at the door there; but I do not know anything at all about it.

6307. This place that you speak of outside the drawing-room, and that you call a passage, is a room?—Yes.

6308. It is not a lobby, or head of a staircase, or anything of that kind?—No.

6309. Was that room used for any purpose? Was it a bed-room, or used for any purpose?—No, I never saw it used as a bed-room.

6310. Do you recollect being in that room with Ryan?—Yes, while I was speaking to him.

6311. In that room?—Yes.

6312. You did not go to show him out, I presume?—I did go that part of the way out with him; but it was the one room; there is only a step just going down.

6313. It would be unusual for a lady in your condition to show out a man like this Ryan—a man who says he is the head of ten men who are to be paid for their votes. You would hardly have gone to show him out as a matter of courtesy. Your husband would have done that if it were necessary, I suppose. Did you go there for the purpose of having any of this conversation with him alone?—I continued the conversation that was in the drawing-room going along.

6314. It looks strange that you, a lady, should have gone there with that man. You did not go as a matter of courtesy?—It was as a matter of courtesy, I suppose. I did go out with him, I am sure.

6315. Did you go out for the purpose of having a portion of the conversation quite private with him?—I am quite sure I did walk out along there and continue the conversation.

6316. Was that with the object of private conversation?—No; I do not think I said anything private to Ryan—not a word.

6317. My question is, did you leave the room where your husband was and go into this room with Ryan for the purpose of having any portion of the conversation between you and Ryan alone?—I did not.

6318. Then why did you go into that room?—When he was going out I walked out with him.

6319. Why?—I continued the conversation about the voters, and to speak more to him about it.

6320. Was it to continue that conversation?—It was.

6321. I suppose your husband would not interfere about voting, as he has been in the bank?—No.

6322. He would not be allowed by his manager?—No.

6323. Did you want then to continue the conversation with Ryan?—Yes; it was I that had the conversation with Ryan all along.

6324. And it was with that object that you went out with him?—I went along with him and continued the conversation.

6325. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You were interested in the conversation about the votes?—Yes.

6326. And wanted to hear all about it?—Yes.

6327. And went out of the room for the purpose of finishing it?—Yes.

6328. Did you communicate this conversation to anybody?—Yes, I told about the selling of the horse.

6329. Did you tell anybody about the votes?—I did.

6330. Whom did you tell?—I think I told Mr. Patrick Laffan.

6331. When did you tell him?—Immediately after the conversation.

6332. Did you see Mr. Patrick Laffan that evening?—Oh, no, I do not think I did.

6333. But the next day?—I think I did.

6334. At the first opportunity you told Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes, I told him about selling the horse and the votes.

6335. You told him that Ryan told you he would sell the horse for £70, and that he could get ten votes at £30 each, besides?—Yes.

6336. Your husband being in the bank did not wish to enter into a conversation of the kind you had with Ryan?—He had nothing to do with votes.

6337. Do you not think that the reason Ryan had that conversation with you and not with Mr. Boyton was, that Mr. Boyton being in the bank could not interfere in the election?—No, I think he spoke openly before both. I do not think it was that at all.

6338. Do you not think it likely that a man coming to sell a horse would go to the gentleman and not to the lady?—Well, he did; he spoke to both.

6339. But your husband did not encourage him?—He said what I said, that he would give the message to the friends of Mr. Munster.

6340. He was not as much interested as you in the matter?—I was more active about it than he was. I know I had more talk about it.

6341. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was there any person in the drawingroom that evening besides yourself, your husband and John Ryan?—There was, but they left immediately.

6342. And as Ryan got up to leave the room there was no person present?—There was a Mr. Raftery.

6343. Did you go out in order that Mr. Raftery might not hear the conversation?—No, I spoke in the presence of Mr. Raftery. He was reading, I think, at the table.

6344. Who is Mr. Raftery?—He is in the bank too.

6345. While you were continuing the conversation did you open the door?—Yes. I think the servant opened the door. She was in the habit of being continually in and out of the room when anyone was with me, listening, and at the doors and everything.

6346. Who were the persons that went out before Ryan came in?—A Miss Ryan that was lodging there; she went to her own room, that was next the drawing-room, when Ryan came in.

6347. Was she asked to leave the room?—Oh, not at all. She had a little girl with her, and she went out I think to let the child go to bed.

6348. Why did you not remain there and finish the conversation in the drawing room?—It is a habit of mine when any people are with me to go out with them.

6349. Are you certain that it was you and not your husband that went out with Ryan?—He went out also.

6350. You were not in any room that night with Ryan except the passage?—No, most positively. I never went upstairs.

6351. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes to have the question asked—was Mr. John Ryan, the poor-rate collector?—He was.

Mr. Munster.—Also whether he was a relative of Mr. Guiry, J.P., of Clonmel, and a connexion of Mr. Grace's.

6352. Do you know that?—Yes, I know there is a connexion. His nephew Guiry is at Clonmel, and Mr. Grace's sister is married to him.

6353. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was Mr. Boyton present at the conversation between you and Ryan in that outer room?—He was, but it was not a conversation; it was only walking along. I did not think he meant what he was saying at all.

6354. But your husband heard it?—I cannot tell.

Mr. Pierce Grace wished to have a question asked.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I think I must stop those questions. I do not see how the last of Mr. Munster's questions affects the case. It only leads to continual interruptions to our inquiry, to put such questions.

Mr. Munster.—You put to the witness that there was an inequality of rank between the witness and Mr. Ryan.

Mr. Grace.—There was evidence given at the trial of the petition that Mrs. Boyton was in a bedroom upstairs with Mr. Ryan. That is his story. That could not be a passage. I do not think she was asked that.

Mr. MOLLOY.—Oh, yes, "was she in any room with him."

Andrew Meara recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

[Witness hands in his ledger, and points out entry of purchases for the poor.]

6355. That is exactly the amount I made it, £10 14*s.* 2*d.* Is that the entire amount?—There were some little things. Yes.

6356. I see you have the other entry charged as "cash to Mr. Michael Laffan £5 5*s.*?"—Yes.

6357. It is charged on the 27th November. Now you lent it before that, nearly a week before it?—It is one of the young men's entries.

Denis Ryan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6358. Mr. Ryan, you are an elector, I believe, of Cashel, and reside on the Commons?—Yes, in Cooper's lot.

6359. You voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

6360. And you are the brother-in-law of Margaret Moloney and Mary Moloney?—Yes, sir.

6361. They have told us of the paper parcel that you left in their keeping, and that you told them to put up safe for a few days?—Yes, sir.

6362. How much money was in it?—£35.

6363. For whom was that money, Mr. Ryan?—The person it was intended for—Edmund Stapleton.

6364. Edmund Stapleton is a voter, I believe?—Yes, sir.

6365. Who gave it to you to give to Edmund Stapleton?—I couldn't tell.

6366. Oh, you can! You did not find it surely. Who gave it to you?—Some man gave it to me in Mrs. Corcoran's hotel that I did not know.

6367. Some man that you did not know?—Yes.

6368. Who brought you to that man?—Patrick Cunningham told me to go into the room.

6369. Did he tell you whom you would see there?—He said I would meet a man.

6370. In what room did you see him?—Part of the second flight, convenient to the lobby.

6371. Was it a bedroom?—I couldn't exactly say, but to the best of my belief it was, sir, a bedroom. It was dark.

6372. What hour of the day or night was it?—Four or five o'clock in the evening.

6373. Was there no candle lighting?—No, sir.

6374. How did you count the money?—I couldn't count it in the dark. It was put into my pocket.

6375. By the man?—Yes.

6376. Was it in a parcel?—Yes.

6377. How did you know it was £35 if you did not count it?—I counted it when I brought it out where there was light.

6378. In Mrs. Corcoran's house?—Either there or in the yard.

6379. Did you ever see that man before?—I might have seen him, but at the same time I could not know the man.

6380. Did you suspect who he was?—No, sir.

6381. What sort of man was he?—I couldn't say, the light being dark.

6382. Was he an old or a young man?—I couldn't say, sir. I kept down my head. I didn't fancy to know him.

6383. And he told you the money was for Edmund Stapleton?—The man I got it from, it is most likely that he didn't know who it was for. It is myself says it was for Edmund Stapleton.

6384. Patrick Cunningham took you to the place?—I was in the hotel myself at the same time.

6385. In what part of the hotel?—In the front room, I think.

6386. Were you in the front room?—Either there or the lobby.

6387. I want to know whom you saw in the front room?—Patrick Cunningham at that tine.

6388. And no one else?—It was on the lobby I met him—on the stairs.

6389. Whom else did you see in the hotel, besides Patrick Cunningham and that man?—I couldn't say.

6390. Did you see Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No.

6391. Did you see Mr. Leahy there?—No, not at that time.

SEVENTH DAY. October 11. Denis Ryan.

6392. Did you see him there that day at all?—I might have seen him, but I cannot recollect.

6393. Did you see him there that day?—I might have seen him that morning.

6394. Did you see him in the morning?—I cannot recollect, there were so many going in there.

6395. Did you see Mr. Leahy or Mr. Laffan there any other day?—I often saw them there.

6396. Had you any conversation with them about voters?—Who?

6397. You know very well whom I mean?—If you mention the parties, sir.

6398. I will commit you to prison if you do not answer?—I will answer, sir.

6399. Had you any conversation about voters?—I might have conversations with parties.

6400. With whom?—To the best of my belief Patrick Laffan asked me "what about the voters," or "did I think they would be all right." I told him my opinion, that I think some of the parties were gone to Mr. O'Beirne's side.

6401. Go on; that is not all that passed?—Well, there might have more passed. Any question you ask I am satisfied to answer.

6402. Did you speak about the price that was to be paid for them?—No, sir.

6403. Was there no mention of the price that was to be paid?—No, by Mr. Patrick Laffan, Mr. Leahy, or any of the Laffans.

6404. Did you speak to Mr. Leahy about money to the voters?—I told him there was a good deal turning over to Mr. O'Beirne.

6405. Was there any talk about getting them back or keeping them?—About getting them back?

6406. Have you been here before?—No, sir.

6407. Are you aware that you have admitted now, and that it has been already proved that you have been concerned in this business about giving the money for this vote, and that if a case were pressed against you in a criminal court you are liable to two years' imprisonment?—I am, sir.

6408. And that you are also liable to a penalty of £100?—I am aware of it.

6409. Are you aware that if you give your evidence candidly and straightforwardly, and tell us all you know, we can give you a certificate that will free you from all penalties?—I am, sir.

6410. If you do not give your evidence candidly, and tell all you know, you will get no certificate?—I will tell you, sir, all I know.

6411. Tell all the conversation you had with Mr. Leahy, or with Mr. Patrick Laffan, about votes?—Very seldom I was talking to Mr. Leahy unless he happened to be there.

6412. On any occasion did you speak to him about the price of the votes of the people of the Commons?—No, sir.

6413. Did you speak about giving money or getting money for them?—Not to Mr. Leahy or Mr. Laffan, but to Pat Cunningham, for Edmund Stapleton.

6414. Answer my question as you understand it. Had you any conversation about money with any one except Patrick Cunningham?—No, sir; and Stapleton himself.

6415. And Stapleton himself?—Yes, sir.

6416. Did you arrange the price Stapleton was to get?—I gave him to understand what he was to get.

6417. How much did you give him to understand he was to get?—£35.

6418. When had you the conversation with Stapleton?—I had it with him on the evening of the nomination day.

6419. Where had you the conversation?—At the corner of Dr. Coyle's house.

6420. In Cashel?—Yes, sir.

6421. Did he tell you then how he was going to vote?—He told me he would vote for Mr. Munster.

6422. Did he tell you that he should get anything for voting?—Not at that time.

6423. Did he afterwards?—I told him afterwards if he did vote for Mr. Munster I would be inclined to serve him.

6424. Did you tell him the amount?—I did, the day after.

6425. Thirty-five pounds?—Yes.

6426. Who gave you authority to say £35?—I had it in my own possession at the same time.

6427. Who gave it to you?—I had it the evening before that previous in my possession, and the reason I didn't give it was because he got drunk at the hotel.

6428. Did any one authorize you to offer him money except Patrick Cunningham?—Patrick Cunningham didn't authorize me, but I asked Cunningham.

6429. And then Cunningham took you to this man?—He took me to him.

6430. You told Cunningham you left the money for Stapleton?—Yes.

6431. You left the money for Stapleton with your sister-in-law?—Yes, I left it for safety until the following day.

6432. What did you do with it?—I met Stapleton in the street.

6433. Did you give it to him?—No. I brought him back to the hotel, and met Mr. Cunningham. I called him to one side from Stapleton, and I told him—"Bring this back where I got it; I will not give it to Stapleton; I will not be in his power."

6434. Then, you gave it back to Cunningham?—Yes, and he made a token for me to send him into the room. I sent him into the room, and what happened between them I don't know.

6435. Then, you gave back the money to Cunningham?—I did, sir.

6436. When was it that you told Stapleton the amount you would give him—was it the night before?—The same day, sir. On my way going to the hotel I told him.

6437. For whom did you vote at the election of 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

6438. What money did you get?—I got £50 from him to act as an agent.

6439. Were you promised any money for your vote at the last election?—Mr. Laffan employed me as agent for Mr. Munster.

6440. I asked you were you promised any money?—No, sir, for voting.

6441. Were you promised any money at the last election?—Not for voting. I was promised money to act as agent.

6442. How much money were you promised?—£50.

6443. By which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

6444. This gentleman here?—Yes; it is he engaged me. [Identifies Mr. Michael J. Laffan.]

6445. Did you tell him how much you had been paid by Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—I did, sir.

6446. Did you say that you would not take less from him?—I told him I got £50 from Mr. O'Beirne to act as agent.

6447. Tell me all the conversation that took place between you and Mr. Laffan?—He asked me would I go to town, and I told him I would. When I went to town then I was standing at Miss Moloney's door, and he came up, and we went up stairs, and he gave me a retainer.

6448. How much was the retainer?—Two guineas.

6449. Was that two guineas to be a part of the £50?—Well, we had no conversation about it, sir.

6450. Have you been paid any of the £50 since?—No, sir.

6451. Have you been paid none of the £50?—No, sir.

6452. Have you received any money from any one except the two guineas?—No, sir.

6453. Did you ask for the £50?—After the petition here I furnished him with a bill in my son's name.

6454. In your son's name?—Yes, sir.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6455. Produce that bill if you please, Mr. Biggin?—I do not think I have it, sir. [Subsequently handed in.]

Denis Ryan's examination resumed by Mr. MOLLOY.

6456. What is your son's name?—John, sir.

6457. Were you told to furnish the bill in your son John's name?—No, I went up to see if I was to get it, and I drew up the bill in my son's name.

6458. Why did you draw it in your son's name?—As my son was not a voter.

6459. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I suppose you thought it might look like a bribe if it was in your own name?—I did not want to have anything to do with it.

6460. Is that the bill you sent in? [Is handed document.] Who wrote it for you?—Patrick Cunningham, sir.

6461. Patrick Cunningham wrote this?—I asked him to write it.

6462. Read it?—"28th December, 1868."

6463. Did you tell me that it was after the petition?—To the best of my belief it was.

6464. The petition was not tried here until February?—I was under the impression it was after the petition; I took no note of it.

6465. Where did Cunningham write this for you?—In Mr. Laffan's office.

6466. Was Mr. Laffan present?—To the best of my belief I saw him engaged at one side there.

6467. Had you any conversation with Mr. Laffan before this was written about the money?—I asked him could I get the £50 several times, and he said I could not, that it could not be got until after the petition or the special.

6468. Special Commission?—Yes, sir.

6469. Is it this Commission?—Yes, sir.

6470. And his answer was that no money could be given until the petition and Commission were over?—Yes, sir.

6471. Was that answer of Mr. Laffan's to you, before or after you put in this claim?—Before and after, that is what he always told me. I asked him twice before it.

6672. How many times altogether did you ask him?—To the best of my belief two or three times. When I saw there was no prospect of it I was not annoying him.

6473. Mr. MOLLOY.—From whom did you get the money for the election of 1865?—From Mr. O'Beirne himself.

6474. When did you get it?—Last Christmas twelve months I got it from him.

6475. Christmas, 1866?—1867.

6476. Did you go for it to London?—I did.

6477. For that money?—Yes.

6478. Did you get it there?—I did not get it in cash there.

6479. How did you get it?—He gave a bill on the bank of Cashel for it.

6480. Did you receive the £50 on the bill?—Yes, sir.

6481. Before you went up to the room where the money was put into your pocket, you were in the front room at Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, sir; I was on the lobby.

6482. You said you were in the front room?—On the lobby I was standing when I was told to go up to the front room.

6483. You said you had been in the front room?—Not that time, but previous to that time.

6484. How soon before that were you in the front room?—I cannot exactly say, sir.

6485. When you were in the front room that day who was in it?—I could not exactly say.

6486. How many persons?—I could not tell. I should think there was not many.

6487. Where did Stapleton get drunk?—In the coffee-room. He was partly half drunk before he came in.

6488. Was he getting liquor there?—In the coffee-room?

6489. Yes?—I understand he got one liquor there in my presence.

6490. Who gave him the treat?—I could not exactly tell though I saw the person.

6491. Was it whiskey or brandy?—Brandy.

6492. And you do not recollect who it was?—Of course I don't. I knew him, but I don't recollect.

6493. Were the voters getting drink there?—They were.

6494. Was he so drunk after your getting the money that you could not give it to him?—He was, sir.

6495. For whom did you vote at the election of 1859?—For Mr. Lanigan.

6496. Did you get any money then?—No, sir, nor anyone else in the Commons that I am aware of.

6497. In 1859?—Yes, sir.

6498. Did you ever get money at any election except 1865?—Never at any election in Cashel except what I got from Mr. O'Beirne, and the retainer. I lost more than what I gained.

6499. How did you lose more than you got?—I lost my time, and often spent some of my money foolishly about the streets taken up with them.

6500. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You say that there was no money paid in 1859?—Not to my knowledge, unless some parties might have got it unknown to me.

6501. Did you know of £15 paid to any of the Commoners, or any agreement to have it paid?—I have no knowledge of it, sir, nor cannot recollect.

6502. You did not hear there were £15?—Oh, yes, it was understood there would be something like that done.

6503. That was in 1859?—Yes, it was, at the time that Mr. Lanigan was elected.

6504. What was understood?—That there was something like £15; some prospect when all would be over.

6505. To the Commoners?—Yes, the Commoners.

6506. And to other people, too?—I cannot exactly say that either. I have not much knowledge of the people of the town.

6507. What voters were to get that £15?—It was understood that when all would be over that they might be considered, to give something like that.

6508. Who might be considered?—The voters of the Commons.

6509. From whom were they to get it?—I suppose from Lanigan's party.

6510. It was the voters that would vote for Lanigan that were to get it?—Yes.

6511. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you vote in '59 on that understanding?—I was employed on that understanding.

6512. Did you vote in '59 on the understanding that when the voting was over £15 were to be got?—I did, sir.

6513. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you an agent for Mr. Lanigan in '59?—I was, sir.

6514. What were you to get?—I left it to himself, sir.

6515. What did he give you?—Nothing at all.

6516. You expected to be paid as an agent?—He did not promise positively, but he made something like a promise that there would be something come out. I took him at his word, and the Commoners took me at my word, and there was nothing came out after.

6517. The "something that was to come out" was £15?—Something like that.

6518. Did you hear anything of voters that got money?—I don't recollect.

6519. Did those Commons' voters that took your word complain to you afterwards of not getting something?—They did, sir.

SEVENTH DAY.
October 11.
Denis Ryan.

6520. Who were they?—It would be hard to tell their names.

6521. How many were they?—At the time I had the interview with them there were only five or six, to the best of my belief.

6522. Only five or six complained to you?—It is with them I had the interview.

6523. Did more than five or six complain?—Of course they did. They said they were badly treated.

6524. Do you remember who they were?—I think James Dwyer was one of them.

6525. Anybody else?—To the best of my belief Pat Halloran.

6526. Anybody else?—There were more there, but I am not sure was Dan Moloney there. I may be wrong in that, sir, to the best of my belief.

6527. Is he alive?—He is, sir. I suppose you will have him here some time.

6528. Did any of those men come to you about the last election?—Yes, we used to be talking about it. We all met in the street, or perhaps elsewhere, and we used to be talking.

6529. Did they ask you was any more money going?—I understand they did.

6530. That is this last time?—Yes, sir.

6531. What did you tell them?—I told them not; that Mr. Munster was not paying; that I had it from Mr. Laffan; that Mr. Munster was a good man, and that anyone that voted for him he would be most likely not to forget after the election would be over.

6532. Did you tell them, though Mr. Munster had not promised you anything, about the £35 you had for Stapleton?—Not before I gave it; I told it after.

6533. Was that before the election?—Oh, no, sir, for a long time after the election.

6534. You told them that Mr. Munster would be inclined to be liberal with them afterwards?—After; when all would be over.

6535. You told them you got £35 for Stapleton?—Not at that time. This was four or five weeks previous to the election.

6536. But you told them afterwards?—I did, after the election, sir, but that I did not give it to him; it was not I gave it to him, but I had it for him.

6537. Mr. MOLLOY.—You say that at the last election Stapleton got £35 in a dark room at Corcoran's?—I said I got it there for him. Stapleton did not get it there.

6538. Did he go into the dark room?—He did, sir. I understood he said he did not get it there.

6539. How did he vote at the election?—He voted for Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

6540. Did he say anything about having got £30 from Mr. O'Beirne, and that he would not vote for Mr. Munster unless he got more?—No, sir.

6541. Did he say anything like that?—No, sir.

6542. What was the token you gave him?—I told him to tap at the door.

6543. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was he to tap any number of times?—Twice or once, I do not recollect which.

6544. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was Cunningham by when he went into the room?—No, sir. Cunningham went away. He was not there at all.

6545. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you mention anything about that dark room and about Stapleton going into it, to any of the voters of the Commons before the election was over?—No, until after the election.

6546. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Laffan wants to have you asked did Mr. Laffan tell you when he gave you the two guineas that you could not vote?—He did, sir.

6547. Mr. Munster wishes to have this question asked of you, is Dr. Coyle a friend of Mr. Munster's?—I should think not.

6548. Where had you the conversation with Stapleton?—At the gable end of Doctor Coyle's house. I did not give him room to understand what he was to get until we were going for the money at that time; but he pledged and promised me to vote for Mr. Munster.

6549. I have to say this, that as far as I am able to judge at present you appear to have told what you know?—I did, sir.

6550. Unless I find between this and the end of this inquiry that you have concealed something from us, I think you will be entitled to a certificate?—I will be here, sir, in attendance. Perhaps I could answer more some other time.

6551. Do you know of anything more that you have to tell me?—Not presently, sir.

6552. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know of any money passing at last election?—Not from myself.

6553. Or from any person?—I heard there were a few of the Commoners that are said that did get money. I believe that is Halley and Moloney.

6554. Did you hear of any persons in town that money was promised to or that got money?—No, sir, I don't interfere much in the town. I know there were a great many rumours going that are false.

6555. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If you have anything to tell me do so; if not, retire?—Presently, sir, I have not.

6556. It will not do to have another man tell something, and then you come to tell me you forgot that?—Perhaps I might forget, sir.

6557. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You have a brother named William Ryan, I believe?—Yes, sir.

6558. Did you hear that he got money?—I heard that he did not get it, sir, and I really believe that to be the truth.

6559. Did you hear that he was promised any money?—I didn't promise him, at all events.

6560. Did you hear that any person made him a promise?—I didn't hear it, sir.

6561. Did he talk to you about the election?—He did, sir.

6562. Did he say he ought to get anything?—He said if anyone was getting it, that he would expect it.

6563. Did he complain that he did not get anything?—He did, sir, different times.

6564. Did he say he was promised it, and that they had not kept their words?—Well, he did, sir.

6565. Did he say who promised him?—No, sir, not to me.

6566. Did he say it to anybody else?—He said to me that they promised it.

6567. Did he say who promised?—He did not.

6568. Did you hear who promised him?—If anyone did, it is likely it is Pat Cunningham.

6569. Did you hear that Pat Cunningham had promised to him?—Unless from my brother, sir, I didn't hear anyone else saying it.

6570. You heard from your brother that he was promised it. Who told you that it was Pat Cunningham promised it?—I heard my brother say it, that is what I understood from him, that Pat Cunningham promised it to him.

6571. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he say how much he was promised?—I understood he expected £30.

6572. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was he told he would get it after the petition and commission were over?—Yes, sir, that answers the time I understood he was to get it.

6473. Then he would not be entitled to get it yet?—Yes, sir; no more he didn't get it.

6574. He expects still to get it, I suppose?—If it is Mr. Munster's goodness to give it to him.

6575. He expects it still?—I believe he does. I cannot rightly tell what is in his mind.

6576. Do you know Michael and James Carew?—I do.

6577. Did you hear them say that they expected to get anything?—From my knowledge of Michael Carew I understood he got no money.

6578. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know John Hanley of Hughes's lot?—I do.

6579. Did you hear of his being promised any money?—He always told me he got nothing for his vote.

6580. Did you hear he was promised any money for his vote?—I understand he left Mr. Munster to himself. He would vote for him in any case.

Denis Ryan.

6581. What was it he was to leave to Mr. Munster himself?—His own goodness, if it was his wish to give him anything.

6582. Do you know Edmund Hogan?—I do, sir.

6583. Was he promised any money?—Not by me.

6584. By whom was he promised?—I couldn't say, though he is living next door to me.

6585. Did he tell you he was promised anything?—The old man never told me anything that way.

6586. Did anybody else tell you?—I understood they expected it. Whether they have got it or not I don't know.

6587. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Who told you they expected it?—I heard the son saying something about it.

6588. What is the son's name?—Edmund Hogan.

6589. I believe the old man is blind?—He is partly blind; I am not sure.

6590. The son, I suppose, would manage for him?—I should think he would be able to do so.

6591. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much did you hear Hanley was to get?—I couldn't tell you, sir.

6592. That is John Hanley of Hughes's lot?—I couldn't tell you, sir; he never told me.

6593. Has he any sons?—John Hanley has no children.

Thomas Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

6594. What about your son?—I didn't hear anything from him since, but a few minutes ago I was told by Mrs. Boyton she met him in Clogheen.

6595. You have not heard anything about him?—No; I expect daily that he will be home wherever he is. I was told not five minutes ago that, as I was coming in by Mrs. Boyton.

James Connor sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

James Connor.

6596. You are not a voter?—No, sir.

6597. Were you engaged at the election?—I was, sir.

6598. For whom?—For Mr. Munster.

6599. Who engaged you for him?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir, engaged five of us, I think to do Mr. Munster's dirty work that he engaged us.

6600. What was that?—To bribe, I think, and to pay voters, and no payment for it either, any of the five men of us.

6601. Who were the five persons engaged?—Edmund Looby.

6602. Who else?—Thomas Connor, my brother.

6603. Who else?—John Butler.

6604. Next?—Michael Cahill.

6605. That is only four?—Myself, sir, is five.

6606. What did he engage you for?—Gor, my humble opinion is, that it was of course to influence voters.

6607. Were you together when he engaged you?—There were four of us together, sir.

6608. You paid some money?—I did.

6609. How much did you pay?—I paid thirty pounds to one voter.

6610. Who was that?—Pat Ryan, sir. I got nothing for myself at all, sir.

6611. Who gave you the money to pay Pat Ryan?—Mr. Patrick Laffan brought me up to the top of Mrs. Corcoran's house.

6612. Do you know the room he brought you to?—I do, sir.

6613. Is it number six?—I am not sure of the number. It was about eleven o'clock on the night before the polling day. He tapped at the door, and of course arranged matters with the man in the room. I was then let in, and the man inside knew what I was to get better than I did myself. I just received thirty sovereigns.

6614. Sovereigns?—Sovereigns, sir. I put them into my waistcoat pocket. At the same time I told the man below that I had the money for him. I didn't tell him how much, but tipped my pocket.

6615. Who was the man that gave you the money in the room?—I don't know, my lord.

6616. Did you ever see him before?—No, sir.

6617. Or since?—Not to my knowledge.

6618. Was there a candle lighting in the room?—There was.

6619. Describe the man who gave you the money?—He was sitting at the table with a Carolina hat on him, and a muffler of orange around his neck. The room was dark. There was a candle lighting, and a few beds in the room. He handed me the money—"There is thirty sovereigns for you." He didn't say what it was for. I took it and walked down. I didn't know the man.

6620. Was he an old or a young man?—I think he was a man about forty or fifty years.

6621. Was his hair grey or not?—I couldn't tell with the hat, and didn't pass many remarks.

6622. Do you recollect how he was dressed?—To the best of my opinion I think it was a sort of a whitish coat he had. I wouldn't swear, my lord, to it.

6623. Had he the appearance of a person in the position of a gentleman?—No, sir, he had not.

6624. Are you certain he had not?—He had not, sir. He had not the appearance of a gentleman.

6625. You got those thirty sovereigns from him then?—Yes, sir.

6626. And you went down and paid it to Pat Ryan?—I paid the thirty sovereigns to Pat Ryan, but not that night.

6627. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is that Patrick Ryan of Lady's Well?—It is, sir; Pat Ryan of Lady's Well.

6628. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—He voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir, for Mr. Munster.

6629. When did you pay him the thirty pounds?—I think it was after the election. Eh! it was after the election I paid it, but he knew I had it that night before he voted.

6630. Mr. MOLLOY.—You let him feel it in your pocket?—I did, sir.

6631. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You had a conversation with him before you went?—Oh, yes, he told me he would leave it all to me. I said to Mr. Pat Laffan, "Patrick Ryan," said I, "is in the room, and it would be better settle with him;" so he had no hesitation about it.

6632. And he knew that you got the thirty sovereigns for his vote?—Yes, sir.

6633. You were engaged by Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes, sir.

6634. What did he say to you when he was engaging you?—He sent for these other men, and he put down the five of our names.

6635. Did he say anything to yourself?—Nothing to myself, only to do all we could, the five of us, on the part of Mr. Munster. It seems I had no vote, and anything I had to do was on behalf of Mr. Munster in an agent like.

6636. Did you send in a claim afterwards?—Michael Clarke sent in a claim afterwards for the five of us. We had as much work going for it. I was sent from Mr. Laffan to Mr. Biggin, and from Mr. Biggin to somebody else. The people say I built slate houses by Mr. Munster's money, but I never got a pound.

6637. Do you know that other man, Edmund Looby, who was examined?—Yes, sir.

6638. Do you know to whom he paid money?—To Denis Heffernan, sir, and John Duggan.

6639. Do you know of his paying anybody else?—No, sir.

SEVENTH DAY. October 11.

James Connor.

6640. Do you know whom your father, Thomas Connor, paid?—I do not think he paid anyone.

6641. Do you know of his having paid any person?—No, sir.

6642. Do you know of his having paid John Butler?—No, sir.

6643. Do you know of his having paid Michael Halloran?—No, sir. I do not think he ever got money to pay anyone.

6644. Did you ask for money for anybody else but Pat Ryan?—I was sent for to the house.

6645. Who sent for you?—Mr. Patrick Laffan. It was a couple of days before the polling day. I was sent for to go to John Phelan. I went to him and proffered him money.

6646. How much did you proffer him?—By gor, I believe I proffered him a good deal—I don't know how much—I believe £40 or £50.

6647. What Phelan was that?—John Phelan.

6648. Where does he live?—In the Main-street.

6649. What did Phelan say to you?—He didn't give me a decided answer on it at that present time. When I came back I told them, "I don't think we could rely on him."

6650. Is he a voter?—He is, sir, and voted for Mr. O'Beirne—John Phelan, Cashel, the Main-street.

6651. What more took place between you and Phelan?—I followed Phelan down street in the morning, before the election—two or three days before it.

6652. Did you ever hear this man called Whelan?—Whelan they call him, sir—Whelan or Phelan, I don't know which.

6653. Is he the man whose name is mentioned in the bills passed in '65?—Yes, sir.

6654. Somebody said here that he used to lend money?—That is he, sir—that is the gentleman.

6655. What happened when you went to him?—I don't know exactly the amount of money I said to him, but he didn't give me a decided answer. He said he would see me in a short time again. I went to Pat Ryan and told him, and Ryan told me he didn't think it was any use to come for John Phelan for he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

6656. Did he say why?—We were of opinion that he got the bribe at Mr. O'Beirne's side. Then I didn't go to him after.

6657. You did not go back again?—No, sir; I came back and told Mr. Pat Laffan the same.

6658. Did you go to anybody else?—I went to Paddy Fitzgerald in the Commons.

6659. Who told you to go to him?—Mr. Pat Laffan, sir, and I went of my own accord.

6660. What passed between you and Fitzgerald?—I was to get him £30, at least I proffered him £30. He asked could I get him any more. I said I thought I could. I brought him to Mr. Laffan, and handed him into Mr. Pat Laffan; to the best of my belief he brought him to the dark room.

6661. Where did you bring him to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—To Mrs. Corcoran's hotel. I am badly paid, sir, to tell a lie about it.

6662. No payment would reward you for concealing the truth?—I wouldn't do it, sir. I was summoned to the Commission, and I was asked, and I wouldn't perjure myself either.

6663. Did you see him go up to the dark room?—Yes, I saw him going up. I didn't follow him up the stairs.

6664. Who was with him?—Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir.

6665. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever hear who was the man that was in the dark room?—Never, sir, to my knowledge.

6666. Did you go to anyone else but Fitzgerald?—No, sir, I did not. I don't think I have any more to say.

6667. Do not leave anything unsaid, because I would be glad to be in a position to give you a certificate?—I am so happy, sir, to have the town disfranchised; I would tell you, sir, if I knew it. What I want, sir, is to ask them two men, were any of the five of us ever compensated—Mr. Biggin and Mr. Michael Laffan.

[Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—Anyone of the five never got anything to my knowledge.

Mr. Biggin.—Nor to mine.

Mr. M. J. Laffan.—I can say that for them, for the mobsmen and the butchers, I did give some money to one of them to distribute—not for themselves.

6668. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—How much?

Mr. M. J. Laffan.—When I produce the accounts it will be found to be forty or fifty pounds.]

6669. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear that John Reilly of Lady's Well got money?—I don't know, sir. They all have so many connoisseurs, two or three men was enough to have a vote.

6670. Did you hear that John Reilly got money?—No, sir.

6671. Did you hear about Rody Fogarty?—No, sir, I did not.

6672. Who is John Connors of Bohermore? Is he a cousin of yours?—No, sir, he is not.

6673. Did you hear any more?—No, sir, I did not hear any more.

Daniel Ferris, junior.

Daniel Ferris, junior, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6674. You are a voter of this town, I believe?—Yes, sir.

6675. And you voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

6676. Were you a voter at the previous election?—No; this is the first time I had a vote.

6676. Is your father a voter also?—Yes, sir.

6678. He was a voter at former elections?—No; he was not.

6679. I suppose you were canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Yes; I was.

6680. By whom were you canvassed?—By Mr. O'Beirne himself.

6681. Were you canvassed by anybody else?—Yes, a good many—Dr. Coyle and some more.

6682. Did Captain Graham ever canvass you?—No; he did not.

6683. Did you take an active interest in the election for Mr. Munster?—I did.

6684. I believe Mr. Munster was a considerable customer of yours?—Not very; he was a customer.

6685. About how much did he purchase from you?—I could not say.

6686. Have you never looked since he commenced so as to see how much he left you?—No, I did not.

6687. He had not an account with you?—No; because when Mr. Munster would buy any goods from me I would bring them to Abbeyview with a bill, and he always paid me.

6688. Do you make no entry of goods sold in your establishment?—No; I always enter them with the week.

6689. You could give a guess as to what you sold him?—He may have bought £40 worth from me.

6690. Perhaps he bought more?—I do not think he bought more.

6691. What is the amount of the largest bill you ever got from him?—About £14, I think, is the largest that I did; I am not sure.

6692. I find one bill £18 9*s.*?—That is the largest.

6693. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you receive over £50 from him?—On my word really I could not tell you. I should be very happy to give you any information in my power.

6694. Did you canvass for him at the election?—No; I did not.

6695. Did you ask any persons to vote for him?—No.

6696. Did you speak or advocate his cause with any person?—I did, with one person.

6697. Who is that one person?—John Flavan.

6698. Is John Flavan a voter?—No; he is not.

6699. Why did you speak to Flavan about it?—I spoke to him about a friend of his.

6700. Who is the friend?—John Farrell; he is a voter.

6701. Is that John Farrell of the Main-street?—Yes.

6702. He voted for Mr. Munster, I believe?—He did.

6703. What conversation had you with John Flavan about him?—First to know how he would vote; afterwards he told me he would vote for Mr. Munster. I told Mr. Laffan that he would vote for Mr. Munster if he got something.

6704. How much?—What every person was getting—£30, and I gave him £30.

6705. You gave him £30?—Yes. I did not give it to him, but I gave it to Flavan.

6706. From whom did you get the £30 that you gave him?—From Mr. Pat Laffan.

6707. Where did you get it from him?—In my shop.

6708. Do you know did Flavan give the money to Farrell?—I cannot say, but I suppose he did. It is more than probable he did.

6709. Did you ever hear from Farrell afterwards that he got it?—No; I was not speaking to him at all.

6710. From whom did you hear first that Farrell was going to vote?—I did not know who he was going to vote for. I never asked him, and I never spoke to him.

6711. Do you know of any other case of money having been given?—No; only the reports I heard in the Irish Times or Freeman.

6712. Do you know of any case in or about the election in Cashel?—No, I do not.

6713. Or did you hear of any person having got money for voting?—No, I did not.

6714. Or do you know of any money having been given at all to voters?—No, I do not.

6715. Can you fix the date of giving the money?—About a week before the election.

6716. Mr. GRIFFIN.—It was given before the election?—He gave it to me about a week before the election.

6717. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Can you give us any further information?—I cannot, sir. That is all I can say I know.

6718. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Hogan show you a cheque?—John Hogan—no, he did not show me a cheque.

6719. Did he show you a letter?—He did.

6720. Did it refer to a cheque?—It did.

6721. What was the amount of the cheque?—£60.

6722. When was this?—After the election, I think.

6723. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That was a letter of Mr. O'Beirne's?—Yes; from Mr. O'Beirne.

6724. Who is John Hogan?—He was in partnership with Ryan.

6725. When you saw Mr. O'Beirne's letter what occurred?—Nothing occurred.

6726. Who brought it to you?—He handed it to me to read.

6727. Who handed it to you to read?—John Hogan.

6728. And what did he say?—Not to present the cheque at the Bank until I heard again, I think. It was a cheque for £60.

6729. Where is this Hogan now?—I could not tell you.

6730. Was he living in Cashel at that time?—He was in business at the time.

6731. You do not know where he lives now?—I do not know. He may be at home for what I know.

6732. What were the goods that you supplied?—Everything—carpet-bags, candlesticks, rosary beads.

6733. How many carpet-bags did you supply?—One or two. He may have bought two—large size.

6734. Did you say that the greater part of what you supplied him were toys?—The reason I said that was, that I knew that my business is mostly toys. Mr. Hemphill asked me in cross-examination.

6735. And you told him that they were toys?—Yes, mostly toys. One day Mr. Munster bought about £5 worth of toys from me to give to schools.

6736. To what schools?—Some to the National and some to the Presentation schools.

6737. What was the rest of the goods that make up the amount that you said you were paid?—Every description of goods that I had.

6738. Do you know what Mr. Munster did with them?—No, I do not.

6739. Were any of the goods he purchased from you for charity, or given in the name of charity, except the toys?—Oh, there were; he bought combs, rosary beads, and religious books.

6740. Did he give them away?—He did; a part of them, I think.

6741. Have you an account of them?—I have not.

6742. About how much is the value of the whole altogether?—I could not say.

6743. Were you paid for some over the counter?—No; but when I carried up the goods I carried the bills, and was paid.

6744. And you made no entries in your books of those sales?—No; only the week's receipts are the only entries I keep.

6745. Did he purchase some bedding from you?—No.

6746. He did not?—No.

6747. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Here is an item—"Ferris, bedding, £7 16*s*.?"—That is my father—not me.

6748. Did you yourself get any inducement, or offer of any kind whatever for your vote?—I did not, sir.

6749. None whatever?—None whatever.

6750. I suppose you were naturally influenced by the charities of Mr. Munster?—No; it did not.

6751. You were influenced favourably towards him by his expenditure in Cashel?—No; I was not influenced in any way. That would not influence me.

6752. Would you not rather support a man who was spending money in Cashel than one who was not?—Of course; I thought he would do more service for the town than Mr. O'Beirne.

6753. In the way of expenditure?—That is what I mean—yes.

6754. Mr. MOLLOY.—You did not poll until late in the day?—No.

6755. Why did you not go early?—I was in the court-house, and there was a lot of people going up and down, and I said I would wait until one or two o'clock.

6756. To whom did you tell that?—To no person, but I said it to myself.

6757. Some person asked you?—No, they did not.

6758. And you made up your mind not to vote until one or two o'clock?—No, I did not—not previous.

6759. Did you not tell me that you did?—I said on the morning of the polling I would not come up until about one or two o'clock to poll.

6760. Farrell's name was John?—John Farrell.

6761. Do you know Thomas Farrell?—I do.

6762. What relation is he to John?—I could not tell you.

6763. Has John Farrell a family?—He has.

6764. Sons?—He has young sons.

6765. Has he a son named John?—I could not tell you.

6766. How many sons has he?—I could not tell you.

Michael Beary.

Michael Beary sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6767. Mr. Beary, I believe you are not a voter?—No, your worship.

6768. What are you?—I am a process-server in Cashel, and rent warner to Mr. Butler and Mr. White.

6769. Were you engaged at the last election for anyone?—I was your worship.

6770. For whom were you engaged?—Mr. Michael Laffan employed me to do the best I could for Mr. Munster.

6771. And I suppose you did it?—Well, I did.

6772. Tell us what is the best you could do?—Every day that I would come down street I would, wherever

SEVENTH DAY. October 11.

Michael Beary.

there would be a crowd, I would maybe be speaking to them and speaking favourable for Mr. Munster; no more than that. I never went to a voter's house to canvass him.

6773. You did not?—No.

6774. Were you paid anything?—I was.

6775. How much?—I got £10 and I thought I was well paid by it, and some more money from Mr. Laffan for serving subpœnas here at the petition.

6776. You got £10 for doing nothing but talking to people in a crowd?—I didn't go to canvass with him. I went one day to the Commons of Cashel.

6777. Did you ever earn money easier than that in all your life?—Well, I don't think I did ever earn it easier.

6778. You know Mr. Beary that they expected more service than that from you. Tell us something more?—I spoke to some of my neighbours living on Bianconi's property, and then I spoke to him again, when Mr. Bianconi in the latter end gave me a message to see would they vote for Mr. O'Beirne, and they would not. I think they had promised or said they would not vote for him on any account in regard to the election of '65 when they voted for Lanigan; and they would support any man that would be an enemy to Mr. O'Beirne, for ever.

6779. Where else were you?—I never asked I think a man from the Commons.

6780. You said you went out there one day—that escaped from you?—I did the day of the meeting.

6781. Did you go the day of the meeting to do anything?—No; but to listen to them speeching.

6782. Perhaps you got some of the wine they carried there?—I did not.

6783. Did you not speak to any person?—Not to a mortal soul on the Commons, I think, unless to Denny Ryan. You will have him here, I suppose. I never spoke to one on the Commons unless to salute them.

6784. What did you get the £10 for?—For going as a messenger about the street and going about. I had no further communication with anything else.

6785. Nothing else?—No knowledge of money dealing or anything with any man.

6786. You did not suspect that there was any money going at the last election?—I heard it; but I didn't hear it from any person that I would give you as an author.

6787. Did any man speak to you about money?—No person.

6788. Are you sure of that?—I am, as far as I have recollection.

6789. Try and recollect, because I do not like to be jogging your memory. Did any man speak to you about money?—Well, I don't think there did, as far as I can recollect.

6790. No person at all spoke to you about money?—Well, I don't think I can recollect I spoke to any man.

6791. Any voter in the Commons or on Mr. Bianconi's property, or anywhere?—No. They knew the parties they would speak to. I suppose that is the way.

6792. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much did you expect to get for your services?—I put in a bill for £25. I didn't expect it. I would be satisfied with £5, and thankful too.

6793. When did you get the £10?—Well, I believe it was before the petition was tried.

6794. Recollect now, was it before or after the petition?—Well, it was after. I recollect it was. Yes, it was after the petition.

6795. Who gave you the cheque?—This gentleman (pointing to Mr. Biggin.) Yes, it was.

6796. Did Mr. Bianconi's people prefer to go against their landlord?—They said any man in regard to the man that was in his grave.

6797. Who were those people?—John Hurley, John Looby; he is summoned here.

6798. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How do you know he is summoned?—He told me he was, your worship.

6799. Were there any more?—Tom Looby, I believe Reilly—and that old Johnny—James Mulcahy.

6800. Was Tom Looby the man that sold the jennet?—No.

6801. His name is Tom also?—Yes. He said he could take no money or ask any money, but would go for any man that would be against O'Beirne with regard to the parish priest and Mr. Lanigan.

6802. With regard to the parish priest?—The Archdeacon Laffan—God be merciful to him. I hadn't many conversations and didn't want to get into it at all.

6803. Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—He said he got the money from Mr. Laffan—I want to make it clear he did not from me.

6804. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I have it down Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Denis J. Scully sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Denis J. Scully.

6805. Mr. Scully, I believe you are a voter in Cashel?—I am.

6806. And you voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did.

6807. Are you the brother of Mr. Jerome Scully?—I am.

6808. Do you know was Mr. Jerome Scully engaged in the last election?—He was engaged by my cousin, Vincent Scully.

6809. Was he interested for Mr. Munster?—After the nomination day. On that day I understand he went down and assisted Mr. Munster afterwards.

6810. After the nomination day?—I believe on the evening of the nomination day.

6811. Mr. Scully, a man named Thomas Looby says that he got £30 in Corcoran's hotel, that he went up there one morning early and saw a number of people that had been there all night, and that you were there?—I think it was a mistake; I was not there.

6812. I beg your pardon, it was your brother Jerome?—I cannot account for that.

6813. There is no other one of the name, I suppose?—If any person of my name was there it is likely to be him.

6814. Do you know anything of any person having got money at the last election?—Why, I know the first money given here—publicly given, which everyone knows—was £500 given by Mr. Munster for the Christian Brothers, to the parish priest. He got it on a Saturday. Next morning I happened to be at Mass, and he came out very disparagingly of Vincent Scully at first Mass next morning after his receiving it. It was publicly known.

6815. Do you mean to say he spoke in explanation?—He did.

6816. On the Sunday morning?—On the following morning.

6817. Having received £500?—£500 the day before for the Christian Brothers, in which community it was publicly stated that he had two nephews.

6818. You say that he came out the following morning disparaging Vincent Scully?—Disparaging to Vincent Scully.

6819. Did he advocate the cause of anybody else?—He said the other two were pretty much of the same way of thinking. He did not name Vincent Scully, but there could be no mistake as to who he meant.

6820. But did he advocate anyone of the other two?—No; he said the other two were much alike in politics.

6821. Do you know of any other money given at the election?—I do not.

6822. Or of any promise?—No; I voted at all the elections in Cashel for several years, and never directly or indirectly, or by any means received one halfpenny for my vote, or any promise, or anything directly or indirectly for it. I am aware that at the time of Dean M'Donnell, when he was parish priest, he would never allow an elector to take money, nor take money himself from a candidate.

6823. When was he parish priest?—I believe he was parish priest, I should say, for over twenty years in Cashel. I believe he was in Cashel for near forty years.

6824. In what years?—I believe it was in 1852 or 1853 he died.

6825. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he receive any subscriptions for charitable purposes from candidates?—I believe not from candidates, but he would after the election from members.

6826. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you hear that announced by him publicly, or is it only matter of observation of your own. Did he openly announce he would not take money from candidates?—No, but I have heard that, and at the time coming on elections, known him to denounce people who would attempt to take a bribe.

6827. But you thought he would not himself take money?—I am confident he would not. He was a man of very high principles.

6828. Mr. MOLLOY.—How did you vote at the election of 1865?—For James Lyster O'Beirne in 1865.

6829. How did you come to vote against him in 1868?—Why it was partly hearing of his connexion with parties in London, of whom I formed a very bad opinion, and also that his supporter, Captain Graham, and another supporter of his, nominated the parish priest here at the nomination, and it was when that was done I made up my mind to vote for Mr. Munster.

6830. For whom did you vote in 1859 when Lanigan and O'Beirne were candidates?—I do not think it was Lanigan and O'Beirne.

6831. Lanigan was elected?—I voted one time for Lanigan. I will tell you. Lanigan came out at the time as an Independent Oppositionist, but I found when he went to Parliament he was anything but that.

6832. Was not O'Beirne in 1865 an Independent Oppositionist, and of the very same party that John Lanigan professed to belong to?—I voted in 1865 for James Lyster O'Beirne.

6833. You voted against Lanigan?—I did, in 1865.

6834. Did John Lanigan, after he addressed the electors of Cashel, ever alter his principles? Did he ever belong to any party but what was called the Independent Opposition?—I thought he did. I think he was a Government supporter in Parliament.

6835. When did he belong to the Independent Opposition?—In his address.

6836. In his address?—In his address and electioneering speech.

6837. Which was Mr. O'Beirne or Mr. Lanigan the greater supporter of the Government?—Well, I think Lanigan was.

6838. You think that Lanigan was?—I do.

6839. You spoke of something making you change your mind which occurred on the day of the nomination?—The parish priest here was proposed by Captain Graham and seconded by James Hackett, both supporters of Mr. O'Beirne. He came out and made assertions here with regard to Vincent Scully, many of which I did not believe—in fact, some of them I knew to be false, and that made me change my mind: that made me make up my mind to vote for Mr. Munster.

6840. Is Mr. Vincent Scully your cousin?—He is.

6841. You would have voted for him?—I would.

6842. Is Archdeacon Quirke parish priest of Cashel?—He is.

6843. In the observations he used that day did he say anything about Mr. O'Beirne at all?—No; his argument was abusing Vincent Scully.

6844. Or did he say anything of Mr. Munster?—No, he did not say much in favour of either.

6845. How were you influenced to change from Mr. O'Beirne to Mr. Munster?—Because he was put forward by Mr. O'Beirne's supporters. In fact it appeared to me from his proposer and seconder that he was put forward by Mr. O'Beirne's supporters, and Captain Graham was a most out-and-out supporter of Mr. O'Beirne at the time.

6846. Does your brother Jerome live with you?—No, he does not; he has a family of his own.

6847. Where does he live?—He lives at Silverfort about, five or six miles from Cashel.

Mathew Murrin was called, but did not appear.

William Meehan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. William Meehan.

6848. Meehan, for whom did you vote in '65?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

6849. How much money did you get that year?—I did not get any money, sir.

6850. Oh, now, recollect yourself—you did, now—we know you did—just tell me how much you got?—I got no money, sir.

6851. Did you get a promise of any money?—I did not, sir.

6852. Did you get any money in '68?—No, sir.

6853. Or a promise of any money?—No, sir.

6854. You got no money in '65?—No, sir.

6855. Are you sure of that?—I am, sir.

Mr. John Davis White recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. Mr. John Davis White.

6856. Mr. White, do you see this man?—I do, sir.

6857. Did you pay this man money in '65?—I did, sir.

6858. How much did you pay him in '65?—£30. I cashed a bill for him.

William Meehan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. William Meehan.

6859. Now, recollect yourself. Would you know your own handwriting?—I never signed a bill. I never had occasion to go to Mr. White or any man to get a bill, nor never wanted it.

6860. Did you ever get money in '65?—No.

6761. Did you ever hear of any man getting money at the election?—Never.

6862. Do you live in Cashel?—I do, sir.

6863. Do you swear on your solemn oath, so help your God, that you never heard of money being given at the election until you heard it here?—I do.

6864. Go down off the table. Go down. You will have to attend here again, mind. You will come here to-morrow.

Patrick Halloran was called, but did not appear.

SEVENTH DAY
October 11.

William Meehan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

William Meehan.

6865. Come up here again, Meehan, for fear of any mistake about it. Did you understand the question? One of my brother Commissioners thinks you did not understand the question. Do you understand the question I put to you about hearing of money being given?—I did, sir.

6866. [The shorthand writer reads question and answer No. 6863.]—Witness.—I heard of money.

6867. Did you hear that question?—Of course I heard of money being given.

6868. Why did you say you did not hear it?—It must be a mistake of mine. I didn't understand the question rightly.

6869. When did you hear of money being given at the election?—I heard of it at the petition.

6870. Did you never hear of it before the petition?—I did not, sir.

6871. Now, you understand my question perfectly. Before the last election—that is, before the day of the polling—did you never hear of any voter on the Commons getting money for his vote?—I don't recollect I did.

6872. You never did? Go down off the table.

William Flynne.

William Flynne sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6873. Mr. Flynne, for whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

6874. Was your house taken for anyone?—It was not taken out of a face; I will explain that to you. I promised my vote to Mr. Laffan as he was the first man that came to me, and that was before Mr. Munster's address was out.

6875. Before his address was out?—Yes; Mr. Laffan and I were friends. He was very kind to me. I was going to Fethard and he used to give me a seat going to the sessions. He asked me would I give my vote; he was going to be employed by an English gentleman. I said it was premature until I would see his address. He said that his principles were equal to Mr. O'Beirne's. When his address came out I got his address in a circular. In some time after I met Mr. Laffan, and he asked me did I read Mr. Munster's address, and I said I did. "Will you give me your vote?" said he. I said, "I will." He said then, "perhaps I may want your house." I said, "I do not care which. My house and my vote have nothing to do with each other."

6876. Did you say that to Mr. Laffan?—I did, sir. He is present. I often set my house to the police and bazaar men, and parties passing by. I set it since the election. In some time after, I cannot say how long, I met him and asked him did he think he would want the house, and he said he didn't know. After this he met me in John-street and he said, "William," says he, "your house is, I am afraid, too far off, and I must take a house in a more conspicuous place, that is Mr. Walshe's in the main street." "Mr. Laffan," says I, "it makes no difference. I suppose you don't dread my promise; I will stick to my word." He said he did not. Sometime afterwards I am sure he said that he would want it.

6877. That he would want it?—Yes; but they never took possession of it.

6878. They never took possession of it?—Never.

6879. Did you put in a claim, Mr. Flynne?—No.

6880. Mr. MOLLOY.—Who is the owner of the house?—I am, sir.

6881. You are the tenant for it?—I am, sir.

6882. Is your mother alive?—No, sir. My father and mother are dead a long time.

Mr. Edward Henry Biggin.

Mr. Edward Henry Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6883. Give me claim 72?—I have not the claim.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan tenders himself; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6884. Witness.—I do not think he can have the claim; for Flynne never put in a claim.

6885. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Why is it here then?—For I put it in for him.

6886. This is "Mrs. Flynne"?—It is "William" abbreviated, and looks like "Mrs."

6887. I not only find it there, but I find it in three different places, and this remarkable observation, "Mrs. Flynne, house not used, £30."

William Flynne.

William Flynne's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

6888. Had you any conversation afterwards, Mr. Flynne, with Mr. Laffan about the payment of that claim?—No, sir; I never asked anything of him.

6889. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you agree for any sum?—No. We never mentioned any sum.

6890. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You never mentioned any sum?—No, sir. I didn't like to have anything to tell about houses. I was as well pleased they didn't take it.

6891. And no sum was mentioned at any time?—Not a penny, sir.

6892. Do you know of any persons getting money at the election?—Faith, I do not, sir. I am relieving officer, and at that time my district was so large that I had not time to meddle or make with the election. I didn't attend meetings, or listen to them, or anything else.

6893. A good many people were talking of the election?—They were saying money was going. They said I got it myself, and say it up to this very day.

6894. It looked very suspicious, Mr. Flynne, for sometime—I do not mean to say on your part?—And don't you see, sir, that it would be a lie going about, and that the truth would not be able to overtake it.

6895. "Mrs. Flynne, house for tallyroom never used"?—Mrs. Flynne never had anything to say to it, sir.

6896. Mr. MOLLOY.—How would you vote if Mr. Munster was not a candidate?—I would vote for Mr. Lanigan, or any man before O'Beirne.

6897. Mr. Michael J. Laffan—He says he thinks I told him that I would take his house or would want it.

6898. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—There is no incorrectness in taking down your evidence as this, that Mr. Laffan said to you he thought your house was too far off?—No, sir.

6899. And that he spoke of Mr. Walshe's house?—That was the third time, sir.

6900. And after that he said to you that he would want it?—I think he did, sir.

6901. That is what you told us already?—I am thinking he did.

6902. Do you recollect was it after he said he would not want it?—I think it is after, sir.

6903. So you said three times. That will do, thank you.

John Looby sworn: examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — John Looby.

6904. Looby, are you a voter?—Yes, sir.

6905. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

6906. Were you a voter before the last election?—Yes, sir, I was; I believe three times. Once I voted for Councillor Hemphill, and Mr. John Lanigan, and for this man. I think that is all I voted for; for my father had the place before, sir. I believe that is the time I came in, sir.

6907. Is your father alive?—No, sir.

6908. Are you a married man?—I am, sir.

6909. Have you children?—I have, sir.

6910. What are the names of your children?—One of them, the eldest, is Maurice, and there is George, and there is Tom, John, and Pat, sir, and two little girls, sir.

[Mr. Biggin is asked for claims No. 32 and 33.]

6911. Did you put in claims for any of them for the election?—No, sir, never. I am on my oath. I never looked for a claim for any of them, or got it.

6912. How old is Maurice?—Maurice is gone to America, sir.

6913. When did he go?—Before the election.

6914. How long before it?—I am not a clerk; I cannot tell you, sir.

6915. Is there any other Maurice Looby?—There is a cousin of mine in the same place. He voted for Mr. O'Beirne, I believe.

6916. Is there any other person of the name Maurice Looby?—There was another on the Green, I believe. He is dead, I believe.

6917. Has your brother a son named Maurice?—He has not, sir.

6918. Is George the eldest boy you have at home now?—He is, sir.

6919. Do you know any George Looby about Cashel but your son?—No, sir, nor never knew him to be there.

6920. Do you know of anybody having put in a claim for your son, George Looby, £35?—Not to my knowledge, nor would not allow him, if I knew it.

6921. You say there is no other George Looby in Cashel?—As far as my knowledge goes there is no other George Looby, and there was not a George until I called him after my wife's father. I did not know nor hear of it.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

6922. Mr. Laffan, do you know anything about this claim?—I am prepared to accept, to the fullest extent, whatever responsibility attaches to the claim.

6923. Did you mean that the money should be given to this man?—I did, certainly, to him or to his son. I intended it to the son as a compliment to the father. I intended that those voters, who voted honestly and independently, as I conceived, should not afterwards be worse off than those who made a corrupt bargain; and when I come to deal with the claims, there are four or five I shall be prepared to point out when I get the list of claims.

6924. With whose knowledge did you do that?—Unless Cunningham may have been staying in my office at the time I do not recollect anybody else; but John Looby, the witness on the table, knew nothing whatever about it.

[John Looby.—Never, your worship.]

6925. Then, at the time you were doing this, Mr. Laffan, did you know that corrupt practices had been prevailing here?—I had heard of it.

6926. And you were quite satisfied of it?—I not only was satisfied, but I knew as a matter of course that it was done on both sides. I knew they would not have voted if it had not been done.

6927. Done by your brother on your side?—Well, I suspected it, but did not know to what extent he was mixed up.

6928. Whose was the money to pay George Looby, in consideration of his father's vote?—Mr. Munster's.

6929. And you were his conducting agent at the election?—I was.

6930. Did you do that with Mr. Munster's knowledge?—No. I must tell you that as regards his son—of course when I come to give my evidence, I will, perhaps, enter into an explanation at greater length. They were active persons about the streets. I saw George on Mr. Munster's side, and I considered that a compliment ought to be paid the sons of people who voted honestly.

6931. Mr. Munster—Might I request you to ask Mr. Laffan who those four or five were that he has spoken of?

6932. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I will give Mr. Laffan the fullest opportunity on another occasion. He shall have the book and go through them all.

Mr. Munster.—I might not be here.

6933. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We have a number of them already.

6934. Witness.—I will point them out to Mr. Munster.

6935. Mr. Munster.—Anything I do, I will do publicly.

6936. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Write them down and give the names now. Was it on the same principle you put down Mrs. Flynn's house?—Yes, very nearly the same: substantially it is the same.

6937. Was it you also who put in the claim we found for Tierney's son?—Yes; I stated so.

6938. And it was done on the same grounds—because the man had given an honest vote?—There was a slight difference in that case, for this reason—I had been applied to in that case, stating he expected it.

6939. Therefore you did it, knowing that the man expected it?—Yes—he expected it.

[Mr. Richardson's list of claims is handed to Mr. Michael J. Laffan, and returned by him with a list prepared from it.]

6940. George Looby, Maurice Looby, John Meagher. Who is John Meagher?—He is the son of Patrick Meagher.

6941. That is not the young man—the grocer in the Main-street—that was examined?—No.

6942. Of Friar-street it is?—Yes.

6943. Who is Thomas Ryan?—He is son I think of a man named John Ryan. He is something to him. He is a son or nephew—I do not know which.

6944. And Pat. Tierney is a son of the other Tierney?—Yes.

6945. Do you forget Denis Ryan?—No, I do not. That does not come in that list.

6946. What is Denis Ryan's son's name?—John.

6947. Did you not hear him swear to-day that in your office was written a claim for his son John, and that you said it could not be paid until the Commission was over?—I heard him say so. As for the writing in my office I cannot say whether it was done or not. I would not mind if they came and sat down at a corner of the table and wrote something. I do not include him there, for he does not come within that catalogue.

6948. You told me that Mrs. Flynn's house was also one of them?—Yes.

John Looby recalled: examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — John Looby

6949. Did you know that your son was engaged at the election?—I did not, sir.

6950. Was he engaged at the election?—I don't know whether he was or not.

SEVENTH DAY. Mr. Michael J. Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

October 11.

Mr Michael J. Laffan.

6951. Witness—I did not say that he was engaged. I simply said that I saw him as well as other people, taking an active part—that they showed that their sympathies were on Mr. Munster's side: perhaps that would be the way to put it.

6952. Have you heard of your brother Patrick?—I had a letter this morning from Thomas, in which he says he is afraid he is gone to England, but that on Saturday he sent instructions to have an advertisement published in the London Times, and which, he states, he has no doubt will meet his eye; and he tells me that I may undertake to have him here by the end of the week. There is no doubt he will make him out. He will send him down here.

6953. Do you know who supplied your brother with money to go away?—I do not.

6954. Do you know anything of Patrick Cunningham?—I do.

6955. Where is he?—I cannot say, but I suppose he is in the neighbourhood of Cashel, and that he will be here.

6956. Has he been staying away with your knowledge and concurrence?—No.

6957. How long have you known where he is?—I do not say I know where he is at present. All I know about him is this, that within the past week he came in one evening to my office, and he talked about the Commission—how it was going on, or something that way. I told him to come forward and give his evidence.

6958. Do you tell me that you told him to come forward and give evidence?—I do; and he went away, leaving me under the impression that he intended to do so.

6959. Do you know if he went to his father's house?—I do not know.

6960. Did he tell you he came from his father's house?—No, but on the contrary, he told me that he had not been to his father's house.

6961. What evening was that, sir?—I should think on Thursday evening. Yes, I think it was on Thursday evening.

6962. Did he tell you he had been in communication with anyone from Mr. Munster's house, of Mr. Munster's household?—I think he told me that before he came to me he had seen Mrs. Boyton.

6963. Anybody else?—No one else that I am aware of.

6964. Are you not mistaken that this was last Thursday?—Well, I think not. It was while the Commission was going on, but whether Thursday or Friday—my impression is it was Thursday.

6965. Did he tell you he had been in communication with Mrs. Boyton or Mrs. Needham?—No; he never mentioned their names to me.

6966. Did he tell you that there was a summons left at his father's house for him?—I do not think he mentioned that fact.

6967. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you tell him that he was summoned to attend here?—I cannot say that I told him he was summoned, but we talked of it as a matter that he was either summoned or would be summoned.

6968. Did you tell him he would have to come forward?—I told him he would have to come forward.

6969. Did he apparently consent to do so?—But I did not read him any lecture about his conduct being improper.

6970. Was that on Thursday evening?—Yes, Thursday evening.

6971. You had heard Patrick Cunningham called every morning here?—Yes.

6972. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Laffan, my brother Commissioners and I have to express our very great surprise that you, a professional gentleman, hearing Cunningham called every day, and inquiries made about him, hearing Mrs. Boyton examined to-day, and hearing his father examined, sat there silently, although having this information of Cunningham's presence in Cashel at a time later than that to which we traced him in company with Mrs. Boyton and Mrs. Needham. We have to express our very strongest surprise and regret that you did not think it your duty to mention it before?—I did not think unless I was asked about it.

6973. I am very sorry that I have to say it is very nearly approaching to contempt of court.

Mr. Munster.—I request you will permit me to call Ferris to show how it was that Mrs. Boyton went to Clogheen that day.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mrs. Boyton has already explained that to me. I have no reason at all to disbelieve what Mrs. Boyton said to me, that she went there for the purpose of paying a visit, and that she saw the man there. She was in conversation with him, and Mrs. Needham was in conversation with him. What passed between them I have not been able to get at. Cunningham has been called every day since. He comes to Cashel; that fact is not told to the Commissioners. Mr. Laffan sees him on Thursday, and does not tell the Commissioners that he has seen him.

Matthew Murrin, of Cahir, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Matthew Murrin.

6974. Were you here during the last election?—I was, sir.

6975. Where did you live during the last election?—In the town of Cahir.

6976. Were you staying long in Cashel during the last election?—I was, sir, during the election, except a few days before it. It was going on for a few days before I arrived here. I have no recollection of the time.

6977. How long were you here altogether?—Well, really I couldn't say, sir; I have no date of the time.

6978. Were you here two days before the election?—I was, sir; I suppose up to a month or five weeks.

6979. I believe you have been in the police force?—Yes, sir, I am an ex-constable of police.

6980. Are you enjoying a pension from the police force?—Yes, sir, £36 a year. I was thirty years and six months in the police force.

6981. What brought you to Cashel during the election?—I came myself during the time of the election for a job, when the election was going on. I came myself.

6982. Are you connected with Cashel?—Well, no, sir.

6983. And what job did you expect to get during the election?—I knew the town and suburbs, being thirty years in this station.

6984. Were you ever stationed in Cashel?—No, but within five miles of it—in Killenaule.

6985. I do not know whether you are aware of the power of the Commissioners in the conduct of this inquiry?—I will tell the truth, sir; nothing in my mind but what I will tell.

6986. I request you will save me the trouble of dragging it out of you?—I will tell the truth.

6987. Who brought you here—was it Mr. Leahy?—No, sir.

6988. Who else?—I didn't know Mr. Leahy was here at all at the time.

6989. Who brought you?—I came here on the borough election taking place, not knowing Mr. Leahy was here. I applied to Father Kennedy, the curate in town, to get a situation for me during the election, as I being quite convenient to his father's place four or five years when he was a growing-up boy; but he had no knowledge of me. I applied to him after coming, and he told me the priests would be taking no part in the election; "but," says he, "if you go up—Mr. Leahy is doing business for Mr. Munster—and apply to Mr. Leahy, he may be able to give you a job."

6990. Did you go to Mr. Leahy?—I wasn't acquainted with Mr. Leahy, and I didn't know how I would go to him to look for the situation from him, but I met a man in town that said, "I know him." He is a man I would not like to speak of, because——

6991. Oh, you will have to tell me his name?—He is a man that has nothing to do with the election.

6992. You will have to tell his name?—I will tell his name, sir. He is a policeman. "I will take a walk up with you," says he, "and I will tell him who you are."

6993. I suppose you told him you wanted to see Mr. Leahy to get a job, and he said "I will tell him who you are?"—Yes, sir. I went up and when I was introduced to Mr. Leahy, Mr. Leahy said he would do something for me.

6994. Do you know if Mr. Leahy had heard of you from anybody except this man that brought you up and introduced you to him. I don't think he had, sir.

6995. Go on?—Mr. Leahy introduced me to Mr. Laffan.

6996. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Pat. Laffan, I think; this gentleman's brother. [Points to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]. Mr. Pat. Laffan and Mr. Leahy were in Abbeyview. We had an interview there. He introduced me to Mr. Laffan, and Mr. Laffan desired me to call next day: so I did, so that I got a situation from him to canvass what I possibly could in Mr. Munster's name, but at the same time not to attempt if I did—not to attempt to offer one halfpenny on Mr. Munster's behalf—that if one halfpenny carried the election for Mr. Munster he wouldn't give it.

6997. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it Mr. Patrick Laffan who gave you those instructions?—It was Mr. Leahy gave me them directions.

6998. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.— Do you know number six bedroom in Corcoran's hotel?—I don't know but the large parlour.

6999. Were you ever up there in your life?—Never, in my life.

7000. I think you had better retire until morning; we will not go any further to-night. I will ask you in the morning some questions.

7001. Mr. MOLLOY.—Sift your recollection on every thing you were doing during the election, between this and morning.

[Adjourned.]

EIGHTH DAY.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1869.

Patrick Hackett tenders himself for further evidence, and acknowledges himself under the obligation of the oath he has taken.

7002. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Well, what do you wish to say?—On Saturday I gave evidence before your Worships. I mentioned to you that I gave money to two voters. Immediately after, I recollected that I gave it to a third person, and I felt quite uneasy at not having told all together. I come now to say I did so.

7003. Who is the third person to whom you gave money?—The third person is James Carew.

7004. That is, of Lady's Well, is it?—No, your Worship—of the Commons, Price's lot. I felt uneasy. I feel my conscience and character quite clear now.

7005. How much did you give to James Carew?—Altogether £40.

7006. Where did you pay him?—First I lent him, by the way, £20 on his note, which note when it fell due, I marked paid.

7007. Have you got that note?—He has it. I handed it back to him. I think it was some time in February it became due. There was an account of his in the place, and I placed the balance to his credit.

7008. Have you been paid the £20 you placed to his credit?—He owed an account.

7009. I know he did; and you credited him with £20 he never paid?—Exactly.

7010. Then you wiped out of his account £20?—Yes.

7011. Has Mrs. Dolan been paid that £20?— Oh! yes. I handed it over.

7012. You say you lent him £20?—Yes, on his note.

7013. Was that money of your own?—It was Mrs. Dolan's money.

7014. Has that also been repaid?—Yes, your Worship; when it became due I marked it paid.

7015. You lent money of Mrs. Dolan's to Carey?—Yes.

7016. Has Mrs. Dolan been paid that £20?—Yes.

7017. By whom?—By me.

7018. Where did you get it?—This was a portion of the money—the amount that I got from Mr. Laffan. I paid first to two persons £70, and this £40.

7019. That is £110?—Yes.

7020. You returned some balance?—I did, your Worship.

7021. How much did you return?—I can't say; I kept no account; I made no entry of those moneys.

7022. You said you got something over £100 altogether?—Yes.

7023. You paid away £110?—Yes.

7024. Have you no recollection of the amount you returned;—Not any distinct recollection. To the best of my belief I got in or about £130 or £140 altogether. I had it in my possession to dispose of it as I thought proper.

7025. When did you pay the £20 to Carew?—I think it was in February or March. I think it was in February.

7026. I mean the £20 you gave on the note?—I think I gave him that in January.

7027. And was it at the same time that you credited him £20?—When he was taking up the note in a month after, I put £20 to his credit in account.

7028. At that time?—Yes, when he was taking up the note in February.

7029. What was the date of the bill—a month or two months?—One month.

7030. James Carew voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

7031. By whose directions did you make this arrangement with Carew?—I understand it was the same person that told me to hand the money that I got directions from.

7032. Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes, as well as I recollect. I had almost no conversation with any other person.

7033. You are quite sure you had no conversation with anyone else?—I had no conversation with anyone else relative to money matters.

7034. Did he write their names for you or only tell you their names?—I think the names were mentioned to me.

7035. Only mentioned?—Only mentioned.

7036. Did he mention to you any other names than those three?—No other names were mentioned.

7037. Am I to understand that you made no arrangement with those men as to the amount?—No, I had nothing to say to it.

7038. Were you simply told to pay Molony £35, Michael Halley £35, and this man £40?—Yes.

7039. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know William Ryan of Price's lot?—I do.

7040. Used he to deal at Mrs. Dolans?—Yes, sir.

7041. Did he settle any account at the time of the

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

Patrick Hackett.

election?—Some of them came in at the time of the election and attempted to run up an account, but I stopped it.

7042. Did he pay any money since the election?—No, sir.

7043. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are many of the Commoners dealing with Mrs. Dolan?—A considerable number of them.

7044. Did you get any money from them since the election?—I got some small sums from them. They never owed much.

7045. What do you call small sums?—Five or six pounds.

7046. Did you receive payment from many of them after the election?—I got some payments.

7047. Did you credit any other money?—No; I got some cash from some of them.

7048. Did you put no money to their credit unless on getting cash, except in the case of this James Carew?—No.

7049. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Mrs. Dolan tell you to credit any persons with payments in settling accounts?—No, sir.

7050. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What do you mean by saying you had £130 or £140 in your possession to dispose of as you thought proper?—I had it in my possession.

7051. Did I not ask you if these three names were mentioned to you as those of persons to whom you were to give £35, £35, and £40?—But the money was not limited to me, your Worship.

7052. Do I understand that you were at liberty to give another £100?—Yes, if anyone called on me; or probably I would have been at liberty to call for more if I wanted it. I got this on account. The sums were not specified to me when I got it.

7053. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You had nothing to do with making the arrangement with the voters?—No, I had nothing to do with making the arrangement, simply to hold the money to hand it over.

7054. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is there anything else you have to say?—Nothing more.

7055. Were you engaged in a similar way in the election of 1865?—No, not in any way. I talked about it, but I never meddled about the money part in the election of '65. I heard there was money going but never handled any of it.

7056. Did you make any arrangement in 1865 with any voter?—Not one in the world.

Patrick Cunningham was called but did not appear.

Matthew Murrin recalled and resworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Matthew Murrin.

7057. Murrin, you said that you were living in Cahir during the last election?—Yes, sir.

7058. And that you came here of your own motion to look for employment during the election?—Yes, sir.

7059. When you left Cahir, did you know that Mr. Leahy was here?—No, I did not.

7060. To whom did you mean to apply for employment when you came here?—I didn't care to which of the two members. At the time I didn't know one from the other.

7061. I think you told us that when you came here you heard Mr. Leahy was here?—Yes, sir.

7062. Is it a fact that you are some relative of Mr. Leahy's wife?—No, my wife is, sir, to Mr. Leahy.

7063. To Mr. Leahy's wife?—To Mr. Leahy himself.

7064. You said that you were not acquainted with Mr. Leahy himself?—Yes, sir, but when I came in, sir, I went to Father Kennedy.

7065. You need not repeat all that; he told you to go to Mr. Leahy?—Exactly, sir.

7066. And not knowing Mr. Leahy you were introduced to him by some comrade of yours that was in the town?—Exactly, sir.

7067. When you saw Mr. Leahy did you tell him of the relationship, or did he know it himself?—He didn't, sir, until I told him, because he didn't know who my wife was.

7068. Did you tell him when you saw him?—I did, sir.

7069. What did he say to you when he gave you employment at the election?—He told me he would get a job for me, and he called Mr. Patrick Laffan, who was in an apartment in Abbeyview. He spoke to Mr. Laffan of myself.

7070. Did he speak in your presence of you to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—He did, sir.

7071. What did he say?—I don't recollect the exact words, but I will go as near as I can. He told Mr. Laffan that I was a friend, and that he would be glad I would get something to do about the election from Mr. Laffan.

7072. Did he not say anything more than that?—He may have said more, but it is something on that head, at all events.

7073. Did he say anything to the effect that you were connected with himself, and that Mr. Laffan might trust you?—Well really I don't know, sir.

7074. That interview between Mr. Leahy and Mr. Laffan, took place in Mr. Munster's house at Abbeyview?—Yes, sir.

7075. Do you recollect the day on which it occurred?—Well, I think it was early in—it was either the latter end of—something about November, I think, sir, something about three weeks before the election came on, sir, but I have no dates.

7076. After that interview where did you go to?—I was ordered to go down to Tom Cunningham's, sir.

7077. By whom were you ordered to go there?—By Mr. Pat. Laffan.

7078. You have already told us that you were never stationed in Cashel while you were in the Constabulary force?—Never.

7079. And that you did not know the town?—I didn't well know the town. I have been often on duty here, but knew no persons, only very few.

7080. What did Mr. Patrick Laffan tell you to do at Cunningham's? What did he say to you when he told you to go to Cunningham's?—He told me I might remain there to lodge, and all that—to stop with Pat. Cunningham.

7081. Was there any arrangement made as to what you were to be paid?—No, sir, I never asked a question of him as to that.

7082. What was the first job of work on which you were employed?—To canvass, sir.

7083. Did you not tell me that you knew very few in Cashel?—In order to get the situation from them I said that I knew a good many there, and that I might be able to do something for them.

7084. Mr. Patrick Laffan knew very well though, that you did not belong to Cashel?—He did, of course.

7085. How long did you lodge at Cunningham's?—Well, I think I did something about five months, because I was kept here during the Commission, after the election being over.

7086. During the Petition, do you mean?—Yes, sir, during the Petition.

7087. Four or five months, you say?—From the time, sir, of the election until the petition was over, whatever time that was.

7088. Did you make any arrangement with Cunningham as to what you were to pay for your board and lodging there?—I never did, sir.

7089. Did you ever pay anything to Cunningham?

—I gave £1 5*s.* to his wife, sir, and that was only to keep for me from time to time, to keep it for me so that I would call in from time to time when I would require it from her.

7090. Who supplied you with money while you were in Cashel?—I got that £1 5*s.* sir, from Mr. Pat. Laffan. I got from Mr. Biggin here, sir, two sovereigns.

7091. What other money did you get?—And two sovereigns were handed to me by Pat. Cunningham through Mr. Pat. Laffan.

7092. That is to say that Cunningham handed you the money coming from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes.

7093. What other money did you get?—And two sovereigns more, sir, that Mr. Leahy gave me. £7 5*s.* in all, sir, I received.

7094. Is that all the money that you got from the time you came to Cashel until you went out of it?—That is all the money.

7095. During five months?—Yes, sir.

7096. You say you only got £7 5*s.*?—That is all, sir.

7097. What were you doing here all the time?—Will I speak, sir, from the first time I commenced up to the time I left?

7098. Yes?—The day I was appointed canvasser first, sir, I was taken from it by some party belonging to the Laffans I don't know, to pay the poor people here that were going about Mr. Munster, sir. I was paying that, sir, below at Corcoran's yard. I got 23*s.* for to pay those parties.

7099. From whom did you get the 23*s.*?—I got it from Pat. Cunningham, sir.

7100. Do I understand you to say that those were beggars or poor persons?—Poor persons, sir, and beggars—to poor classes of people.

7101. Go on?—Mr. Leahy, sir, saw these beggars about me when he came to the hotel. I am not sure was he in the hotel at the time; but he came in before I had them paid, and he withdrew me from that situation. He said he didn't expect that was the class of situation I would receive. I then, sir, dropped that, and was ordered to go about the town as a detective, to see if I could see any of Mr. O'Beirne's party that were bribing here and there; so I continued doing that to try if I could procure any information during the election.

7102. Were you not engaged about any other business than that?—No, sir.

7103. Did you sleep always at Cunningham's? Were you ever away from it at all?—I might go home to Cahir to see my family, but very seldom during the time.

7104. When did you see Patrick Cunningham last? Last Thursday, was it?—No, sir, I saw him two or three days before Thursday.

7105. What day did you see him?—I think it was either Monday or Tuesday. I don't recollect which of the two days; but I met him in the town of Cahir.

7106. You were driving on a car with him?—No; but I got a seat on a car for him.

7107. You were driving on a car with him, were you not?—No, sir.

7108. You got a seat on a car for him?—I did, sir, on the mail car.

7109. Where was it going to?—From the town of Cahir to Clogheen.

7110. Have you heard from him since?—I heard he was on Thursday last in Clogheen; but I have not seen him, for I was not at home myself. When I heard about the summons being sent to my place I returned home.

7111. You had a conversation with Cunningham in Cahir the day you saw him there?—I had, sir.

7112. Did he tell you that he was staying away to avoid appearing here as a witness?—I put the question to him myself. I said, "I suppose you are running away from the Commission?" He said he was, and that he didn't like to be examined.

7113. Did he tell you that he was in communication with Mr. Laffan?—Well no, sir, he did not.

7114. Have you heard from him since?—I heard on my way coming in that he came home, by a labouring man I met on the road to Cashel coming in yesterday on my way.

7115. You heard that Cunningham had come home?—I did, sir.

7116. Were you during the time that you were here in constant communication with Mr. Michael Laffan?—I was occasionally, sir, from time to time. He didn't recognise me much.

7117. But you were in communication with him?—I was, sir.

7118. During the course of your investigations and watchings you learned, I presume, what we have all learned now, that money was paid in Corcoran's hotel to voters?—I heard it rumoured about, sir.

7119. I ask you now on your solemn oath, if you were the man that paid that money?—I am not, sir, nor I wouldn't be intrusted with it.

7120. Do you know who was the man that paid it?—I don't, sir, nor I never heard of him.

Thomas Looby, of Lower Gate, recalled and confronted with the witness Murrin.

Thomas Looby.

7121. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Mr. Looby, did you ever see this man before?—Yes, my lord, I saw him passing up and down the street several times.

7122. Is he the man you saw in the room in Corcoran's hotel?—No, my lord. I don't think he was as tall.

7123. You do not think he was as tall as that man?—No, my lord.

Matthew Murrin's examination resumed by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Matthew Murrin.

7124. Did you ever sleep in Corcoran's hotel?—I never did.

7125. Were you ever in any room in Corcoran's hotel?—No, but the room the voters used.

7126. You said you used to go in and out there?—I was not allowed to go in there by the Laffans.

7127. Why were you not allowed to go in there?—Well, I couldn't tell you that, sir. I was one night there, sir; that was the night previous to the election, up with the voters in Corcoran's, and that is all I stopped at Corcoran's house, unless I went in and out there.

James Connors recalled and confronted with Murrin.

James Connors.

7128. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Do you know this man?—Yes, my lord, I do.

7129. Is he the man that you saw in the room in Corcoran's hotel?—No, sir; he is not. [Murrin.—My lord, if I was the man I would give it straightforward.]

EIGHTH DAY. Mathew Murrin's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

October 12.

Matthew Murrin.

7130. Did you ever hear who the man was?—I did not, my lord.

7131. Did Cunningham ever tell you who he was?—No, my lord.

7132. You were living during five months in Cunningham's house, and do you mean to say that he never told you who was the man that paid the money to the voters?—I swear, he never did.

7133. Did Cunningham ever tell you that he was giving money for votes?—He did not, my lord. Never. They were like Freemasons, sir, they wouldn't let me know anything at all. Not a ha'porth, sir, would they let me know. They kept their minds to themselves from me altogether.

7134. You say that you got altogether £7 5*s.*?—Yes, sir.

7135. Do you consider that that paid you for five months?—I do not, sir.

7136. Have you applied for more?—I applied for more since. Mr. Leahy put in a bill. I applied to Mr. Leahy and he said he wouldn't give me any more; but I suppose they paid for my support to Cunningham.

7137. Did you ever ask anybody else but Mr. Leahy for more money?—I asked Mr. Laffan here, on one occasion [points out Mr. Michael J. Laffan] that I came short of money, and he told me he had no money for me, to go about my business.

7138. Did you ever get any other money from Cunningham?—Never got a shilling in my life, sir, from Cunningham, only what I am after describing to you.

7139. Did you ever get a sum of £3 from him?—From Cunningham, sir?

7140. Yes?—I never did. Two sovereigns Cunningham handed to me, sir. I never got a halfpenny only the two sovereigns Cunningham handed me at Abbeyview house the night the election was over.

7141. When he gave you that money who did he say sent it to you?—He told me Mr. Patrick Laffan gave it to him to hand it to me.

7142. Did you ever get any money from him besides that?—Never, sir.

7143. You said you got two pounds from Mr. Leahy; did Mr. Leahy hand you that money himself?—He did, sir.

7144. Do you swear to me now on your solemn oath that your only business here was to act the detective on Mr. O'Beirne's proceedings?—Exactly, my lord.

7145. Nothing more than that?—Nothing more than that, my lord.

7146. Tell us what you discovered as a detective?—I discovered nothing is of any account.

7147. You can give me a better account than that. Were you summoned as a witness on the election petition?—I was, my lord, but I was not examined.

7148. On the petition?—Yes.

7149. By whom were you summoned?—I was, by a man of the name of Keeffe in town here.

7150. For Mr. O'Beirne's side?—At the suit of Mr. O'Beirne, I think.

7151. Were you in attendance as a witness?—I was, from day to day during the Commission. I made on one occasion a statement, and I wrote to Mr. Munster from Cahir to state that there was a bribe to a man of the name of Witheroe that was acting for Mr. O'Beirne, and to know if they required him at the petition here, that I would have him in attendance. I was directed then to send him forward here, and I came with him.

7152. Did you not tell me that you remained here at Cunningham's until the petition was over?—I went home, sir, at this time, and it was after going home I met this Witheroe.

7153. Did you not tell me that you were at Cunningham's from the election until the petition was over?—I was, sir, only occasionally when I would go home to see my family. On this occasion I met Witheroe in Cahir, and I brought him here.

7154. Did you ever write about anything else to Mr. Munster, or to any of his agents or friends?—No, sir, that I have any recollection of.

7155. Did you write about Pat. Cunningham?—No, sir, I did not.

7156. Were you in communication with Cunningham's family since you came here?—I was only in there yesterday since I came, and that was all.

7157. Only yesterday?—Yes, sir. I didn't sleep there last night.

7158. Were you there to-day?—I was not there to-day.

7159. Do you know is Cunningham in town now? Did you hear from his father?—I did not, indeed, sir.

7160. Did you ask him?—I didn't ask the question, but I heard from a man on the Commons yesterday that he came back.

7161. Who was the man that told you on the Commons yesterday, that Patrick Cunningham had returned to Cashel?—He was a labouring man, sir. I went into a house to redden the pipe; he was eating his dinner in the house, at the Cross of the Commons of Cashel. I asked him about Patsey Cunningham, and he told me Cunningham was at home. He used to work for him.

7162. Do you know does he work still for Cunningham?—I don't, sir; I didn't ask him that question; but he was digging potatoes at the Cross of the Commons.

7163. Did he tell you he had seen him?—Well, he did not, sir.

7164. Could you find out the name of the man that told you Cunningham had returned?—I could, sir; but I should go out to the house I met him in eating his dinner.

7165. How far off is it?—About two miles I think.

7166. How long was he working for Cunningham's father?—A week or a fortnight I believe during my time, off and on about the yard and garden and so on.

7167. Mr. MOLLOY.—You were one night before the election above at Corcoran's?—Yes, sir.

7168. You did not go about, that night?—No, sir.

7169. You were there the whole night of course?—I was, sir.

7170. What were you doing there?—Sitting with the voters in the room.

7171. What were the voters doing?—They were dancing, sir, and occasionally they got a drink there.

7172. How many voters were there?—I declare, sir, I have no recollection.

7173. About how many?—I think about fifty or forty, or something of that kind.

7174. How many rounds had they during the night?—I believe they got it on three or four occasions during the night as well as I can recollect.

7175. Was it punch they got?—No, sir. I think it was raw whiskey, sir.

7176. Who supplied the whiskey to them?—By gar, I forget now, sir, who gave it to them. It was a servant at the hotel that used to bring it in to them.

7177. Was there anybody else besides yourself there along with the voters? Any of the agents?—I don't recollect that there was, sir.

7178. What friends of Mr. Munster were in the house that night?—Pat. Laffan, sir, was there, and this gentleman here was there [Points to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]. No other gentleman.

7179. Was Mr. Leahy there?—He was there part of the night and went home. Whether he slept there or no I don't know.

7180. Who else was there?—An attorney of the name of Mr. Scallan, or some name like that, from Dublin.

7181. Was he up all night?—He was up all night, making a little punch occasionally from time to time.

7182. Who else was there?—By gar, I don't recollect their names.

7183. Try and recollect?—Well these were the principal parties that were there with the voters. I recollect a man of the name of Sullivan there from the corner of the town here; he made a speech there too.

7184. What was Mr. Michael Laffan doing?—By gad, I couldn't tell you that for I wasn't in the apartment with him.

7185. Were you not up all night?—I was, but he came in only once or twice where the voters were. I heard that he slept there that night. I heard them say in the hotel that he was asleep—whether it was in bed or on a sofa I don't know.

7186. Tell us the names of any voters you saw there that night?—I don't recollect the names of the voters. I would give all the names to you if I could know them.

7187. What room were you in with the voters?—It was the underneath room at the left hand side, just as you go in the hall.

7188. On the ground floor?—On the ground floor.

7189. Were you in any other room in the hotel?—I was not, my lord.

7190. You could see the people going up stairs from where you were?—Well I could not, sir, because the door that was leading out to the hall was closed all night, and it is round by the hall you must go to get to this, as you would be turning down to the bar of the hotel.

7191. Were you the whole night in the room where the forty persons were?—I was, sir.

7192. And never left it?—I never left it until morning, sir, unless I came to the door to look out.

7193. What did you do in the morning?—I walked down to Cunningham's and had my breakfast there, and when I was done breakfast I came up to the Courthouse here with voters.

7194. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you never hear that there was any man upstairs in Corcoran's hotel giving money to voters?—Well, I did not, indeed.

7195. You never heard it?—I never heard it. I can answer you, my lord, that them things were kept private from me; and if I knew who it was I would give his name.

7196. Have you been in communication with Mr. Michael Laffan since you came to town?—No, sir; I never spoke to him since.

7197. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked this question—Was Mr. Munster present at Abbeyview at the interview between you and Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, he was not, my lord.

7198. Was Mr. Munster present at Abbeyview at the interview between you and Mr. Patrick Laffan and Mr. Leahy?—He was not, my lord.

7199. When did you get two sovereigns from Mr. Biggin?—Well, really, I couldn't recollect the time that he gave it to me.

7200. Where did he give it to you?—In John-street—no, in Abbeyview, and there was nobody below at Abbeyview the day he gave me that, except himself.

7201. When was it?—I think it was after the petition, my lord, he gave it to me.

7202. Mr. Munster wants to know what is the distance from Cahir to Clogheen?—Seven miles, my lord.

7203. You said you made a demand for more money?—I did, my lord.

7204. How much more did you ask?—I didn't make mention of how much.

7205. How much did you expect?—I expected two or three pounds more, my lord, for my services.

[Mortimer Shea is sent with witness to ascertain the name of the man who told witness that Patrick Cunningham had returned to Cashel.]

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7206. Mr. Laffan, I have a few questions to ask you. You heard this man swear that you were at Corcoran's hotel that night?—I did.

7207. And that you slept there?—He is incorrect in that. I did not sleep there, but I was in an upper room and we were writing out all night—writing orders for parties to get five guineas, and so on. Those parties were collected in the lower part of the house. He is also inaccurate in saying that I went into the room where he was once or twice.

7208. Who was the man that was in the front bedroom?—I don't know.

7209. Did you ever hear?—I did.

7210. Who was he?—Some man sent by Captain Byrne.

7211. Did you not hear his name?—I did not. I am quite sure at all events that it was not Murrin, because Murrin was here as he states some good while after the election.

7212. I believe Murrin has told me the truth?—I think Murrin is perfectly accurate.

7213. What is the address of Captain Byrne?—Sorrel-hill, Templemore.

7214. What is his Christian name?—Dudley Byrne.

7215. Mr. MOLLOY.—Is not Captain Byrne one of the barony cess collectors of the county Tipperary?—Yes.

7216. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Captain Byrne is a gentleman who was a visitor of Mr. Munster's at the last election?—Yes.

7217. I find his name in this book as having received money; is he the same person?—Yes.

7218. Do you know is he at home?—I do not.

7219. Have you heard anything of him lately?—Yes, I saw him on Thursday in Thurles at the county meeting. Oh, I should think he is at home.

7220. How far is Templemore from this?—It is about 16 or 17 miles, I think. His place, I believe, is something beyond that, two or three miles.

7221. From whom did you hear that the man who was in that room was sent by Captain Byrne?—From Cunningham.

7222. You did not hear his name?—I did not hear his name.

7223. When did you hear it from Cunningham?—I heard it a few days after the petition was over.

7224. Have you heard anything since of Patrick Cunningham?—No. I refused to have anything further to say, or give any directions, beyond sending word to his father last evening that he ought to see after him, and have him attend at once.

7225. Did Cunningham tell you where this man was from? Did you hear where he was from?—Some place about Templemore. I did not get any particulars beyond that he was from Templemore, some neighbour of Captain Byrne's, or something of that kind; but he didn't tell me his name.

7226. When did you first hear that that man was in the room?—I cannot tell you when I first heard of it, because for two or three days before the election—I mean before the day of polling—from the way people were going up and down, and going about mysteriously, I knew very well that something was going on.

7227. Then I may assume that you knew that before the election?—You may assume that I knew that something was being done; but how, or what, I did not know.

7228. You did not know the particulars?—I did not know the particulars.

7229. But you knew it was being done?—Yes.

EIGHTH DAY.

October 12.

Andrew Meara tenders himself for further evidence.

Andrew Meara.

7230. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—State what you wish to add?—I was asked a question yesterday if there was any person or any one of Mr. Munster's immediate family got clothes.

7231. You said not; but you found since that there was?—Yes.

7232. That Mr. Close got clothes: "account for clothes £4 5*s.* 7½*d.*"?—Yes; and I understand he was employed writing in Mr. Munster's office and assisting as his secretary at that time.

7233. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know John Ryan of the Racecourse?—I do, sir.

7234. Did you hear of his having a bill for £35 in the bank at the last election?—No, I didn't hear.

7235. Did anybody tell you he had a bill for £35 in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it?—I don't know; they might, sir.

7236. Did anybody speak to you about taking it up with your name instead of Captain Graham's?—No; I don't believe such a thing did occur.

7237. Are you positive it did not occur?—I do not believe it did.

7238. Recollect yourself?—I do not think it did.

7239. Are you sure that neither Mr. Michael Laffan nor Mr. Patrick Laffan, nor any of Mr. Munster's party asked you to put your name on a bill, so that this man might be under no compliment to Captain Graham?—It might occur, but I don't remember.

7240. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You would not forget a thing of that kind?—I had no great business with John Ryan, and therefore I would hardly sign for him.

7241. If you conceal anything of this kind from me, most unquestionably I will not give you a certificate.

7242. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You proposed to take up a bill for William Ryan?—Yes, sir.

7243. Are you sure that there was no proposition made to you of the same nature, that you should take up a bill for this man, John Ryan?—It may occur, certainly, but I forget who made the proposition.

7244. Did Mr. Pat. Laffan make the proposition?—I think not.

7245. Did Mr. Michael Laffan make it?—If any person it was he.

7246. Did not Mr. Michael Laffan ask you if you would do it?—I do not directly recollect it, but it may occur, and I am sure if he asked me I would do it.

7247. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That will not do; that is not an answer. Did it occur? It will not do to leave Mr. Laffan under that imputation. You do not forget, of course, whether such a proposition was made to you or not. Recollect yourself and answer?—I could not really answer that; I do not recollect it, but it may occur.

7248. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was John Ryan any relation to William Ryan?—William Ryan is married to John Ryan's first cousin.

7249. It was to relieve William Ryan from the control of the other party that you proposed to take up the bill?—I have frequently done it for him before and since.

7250. You are positive Mr. Michael Laffan did not ask you?—I am not positive, but I could not directly swear that he did not.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7251. Mr. Michael Laffan, did that occur?—Mr. Griffin has read the brief which I sent in to him, and it is exactly stated in that brief as it happened.

7252. Mr. GRIFFIN.—State how it occurred?—It happened in this way. John Ryan of the Race-course came to me the day before the polling. He asked me first to lend him £35. I refused to do that.

7253. What did he say about £35?—He first wanted £35. He next told me about Captain Graham's bill in the bank, and to lend him the £35 for a few days to take up that bill, and that then he would repay it to me. I refused to lend him the money, for I said it would be too plain, and anybody would consider it as giving him so much for his vote, which I declined to do. He then said, "In that case I will have to vote for Mr. O'Beirne's party; for of course I must go under a compliment to Captain Graham to renew the bill." "Well," said I, "I think we might get you out of it. I will try and get somebody to put his name on the bill as security instead of Captain Graham. Mr. O'Meara," said I, "is a friend of mine, I will ask him to do it." He expressed some hesitation and doubt, and he did not approve of that course.

7254. Ryan did not approve of it?—Yes; it did not seem to meet his approval. "I will ask him, at all events," said I. I went to Mr. O'Meara and asked him, and he said he would do something of the kind. Mr. Ryan never turned up afterwards to get the bill signed.

Mr. Andrew Meara.—I forgot that transaction altogether. I didn't recollect a word about it.

Andrew Meara.

Andrew Meara recalled at the desire of Mr. Munster.

7255. Mr. Munster.—Might I ask if the clothes for Mr. Close were sent to Mr. Meara, the tailor, to be made up just like mine?—Yes.

John Moloney.

John Moloney sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7256. You were paid £35 by Mr. Hackett?—Yes, sir.

7257. That was for your vote?—Yes, sir.

7258. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

7259. Who arranged with you as to the amount you were to get?—Pat. Cunningham, sir.

7260. Had you any talk with anyone else about it?—I think not, sir.

7261. Had you a talk with anyone about what you were to get for it?—No, sir.

7262. Did you see either of the Messrs. Laffan about it?—No, sir.

7263. You never talked to them at all about it?—No, sir.

7264. Do you tell me you never talked with anyone about it but Patsy Cunningham?—No, sir, from the time that he settled with me.

7265. Before he settled with you had you a talk with anyone?—Mr. Pat. Laffan was at the house. That's all.

7266. Was he there by himself?—No, sir.

7267. Who was with him?—Captain Byrne.

7268. You had some talk about the vote that day with him, of course?—Yes, sir; but there was no talk about money, or anything that way.

7269. Never at all?—Never at all.

7270. Did you ever see those gentlemen again?—Never again.

7271. How soon after they were with you did Patsy Cunningham come and settle with you about the £35?—I couldn't say was it that week or about it.

7272. Did you hear anything about it until Patsy Cunningham came?—No. It was in town I met Patsy Cunningham; he met me in the street.

7273. Where did you settle the bargain?—Walking the street, I believe.

7274. Were you in Corcoran's hotel?—I was, sir.

7275. When?—I couldn't say the day I was there.

7276. How often were you there?—I was two or three times, I believe.

7277. Are you sure you were there three times?—I was, sir.

7278. Did you get drunk there?—I believe I got drunk there once.

7279. Only once?—Only once, to the best of my belief.

7280. Did you pay for the drink yourself?—No, sir.

7281. Who gave it to you?—Well, I couldn't tell that, sir.

7282. Were there other voters there at the same time?—There was.

7283. Was there drink going about among them all?—It was not, sir. I only went in there and there was drink on the table.

7284. Were you asked to take it, or was it there for anyone that would take it?—I cannot recollect that, but I knew I got it there.

7285. Were you there the night before the polling?—I was, sir.

7286. That is not the time you spoke of that you got drunk there?—No, sir.

7287. You got drunk that night?—I don't mean that night. It was before I settled that I said I got the drink.

7288. After you settled were you there again?—I was the night before the polling.

7289. Did you spend the night there?—I did. I was card-playing all night.

7290. I suppose you were not dry that night?—Begad, but I believe I used to be dry during part of night.

7291. Did you get any drink at all that night?—I got an odd sup now and again.

7292. You did not pay for it that night either?—No, sir.

7293. We are told that there were forty or fifty voters there?—I don't think that there was so many there, to the best of my belief. 'Tis the cards I was watching, nothing else.

7294. Did the others get drink?—I couldn't see but the few about the table card-playing.

7295. For whom did you vote in '65?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

7296. How much did you get that year?—Nothing, sir. Oh, aye! he was promising a situation to a nephew of mine, sir, and he was writing a letter to set me all right about it.

7297. Did you take that promise instead of money?—Yes, sir.

7298. If you did not get that promise you would not vote for him unless you got something from him?—I suppose I would go with the neighbours, sir, wherever they went.

7299. Did you vote in '59?—I had ne'er a vote at that time, I believe, to the best of my belief.

7300. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan?—If I had a vote in '59. I couldn't say.

7301. Mr. MOLLOY.—How many times did you vote at elections?—I believe I voted for Mr. Lanigan. I believe I did. I believe I did three times.

7302. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you get any money from him?—No, sir.

7303. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was there any understanding that you were to get money?—No, sir.

7304. Did you hear anything about £15 given or being promised at the election?—No, sir, I didn't hear it.

7305. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you live on the Commons?—Yes, sir.

7306. Did you hear about any other men out there getting money?—Begor I did not, sir, because I couldn't know what anyone would get.

7307. Do you know Richard Cummins?—I do, sir.

7308. Did you hear that he got money?—No.

7309. Did you hear that his son James got money?—Begor I did not, sir. I couldn't know whether he did or not.

Tom Cahill [answered as Thomas Cahill] sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Tom Cahill.

7310. Do you know Murrin that was in your house yesterday?—He came in, your worship, where I was eating my dinner.

7311. To redden his pipe?—Yes.

7312. You told him that Patsy Cunningham had come home?—That he had come home?

7313. Yes?—I couldn't tell him that, your worship, for I knew nothing about Patsy Cunningham. It would be hard for me to tell that.

Matthew Murrin recalled and confronted with the witness Cahill; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Matthew Murrin and John Maloney.

7314. Is this the man that you saw yesterday?—Murrin—Yes, sir.

7315. And you saw him where you were eating your dinner?—Cahill.—Yes.

7316. What did he say to you about Cunningham?—Murrin.—He told me Cunningham was at home.

7317. Now, Mr. Cahill, what did you say?—Cahill.—I am on my oath, sir, and I am telling you the truth. I couldn't do that, unless I tell a lie, because I couldn't know anything about the business. I am working for my day's hire in that and every place else, and as for their business I don't understand it, nor their affair, nor it is no sort of trouble to me, thank God.

7318. Who was present when he told you that?—Murrin.—There were two or three people sitting about the table, sir.

7319. Do you know who the other persons were?—Murrin.—I don't know, sir.

Tom Cahill's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Tom Cahill.

7320. Who were the other persons there yesterday?—I don't know, sir.

7321. Were you digging potatoes with them?—I was, sir.

7322. Tell me their names?—Pat. Cahill and Tom Hunt. I couldn't tell him about Patsy Cunningham, because I couldn't say he was at home; any man I didn't see.

7323. Where are these men to-day?—I couldn't tell you.

7324. Are they digging potatoes to-day?—I don't know. [Patrick Cahill was called but did not appear.]

7325. Do you know Patrick Cunningham?—I do, your worship.

7326. When did you see him last?—About a week ago, sir. About last Monday week; and I couldn't tell any person there I see him; for Patrick Cunningham, or any of them, wouldn't tell me their business.

7327. Did you say anything to that man [i.e. Murrin] yesterday about Patrick Cunningham?—He asked me what way were they.

7328. Did you say anything to him about Patrick Cunningham?—No.

7329. Nothing at all?—No; but that they were in good health before him. How could I tell him?

7330. Answer my questions. I ask you again—and do you understand it—did you say anything to him about Patrick Cunningham?—I did not. How could I tell him.

7331. Mr. MOLLOY.—Whose house were you eating your dinner in?—I forget the man. He is a herdsman at the cross of the racecourse. We were all eating our dinner. He walked in to redden the pipe, and I known him since he was in Cashel.

EIGHTH DAY.
October 12.

Mr. Munster puts in his cheque for £50 to Mr. John Davis White.

Patrick Cahill

Patrick Cahill sworn ; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

[Patrick Cahill, Thomas (or Tom) Cahill, and Mathew Murrin on the table together.]

7332. Do you know this man Murrin that is standing beside you?—I do, sir.

7333. You saw him yesterday?—He came in as we were eating our dinner, sir.

7334. You heard some talk between him and others in the house?—I did, sir.

7335. Did you hear Thomas Cahill say anything about Patrick Cunningham?—I did, sir.

7336. Did you hear him say that Patrick Cunningham had come home?—I heard Thomas Cahill saying that he heard that he was at home on Friday night.

Tom Cahill.

Tom Cahill's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7337. Constable, see if Mr. Ffrench, the magistrate is here?—A Constable.—He is here in court, sir.

7338. Mr. Ffrench, I ask you to receive informations for perjury against that man Thomas Cahill. You will examine the witness that sits on the chair, and the man behind him, Murrin, and the shorthand writer also if you require him ; and if you are satisfied of the case commit him for trial.

7339. Tom Cahill.—As old as I am now I never was before a bench of magistrates, nor a policeman never laid a hand on me before. I am as innocent of this talk and piece of business as the child that was born last night. I can take my oath that I was never before a bench of magistrates to this day, and am as innocent of what is laid to my charge now as the child that was born last night. You may convict me if you like.

7340. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I gave you every opportunity of telling the truth?—Tom Cahill.—I told the truth to my own knowledge, sir.

Michael Hally

Michael Hally sworn ; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7341. You are a voter of the borough of Cashel, I believe?—Yes, sir.

7342. And I believe you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

7343. You got £35 from Patrick Hackett?—Yes.

7344. That was for your vote—was it not?—Yes, sir.

7345. When were you paid that by Mr. Hackett?—In two or three months' time after the election, I believe.

7346. Was it in the month of April?—I could not tell you, sir.

7347. With whom did you make the arrangment as to the £35?—No arrangement, sir. John Moloney that made the arrangement. I didn't meet him at all.

7348. Did you make any arrangement with anyone?—No, sir.

7349. Did Moloney make the bargain for you as well as for himself?—Yes, sir ; I suppose so.

7350. Who told you to go to Mr. Hackett for the money?—No one, sir ; I only walked in the shop.

7351. What did he tell you when you walked in?—He told me if I would vote for Mr. Munster I would be recompensed for it.

7352. Who told you that?—Pat. Hackett.

7353. Did he tell you how much you would get?—No, sir.

7354. Who told you that Mr. Hackett had the money for you?—John Moloney, sir, told me he had it.

7355. Did you and Moloney go together to him?—We were in the shop, sir. We went together after.

7356. When you were paid the money did you both go to the shop together?—No, sir.

7357. Were you paid the same day?—I couldn't certify, sir.

7358. Who told you to go to Mr. Hackett the day you were paid?—No one, sir ; I went in myself.

7359. Why did you go that day more than any other day?—Because he said he would give it to me some few days before that. I didn't go until then, sir.

7360. Mr. MOLLOY.—When you went to Hackett, and he told you that you would get money if you voted for Mr. Munster, how did you know that he was the person to give it?—I only went to the shop, and he told me if I voted for Mr. Munster I would get it.

7361. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When did Pat. Hackett tell you that?—A few days before the election. I could not certify—two or three days I suppose.

7362. At the time he told you this did you know from John Moloney that you would get £35?—No, sir. John Moloney was in the same day, and I was there also.

7363. Which of you were in first?—The two of us.—We were in together, sir.

7364. Was this after you saw Hackett and he told you that you would get the money?—No, sir. It was before it.

7365. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—For whom did you vote in '65?—I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

7366. What did you get then?—Nothing, sir.

7367. Do you mean to say you got no promise of anything?—I did not.

7368. Do you know of any others who got money?—I heard rumours about it. That is all I know.

7369. Is this the first time that you ever got money?—Yes, sir.

7370. You never got it before?—No.

7371. Nor any promise of money?—No.

7372. Did you ever vote before '65?—No.

7373. Did anyone get money for you then?—No.

7374. Are you married?—Yes.

7375. Did your wife get money?—No.

7376. Did she tell you she got it?—No.

7377. Before or after the election of '65?—No.

7378. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear that anybody else got money after the last election?—No, sir. It was only rumoured about.

7379. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you looking for money at the last election on account of your vote?—No, sir.

7380. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know, Mr. Hally, that you are in an awkward position for taking money at the last election, and that the only way you can get out of it is by telling us the entire truth?—That is the truth, sir.

7381. We can give you a certificate if we think you are telling the truth. With regard to the election of '65 I want to know did you get money?—I got none, sir.

7382. And you say that you do not know of any other man paid in '68 except Moloney and yourself?—Yes, sir. That is all the knowledge I have.

7383. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you any conversation with any person before the last election, in which you made known your expectation as to money?—No, sir, I had not.

7384. Had you any conversation with Andrew Meara about it?—No, sir. I was often in his shop and had no conversation about it with him.

7385. Had you any conversation with him about the election?—No, sir ; I had no conversation at all about the election ; but I was in there one day and I told him I was pledged to Mr. Munster the day before the election.

7386. And you did not lead him to suspect that you wanted money?—No, sir ; I didn't lead him nothing.

William Ryan, of Lawlor's Lot, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7387. Have you a brother?—I have, sir.

7388. What is his name?—Michael Ryan, sir.

7389. Mr. MOLLOY.—Have you a brother Denis?—No, sir.

7390. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did, sir.

7391. What were you promised for your vote?—I got £30, sir—30 sovereigns.

7392. Thirty?—Yes, sir.

7393. Who paid you the £30?—I don't know, sir. 'Tis a man that was below at Thomas Cunningham's. I don't know the man, sir. He was a disguised man. 'Twas in Thomas Cunningham's I got it. Below in Thomas Cunningham's upstairs in a room I got it. There was a man there—a disguised man. I was directed upstairs, and I got the money.

7394. How was he disguised?—He had a large shawl like on his face, and I could not see his features, and he had a large coat on him.

7395. Did the shawl cover over his face?—It did, sir. You couldn't see scarcely his eyes.

7396. Did he cover the lower part of his face as well?—He did, sir, from his breast up to his eyes with a large shawl.

7397. Who took you there?—I had a letter from Patsy Cunningham down to his father.

7398. To whose father?—Patsy Cunningham's father.

7399. Did Patsy Cunningham give you a letter to take to his father?—Yes, sir, to take to his father.

7400. Did you read the letter?—I didn't read it. There was no superscription on the letter, whatever was inside it: I suppose 'twas a letter.

7401. What did you do with the letter?—And he asked me did I know his father. I said I didn't well know him, and he directed Din Ryan then with me. When I gave it to Thomas Cunningham he allowed me upstairs, where this man was disguised, and as soon as I handed him the letter, when he opened it he paid me the money; but then he handed a note to sign it, and then I read and signed the note.

7402. Did you get more than one letter from Patsy Cunningham?—No, sir.

7403. That letter had no superscription and you showed it to Tom Cunningham, Patsy's father?—Yes.

7404. Did Tom Cunningham read it?—No, but he allowed me up and I gave it to the man above.

7405. Are you sure he did not open it?—No.

7406. Nor ask any question?—No. He allowed me up.

7407. What did he say?—Nothing, but when I handed it to him he opened the door and directed me upstairs where the man was.

7408. What room was it?—'Twas the third room when I would go upstairs on my right hand side.

7409. Was the letter a sheet of note paper folded up, or was it only an envelope?—I couldn't well say whether it was an envelope or a sheet of note paper.

7410. And are you sure Tom Cunningham did not open it and read it?—I am, sir, quite certain.

7411. To whom did Patsy Cunningham tell you to give that letter?—To his father, sir.

7412. Did he tell you what his father would do when you went to his house?—He did not, sir.

7413. Was Denis Ryan present at all this?—He was, sir. He was down, my lord, and into the house with Thomas Cunningham with me.

7414. Denis Ryan?—Yes, sir.

7415. Was Denis Ryan present when you gave the letter to Cunningham?—He was, sir.

7416. I suppose he saw Cunningham take it?—I suppose he did.

7417. What hour of the day was it?—It was after twelve o'clock, sir.

7418. In the day time?—Yes, sir.

7419. What door did he open?—The room he was in. When he directed me to the door the man heard the steps and he opened the door.

7420. You said that after you gave the letter Cunningham opened the door and let you in?—I gave the letter to Cunningham.

7421. Where?—In his own house. In Thomas Cunningham's house.

7422. When you gave him the letter what did he say?—Nothing, but walked up before me and directed me to the room. The man when he heard the steps opened the door. I walked in and then he shut the door.

7423. What did he say to you then?—He said nothing, but opened this paper and read it and counted thirty sovereigns to me. He said nothing to me.

7424. You said you signed something?—I did, sir.

7425. What was it you signed?—A note, sir.

7426. A promissory note was it?—Yes, sir.

7427. And you recollect what it was?—I do.

7428. Tell me what it was?—"Two months after date I promise to pay Mr. Michael M'Carthy, or order, the sum of £30 sterling."

7429. Did the man keep his face covered all the time, from the time you went upstairs until you left?—He did, sir. It was from Corcoran's I went up to Tom Cunningham's.

7430. From the time you saw him until you left him did he keep his face covered all the time?—He did, sir.

7431. You left the note with him?—He kept the note.

7432. Did Denis Ryan go upstairs with you?—I couldn't well say, because I was in before him, after Cunningham. I can't well swear whether he followed me up or not.

7433. Did you tell Denis Ryan whether you got the £30?—I didn't; but he asked me, and I told him I got no money.

7434. You told him you got no money?—I told him I did not, sir.

7435. Did Thomas Cunningham ask you anything about it?—Nothing at all, sir.

7436. Are you the man that is known as "big Billy"?—Yes, sir.

7437. Who did you make the bargain with to pay you the £30?—With Patsy Cunningham, sir.

7438. Where did you make the bargain with him?—In Corcoran's hotel, sir.

7439. In what part of it?—In a private room—a back room.

7440. Are you a brother of Denis Ryan?—No, sir.

7441. What is your brother's name?—Michael Ryan.

7442. Is he a voter?—No, sir; he doesn't live in the Commons at all. He has no vote. He was in Clonmel.

7443. You say it was in a room in Corcoran's hotel that you made the bargain with Cunningham?—It was, sir.

7444. What room was it?—It was a small room when you go up stairs first.

7445. Is it on the first floor after going up stairs?—It is, sir.

7446. Was there anyone present when you made the bargain?—No, sir.

7447. Had you a talk with anyone else about getting money for your vote—had you any talk with Mr. Laffan?—No, sir.

7448. Do you know Mr. Leahy?—I did, sir; I knew him by sight.

7449. Did he call on you?—No, sir.

7450. You never spoke to him?—No, sir.

7451. Or anybody but Patsy Cunningham?—No, sir. I was speaking to Mr. Pat. Laffan, but he offered me no money.

7452. What day did you make the arrangement about the £30—how many days before you were paid it?—I think four days.

7453. On what day were you paid the money?—On Monday, sir.

7454. The Monday before the election?—Yes, sir

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

William Ryan.

7455. Do you know of anyone else being paid money?—No, sir.

7456. Anyone else at all?—No, sir.

7457. For whom did you vote in '65?—I had no vote then, sir.

7458. Did you live in the Commons then?—I did, sir.

7459. Who had the vote out of your place then?—There was no vote, sir; the land was too small.

Denis Ryan.

Denis Ryan of Cooper's Lot, recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7460. Do you recollect going with this man?—I do, sir.

7461. Did you see the letter?—It was in an envelope, sir.

7462. Was it closed or open?—Closed.

7463. And is it your recollection that there was no writing on the outside?—It is, sir. My impression is that he has stated the truth.

7464. Did you see him give the letter to Thomas Cunningham?—If I don't mistake, 'tis I brought the letter over to give it to this man beyond at Cunningham's house. I went with him from Corcoran's hotel to Cunningham's along with this man.

7465. And it was you that handed the letter?—I handed it beyond, and I conveyed this man to where the other person was, and as soon as I conveyed him I pulled out the door after me and went away.

7466. Did you see the letter in Thomas Cunningham's hand?—He handed it to me, and told me to take this man over to his father.

7467. My question is—did you see that letter in Thomas Cunningham's hand?—I am after saying that I handed it to him, sir, and he went to this room with the letter and gave it to him. I sent this man into the room to where this man was, and after that I pulled out the door and left the man within.

7468. I do not quite understand you yet. You gave the letter to Thomas Cunningham?—Yes.

7469. Did Thomas Cunningham go into the room where the man was?—He did.

7470. Leaving you and this man outside?—Yes, sir. I sent this man in after.

7471. Did Thomas Cunningham go into the room where the man that had his face covered was?—He did, and I suppose had an interview with him.

7472. And then he came out?—Yes.

7473. Was that room upstairs or downstairs?—Upstairs.

7474. Where were you and big Billy at the time that Cunningham was upstairs in the room?—We were along with him.

7475. Were you outside on the lobby?—I was until this man went in, and I went down then and came away.

7476. Did Cunningham come out before big Billy went in?—He did.

7477. And then he left him inside and went away downstairs?—Yes, sir.

7478. Did you see the man that was there?—I did.

7479. Do you know him?—I do not.

7480. Did you ever see him before?—No.

7481. Nor since?—No.

William Ryan.

William Ryan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7482. Did you ever before see the man that was in the room?—No, sir.

7483. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you know any man named Michael M'Carthy in this neighbourhood?—I do not sir.

Denis Ryan.

Denis Ryan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7484. Mr. Ryan, you told us yesterday that your brother, William Ryan, was promised £30 by Cunningham for his vote?—I said he expected it.

7485. Why did you not tell us about this case yesterday?—I forgot it, sir.

7486. It will not do to have witnesses forget things like that. It makes us only suspect the witness does not tell us the whole truth?—I remarked I would always attend.

7487. I remarked to you that when other witnesses would tell me something it would not do for you to say you "forgot that." I said that yesterday?—I recollect that you did, sir.

7488. If you forget anything else it is very likely that we will withhold a certificate from you. So if you think of anything you had better say it in time. You understand me now?—I do, sir. I have no knowledge of e'er another case such as that.

7489. Mr. MOLLOY.—Seeing a man with a shawl on his head was a circumstance not likely to be forgotten very soon?—Of course I didn't forget it.

7490. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—But you never told us a word about it. You know Pat. Connor?—I do.

7491. Did you hear anything about him?—I heard he got it. I suspected he got it. I am of opinion he got it.

7492. And from whom did you hear it? Did you hear it from himself?—No, sir, himself did not tell me.

7493. Did you hear it from any of his family?—I did not, sir.

7494. From whom did you hear it?—Hear it! Myself to suspect he got it.

Michael Carew.

Michael Carew (known as Michael Carew, junior) sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7495. You are a voter, I believe?—Yes, sir.

7496. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

7497. You signed a bill, I believe, in '65 [bill exhibited to witness]?—I did, sir. It wasn't to be left so long as this without having it decided, though. I signed it on terms to have it burned a few days after the election. 'Twas kept as a control over me since, and they didn't benefit by it, because I would not allow any person ——

7498. You got £30 on that note?—Yes, your worship.

7499. For voting for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Yes.

7500. How much did you get for voting in '68?—I don't exactly know, sir.

7501. Well, tell me now, for the last election?—Ne'er a halfpenny at all, sir.

7502. What were you promised?—As much as any man, sir.

7503. Who promised you that?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

7504. Mr. Michael Laffan?—I got that retainer, sir [hands in a document].

7505. Did you get this cheque from Mr. Michael Laffan, "Cashel, 6th November, 1868. The National Bank. Pay Mr. Michael Carew, or order, five pounds five shillings as retainer for his services at the election. M. J. Laffan?"—I did, sir.

7506. You said you were promised as much as any other man?—Yes.

7507. And that Mr. Michael Laffan promised you that?—Yes.

7508. Where did he promise it to you?—At Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

7509. When did he make that bargain with you?—Well, I couldn't exactly say, sir.

7510. Was it the night before the election?—It was not, sir; but a week or a fortnight before it. I couldn't exactly say.

7511. Where did you get this cheque from him?—At Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

7512. Was it the same time that he promised you as much as any other man?—It was, indeed, the very same night.

7513. The very same time?—The very same time.

7514. Was that promise to be in addition to the amount of this cheque?—There was no mention about that.

7515. Did you understand by the promise to give you as much as any other man, that the five guineas was all you were to get?—Oh, of course I didn't. Sure, if I did it wouldn't be any great addition to me.

7516. Then you understood Mr. Laffan to mean more than this cheque for the five guineas?—Yes, your worship. I didn't care whether I got it or not. I wasn't anxious for it, and wasn't hearty when I got it. If I didn't get it at all I wouldn't vote for Mr. O'Beirne, through the means of the affairs that happened, and were held over since.

7517. I believe you went to Mr. Geary to ask him for the other cheque?—Yes, your worship.

7518. That was just before this election?—It was the second Sunday after Mr. O'Beirne coming here. Mr. Geary met me in the street on Sunday after mass and asked me did I see Mr. O'Beirne. I said I did. "Were you talking to him," says he?—"No." says I; "sure you are able to manage that affair when you have a ring over the Commons people," through the means of his having notes, "and we must go where he chooses." "Do you mean," says he, "that I would do any such thing to you," says he. "Come in," says he, "with me. Will you take £30, and I will burn the old affair?"—"No," says I; "it isn't to be burnt at all. 'Twas my terms to get it after the election and let me burn it myself if I liked;" because I was no scholar and he could burn anything he liked, and as he betrayed me at all, I didn't want to say that he should have the burning of it.

7519. How soon after that conversation was it that you went to Mr. Laffan?—Be gar I couldn't exactly say, sir.

7520. About how soon?—In or about a week or so, or a few days. I don't think I was intended to stand long alongside of him.

7521. Who took you to Corcoran's hotel?—Be gar myself went there.

7522. And you saw Mr. Laffan there?—I did, sir.

7523. And you say it was there that he wrote this cheque and gave it to you?—I do, sir.

7524. Did you make any claim on Mr. Laffan since?—I did.

7525. How much did you ask?—I didn't mention anything, but I told him money was due to me.

7526. What did he say?—He said that he had no money to give me.

7527. When did he say that to you?—I believe after the Commission or the Petition or whatever was here latterly.

7528. Did he put you off to any other time or say "I have no money at present"?—The last time I was talking to him he removed from where he was, upstairs or so. I didn't like that he didn't make some remarks to me, and I didn't trouble him since.

7529. When he gave you your answer did he say "I have no money at present"?—No.

7530. He only simply said "I have no money"?—Yes.

7531. At the time you got this cheque from him did he say anything about your vote?—He did.

7532. What did he say?—That I wouldn't be allowed to vote.

7533. For whom would you not be allowed to vote?—For any person.

7534. Did you tell him that you were going to vote for Mr. Munster?—I didn't at that time, for I didn't know which.

7535. Did you tell him afterwards?—He told me the morning of the election that he would have me vote for Mr. Munster, and so I did.

7536. Where did he tell you on the morning of the election that he would have you vote for Mr. Munster?—In Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

7537. Did you spend the preceding night there?—I did indeed.

7538. And he saw you in the morning before going to the poll?—Yes.

7539. And he told you that he would have you vote for Mr. Munster?—He did.

7540. Did he say anything further?—Not a word.

7541. With whom did you go to the poll?—By gar, we all went together.

7542. Together, in a body?—All went together, in a body.

7543. Why did you never cash this cheque?—To produce it whatever time I would get it; when I got any more along with it; when I would see what I ought to get.

7544. Did you ask any other person besides Mr. Michael Laffan?—His brother offered me money the morning of the election.

7545. Tell me what Mr. Patrick Laffan said to you the morning of the election?—He called me into the room, and "Carey," says he, "I have more money to give you."

7546. Where did this take place?—In Corcoran's hotel.

7547. Was that up or down stairs?—Yes.

7548. Was there anyone in that room but the two of you?—No.

7549. What did he say when you went into the room?—"Carey," says he, "I am going to give you more money."

7550. Did he say how much more he would give you?—No.

7551. Did you ask him how much it would be?—No.

7552. Did anything more pass but his saying that he had more money to give you?—No. I told him I didn't require it that day.

7553. Was this conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan before or after Mr. Michael Laffan said he would have you to go up and vote for Mr. Munster? Which spoke to you first—Pat. or Michael?—I can't exactly say, sir. I don't think there was an hour in the difference.

7554. But you are not able to say which of them spoke first?—No, I am not, indeed.

7555. Who told you to come to Corcoran's that night? What brought you there?—I came in myself.

7556. You were not asked?—It was not my wish to remain, because I wasn't too well. I gave the night asleep on the sofa there.

7557. Why did you stay against your wish?—I was loath to say I couldn't sit up. I often stopped up a night, and I wasn't so advanced in years as not to stop up.

7558. Did anyone ask you to stay?—Yes, Mr. Laffan.

7559. Which of them—Pat. or Michael?—I couldn't say. I knew it was their wish I should remain along with the men.

7560. Did anyone canvass you before that interview in Corcoran's hotel? Did Mr. Patrick Laffan, or Cunningham, or anyone canvass you?—No, sir.

7561. Did any man make you any promise of money except Geary, Mr. Michael Laffan, and Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, sir.

7562. No man?—No man, nor woman.

7563. Do you know of any other man having been

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

Michael Carew.

paid money at the election?—I do—a man of the name of James Carew.

7564. Is he your brother?—He is a second cousin, sir.

7565. Do you know of any other?—No, your worship.

7566. From whom did James Carew get the money?—I believe from Mr. Hackett.

7567. You do not know of any other case than that?—No, sir.

7568. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Denis Geary asked you would you take £30 and burn the old bill?—Yes, sir.

7569. Did you tell that offer to Mr. Laffan when he spoke to you afterwards?—No, sir.

7570. Did you tell him that you would get £30 from the opposite side?—No, sir.

7571. The morning that Mr. Patrick Laffan offered you the money, had he the money about him, or did he make any sign of paying you the additional sum?—He had, sir.

7572. Then why did you not take it?—Because I didn't want it.

7573. Were you afraid of losing it?—I didn't fancy to have it about me.

7574. On an election day?—Yes, sir.

7575. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you vote in 1859 for Mr. Lanigan?—I don't think I did, sir.

7576. At the time Mr. Lanigan was up you voted, surely?—I don't recollect, sir.

7577. Did you ever get money from Mr. Lanigan, or any persons for him?—No, I don't think I did, sir.

7578. Are you sure that you did not?—To the best of my opinion I didn't.

7579. Did you ever get money from Sir Timothy O'Brien?—I did.

7580. How much?—I can't exactly say, sir.

7581. Why can you not say?—It is too long to be in my head.

7582. What election was it—1857?—I don't know, sir.

7583. Did you get it more than once?—No, sir.

7584. You only got it at one election?—Yes.

7585. And are you not able to say which election it was?—I am not, sir.

7586. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you recollect the election in which Carden, Hemphill, and Lanigan, were up?—I do.

7587. Did you vote at that election?—I never voted for them, sir.

7588. Did you ever vote for John Lanigan?—No, sir, never, to the best of my opinion. I don't think I did.

7589. Did you get money at any other election besides Sir Timothy O'Brien's and the one in 1865?—No, indeed.

7590. Were you promised money for your vote at other elections?—No, sir.

Thomas Cunningham was called but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7591. Do you know Cunningham?—I do, your worship. As I was walking towards the house, a young man that is living with Cunningham for some past time—I believe he is a relative of his—the moment he saw me he ran into a small parlour like inside the counter and closed the door, and I heard persons speaking inside. He denied old Cunningham being in the house.

7592. Did you leave word for him to come here?—I did, sir. He told me he was gone to a farm of his, sir.

7593. Would you know any of the voices?—I didn't; it appeared to me that there was three or four inside.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7594. Mr. Laffan, in your accounts you discharge yourself of £91 8*s.* 8*d.* cash to agents and retainers. Is that accurate?—Yes.

7595. Where is the account of the agents and retainers?—I have got the original.

7596. Show it to me, if you please?—[Witness hands in a document.]

7597. The retainers are not given here except one?—No, sir; here is the list of retainers. [Hands in another document.] The list amounts by that to £42.

7598. I see Carew's name is not amongst them?—His cheque was never presented at the bank, and never charged against me.

7599. Mr. GRIFFIN.—These are only the cheques that were paid?—Exactly.

7600. There were fourteen altogether?—There were fourteen given, which were either paid, came back to me either as returned cheques or through the bank. This one never came in at all. It is not one of the fourteen.

Michael Beary.

Michael Beary recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7601. You sent in a bill for £25?—I did.

7602. You said you got only £10?—£10.

7603. And you said I think that you were paid too much?—No, but I said I was satisfied. I got more money, I said, than other men.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7604. Did you pay to Beary 45*s.*?—I did.

7605. Not for the service of subpœnas?—No.

Michael Beary.

Michael Beary's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7606. Do you hear Mr. Laffan swear that he paid you 45*s.*?—He did, from time to time.

7607. Did you forget that this instant?—I did, your worship.

7608. You seem to have a short memory?—Because they were small sums from time to time.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7609. Are there any others of those agents whose names are not in the list, as that man Carew's?—No, I think there is no other cheque out.

James Carew sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7610. Mr. Carew, you are a voter of this borough?—Yes, sir, I am.

7611. And you voted, I believe, for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, your worship.

7612. Have you the note about you that you passed to Mr. Hackett?—I have, sir. [Hands in the document.]

7613. Is this note in Mr. Hackett's handwriting?—Yes, sir.

7614. What is the denomination of your land—is it Price's lot?—Yes, sir.

7615. "Cashel, 16th January, 1869, £20. James Carew. One month after date I promise to pay Margaret Dolan, or her order, at the National Bank, Cashel, £20 sterling, for value received. James Carew." That seems to be in Mr. Hackett's handwriting; also your name. But is this your own handwriting to the note here?—It is, sir.

7616. This £20 we have here was given to you for your vote?—Yes, sir.

7617. And Mr. Hackett also told us that he put £20 to your credit in Mrs. Dolan's account. Is that so?—Yes, sir.

7618. You did not pay that £20 to him that he put to your credit?—I didn't, sir.

7619. Was that £20 also in consideration of your voting for Mr. Munster?—I suppose it was, sir.

7620. Then the two twenties, making £40, were the consideration on which you voted for Mr. Munster?—It may be so: he says it.

7621. Why, did you not get £20 in cash?—I did, from Mr. Hackett.

7622. And £20 put to the credit of your account?—Yes.

7623. That is £40?—Well, I didn't know it until after Mr. Hackett told me it was put to my credit.

7624. But now you know it was?—Yes, sir.

7625. With whom did you make any arrangement about how much you were to get for your vote?—With Patrick Cunningham.

7626. What arrangement did you make with him?—In figures.

7627. Well, how much?—I think £50, sir.

7628. Fifty?—Yes.

7629. That is, that you were to get £50?—Yes, sir.

7630. When did you make that arrangement?—In Mrs. Corcoran's hotel, before the election.

7631. What time before the election?—About a week or eight days to the best of my recollection.

7632. Was anyone present but you and Patrick Cunningham?—No, sir, there wasn't.

7633. In what room of the hotel was it?—In a bed-room upstairs; a front room.

7634. A front bed-room?—Yes, sir.

7635. And was there anyone there but yourself and Cunningham?—No, sir.

7636. Did you see anyone else about this bargain of £50 except Patrick Cunningham at any time? I do not mean then, but at any time?—No, I didn't, sir.

7637. Did you get the other £10 from anyone else?—I didn't.

7638. Did you ask for it?—No, I didn't.

7639. Do you mean to say that you never asked for the balance of £50, when you only got £40?—No, I didn't.

7640. You never asked anybody at all?—No.

7641. Where did you meet Cunningham that day? Did you go to Corcoran's hotel? How did you meet him, or did he come to you?—I was in at Corcoran's hotel.

7642. That was Mr. Munster's hotel, was it not?—It was.

7643. Did you go there for the purpose of meeting Cunningham?—I did.

7644. Who sent you there to meet him?—I think no person told me.

7645. How did you know you would find him at Cunningham's?—I wasn't sure.

7646. How did you know Cunningham was engaged for Mr. Munster?—He called me when I was there, sir, and he brought me to this room.

7647. Did you not tell me you went to Corcoran's hotel for the purpose of meeting Patrick Cunningham?—No, I didn't; I didn't know I was to meet Cunningham. I met Mr. Patrick Laffan, there; I was speaking to him before.

7648. What did he say to you?—He offered me a retainer.

7649. For how much?—£10.

7650. Where did he offer it to you?—At Mrs. Corcoran's.

7651. Was that before you saw Patrick Cunningham there?—No, after it.

7652. Do you mean to say that it was after you made the bargain for £50 with Cunningham?—I think it was.

7653. Now, recollect yourself, because you are giving quite inconsistent answers. I asked you why you went to Corcoran's hotel to meet Cunningham, and you told me you met Pat. Laffan before, there. I suppose it is a mistake, because I imagine you mean to tell me the truth. Try and recollect yourself. Did anyone tell you to go to Corcoran's to meet Mr. Patrick Laffan or Patrick Cunningham?—To the best of my belief it was with Michael Carew I went there.

7654. Did you ever see Mr. Leahy?—I did, sir.

7655. Where did you see him?—At Mrs. Corcoran's.

7656. When did you see Mr. Leahy at Mrs. Corcoran's?—Well, I can't really tell you, sir.

7657. Had he a talk with you about your vote?—No.

7658. Did he not speak a word about voting, at all?—No, sir.

7659. Is this the first election at which you voted?—It is, sir.

7660. Who had the vote out of your place in '65?—My father had, sir.

7661. Your father is dead since?—He is, sir.

7662. For whom did he vote in '65?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

7663. Did he get money from Mr. O'Beirne?—I couldn't say, sir. I saw an old note.

7664. And you are quite sure that he got £30?—I can't say, sir. I didn't see him getting it.

7665. Did your father write, do you know?—He did, sir.

7666. You saw the note in Geary's hands?—Not in Geary's hands; I saw it in my own hands.

7667. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Have you got it still?—No, sir.

7668. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was your father's name Michael?—It was, sir.

7669. What did you do with the note?—I burned it, sir.

7670. When did you burn it?—Over twelve months, I think.

7671. Do you know of any other person having been paid money at the last election?—I do not, sir.

7672. You are quite sure?—No, sir. I was present when Michael Carew got the retainer from Mr. Michael Laffan. That's all I know.

7673. Did you hear Mr. Michael Laffan tell him that he would get as much as any other man?—I think he said that, sir.

7674. I wonder you had no talk with him about your balance?—I hadn't, sir.

7675. And you made the arrangement with him about this payment of £50?—No, sir.

7676. Did you say a word about yourself?—No.

7677. Did you tell him how you were going to vote?—I didn't.

7678. Had you your mind made up then?—No.

7679. And Mr. Michael Laffan never said anything to you about voting?—He didn't, sir; but he said that he wouldn't give me a retainer.

7680. Did he say why he would not give you the

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

James Carew.

retainer?—Well, I think he did, but I can't remember the reason.

7681. What was the reason?—I can't think of it. I don't recollect.

7682. Are you quite sure that you heard him say to Michael Carew that he would get as much as any other man?—I'm not quite sure of it. I wouldn't exactly say.

7683. You have sworn this moment that you think Mr. Michael Laffan said that he would get as much as any other man. Did Mr. Laffan say he would get as much as any other man?—I'm not really sure.

7684. What is your recollection of what you heard?—Well, he didn't say a great deal to him; but he wrote it, and gave it to him.

7685. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you here when Michael Carew was examined?—I was, sir.

7686. Did you hear him swear that Mr. Michael Laffan said to him, "You will get as much as any other man?"—I don't know.

7687. Mr. MOLLOY.—What did you say to Pat. Laffan about the £10?—That I wouldn't take it.

7688. Why would you not take it?—He made no remark, but he put it in his pocket and went away.

7689. Why would you not take it? You thought it too little?—I did, sir; I thought it too little.

7690. Mr. GRIFFIN.—From whom did you get the note with your father's name to it?—I got it after my father's death.

7691. Amongst his papers was it?—Yes, sir.

7692. Do you remember the date of it?—I don't, sir.

7693. Was it the year '65?—Yes. To the best of my belief it was, sir.

7694. Do you remember to whom it was payable?—I don't remember whether it was a promissory note, or on demand.

7695. What other name was on it besides your father's?—Phelan.

Patrick Fitzgerald.

Patrick Fitzgerald sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7696. You are a voter, Mr. Fitzgerald?—Yes.

7697. I believe you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

7698. You were taken up stairs in Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, sir.

7699. How much money did you get?—£30, sir.

7700. Was that £30 paid to you before the election?—It was, sir.

7701. And was it paid to you for Mr. Munster?—When I went into the room the man was inside, sir. He told me to write my name on a small bit of paper on the table, sir. I didn't exactly mind what it was until after writing my name I saw it was a promissory note. I saw the stamp on it, and he counted me £30.

7702. Was that paid to you for your vote for Mr. Munster?—He made no remark.

7703. Who was the man that took you there?—The man that took me there was James Connors. He told me that I would get £30 from Patsy Cunningham. I met him. We went both to the hotel. After some time some chap called me out an instant, and told me I was wanted up stairs. I went up. Pat. Cunningham was at the door there, and he sent me in to where this man was.

7704. And you went in?—Yes.

7705. And you got the £30?—Yes.

7706. Did Cunningham say anything to you?—He said nothing.

7707. What time of the day was it?—It was night; I can't exactly say. I suppose it was about nine o'clock at night.

7708. Was there a candle in the room?—There was.

7709. Was there more than one?—There may be, but I don't remember.

7710. Where was the man in the room when you went in?—He was sitting at the table.

7711. With a candle on the table?—Yes.

7712. Did you see the man before?—No.

7713. Or since?—Not any way I remember.

7714. Would you know him again?—I may and I may not.

7715. Had you light enough to see him?—Plenty.

7716. You remained there while writing your name?—For a short time.

7717. And you counted the money?—I did, and he counted it to me.

7718. Was it in sovereigns?—Six five-pound notes, sir.

7719. I suppose although the man did not say anything, you know very well that he paid you that money for your vote for Mr. Munster?—I made that remark to him when I handed the note back.

7720. What did you say?—I said was it conditional to give my vote I passed that note.

7721. What did he say?—He muttered something, sir.

7722. But he did not say anything?—Oh, yes, he said it was only a matter of form.

7723. I suppose when you were required to pass the note you thought you ought to get the money without passing the note?—I didn't know it, sir.

7724. Is that the reason that you made the remark?—I don't know which, sir.

7725. At any rate you asked was that for giving your vote to Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

7726. And he said it was only a matter of form?—Yes.

7727. What did you understand was a matter of form?—I don't know.

7728. Was it signing the note was only a matter of form?—Something of that kind, sir. I had the note signed then, sir.

7729. Describe this man—what age was he?—A middle-aged man, sir.

7730. Was his hair gray, or a dark colour?—I think it was gray.

7731. What size was he? Was he a low-sized man?—A stout man, sir.

7732. Did you read the note that you signed?—I didn't, sir.

7733. Do you not know what amount was put in the note?—I see it—what I got, £30, sir.

7734. Are you able to tell me to whom the note was payable?—I'm not, sir.

7735. Did he read it for you?—He didn't, sir.

7736. Did you see Patsy Cunningham when you came out again?—I can't exactly say, sir. I believe he was at some place thereabout, sir.

7737. Did you tell him it was all right?—I made no remark to him, sir.

7738. Did you never tell him afterwards that it was all right?—No, sir. I made another remark to the man that was giving the money. I said there was £40 giving, and he said not, sir.

7739. He said not?—Yes, sir. He had £40 on the table, and he put £10 back in his pocket, sir.

7740. Was this the first election at which you voted?—It is, sir.

7741. Who voted out of your place in '65?—A man of the name of John Carew, sir.

7742. Was he your father-in-law?—No, sir.

7743. Was he anything to you?—I suppose not, sir. He was married to my wife.

7744. You married his widow?—Yes, sir.

7745. Do you know did he get money in '65?—I heard he did, sir.

7746. Do you know of anybody else getting money in '68?—I don't, sir. I can't swear any man got money.

7747. Are you sure?—I am, sir. I am a stranger in the place. I had no communication with money.

7748. You never had any talk with any man about his getting money?—No, sir.

7749. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Who did you hear got the £40?—Well, it was only remarked about, sir, before that, that there was £40 given. I couldn't exactly say now who, sir.

Patrick Croagh sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7750. You are a voter?—Yes, sir.

7751. And voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

7752. How much did you get for voting for Mr. Munster?—I got £30, sir; I got £30, but it wasn't mentioned to vote for him, sir.

7753. But you knew what it was for?—I didn't, sir; it wasn't mentioned to me.

7754. Who paid you the £30?—It was Pat Cunningham, sir.

7755. Where did he pay it to you?—He paid me; he gave it to me in half notes in Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

7756. When did he give you the half notes?—I couldn't exactly say the day of the month, sir.

7757. About what time was it?—About eight o'clock in the evening.

7758. Was it before the election?—Before the election, sir.

7759. How long before it?—Well, I believe it was a fortnight or three weeks; I couldn't exactly say, sir.

7760. What sort were the half notes for £30—were they three £10 notes, or what were they?—They were six £5 notes, half notes.

7761. Who was present when he gave you the half notes?—There was no one, sir.

7762. Did you ever get the other halves?—I did, sir.

7763. When did you get the other halves?—Before the election, sir.

7764. Who gave you the second halves?—No, 'twas after the election, sir, I got it. I forgot, sir, 'twas after the election.

7765. Who gave you the second halves?—A man of the name of Thomas Gleeson, sir.

7766. Who is Thomas Gleeson?—He's a farmer, sir. He is a brother to Jack Gleeson of Glenbane below.

7767. Where does Tom Gleeson live?—Glenbane below; about four or five miles below Cashel.

7768. Where did Tom Gleeson give you the second halves of the notes?—He gave me them in Cashel, sir, of a Sunday, in a lane that is very near the milk market, sir.

7769. Did he tell who told him to give them to you?—He didn't, sir.

7770. What did he say when he gave them to you?—He gave them to me.

7771. What did he say when he gave them to you?—He told me, "here's the half notes."

7772. What half notes?—The corresponding halves of the notes that I had.

7773. Then he knew that you had half notes?—He did, sir.

7774. It was in Corcoran's hotel you got the first halves?—Yes.

7775. From Patsy Cunningham?—Yes.

7776. That was not the first time you saw Patsy Cunningham about it?—It was, sir.

7777. What carried you in that day?—I was often in there.

7778. What carried you in that day?—There was a man told me I was wanting in.

7779. Who was the man that told you that?—Matt Dwyer, sir.

7780. What did he say you were wanting for?—He didn't say.

7781. Did he tell you you were wanted?—He told me I was wanting. To the best of my knowledge I don't recollect he said who.

7782. When you went into the hotel you did not ask for Mrs. Corcoran?—No.

7783. I will engage you asked for Patsy Cunningham?—No.

7784. You went to look for Patsy Cunninghan?—No.

7785. Where did you see him?—I saw him coming down the stairs.

7786. What did he say to you?—He said Mr. Patrick Laffan wanted me.

7787. Did he carry you to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—He didn't, sir. He said he was in a room inside, and I went to him there, and he asked me did I understand figures, and I said I didn't, that I was no scholar, and he began to make figures. I asked him to tell me, that I didn't understand figures. He didn't make any answer to me, but began to make figures.

7788. What did he make figures with?—With a pencil, sir.

7789. Was it on a piece of paper?—Yes.

7790. What figures did he make?—I don't know figures at all, sir, but I asked him.

7791. How much would he give you?—Yes.

7792. What did you say?—I asked him was it twenty-five, and he said it wasn't. He didn't make any answer to me.

7793. He didn't make any answer to you?—He didn't. Then I asked him was it thirty, and he didn't make any answer.

7794. Did he wink or nod to you?—No, sir; and he said, "Would that do?"

7795. You said it was thirty?—Yes, sir.

7796. He didn't make any answer, but asked "Will that do?"—Yes, sir.

7797. And what did you say?—I said it would.

7798. When you said that it would do, what did you do then?—He gave me a letter then, and there was an envelope. He gave me a ticket. I think 'twas a ticket he gave me, and he gave it to Cunningham.

7799. He gave this ticket to Cunningham—was Cunningham in the room?—Yes; he gave it to Cunningham, and Cunningham then gave me an envelope without any writing outside, and he told me go down to his father's, and that there was a man there in the room that would give me £30 for it; and I went down, and I saw a man there with a shawl around his neck, and his face like sores. I didn't much mind the man. I only looked when I went in, and I handed him the letter, and the envelope with no superscription. He took it from me, and he began to write on a paper that I seen a kind of a stamp on it. I couldn't see what sort of a stamp, because I couldn't read or write. He had it, I suppose, drawn. He wanted me to lay my hand on the pen. I told him I wouldn't, and snapped the envelope, and he told me to leave it after me, and I said I wouldn't. I came up then again.

7800. You came back again to Corcoran's?—Yes, sir.

7801. Well, what happened then?—I told him I wouldn't sign my name to any bill. I got then the half notes.

7802. Then you got the half notes?—Yes, sir.

7803. From whom did you get them?—From Patsy Cunningham.

7804. How long were you back at Corcoran's before you got the half notes?—I wasn't long, sir.

7805. Did he go anywhere to get the half notes?—He could go to many places before I came back. I was about a quarter of an hour, or about half an hour before I got them.

7806. Did you see anybody else about your vote but Mr. Patrick Laffan and Cunningham?—No, sir.

7807. No one else?—No, sir.

7808. Were you offered any money by Mr. O'Beirne's people?—No, sir.

7809. None at all?—No, sir.

7810. Did you vote in '65?—I didn't, sir, nor I hadn't any vote, sir. I forgot, sir, I got £10 for sand, sir. I billed them for £60 for sand, and there was sand drawn before the election from me. I billed them for £60.

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

Patrick Croagh.

7811. Who got the sand from you?—Mr. Patrick Laffan sent out an order, and cars and horses. I told them that I would let those loads go with them, and if they didn't bring me an order I wouldn't let any more sand go. Well then they got an order out, from Thomas Cunningham and Pat Cunningham on the order. I got the order read then by—I forget now who read the order. When I got the order I let them draw it away. Then I came in and I wanted to know who'd pay me for the sand, and they told me they'd pay me.

7812. Who told you?—Mr. Laffan there [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan.] I met Pat Cunningham and he told me to go to Mr. Laffan. I went to Mr. Laffan and asked him to be paid, and he said I would, whatever it was I'd be paid. I brought in the bill of the sand then and gave it to him, £60. He asked me did I think that too much. "I think it too much," says he. "I think," says he, "that is too much," and then I got £10.

7813. You got £10?—I got only £10.

7814. How many loads of sand did they get?—I couldn't exactly say.

7815. Did you make out £60 only as a guess?—That's all.

7816. Who got the sand do you know?—There were many cars there I didn't know. There was some of them I knew.

7817. To whom was it taken?—I couldn't exactly say, sir. They told me it was for Abbeyview-avenue, an avenue by Mr. Munster.

7818. Did they draw £10 worth of sand?—I can't exactly say. They drew a good deal of it.

7819. What do you think as an honest man?—I couldn't say, sir.

7820. Surely you know how much a load you get for your sand?—I sell as well as I can.

7821. Do you sell sand generally to the public?—I do, sir.

7822. What price do you get for it?—Different prices.

7823. But what price?—A shilling a load.

7824. And what else?—A shilling was the most I ever got.

7825. Did they draw 100 loads?—By gor, I couldn't exactly say; I don't think they did.

7826. Did they draw fifty?—I can't say.

7827. Did they draw twenty?—I don't know.

7828. You do not think they did?—I couldn't exactly say. They took a good deal of sand with them, however.

7829. But you are aware they did not draw 100 loads?—I don't think they did, nor near.

7830. Did they ask how much a load you would charge?—No.

7831. Or how many loads you sold?—No.

7832. And who paid you the £10?—Mr. Hackett.

7833. What Mr. Hackett?—Mr. Hackett at Mrs. Dolan's.

7834. Who told you to go to him?—I met him on the road and I told him I wasn't paid for the sand and that I wouldn't vote if I wasn't paid for my sand.

7835. And what did he say to you?—He said that of course I would be paid for it, and Mr. Laffan said I'd be paid for it.

7836. Is that Mr. Laffan here?—Yes, sir, [identifying Mr. M. J. Laffan.]

7837. Did you tell Mr. Laffan you would not vote unless you were paid?—I didn't, sir.

7838. What did you say to him?—I never told anything to Mr. Laffan in regard to a vote, sir.

7839. Only to be paid for the sand?—Yes, sir, to my own knowledge.

7840. Which did you speak to Mr. Laffan or Mr. Hackett first?—I spoke to Mr. Laffan before I spoke to Mr. Hackett, at all, to be paid for the sand.

7841. Did you speak to Mr. Hackett after you spoke to Mr. Laffan?—When I wasn't paying for it, sir, I met Mr. Hackett coming from the Commons and I told him I wasn't paid for it, and he told me to come in and to call to himself.

7842. How did you know that Mr. Hackett had anything to say to it?—I didn't know, sir. I was only telling him I wasn't paid.

7843. Did you tell him that it was Mr. Munster got it?—I didn't know but Patsy Cunningham sent out an order.

7844. Why did you go to Mr. Hackett about it?—I only spoke to him about it up the road.

7845. But you said you would not vote unless you were paid for the sand?—Yes.

7846. And what did he say to that?—He told me to go in and I would be paid for the sand.

7847. Did he tell you who was to pay you?—He did.

7848. Did you go to himself?—I did.

7849. And did he pay you?—He did.

7850. Did he say that anyone told him to pay you?—He didn't.

7851. Was it he that asked you if £60 was not too much?—He didn't. I had a bill of £10 5*s*. for the sand.

7852. To whom did you give the £60 bill?—Mr. Laffan here—[pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan.]

7853. What did he say when you gave him the £60 bill?—He said I would be paid, of course; "but I think it is a little high," he says; "but there's no fear," says he, "but you'll be paid for it."

7854. Did he say how much you would be paid?—He didn't, sir.

7855. And you were paid £10, more than you expected?—I was, sir.

7856. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it before or after you got the half notes at Corcoran's you went with the £60 bill to Mr. Laffan?—It was before it, sir.

7857. How long before?—I believe it was a fortnight or three weeks, sir, I think, to the best of my knowledge.

7858. Was it before you got the half notes at Corcoran's hotel that you got the £10 from Mr. Hackett?—It was after it, sir.

7859. After it?—Yes, sir.

7860. After you got the half notes you brought down your bill for £60?—Well, I did, sir.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham recalled and resworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7861. Where is your son Patrick?—I didn't see him from the time I told you as yet.

7862. What?—I didn't see him since the time I told you he left me up to this.

7863. Did you hear of his being in Cashel?—I heard that he went through; last night I heard he did go through, but he never called to my place.

7864. Were you at home to-day when Shea went to your house?—Me, sir?

7865. Did you hear my question?—I was at the store, and then went to the farm, and now I was told that I was to come here.

7866. Who is lodging in your house at present?—There is no one lodging there.

7867. There is some cousin of yours, I am told?—There is a nephew of my wife's.

7868. Why did he run and shut out the door against Shea to-day?—I couldn't tell you that.

7869. On your oath, is your son in your house?—No, he is not.

7870. On your solemn oath have you heard of him since I examined you before?—I give my oath that I didn't see him since the time you examined me before. That is a sure thing to say.

7871. Now I ask you again do you know where he is?—No, I do not.

7872. Have you heard where he is?—No, not at present; but I made inquiries, and forward he must come; wherever he is I will bring him forward.

7873. You said that too often to me. Did you hear that he was in your house?—No, he was not in my house since he left it.

7874. Since he left it last, you mean?—Since I sent him away on Sunday to pay for cattle. I defy any man either to say that he was.

7875. Did I ask you how long Murrin was staying in your house?—You did.

7876. Did you answer me "a few weeks?"—I believe I said nine or ten weeks, or may be more—more or less.

7877. Would it be the truth if Murrin swore that he was four or five months there?—I don't think he could say five months.

7878. Four or five months. Was he not there from the election until after the petition was over?—The petition is not over yet, of course.

7879. Is not over?—No; at the commencement of the Commission he may be there.

7880. At the Commission?—But he wasn't there since. He came there yesterday, but I didn't see him since.

7881. Did you say in answer to me, "There was a man of Mr. Leahy's stopping in my house seven or eight weeks?"—Yes, I did, sir.

7882. Is it true he was there only seven or eight weeks?—I said "more or less;" he may be ten.

7883. How much were you paid for him?—I was paid nothing as yet.

7884. Did you ask to be paid?—No.

7885. Did you ask Mr. Leahy?—I didn't present a bill, but my son may. I told him, "This is the commencement of the corn season; I have so much money out on the farm and everything, it will take time to get some money." In answer he asked me who would I get money from. I told him to get it from whoever I earned it from. That is my word. I didn't mention any man's name, because I couldn't, sir.

7886. Did I ask you if you knew of any money being given at the election to anyone whatever?—I don't think you did; but if you didn't, I don't know one.

7887. You never heard of any money being given at the election?—Not to my knowledge.

7888. Did any man ever bring you a letter or a note?—To myself, is it?

7889. Yes?—Not to my knowledge. I can't recollect or think on it either.

7890. Listen to me. Did any man ever bring you an envelope without any writing on it?—It may happen.

7891. But did he, sir?—I can't say. I wouldn't swear it.

7892. You would not swear it?—I wouldn't swear anything but what I would be positive.

7893. Did you ever carry any man into a room in your house where there was a man with a shawl about his face?—I don't recollect any man in my house with a shawl about his face.

7894. Was there any man stopping at your house a little before the election besides Murrin?—No; no one that I can say is this, with the exception of persons that would walk in and take their drink.

7895. Do you know a man named William Ryan, commonly called "Big Billy"?—No, I don't know e'er a man of the name of Big Billy; but I know little William Ryan that passed in and passed out there.

7896. Do you know Denis Ryan?—I do.

7897. Was Denis Ryan ever in your house about the time of the election?—He was; I mentioned that.

7898. You mentioned it?—Yes. I was sworn to it the other day. But that there was any man in and out, I couldn't say; but I took a remark of two or three boys that were then passing in and passing out the same as every one; that is all I said.

7899. You told us that Denis Ryan got drink in your place?—Yes.

7900. Did Denis Ryan ever go there and give you a letter?—Not to my knowledge, with the exception that he came for refreshment; more than that I can't say.

7901. Did you go up stairs and go into a room where there was a man with a shawl about him?—No, I didn't. I don't recollect any man to be in my house with a shawl about him at any time whatsoever.

Denis Ryan, of Cooper's Lot, and William Ryan, of Lawler's Lot, recalled and confronted with the witness.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

7902. Do you know both these men?—I know Denis Ryan, but the other only partly. I don't know the man.

7903. Do you see him now?—I do.

7904. Did you take that man up stairs into a room in your house, where there was a man inside in the room?—Not to my knowledge, as far as I can think.

7905. Swear "yes," or "no;" did you?—No, nor I wouldn't know the man.

7906. Do you swear that you never took that man up stairs?—I do.

7907. You know Denis Ryan?—I do.

7908. Did you ever go up stairs in your house with Denis Ryan, into a room where there was a man inside?—When?

7909. During the election?—I can't say I went up or down with him.

7910. Do you swear that you did or did not?—I don't think I did.

7911. Swear that you did or did not. That is a very easy thing to recollect. Did you take Denis Ryan either by himself, or with that other man, up stairs, and into a room where there was a man inside?—As for the other man, I deny him altogether. I wouldn't know him in the street this minute.

7912. Did you take Denis Ryan up stairs in your house, into a room where there was a man? Did you take a letter from Denis Ryan? Did you get a letter from Denis Ryan?—If I did I don't recollect, except a refreshment letter. Anything else I couldn't recollect.

7913. Did you take the letter into a room in your house?—No, but in the shop in the window.

7914. Listen to me. Did you take a letter from Denis Ryan and go into a room in your house where there was a man, up stairs?—Not as I can recollect.

7915. Swear "yes" or "no"?—I am sworn to it, that I can't recollect I did.

7916. Did you get any letter, by Denis Ryan, from your son Patsy about that time?—I did, for refreshment.

7917. Did you get any letter from him about any thing else?—Anyway I can recollect I can't remember.

7918. Is it likely that you would get an order for money and forget it?—No, I deny that I did get from Ryan an order for money.

Denis Ryan re-examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Denis Ryan.

7919. Denis Ryan, did you get an order from Patrick Cunningham?—I did.

7920. Did you go to the house of this man, Thomas Cunningham, with it?—I did.

7921. Was the man behind you, William Ryan, with you?—He was.

7922. Did you give that letter to this man here [i.e. Thomas Cunningham]?—I did. It was an envelope.

7923. Was there anything written on the outside of the envelope?—I couldn't say there was.

7924. When you gave the letter to him what did he do?—He opened the door.

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

Denis Ryan.

7925. Where was the door that he opened?—Convenient to the landing; on the stairs.

7926. Up stairs?—Yes.

7927. Did he go into the room?—He opened the door and made some remark to the man inside, as I stood inside.

7928. Had that man a shawl about his face?—Yes.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7929. Is that true, Cunningham?—I say I never saw a shawl about any man.

7930. Is it true that you went up stairs?—I disrecollect it.

7931. Did you get the letter that has been mentioned?—I don't think, to my knowledge, I ever got it from him. I can't recollect.

William Ryan

William Ryan re-examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7932. William Ryan, did you hear what Denis Ryan swore?—Yes, sir.

7933. Did you go with him to Thomas Cunningham's house?—I did.

7934. Did you go into a room in that house, where a man, with a shawl about his face was?—I can't say that positively, but he went to the door and opened it, sir. I was on the lobby.

7935. Did you see the man from the lobby?—I did; he opened the door.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7936. Is that true, Cunningham?—They may go up.

7937. Did you go up with them?—I can't swear that. Thirty or forty people may go up and down.

William Ryan

William Ryan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7938. Did you get £30 from the man in the room?—I did, sir.

7939. Had you any order or token to give him, except the letter you brought?—None, sir.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7940. Now who was the man, Mr. Cunningham, that was there?—That was where, sir.

7941. Who was the man that was in your house?—I didn't ask who was the man in the house, nor I didn't know what it was about.

Denis Ryan.

Denis Ryan re-examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7942. What room in his house was it?—It was convenient to the right, as you go up stairs.

Patrick Croagh.

Patrick Croagh re-called and confronted with Thomas Cunningham; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7943. Did you get a letter from Patrick Cunningham?—I did, sir.

7944. Did you go to this man's house with it?—I did, sir.

7945. Do you know this man Thomas Cunningham?—I do.

7946. Did you give him the letter?—I did.

7947. What did you do then?—I went up to the room he told me.

7948. Who told you to go up?—Patrick Cunningham.

7949. Had you any talk with Thomas Cunningham?—I don't think I had, only to speak to him.

7950. Do you recollect what you said to him?—No, sir.

7951. Did you go up to the room?—I did.

7952. Was there a man there?—There was.

7953. Was Thomas Cunningham in the house when you went there?—He was, sir.

7954. Did you speak to him?—I did, sir; but at the time I passed up to the room I couldn't swear whether he was within or not.

7955. When you went up to the room did you find anyone in the room?—I didn't, sir, but a man I couldn't know.

7956. Was it a front room?—I couldn't say which. I took no remark, but I suppose I would know.

7957. Had he a shawl about his face?—He had, sir.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7958. Mr. Cunningham, who was that man?—I swear I don't know who the man was.

7959. Do you swear he was never in your house?—I don't know.

7960. Do you think there is one person in court that believes one word you swear?—Whether they believe it or disbelieve it, I swear I don't know who the man was.

7961. Do you swear you do not know that the man was in your house?—I swear I don't know him.

7962. Do you swear you did not go into the room to him?—I may go into him, but I have no knowledge of anybody, as far as I myself knew.

7963. Do you swear you do not know that that man was in your house?—There may be a person in it, but I don't know their business.

7964. I ask you, do you know that the man was staying in your house?—I swear I didn't know him.

7965. And you never saw a man with a shawl about the lower part of his face in your house?—I never saw a shawl on him.

7966. Did you see a shawl in the room with any man?—No, in any way that I can tell you, so far as my own knowledge of it.

7967. You did not now know that that man was stopping in your house?—I swear I didn't know him, nor know anything about his business.

7968. I ask you do you swear on your solemn oath that you did not know that that man was stopping in your house?—I swear I don't know the man at all.

7969. That is not the question I put to you, sir. Policeman, take this man into custody. I commit you, sir, for contempt of court in not answering questions put to you. Take him into custody. Give him in charge to the bridewell keeper. I will make out a warrant for his committal.

[Thomas Cunningham is removed in custody, and the other witnesses retire.]

Denis Geary tenders himself; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7970. Well, Mr. Geary, what do you wish to say?—I was informed outside the court that a fellow named Michael Carew stated I offered him £30, and to burn the document. I plumply and plainly, either directly or indirectly, never offered it.

7971. He swore you did?—I never did; and also that he swore I met him in the street on the Saturday previous; I don't know was it a week before, he required the document from me, he and me had some beer; we were talking about the election and about this document; he stated to me, "If I get £50 from Mr. O'Beirne and the old document, I will vote for him." I withdrew from him. I had no further conversation with him afterwards through myself or anyone else.

7972. Is that all you have to say?—Until such time as he came to my house and asked the document from me, and I refused to give it, I never spoke to him afterwards until he told me as I stated here. He was at the Court-house also, and a boy named Ryan was standing by, and he commenced to abuse Carew, and said, "You ate Mr. O'Beirne's bread." I said, "Let every man poll where he likes." That is my oath.

7973. You swear that this man asked you for £50, and said that if he got £50 he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He said the figure would be £50 and the old document, as well as I can recollect.

7974. May I ask, Mr. Geary, why you did not tell us that on your first examination?—Well, as far as I am concerned, I just was merely asked about the town.

7975. Do you recollect that I pressed you with every form of question in which I could put words with regard to this man?—Yes, sir.

7976. And none of those questions brought this to your memory?—No, sir.

7977. You have a very bad memory?—I couldn't think of everything.

7978. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you agent for any person in '65?—No.

7979. Did you receive any money?—No.

7980. You acted in the interest of Mr. O'Beirne?—Perfectly true, sir.

7981. And you got nothing for it?—Nothing whatever.

7982. Before or after the election?—Certainly not. I made no bargain.

Richard Cummins sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

7983. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did, sir.

7984. For whom did you vote at the election of '65?—Mr. O'Beirne.

7985. What consideration did you get from Mr. O'Beirne in '65; how much?—I got nothing, because I didn't look for it.

7986. You did not ask for anything from Mr. O'Beirne?—No, nor from Mr. Munster. I never got a shilling to bribe me this thirty-five years.

7987. Have you a son?—I have.

7988. What is his name?—James.

7989. Have you another?—No, I have no son or daughter in Ireland. They are all buried.

7990. Is James here?—He is not.

7991. Was he here at the last election?—He was; he was about his business at home.

7992. Where is he now?—He is at home, sir. He is in this country. He hasn't anything committed that he would shun his country for, nor me either.

7993. What made you leave Mr. O'Beirne at the last election? You voted for him in '65?—I did.

7994. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan before?—I did, twice.

7995. You voted twice for Lanigan, and went against him at the election of '65: why did you do that?—I heard Mr. O'Beirne was a very good man in every form, and he got a great commendation the same as Mr. Munster. The reason I voted for Mr. Munster in this turn that he had the priest's approval. I voted with him and Mr. Dean Cantwell from Fethard; to a man of my age. I thought him a great man and a hospitable man every day in Cashel since he came there.

7996. Did you hear he was a very charitable man?—So I did, and see some of it, but I didn't get it myself, nor look for it.

7997. Who asked you to vote for him?—I'll tell you—what's this his name? he came to my house, himself and Mr. Laffan; I believe his name is one Byrne.

7998. Captain Byrne?—Yes, he asked me to do it.

7999. Which of the Messrs. Laffan came to you?—Mr. Laffan never asked my vote.

8000. You are just after telling us that Mr. Munster and Mr. Laffan met you at your house; which of the Laffans I ask you?—Mr. Byrne asked me to give my vote.

8001. Which Mr. Laffan was it that came to you?—Was it Michael or Pat that was along with Mr. Munster?—I don't know any one of them.

8002. Was it he (i. e. Mr. Michael J. Laffan)?—I don't say it is.

8003. If it was not one it is the other I suppose?—I suppose so.

8004. And did you walk out when they came to you?—I didn't; I stopped in the house.

8005. Which of them asked you to vote?—Mr. Byrne, if I wished to vote for Mr. Munster; and "you have a fortnight to do it," says he, "yet," that is the only way, sir.

8006. Is that all he said to you?—That is all he said to me.

8007. Did they not say anything about the Archbishop's brother?—They didn't, but I heard it myself; everyone in Cashel heard it; and some say they heard last week all the dread is in Cashel, and Dean Laffan I knew came from Fethard.

8008. Dean Laffan?—Dean Laffan or Dean Cantwell.

8009. Is Dean Cantwell a great friend of yours?—He is parish priest here.

8010. And you would like to do what he would tell you?—Certainly: what the priest would say I would do in the latter end of my days.

8011. Was Dean Cantwell using much exertion for Mr. Munster?—Why, then, I think he gave the largest commendation of him.

8012. Did you ever hear Dean Cantwell say anything about Mr. Munster?—I heard him say here in a speech—but I am a little hard of hearing—that he was a fit man and a good man, and a charitable man in Cashel. That is all I could say. I could say nothing else.

8013. Did your son James ever tell you that he had any talk with any of the Laffans or with anybody at all?—No; he didn't.

8014. Not a word?—On my oath I didn't hear of Laffan or any other man.

8015. Was he at home during the election with yourself?—So he was at home during the election all but one day.

8016. One day only?—One day only, because I have him, he helps to support me. I am an old man now, upwards of eighty years of age.

8017. Did your son James ever tell you that he made a claim on Mr. Laffan for any money?—No, never—he never told me of it.

8018. Did you never hear he made a claim on Mr. Munster?—No; I never heard that he did, on Mr. Munster or Mr. Laffan to my knowledge. I am on my oath; I didn't, sir.

EIGHTH DAY.
October 12.
Richard Cummins.

8019. There is a claim here for James Cummins for £20; did you know he was going to get that?—I didn't know more than I knew that he was in Botany Bay now for £20. I know nothing at all about it, but my son could do what he liked.

8020. You never heard of his getting any money, or promise of any money?—I heard that he got some money on behalf of Mr. Munster.

8021. How much did you hear he got?—I couldn't say is it £30.

8022. Sure he told you?—No, he didn't, nor I didn't ask him.

8023. Who told you?—I hear the neighbours, and some say here in Cashel now. I hear that my house got the same as others.

8024. Did you hear your son James got it?—I heard he got some money.

8025. From whom did you hear it?—I don't know.

8026. You did, now?—Me! No. Egad, no.

8027. Did he ever tell you he saw the man up in the dark room?—The dark room! No, he didn't, sir, nor I never asked it of him, for the Lord will hear of it; that is the only way I go about it. If Mr. Munster came to my house and offered me £50 I wouldn't give it to him.

8028. But if he offered it to your son you would?—My son may do what I wouldn't like to do.

8029. I would like you would tell me like an honest old man?—By gar, I am old enough.

8030. You seem to have more doubt about your honesty than your age. How much did your son get? was it £30?—It is rumoured. I heard from some people £30.

8031. Did you not hear who gave it to him?—I didn't. No, no, no, I didn't. No, I didn't. I am an old man that stops at home, from my room to the fire, and take my breakfast and dinner when I get it. I came to Cashel during the election only the one day.

8032. You heard of this £30; before the election, I suppose, it must be?—A good while before the election.

8033. That your son got it?—I didn't see him getting it, but it is reported of him that he got it. I don't know.

8034. Is the old woman living?—No, sir, nor anyone of seven children I had. They are all buried and dead, all to him.

8035. It is a wonder to me that you never asked your son James if he got this money. Why did you not ask him?—Well, sir, so I didn't.

8036. Why did you not?—I didn't, on my oath. I didn't ask him what he got, or what he did.

8037. I suppose James told you that you ought to vote for Mr. Munster?—Nor he never told me that. No. That's another thing.

8038. Mr. MOLLOY.—Who told you of the Archbishop's brother?—My own conscience.

8039. Wait, now. Who told you the Archbishop's brother and Dean Cantwell were supporting Mr. Munster?—Didn't I see them.

8040. Where did you see them?—Didn't I see them in this town, and every other clergyman in the election would recommend Mr. Munster.

8041. Did you say you were in Cashel once only during the election?—I was, and two days too.

8042. Is your son James in town to-day?—No, he is not, but about his business.

8043. Send him in here to-morrow?—Will it do the day after to-morrow, for he will be at home.

8044. It will?—Very well; after to-morrow, that is Thursday.

Martin Phelan.

Martin Phelan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8045. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, sir.

8046. Did you vote at the election before that?—Yes.

8047. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

8048. How much did you get for voting for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Twenty-five pounds.

8049. Who paid you that money in '65?—Mr. Johnson.

8050. How much did you get for voting for Mr. Munster in '68?—Five guineas; I got a retainer.

8051. From whom did you get it?—Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir.

8052. From Mr. Patrick Laffan?—It is, sir.

8053. Where did Mr. Patrick Laffan give it to you?—I met him at the house, sir.

8054. In your own house?—Yes, sir.

8055. Did he tell you that you would get any more?—No.

8056. What did he say when he was giving it to you?—He asked me would I become an agent to Mr. Munster. I asked him what would I be doing. "It won't be a great deal," says he. "What will I be doing," says I. "Oh, wisha, not a great deal," says he; "but you can—any of them you will meet—tell about Mr. Munster—how good a man he will be, and so and so."

8057. Did he ask you to vote for him?—No, sir.

8058. What did he say about voting?—He said nothing about voting.

8059. And you got no other promise of any other money than five guineas?—No, sir.

8060. Did you not know that some of your neighbours got money from Mr. O'Beirne?—How could I know that.

8061. You do very well. Did you not know that some of them got money from Mr. O'Beirne's people?—I forget it now, sir.

8062. And you were satisfied with five guineas?—I was, sir; I would take a pound at the time if I got it. I didn't know there was any harm in five guineas.

8063. And what harm is there that you know now?—I don't mean to say there is any harm, but I rather have anything as to have five guineas.

8064. How much did you expect for your vote?—I expected nothing for my vote, but I thought if it was going that I would get as much as any voter.

8065. Did you speak to anyone about getting money for your vote?—No.

8066. Did you speak to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No.

8067. Did he speak about your vote when you got the five guineas?—No.

8068. Did he tell you that you could not vote for anyone if you took it?—No.

8069. Did you do any work for it at all?—Faith I did not, sir; never.

8070. You got twenty-five pounds in '65?—I did, sir.

8071. Did you not hear that Mr. Munster was richer than Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

8072. Did you think you were to get only five guineas from Mr. Munster when you got twenty-five pounds from Mr. O'Beirne?—Sure I knew if e'er a voter got it that I expected it.

8073. Then you expected it?—I did, sir.

8074. Do you expect it now—do you expect to be paid any money?—Well, I don't, sir.

8075. Did you ever ask Mr. Laffan or anybody else for any more?—Never.

8076. Who was with Mr. Laffan when he gave you the five guineas?—It was Mick Dwyer; he is living in the town.

8077. I think you said it was Mr. Patrick Laffan that gave it to you?—It was, sir.

8078. Did he ask you how you would vote at the time that he gave it to you?—No, sir, but he asked me would I become an agent to Mr. Munster, because my mind was laid out to vote, sir, and that is the reason I took the five guineas.

Martin Phelan.

8079. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You voted for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Yes, sir.

8080. Why did you make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster without being asked by anybody?—My mind was made up to vote for him, because I heard of him before he came.

8081. What did you hear about him before he came?—That he would serve both town and country, because he was a rich man.

8082. Did anybody ever say that you would get money for voting for him; anybody at all?—No, sir, never.

8083. After the election did you expect to be paid anything for your vote?—By gor, then, I'll tell you the truth, I did if I could get it; but I never asked it.

8084. What was the reason you did not ask it? Was it on account of the petition?—It was not, sir; but I didn't know to who would I look for it. When I didn't ask any money before I couldn't know who to look to for it.

8085. Did you know Patsy Cunningham at all?—No, sir; I never spoke to him, your worship, about the election, nor to any other person.

8086. Do you know Patsy Cunningham?—I do, sir.

8087. Did he ever say anything to you about the election?—No, sir.

8088. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I asked you did you ever ask for any money?—No, sir.

8089. Did you get any money from Mr. Munster or from anyone since the election?—I did, sir; my wife got two sovereigns from his lady.

8090. What took your wife to his lady?—When she heard that everyone was getting it, she thought she had a right to get the same. She got what she asked.

8091. Did she only ask for two sovereigns?—That is all, sir.

8092. How long ago was that?—I don't know, sir.

8093. In March, was it?—About March, I believe.

8094. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked have you lost a cow lately?—Faith, I lost three of them, but not of late, though.

8095. When?—Wisha, faith, 'tis a good while ago.

8096. How many years ago?—About three years ago.

8097. Did your wife give any "I. O. U." or note or anything for the money?—I signed my name to it, sir.

8098. Where did you sign your name to it?—At home.

8099. In your own house?—Yes.

8100. Did she bring it back?—She did, sir.

8101. Then, was it as a loan you got the two pounds or as a gift?—Well, I don't know what way did she got it; but I signed my name.

8102. She brought back the "I. O. U." for you to sign?—She did.

8103. And what did you do with it?—She brought it back again.

8104. To Mr. Munster's?—To his lady as she told me. I don't know.

8105. Was the money that you got from Mr. Patrick Laffan by cheque or by notes?—By a cheque, sir.

8106. What did you do with the cheque?—I cashed it, sir.

8107. You cashed it in the bank?—I did, sir.

8108. Do you know did your wife get any money?—She got them two sovereigns.

8109. But did she get any money besides that?—That is all she ever got or looked for.

Mr. Henry Munster.—Would you be good enough to ask Mr. Keeffe two questions?

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What are they?—Mr. Munster.—First, did he serve Mrs. Boyton with a subpœna in the chapel-yard near the sacristy.

I do not see what that has to do with the inquiry. I do not see that it would help us in the discharge of our duty. What is the other question?—Mr. Munster.—It was dependent on that.

He may be guilty of very great impropriety; but if it does not touch the matter that we have to inquire into we cannot investigate it?—Mr. Munster.—You cannot see the bearing of it at present.

If you tell me that it has any bearing on our inquiry I will put it?—Mr. Munster.—In my judgment, sir, it will have a very great bearing.

As you say then that it has a bearing on our inquiry, and may be of service to it, I will ask it, although I do not see how it can affect it.

Michael Keeffe.

Michael Keeffe recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8110. Did you serve Mrs. Boyton with a subpœna in the chapel-yard in Cashel?—Yes, your worship, in the chapel-yard on the left, and on my oath she thought to avoid it, and ran from me.

8111. Who told you that you would find Mrs. Boyton there?—I was told by some of the ladies that were going to a meeting in the chapel-yard at the time.

8112. Was it a subpœna to attend as a witness at this commission?—As a witness. I had to cross the graveyard when she thought to run away from me.

8113. Was Mrs. Boyton to be seen passing through the town every day?—I couldn't find her, sir. I ascertained that she hid herself from me. This was a meeting of the ladies that was called in the chapel-yard, and she had to go there.

Mr. Munster.—Ask him, sir, if the person who told him was Miss Kate O'Dwyer.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I do not see that that question will help us in the least.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8114. Mr. Scully, I believe you are not an elector of Cashel?—No, I am not.

8115. But you took an active part at the last election?—Yes, I was retained as agent for my cousin, Mr. Vincent Scully.

8116. But after that was over you supported Mr. Munster?—After the nomination I joined Mr. Munster when my cousin retired. I worked for him from that day to the day of the polling.

8117. We heard, Mr. Scully, that you were one of those who spent a pleasant night in Corcoran's hotel?—I was at Corcoran's hotel, I think, on the evening of the nomination, and the evening after until a late hour.

8118. And the night before the polling?—Yes, that was the night after the nomination. I think I was there that night.

8119. Did you not spend the entire night there?—No, indeed.

8120. You were there in the evening?—I went down there the evening of the nomination about eight o'clock, and I stopped about a quarter of an hour.

8121. Were you not there next morning about six or seven o'clock?—No, I wasn't. I was there the morning after that.

8122. But the morning of the polling were you not there?—Yes. That is the morning after that.

8123. Then we agree entirely?—The nomination, I think, was on Wednesday. Thursday intervened. I don't think I was there on Thursday morning. Friday morning I was.

8124. The morning after the night before the polling—that is the morning of the polling—you were there at an early hour?—On Friday morning I was there about seven o'clock—about an hour before the time of polling.

8125. Thomas Looby swears that he was carried to

EIGHTH DAY. October 12.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully.

that hotel, and that he saw you and some other gentlemen there, and that he was taken up stairs into a room where there was a man, who had just got out of bed, who gave him £30 for his vote?—I know nothing about it. I never heard a word about it until these last two or three days.

8126. Was that going on in the house without any suspicion in your mind?—Without any suspicion. I went about the town unceasingly to get votes for Mr. Munster.

8127. Did you see Mr. Leahy there?—I very often saw Mr. Leahy, but I can't recollect that that Friday morning he was there. I was in and out the whole time from Wednesday evening. I think I told Mr. Laffan that I would be down an hour before the polling—eight o'clock, the time of the polling on Friday morning. I didn't hear there was such a man there until I heard it was mentioned.

8128. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much were you to be paid for your services for Mr. Munster?—I'm not certain how much. I was to be paid by Mr. Vincent Scully.

8129. How much were you to he paid for your services for Munster?—I expected twenty or twenty-five pounds.

8130. Did you not send in a claim for £25?—No; I'm not aware that I did.

8131. You did not?—No; I'm not aware that I did.

Mr. E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8132. Mr. Biggin give me claim No. 79?—I do not think I have it, sir.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully's examination resumed.

8133. Witness.—I applied to Mr. Laffan: but I have no recollection that I mentioned the amount in it.

8134. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You wrote a note to Mr. Laffan?—I think first Mr. Laffan met me in the street, and told me he included my claim in furnishing his bill. He might have told me that day what it was. I don't think in any note I ever wrote to Mr. Laffan I ever mentioned the sum.

8135. But you wrote making a claim?—I wrote to him to know when Mr. Munster's account would be settled. I think that is it. I may be wrong; I kept no copy.

8136. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you write that note before February?—I know I spoke to him about the first week in January. Before the first week in January I saw a notice posted here that there would be a gentleman in the town paying any claims on Mr. Munster. I met Mr. Laffan by chance, and I asked him did he include my claim.

8137. I understand you are a professional man?—No; I am not.

8138. I thought you were conducting agent for your cousin?—So I was, in Cork, for Mr. Scully; but I am not a professional man. I am in the habit of elections, but I am not a professional man.

8139. You did not mean that there should be anything secret about your claim, did you?—No, I did not.

8140. Mr. Munster wishes to ask you this question: Are you aware that all the voters in Cashel who voted for Mr. O'Beirne were willing to vote for Mr. Vincent Scully on certain conditions?—I canvassed the Commons with Mr. Scully. We got very few refusals, if any; but after canvassing it frequently and meeting some of the voters I came to the conclusion, that I suppose he had come to, that there was no chance of any man getting in without bribery, and Mr. Scully would not bribe or agree to pay anything.

8141. Were you distinctly asked for money on the Commons?—By the Commoners I was—not on the Commons, but in a house in town.

8142. Who asked you?—Well, voters.

8143. What are their names?—William Ryan asked me for money.

8144. Is that big Billy?—No, little Billy. He told me what the voters would expect. I went into a calculation about it, and I thought it would be ridiculous.

8145. What did they expect?—£40 a man. We were not inclined to pay anything at all.

8146. Is it your belief that all the voters in the Commons required an inducement of that kind to vote?—I won't say all; but I say the most of them. I thought there was no use in any man standing for Cashel without bribery.

8147. That applies to your cousin, Mr. Vincent Scully. Do you think it was equally forcible as regards Mr. Munster?—I think it was; I think Mr. Scully had as good a claim as Mr. Munster. When he couldn't do any good without money I don't think anyone else could.

James Dwyer.

James Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8148. Your name is James Dwyer?—Yes.

8149. Of which lot?—Lalor's Lot.

8150. You voted at the last election for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir, last and first.

8151. And I believe at the election of '65?—Yes, I did, sir.

8152. Did you get any money after the election of '65, Mr. Dwyer?—I didn't; I got it before. I got £30.

8153. From whom did you get it?—Geary.

8154. At that election you voted, I believe, for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

8155. And the £30, I presume, was in consideration of your vote?—I would vote if I didn't get a shilling.

8156. Do you think that is either a candid or a straightforward answer? I asked you was the £30 given to you in consideration of your vote, and you answered, "I would vote if I didn't get a shilling." Answer my question "yes," or "no." Was the £30 given to you in consideration of your vote?—Well, I think it was.

8157. Had you any claim besides that £30 on Mr. O'Beirne?—No.

8158. Did you go over to London after the election?—No.

8159. Did you make any claim on Mr. O'Beirne after the election?—No, never.

8160. Were you canvassed on Mr. Munster's side for the last election, '68?—No.

8161. Did any person come to canvass you?—No.

8162. Mr. MOLLOY.—How did they escape you?—They knew I was a staunch supporter of Mr. O'Beirne, and that it was useless for them.

8163. Do you mean to swear that no person canvassed you on Mr. Munster's behalf?—Not a man, because they knew very well I would vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

8164. How do you know that?—I know it, because Mr. Hackett spoke to me one day in a shop, and he said, "there is no use in saying anything to you." "Not a use," said I.

8165. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you get any consideration for voting in '68?—Not a shilling.

8166. Did you claim anything?—Not a bit.

8167. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you pass a bill in '65?—I did, sir.

8168. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Now, Mr. Dwyer, recollect yourself. Were you not promised money, or paid money by anyone in this town?—Not a shilling.

8169. Were you offered money for your vote?—No.

8170. From either side?—Well, there was an offer made at Mr. Munster's side to me. I wasn't paid it, but I was offered it.

8171. By whom was that offer made?—Mr. Michael Sullivan, at the corner. He put it down in figures for me.

8172. What did he write in figures for you?—He put down £35 first, and I said, "That won't do." He blotted that out then; that he would give £35 to every man that I'd bring in, and £40 to myself. "That won't do." He began then until he went up to £65—£5 every bid, and I said that would do.

8173. £65 for yourself?—£65 for myself.

8174. And how much for everybody else?—£50.

8175. When did this occur with Mr. Sullivan?—I believe it was about a month or something before the election.

8176. Is that the man that keeps the grocer's shop?—It is, and he told me, on the other hand, that he had no authority in life in saying so, only taking the liberty himself.

8177. Did you ever go back to him again?—Never.

8178. When you agreed for £65 why did not you go back?—I only wanted to put him off. If he gave me £200 I wouldn't agree with him.

8179. Would you think it a wrong thing to take it?—I would think it a wrong thing to take it, and to vote for Mr. Munster in preference to Mr. O'Beirne.

8180. Did you take £30 for your vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was in the street one day and Geary met me. I acquainted Denis Ryan before to take it, and he acquainted me on his returning, and he told me, "Call to me at four o'clock, I want to talk to you." He called me to two men at Richard Grace's, and when we drank something there he told me, "come on," he says, when I left the house, "I can lend you £30," says he. I signed a bill for it, and that's all about it.

8181. Why did you think it wrong to take it in 1868, when you took it in 1865?—Well, we signed a requisition for Mr. O'Beirne to come here.

8182. When did you sign the requisition?—About two years before the election.

8183. Why did you take the money in 1865 if you thought it such a bad thing in 1868, when you say that £200 would not induce you?—I swear that I wouldn't vote for Mr. Munster if I got £200.

8184. Did you get any offer of money to vote for Mr, Munster?—No.

8185. Now think of yourself again?—No. John Coman met me one day in the street and called me and said, "Why wern't you canvassing to-day with Mr. O'Beirne?" "I wanted to go to the loan office," says I, "to sign some bills." "Take my advice," says he, "and shun that ruffian O'Beirne, and I'll see and serve you." Archdeacon Quirke came up and fell into conversation with John Coman and I left him there.

8186. Is that all he said?—That's all. I'm sure he would say more but that the Archdeacon came up.

8187. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you not offered anything at Mr. O'Beirne's side this time?—Not a shilling.

8188. You would not object to take it from Mr. O'Beirne to vote for him?—I wasn't offered it, nor I didn't ask it.

8189. If you were offered it you would not object to take it?—Well, I dare say, perhaps I wouldn't.

8190. Did Captain Graham or Captain Byrne or anybody else speak to you about it?—Not a man.

8191. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know Richard Cummins?—I do, sir.

8192. Do you know that he got money?—I heard it.

8193. Do you know his son James?—I do, sir.

8194. From whom did you hear it? Was it from himself?—I did, sir.

8195. What did he say to you?—He said, "I'm not one of the badly offs," and he didn't tell me how much it was at all, and I didn't ask him.

8196. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you hear that any person else got money?—Oh, sure I heard it, but I don't know who they are.

8197. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did anyone tell you they got it?—Not a man.

8198. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did any of the Ryans tell you they got it?—No, sir.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully presents himself for further examination.

Mr. Jerome J. Scully.

8199. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What do you wish to say Mr. Scully?—I recollect now that when I met Mr. Laffan immediately after the nomination I had a conversation with him, and I told him that there was an arrangement I had with Mr. Scully, and that he not polling a man made a difference of £25 to me; and Mr. Laffan said, "You shan't lose that," and that must have been what fixed the amount of that claim.

Daniel Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Daniel Dwyer

8200. Are you a voter?—Yes, sir.

8201. Did you vote at the last election?—I did, sir.

8202. For whom did you vote?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

8203. Did you get any money for your vote?—No, sir.

8204. None at all?—No, sir.

8205. Did you get any money for your vote in 1865?—I did, sir.

8206. Did you ask for any money in 1868?—No, sir.

8207. Were you offered any money from Mr. Munster's side?—I had a conversation with Mr. Hackett, sir.

8208. What was the conversation with Mr. Hackett?—He asked me would it be any use to know would I go on Mr. Munster's side. I told him it would not; that I think I would support Mr. O'Beirne.

8209. You say that you got £30 in 1865?—I did, sir.

8210. Who paid you that money?—Mr. Geary.

8211. And you passed a bill for it?—I did, sir.

8212. And you know that we have that bill in court, do you?—I do, sir.

8213. And your evidence to us now is that knowing you would get money from Mr. Hackett for voting for Mr. Munster, you voted for Mr. O'Beirne without anything: is that what you want us to believe?—I would, sir; nor all the money in the world wouldn't induce me to vote against Mr. O'Beirne.

8214. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan?—I don't recollect. I believe not, sir.

8215. Did you vote in 1859 for Mr. Lanigan? I can tell whether you tell me the truth or not?—I don't want to deny.

8216. Did you vote in 1859 for Mr. Lanigan?—I only think I did, but I'm not certain, and I got no money neither.

8217. Why did you vote against Mr. Lanigan in 1865? Was it not because you got money?—No, sir.

8218. Did you not get £30 from Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

8219. And did you not vote against Mr. Lanigan?—I did, sir.

8220. Why did you vote against Mr. Lanigan in 1865?—Because the most part of the town were against each other, and we wanted to have a member of our own.

8221. Mr. MOLLOY.—Are you anything to the last witness?—I am, sir.

8222. What?—A brother.

8223. Did you get a retainer from any person at the last election?—No, sir.

8224. You did not?—No.

Eighth Day. October 12.

Daniel Dwyer.

8225. Did you get a cheque?—No, sir.

8226. Did you get any money?—No.

8227. Had you any conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan about the election?—I don't think I had.

8228. Had you no conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan about the election?—I don't know was it with Mr. Patrick Laffan; but this is not the gentleman [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]. I had some words with the other gentleman.

8229. What were the words you had with him?—He told me to go over to Mr. Hackett.

8230. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—And you did go?—I did.

8231. How much did Mr. Hackett tell you you would get?—To the best of my belief thirty or forty pounds.

8232. What did you go to Mr. Hackett for?—I don't know, only he sent me over.

8233. You did not know what you went to Mr. Hackett about?—I didn't want to go, because my mind wasn't inclined to go anywhere but the one side all through.

8234. Mr. Molloy.—Were you asked to canvass any person?—No.

8235. Or to offer them money?—Faith they didn't want to make an agent of me at all.

8236. Answer the question, were you asked to offer any money?—No; I wasn't told to offer money to any person.

8237. Nor to promise money to them?—No.

8238. For voting the same way as yourself?—No.

8239. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—I will ask you one question and give you one chance more. Do you know that the man who takes money for his vote at an election is liable to two years' imprisonment and a fine of £100, and that we can give you a certificate that will free you from any consequences; and that if we do not think you answer to our satisfaction we will refuse it; and that if we find out in evidence afterwards you are not telling the entire truth we will refuse it. Now, knowing all that, tell me honestly were you promised money by Mr. O'Beirne or told by any person in his behalf that you would get money?—No.

8240. Mr. Griffin.—Did you expect money when you voted?—No; I didn't.

John Dwyer

John Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

8241. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For no one, sir.

8242. You are rated as John Dwyer and Michael Ryan I believe?—Yes, sir.

8243. Why did you not vote?—I was retained, sir.

8244. By whom were you retained?—By young Mr. Laffan's brother here [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan].

8245. Why did you not vote afterwards?—They told me I couldn't vote when I didn't keep it private. If I kept it private they said I could vote.

8246. Who said that to you?—This man here, sir [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan].

8247. It was his brother I, believe, that gave you the retainer?—It was, sir.

8248. How much did you get from him?—I got five guineas, sir, and he gave me £5 in a few nights after.

8249. Five guineas more was it not?—No; only £5, sir.

8250. That is £10 5*s*.?—Yes, sir.

8251. Where was it that he gave you that?—Below in Mrs. Corcoran's, sir. It is there I got the two, sir.

8252. Did he say anything to you about your vote at the time?—Well, I don't recollect, sir. I was a little groggy, I believe, sir.

8253. Were you the same way when you got the second sum, the £5?—Well, I believe not, sir.

8254. Tell how you got the £5 after the five guineas?—I was called into the room and he had a bit of writing there, and he told me to sign that, that he was going to give me £5 more. He said to do what I could for him and keep my friends together. I said how could I do that, that I hadn't a way of doing it. I asked £50, and he said £25 a man they were giving, that Mr. Munster would give up the election, and that he had to confine it to that figure. I said it wouldn't do.

8255. And did you see Mr. Michael Laffan afterwards?—I used to see him partly every day, sir.

8256. Come to the day that Mr. Michael Laffan told you you could not vote because you did not keep the retainer private?—I couldn't recollect the day, sir.

8257. You said it was that gentleman sitting under you there [i.e., Mr. Michael J. Laffan] that told you you could not vote because you had not kept it private?—Yes; he came out of a sitting-room, and said I was agent now; that as I didn't keep it private, I couldn't vote. I asked him how much would I get now, and he said he couldn't tell me to that effect.

8258. Were you not going to vote afterwards?—No, sir.

8259. Were you thinking of voting at all?—I wouldn't vote for Mr. Munster for any money.

8260. Had you no conversation with Mr. Laffan about voting after that?—I thought the cheque was no use, and that I'd vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

8261. Did you not ask him could you get any more money?—I did.

8262. What was it for?—For my services going about.

8263. You asked for £50?—Fifty pounds for voters.

8264. How much did you expect yourself?—Begor, I'd take as much as them.

8265. On your oath, would you have taken the £50 from Mr. Munster's side, and afterwards voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I heard that stated, sir.

8266. Would you have done it, I ask you?—Only for being in dread of the law I would; because when they tricked me I'd trick them.

8267. Did you go there expecting to get £50?—No, I didn't, sir.

8268. You asked for it at any rate?—I did, to keep the voters together; and he told me the last night of the election he would equalize me the same as every other man.

8269. Mr. Griffin.—Who told you that?—This man here [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan].

8270. Mr. Molloy.—Did you say that you were told that after the election?—No; on the night before the election, sir.

8271. Which was it the night before or the night after the election?—The night before it, sir.

8272. Mr. Griffin.—Did your wife get any money? She got money for turkeys and butter. She left Mr. Munster butter while he is in Cashel, sir.

8273. Did you get anything besides that?—No, not to my knowledge, sir.

8274. Mr. Molloy.—Who was it that had the conversation with you about the £50 for the voters?—Myself and the boy that retained me.

8275. That is, Mr. Pat. Laffan?—Yes, sir, when he retained me the second time.

8276. Who were to get the £50—what voters?—He only asked me to keep the friends together; and I asked him how was I to keep them together, when he wouldn't tell me what to give them.

8277. Do you say you were tricked?—I was 8278. How were you tricked?—When my vote was taken.

8279. Would you take money from Mr. Munster for acting for him, and vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Sure I couldn't do that.

8280. But if you could do it would you?—Begor I don't know, sir.

8281. Do you think you were tricked by giving you five guineas to act for Mr. Munster?—I did when my vote was broken.

8282. Did you intend from the commencement to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

8283. And to take money from Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

William Ryan, of Price's Lot, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8284. Are you a brother of Denis Ryan's?—I am, sir.

8285. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

8286. How much did you get?—Nothing, sir.

8287. Oh, come, now?—That's all, sir.

8288. How much were you promised then?—Nothing.

8289. Now, mind yourself. Did you ever tell anybody that you were promised anything?—No, sir.

8290. What?—I went on my own responsibility with the man without asking any question at any side about it.

8291. Your brother, Denis Ryan, swore that you told him you were promised money?—He could have nothing to say about it. Who said it?

8292. Your brother; and that you said to let him manage it for you?—I couldn't say either.

8293. Did you not expect money?—I would if I got it; but I was in dread it would come about.

8294. On your oath did you not expect money?—I did, but I asked no questions at any side about it.

8295. Who canvassed you to vote?—No one.

8296. No one at all?—No. I met Mr. Munster and went in his carriage, and promised him my vote. No one else canvassed me. I thought him a good, charitable man for the borough.

8297. If Denis and the others were going for Mr. O'Beirne, would you go against him?—I thought he was a good man for the poor, and the only man to do good.

8298. And that he would be able to pay for the votes afterwards?—I didn't ask that.

8299. Did you not say you expected money, and would take it?—I would if I got it.

8300. And did you expect it?—I did; but no one offered me money.

8301. Did you ask any person afterwards for money?—I didn't.

8302. Did you ever ask Mr. Laffan for money?—I did; but he said he could do nothing; that he couldn't say anything about it.

8303. How much did you ask him for?—Nothing.

8304. Did you say that others were paying thirty pounds a-piece?—I couldn't say that.

8305. When did you ask Mr. Laffan for it?—I don't know. I suppose three or four months ago. I asked no questions of any man at all.

8306. And now do you swear that you voted independently?—I did; I can say that.

8307. Did you know Mr. Leahy?—I did, sir.

8308. Did you see him at all?—Often, sir, I talked to him.

8309. Did you speak to him about the election?—I did, sir.

8310. Did you see Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I did, sir.

8311. And did you see Patrick Cunningham?—I did, sir.

8312. All before the election?—Yes.

8313. I will engage, Patsy Cunningham did not leave your company without saying something?—He never had any conversation in that form.

8314. What family have you?—Six, sir.

8315. Is your wife living?—No, sir.

8316. What is your eldest girl's name?—Bridget.

8317. How much did she get?—Nothing, sir.

8318. Are you sure of that?—I am, sir.

8319. Did she never give you any money?—Never.

8320. Did she ever tell you she got any money?—She didn't. She couldn't say what she was to get.

8321. Were you buying any goods at Mrs. Dolan's?—No, sir.

8322. You did not owe any money there?—I didn't, sir. I never had any conversation in that way.

8323. Had you any conversation with Mr. Hackett?—Never.

8324. You never heard your daughter Bridget say she got any money?—Never.

8325. Or that she was promised any money by anyone?—Never. Of course I'd know something about it if she had it.

8326. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What did you mean by giving your brother to understand you would expect thirty pounds?—I would expect it if I got it.

8327. What person did you expect it from?—I couldn't say.

8328. When did you tell him that you would expect it?—I couldn't mention the day, but 'tis the way of it is this, I riz myself out of it. Then I would have nothing to say to both sides, because I was in dread of anything that would be going round. I wanted that no one could come nor talk against me if there was any action of this kind going about.

8329. Did you vote in 1865?—I did, sir.

8330. For whom?—For Mr. O Beirne.

8331. What did you get for voting for him?—Thirty pounds, sir.

8332. Did you pass a bill?—I did, sir.

8333. Why did you give up Mr. O'Beirne in 1868 if you got nothing for voting?—I considered this man a very good man for the poor.

8334. A witness said he voted for him because he was charitable and threw money about—is that your reason?—No; but I considered him charitable to the poor.

8335. Did you expect that that charity would extend to the voters after the election?—I did expect that he was a good man.

8336. Did anybody tell you that they would equalize you with the rest?—Not one.

8337. But you expected to get £30?—I left it to himself; I didn't expect anything.

8338. You cannot bring an action against him; but did you expect to get it because he was a liberal man?—I would take it if I got it.

8339. Did you not tell your brother Denis that you expected it?—I might say it to him.

8340. Then did you not expect it if you said it to him?—Well, I dare say I did.

8341. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you not called "Little Billy?"—Yes, sir.

8342. Do you see that gentleman, Mr. Scully?—I do.

8343. On your oath did you tell Mr. Scully that the Commoners would not vote unless they got £40 each?—No; 'twas myself took it on my own responsibility. I said what he said. 'Tis a fact. He said the truth.

8344. And still you voted independently?—I did.

8345. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked this question—Did you think that you were liable for the bill you passed in 1865?—I don't say but I did at that day.

8346. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you ever expect to be asked to pay that bill?—I couldn't tell that; I couldn't tell what a man may do.

8347. Mr. WATERS.—Who had your bill—was it Mr. White or Mr. Geary, or which of them?—Oh, God knows.

8348. Which of them, sir?—Answer my question?—He's dead, sir.

8349. Mr. Johnson, was it?—Yes, sir.

8350. Was it in his presence you signed the bill?—It was, sir.

Adjourned.

Ninth Day
October 13.

NINTH DAY.

Wednesday, October 13, 1869.

Mr. Waters, Q.C.—The Commissioners have received a telegram from Patrick Cunningham, Limerick, to Thomas Cunningham, his father:—"Please, tell the Commissioners I will be home to-day. Show them this telegram."

Matthew Murrin.

Mathew Murrin recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

8351. Mr. MacSheehy.—You are already sworn on this inquiry?—Yes, sir.

8352. Do you consider yourself under the obligation of the same oath which you took before?—I do, sir.

8353. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Were you in court yesterday during the evidence of two Ryans, when they deposed to having gone down to Cunningham's house?—No, my lord, I was not.

8354. They say they went down to Cunningham's, and got £30 there—and a man named Croagh said the same—from a man who was in a room up stairs in Cunningham's house. Did you see anyone in a room in Cunningham's house?—No, my lord, I did not.

8355. Did you never hear of any man being there? Did you never hear from Patrick Cunningham or anybody else of a man being in Thomas Cunningham's house in that room?—I did not, sir.

8356. You never heard of him?—No, my lord; but I saw a man there. I never heard from Cunningham or any member of his family; but I saw a man there myself, my lord.

8357. Did he wear a shawl around his face any time that you saw him there, do you recollect?—When I saw him he did not, my lord.

8358. Do you know that man now?—I do not, my lord.

8359. Did you ever hear his name?—No, my lord.

8360. Did you ever see him before or since?—I never laid my eyes on him since or before.

8361. Where did you see him?—In the house. I saw him in the parlour of an evening that I got a message from the hotel here below. He was in the parlour with this strange man that I saw there—Pat Cunningham was. Mr. Laffan was wanted at the hotel, and I was told to call for him there. I forget who told me.

8362. You were told to call where?—To Pat Cunningham's.

8363. You went for Pat Laffan?—Yes.

8364. And you saw this strange man there?—Yes, with Mr. Pat Laffan and some other person.

8365. Mr. Griffin.—Was there any other person present?—No, my lord, that I could see, there was not.

8366. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Did Mr. Patrick Laffan ever tell you the man's name?—No, my lord, he did not.

8367. Describe the man's appearance?—He was a low-sized man, my lord, a very thin man, as thin a man as myself, my lord, but not being so tall. He wore a frieze coat, and, as well as I recollect, a knee breeches—a knee small clothes.

8368. Was he an elderly man?—An elderly man, my lord.

8369. Did you ever see any other man stopping in Cunningham's house not belonging to Cashel?—Never, my lord, unless of a fair night, when going to the fair of Thurles, or that way, lodgers might come, but no man like him, my lord.

8370. Was his hair grey or dark coloured?—Well, my lord, I have no recollection of the colour of his hair, but he was a very thin, worn-out, old man.

8371. We have heard of the man being there for several days, and it seems strange that you, stopping in the house, do not know more about him?—I do not, my lord; for I was never informed anything about him, only I recognised myself that he was doing something there.

8372. Was he engaged in conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan?—He was, sir, when I called on Mr. Laffan—when I called on Mr. Laffan.

8373. Had he any papers or documents before him?—I couldn't say; for when I came to the parlour door I rapped at the hall of the parlour, and Mr. Laffan came to the door, and, on opening the door, 'tis then I saw this man in from me.

8374. Did Mr. Laffan prevent you from going into the room?—Well, he didn't, sir. He knew I wouldn't go into the room. He made no remark, but said "All right," or something to that effect.

8375. When you told Mr. Laffan he was wanted, did he come away at once, or did he remain with this man?—He remained a few minutes before he came.

8376. Then he went back into the room?—Yes.

8377. Did he shut the door again?—He did.

8378. And remained in the room?—He did, my lord, for a few minutes I think only.

8379. Did you see this man afterwards, on any other occasion, in Cashel?—I did, my lord, the morning after the election I took breakfast with him.

8380. Where?—At Tom Cunningham's, sir.

8381. Do you know if he slept at Cunningham's?—He did sleep at Cunningham's, sir.

8382. Do you know if he slept there more than one night?—Well, at all events, I have no recollection, but he slept one night there, at all events.

8383. Had you any conversation afterwards with Mr. Laffan about that man?—Never, sir. I never spoke to Mr. Laffan at all, because the Laffans didn't recognise me at all during the time.

8384. Mr. Molloy.—Had you any conversation with this man at breakfast, as to what part of the country he was from?—I had not, indeed. I never put a question to him.

8385. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Did he say he was in Cashel about my business?—No, my lord, but he was shaking like an aspen leaf: you would think he'd fall every moment he'd stand up, he was in such a fright. He appeared in a terrible fright.

8386. Mr. Griffin.—What time was it you saw him in the parlour talking to Mr. Pat. Laffan? Was it in the evening?—It was in the dusk of the evening. I think the lamps were lit at the time, my lord, if I don't mistake; I'm not sure the lamps were lit, but it was twilight.

8387. How do you know that he slept one night in Cunningham's?—Because I saw him in the morning going out into the back yard at Cunningham's, after getting up.

8388. Was that the morning you met him at breakfast?—No, my lord, some morning before that.

8389. Do you remember how long before?—I think it was the morning before the election.

8390. That is the morning before the polling?—Yes, my lord.

8391. You do not know whether he slept there other nights or not?—No, but I saw him one morning before the election coming down stairs.

8392. Early in the morning?—Early in the morning, after getting up.

8393. Was he always dressed the same way?—He was, my lord.

8394. A frieze coat and knee-breeches?—Yes.

8395. Was he the only man not belonging to Cashel that you saw at Cunningham's?—He was the only man, my lord.

8396. Do you think he is the man we are inquiring about?—I have no doubt on my mind he is the very man you are making all the inquiry about.

8397. Had you any conversation with him until that morning at breakfast?—Not a word, my lord; I didn't ask him any question at all, my lord. I got a message from Cahir, from Colonel Carew, this morning to have me go home. If your lordship will be pleased to allow me to go home, I will return.

8398. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If I allow you to go home, will you come when you are written for?—At the very moment, my lord.

8399. At what time do you want to go home?—I'd go home at once, my lord; I will give my address, my lord.

8400. Do you know Captain Dudley Byrne?—I do, my lord; I saw him here during the election—before the election.

8401. Did you see him at Cunningham's house?—I never did, my lord. Mathew Murrin.

8402. Where did you see him?—I saw him at Corcoran's hotel, and about Mr. Munster's; I saw him passing up and down.

8403. You say you never saw him at Cunningham's?—I never did, my lord.

Anne Kennedy, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. Anne Kennedy.

8404. Anne Kennedy, were you a servant at Mr. Cunningham's house during the last election?—No, sir; I wasn't.

8405. Were you never there?—Yes.

8406. When were you there?—During the election.

8407. That is what I asked you. I asked you were you a servant at Cunningham's house?—Not a servant, sir.

8408. But you were there?—Yes.

8409. What were you doing there?—I was at business there.

8410. Were you helping Mrs. Cunningham?—Helping the girls, sir; and helping about the house.

8411. Do you recollect a man that was stopping in the house then?—I don't recollect e'er a man; but I saw a man once.

8412. Was he an elderly man?—I couldn't tell what sort. He slept there one night.

8413. One night only?—I don't recollect; only to my knowledge.

8414. Try and recollect yourself. Did you never hear who he was?—Never, never.

8415. Did you never hear him called in the house by any name?—Never.

8416. Did you never see Thomas Cunningham speaking to him?—Never.

8417. Did you ever see Mrs. Cunningham talking to him?—Never.

8418. Did you ever see him talking to anyone?—Never.

8419. Did you ever see Patrick Cunningham talking to him?—Never.

8420. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know whether he was a dumb man or not?—I couldn't know what sort of a man he was.

8421. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We know that the man was there several days, and we know what he was doing there also; so do not think you are concealing anything from us, for we know nearly everything about him during the time he was there. While you were in the house every day were you there every night also?—I was.

8422. Do you mean to say that you never saw this man speaking to anyone?—I never see the man, or minded him.

8423. Did you ever speak to him?—Never.

8424. Did you see him taking his meals in the house?—I gave one man his breakfast in the morning.

8425. Did he not take any other meal in the house but his breakfast?—Oh, he might, unknown to me.

8426. Did you see him taking any other meal in the house?—I never did.

8427. It was you that got his breakfast?—I gave him his breakfast.

8428. Was it you that prepared the room he slept in?—No, never.

8429. Who did?—I couldn't tell.

8430. Who was in the house besides you?—A servant.

8431. What is her name?—Bridget Maher.

8432. Is she there still?—She's not.

8433. Where is she now?—I don't know.

8434. Does she belong to Cashel?—Yes.

8435. Have you seen her since?—Yes.

8436. When did you see her last?—About five or six weeks ago.

8437. Where?—In the street.

8438. Do you know where does she live in Cashel?—She lives at the Rock.

8439. Do you know Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I know the two Laffans, but I couldn't tell which is Pat or Michael.

8440. Do you know the other, not this gentleman here [i.e., Mr. M. J. Laffan]?—Any more than their faces is all I know.

8441. You know who he is?—I know that they are the two Mr. Laffans, but I couldn't tell you which of their names, of all the men in the town.

8442. Do you know this gentleman's brother?—No, sir; I have no acquaintance with his brother no more than to see him often in the street.

8443. Do you know him by sight?—No, except I saw him.

8444. Did you ever see him in Cunningham's house?—Never, to my knowledge.

8445. You never saw him there?—Never.

8446. When were you served this morning with the summons to come here?—About five minutes ago.

8447. Where have you been since?—Coming round the town.

8448. Were you at Mrs. Cunningham's house?—Yes.

8449. I thought so. Whom were you talking with about the summons?—To no one.

8450. Were you talking with Mrs. Cunningham?—No; I never interfere with Mrs. Cunningham.

8451. Were you talking to her about the summons?—No.

8452. Did she come up here with you?—She came along the street with me.

Catherine Cunningham sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. Catherine Cunningham.

8453. You know this man that was stopping at your husband's house?—Is it Mr. Murrin, sir?

8454. No, the other man?—I knew a man to be there for one day and a night, I think, to the best of my knowledge.

8455. How long before the election was he stopping in your husband's house?—Before the election, sir?

8456. Yes?—I think 'tis the time of the election.

8457. I mean before the polling?—I can't recollect, sir.

8458. Well, it was before the polling?—I can't recollect, sir.

8459. Now, Mrs. Cunningham, I want you to tell me was he not stopping there more than a day and a night?—To the best of my knowledge I think he was no more than a day or two. It might be more or less, but as far as I can think.

8460. Mathew Murrin was stopping in your house?—He was.

8461. Murrin tells us he knows he slept there one

NINTH DAY. October 13.

Catherine Cunningham.

night, and he saw him another morning at breakfast; so he must have been more than one night in the house. And we know that he was paying money there. I want you to tell me do you know that man's name?—He is a man, I think, from Thurles.

8462. What is his name?—I can't recollect his name, sir.

8463. Is it M'Carthy?—No, sir.

8464. Is it O'Donnell?—No, sir.

8465. Would you recollect his name if you heard it?—I think I would, sir.

8466. Is it Gleeson?—No, sir, 'tis not.

8467. You spoke to him in the house, I suppose?—I did, sir.

8468. What did you call him, try and think?—I think I would soon think of his name. Give me a little time; I might think of his name.

8469. I will, Mrs. Cunningham. Take your time?—I think he was a man of the name of Darmody, as well as I can think, as well as I can recollect.

8470. You saw him often, I suppose, speaking to Pat Cunningham?—I didn't mind that, sir. There was so much in and out, sir, I couldn't recollect.

8471. Did you see Mr. Patrick Laffan there with him?—I don't think I did, sir; but he used come to the door sometimes when he would want him. He might, but I don't recollect it.

8472. Do you know was his name Michael—did you hear him called Michael?—I don't know his Christian name, sir, indeed.

8473. Had he the use of a front room there, Mrs. Cunningham?—I know he sat in a front room, sir. I think he sat in a front room. One day, part of the day or so, I think I saw him there.

8474. Do you recollect if that was on the Monday before the election. The election was on Friday?—I can't recollect, sir. Oh! I might go wrong, I think it was another man now that was there that I didn't know his name at all.

8475. Was there more than one man there?—There was one man that was there; but I don't know whether this man had anything to do about the election, or not.

8476. There was a man there that had something to do about the election. I believe you are inclined to tell me the truth. I do not want to press you too hard or make your position more painful than it is, but you will tell me as well as you recollect who that man was?—I don't know the man, sir; nor I don't know what his name is.

8477. Do you say that Darmody is not the man?—No; I don't think he is, sir.

8478. But there was a man named Darmody in your house?—There was.

8479. Was he there about the election time?—About the election time, or I think a day before or after it I saw him.

8480. Do you know who brought the other man that you spoke of there?—I don't, sir.

8481. Did you ever hear who carried him there?—I think it was Mr. Leahy.

8482. Mr. Leahy?—Yes, sir.

8483. Sent this other man?—Yes, sir.

8484. It was Mr. Leahy sent Darmody?—Yes, sir, Darmody, I think, not the other man.

8485. Do you recollect was it Darmody had the use of the front room, or the other man that you spoke of?—Well, I don't think it was, sir.

8486. You do not think what?—I saw Darmody, I think, in the room.

8487. Would you describe what sort of a man Darmody was? How was he dressed?—I think it was a suit of frieze he wore, sir.

8488. Did he wear knee breeches?—I think he did, sir.

8489. Would you describe the other man to me, if you please?—I think he was a thin, spare man, sir.

8490. How did he dress? Did he dress in frieze, or how?—I couldn't tell, sir.

8491. Did you hear that girl, Anne Kennedy, examined? She said she gave breakfast to a man there. Did you see Darmody at breakfast there?—Darmody ate his breakfast there, and his dinner, I think.

8492. Did he more than once?—I can't recollect, sir.

8493. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did the other man breakfast there?—I can't recollect that, sir.

8494. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Had either of these men a sore face, or anything the matter with his face?—I didn't notice, sir.

8495. You did not observe it?—No, sir.

8496. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You did not hear the other man called anything?—No, sir.

Michael Beary.

Michael Beary recalled and resworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8497. Mr. Beary, you know who Darmody was?—I saw him here. That's all. I know that I saw him here sometime in the month of November.

8498. Mr. MOLLOY.—What is his Christian name?—John. As far as I recollect his name is John Darmody.

8499. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know if he is the man we are looking for?—I don't know any more.

8500. What made you give such a jump when Mrs. Cunningham mentioned Darmody's name?—When they spoke of Gleeson. Some man made mention of Tom Gleeson here yesterday; and I knowing Gleeson, that I never saw him here during the election; I saw Darmody, and that's what made me.

8501. Who mentioned Gleeson's name in connexion with Cunningham's house?—Croagh said some half notes.

8502. Did you ever hear what a "cock-and-bull story" is?—I did.

8503. Well, I think you have told me one now?—No.

8504. What has Gleeson's name being mentioned yesterday, to do with your jumping when Darmody's name was mentioned now?—I didn't, sir.

8505. You did. Tell me what you know about Darmody?—I saw him here, which as far as I recollect to see him here with Mr. Leahy, talking to Mr. Leahy on the street, and no more.

8506. And you knew he was stopping in Cunningham's house?—No, on my oath. I never knew him to be stopping one night in Cashel, but to see him here in the street.

8507. Where does he live?—He lives near Thurles; I can't know.

8508. Did you ever see his house?—I never was at his place, but knowing he being from the neighbourhood of Thurles.

8509. And you saw him with Mr. Leahy?—I did, in the street, I think; as far as I can recollect, in the street or some place talking to Mr. Leahy. I knew him twenty years ago. This twenty years Darmody—I recollect him to be doing some business here about following a horse of Mr. Leech, of Cabra, called Sunset.

8510. What has Gleeson's name to do with Darmody?—I don't think it had. Mr. Croagh mentioned it. That made me move, or whatever move came; that Croagh must be mistaken, only Gleeson wearing knee breeches, and knowing that Gleeson and Darmody wore nearly similar clothes to that, and seeing Darmody here before the election.

8511. Is that the reason you thought of Gleeson?—'Tis.

8512. Because Darmody's name was mentioned?—Yes, your worship. Any way that I know about Darmody, I didn't know any more than you, that were at home in your own residence.

8513. Perhaps you are of opinion it was Darmody paid these half notes and not Gleeson?—No.

8514. Do you know anything about the half notes and Gleeson?—No; I don't know anything about money affairs, good, bad, or indifferent, nor interfere with them.

Michael Beary.

8515. I wish I could get out from you why you think of Gleeson when Darmody is mentioned? They are not like one another in name: Gleeson is a big man; but when I recollected that Mr. Leahy and Darmody at the time were seen talking early before the election a long time.

8516. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where does Gleeson live?—The Gleesons lived in Glenbane. The same family had no more rubbing to any of the elections no more than the man in America.

8517. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Take care of your own character, and it might give you enough to do. Never mind anybody else. Did you see anything the matter with Darmody's face?—No, whilst I know him.

Captain Dudley Byrne was called, but did not appear.

John Uniacke sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Uniacke

8518. Did you serve a summons on Mr. Byrne yesterday?—I did, sir.

8519. How did you serve it on him? Was it personally?—Yes, it was. I met him about five hundred yards from his own residence. His son was present—I think his son at least.

Captain Dudley Byrne was again called, but did not appear; Mr. Thomas E. Close was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mortimer Shea.

8520. Did you see Mr. Close's son?—No, your worship. His mother, Mrs. Close, told me he is at a school in Dundalk.

The Reverend John Ryan, P.P. of New Inn, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

The Rev. John Ryan.

8521. Witness.—I am summoned, my Lords Commissioners, to make such statements in connexion with the borough of Cashel as I am acquainted with. I believe the best thing I could do would be to state my connexion with it, what I know about it, and then to answer such questions as you choose to put to me.

8522. Very well?—I am acquainted, gentlemen, and connected with the borough of Cashel for the last thirty-six years. I became a curate under Doctor Slattery in the parish of Knockavilla, Donaskeigh. It adjoins Cashel. The then parish priest of Cashel was a most intimate friend of mine, as well as neighbour, and I generally spent one day or part of a day or two, sometimes twice every week, part of two days every week, dining and chatting in the evening, learning all the news that was occurring from time to time. From the year '40, however, to the present time, I was connected with it in this way intimately; that I was curate here for fourteen years, and afterwards was appointed to the parish of New Inn, which is only a very short distance from the city, and many of my own parishioners are the parents, or the uncles, or fathers-in-law, related in the first degree, to several voters in Cashel; some in the city of Cashel, some on the Commons. Together with that I had a very intimate connexion and acquaintance and friendship with the people of the town; and as a proof of that when I was leaving this they were so kind as to offer me a public dinner which I declined, and then they sent me a very large present in red gold—sovereigns—over one hundred pounds. I state this simply to show my connexion with the people of the town.

8523. Well, then, come to the voting?—For the first period I knew it, it was the pocket-borough of the Pennefather family. The Pennefathers always sold the liberty, or the right of sitting in Parliament to represent Cashel, for a sum of generally £4,000.

8524. Mr. Ryan.—I do not want to stop you from saying anything, but come to some recent time that will bear more on our inquiry, and that will come within your own knowledge?—Incidentally allow me to mention that the first seat the late Sir Robert Peel occupied was for Cashel.

8525. So we have heard?—As to my own knowledge, when I came here first, Dr. Stock was the representative, and I remember his seat did not cost him six pence but the regular expenses. I should mention that after the Reform Bill passed, the first person that came here to seek for the votes of the people was the late Judge Perrin, and that Dean M'Donnell reported to him that the Commons' tenants were in arrears, and that it was more than probable the screw would be put on them to force them to vote for the unpopular candidate, if there was not some protection found suitable for them; and Mr. Perrin handed on that day a large donation, amounting to £400, not to bribe, but if they were urged beyond their means, to pay their rent. The gentleman that succeeded him was the late Mr. Roe, of Roesboro'. I believe he was elected twice, and I am quite sure he did not pay one penny in the shape of bribery, for he hadn't it.

8526. It has been stated here already by a gentleman who, I believe, knows the Borough of Cashel very well, that "there was not a single sixpence spent in corruption by the late Judge Perrin in this town"?—Not a penny.

8527. You say the same?—Yes.

8528. I believe that sum was not used for that purpose, was it?—I think there was some of it. I think there were some of them very sorely pressed at the time, and that some portion of it had to be expended in that way. In the year '52, the first time that money was talked of, was by a gentleman who was then in connexion with the college of Thurles.

8529. Who were the candidates in '52?—In '52? Sir Timothy O'Brien.

8530. Who else?—Mr. Doheny was talked of, but there was no contest.

8531. How long had Sir Timothy O'Brien been representing this place up to '52?—I think since the year '49; I don't recollect the date of the previous election; but I think it was three years before, and when he was returned, he was returned without one penny expense—without one penny being spent in bribery.

8532. Sir Timothy O'Brien?—Yes; I recollect he told me that he paid a large fee to Counsellor Doheny, a fee, I think, of £200—a farthing was not given to anybody else, and it could not be without my knowing it, I think.

8533. Are you sure there was not a contest in '52? Was it not then M'Garrell was here?—It was a sham contest. It was a contest got up by professional men.

8534. But there was polling?—There was.

8535. Was the election of '52 a pure election as far as you know?—Yes, as far as I know, and as far as the successful candidate was concerned; he did not expend one penny.

NINTH DAY. October 13.

The Rev. John Ryan.

8536. You were then a curate in Cashel?—I was.

8537. Sir Timothy O'Brien was a candidate in 52?—In '52. Previous to that there was a letter sent to me by this clergyman that I am after speaking about.

8538. Unless it touches the affairs that we want to inquire into, I think you had better avoid it. Does it concern the election of 1852?—It was presenting to the people of Cashel through me, a candidate who was satisfied to pay £400 to the public charities. I wrote back to say it was very unsafe, and improper, to be talking of money in that way.

8539. You mean talking of giving money to the charities of the town he sought to represent?—Yes. I stated if he was successful in being returned, then it was time enough to be talking of charity. I looked upon it as a sort of indirect bribe; and it is so, in my estimation.

8540. At any rate the contest lay, as we have heard, in '52 between Sir Timothy O'Brien, Mr. M'Garrell, and Mr. Hughen?—Yes.

8541. That contest, as you tell us, so far as you know on the part of Sir Timothy O'Brien, was a pure election?—Yes.

8542. Proceed. The next was '59?—Shortly after that Sir Timothy O'Brien said to me, he was desirous to pay the people of Cashel some compliment. I said we were then making up money to pay for an organ purchased some time before, the first subscription to which was sent in from Sidney; and I believed the people would be very much obliged if he gave some assistance towards paying for this organ; and he gave £300.

8543. You say that that was after the election?—After the election.

8544. Was there any talk of it before the election?—Not a word of any sort.

8545. Go on, sir?—The reason why, I believe, the reason why he gave this large sum of £300 it appeared to me was, because this gentleman, in his letter, written to me from Thurles said, that this candidate he was putting before us, would be disposed to pay £400 towards the public charities—we had nothing of that here at the time. I suppose Sir Timothy O'Brien considered when this £400 was talked of, that he would be obliged in honour, and to sustain the character of a Liberal man, to come near that figure at any rate.

8546. Were you in Cashel during the election of 1859?—I was mixed up with it.

8547. Was there an election in 1859?— I left this in '55. There was an election in '59; and at that time the present president of Maynooth College wrote to me putting forward our most respected Lord Chancellor; and when his name was mentioned, the people of the city of Cashel said at once they would return him, and were proud, and would feel honoured to have him their representative. If you choose I will read the letter.

8548. It does not touch the inquiry; it would be entirely too collateral?—At that time one of our respected citizens was deputed to wait on the present Lord Chancellor, and to say he would be returned free of all expense save the legal expenses. In '57 ——

8549. Who was elected in 1857?—Sir Timothy O'Brien again.

8550. Was there a contest in 1857?—There was, sir.

8551. Who contested?—To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Hemphill, Mr. John Lanigan, and Sir Timothy O'Brien, who was the successful candidate.

8552. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was not Mr. O'Beirne a candidate in 1857?—Yes, he canvassed some few.

8553. Did he go to the poll?—No, he did not make much way, and I think the persons that were pledged to vote for O'Beirne, were, as they say, "handed over to John Lanigan," on condition that Lanigan would pay O'Beirne's expenses.

8554. Then Mr. O'Beirne did not go to the poll at all?—No, as well as I recollect.

8555. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know was there money spent in bribery in 1857?—Well, I do not think there was, as well as I recollect.

8556. You were not then in the town?—I was then parish priest of New Inn.

8557. Are you not able to say anything of your own knowledge of 1857?—No, nothing that I could state as a fact.

8558. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear that there was a petition presented in 1857 against Sir Timothy O'Brien?—Yes.

8559. Did you hear that it was compromised on payment of a thousand pounds?—I did. The gentleman that presented the petition seemed to have fixed on Cashel as a place he intended to fleece.

8560. Sir Timothy O'Brien paid that thousand pounds?—So he told me.

8561. There was no intimidation at the election?—No.

8562. Then was it not bribery that was imputed?—Treating and bribery, as I recollect.

8563. Was there much treating?—Not more than usual, I think.

8564. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Sir Timothy O'Brien told you he paid the thousand pounds?—Yes.

8565. Did he say anything as to his expenditure in Cashel on the election?—No; he told me in some previous conversation that he gave a hundred pounds to the parish priest at Christmas to be distributed amongst the poor, and I know that it was by the late Dean Macdonnell.

8566. Are you able to give us any further information with respect to the election of 1857?—No, nothing more.

8567. In 1859 Lanigan was returned?—Yes, successfully.

8568. And the opposing candidates on that occasion were Carden and Hemphill?—Yes.

8569. Was Mr. O'Beirne a candidate then?—In '59—I do not recollect that he was.

8570. Do you know anything in regard to the election of '59?—Nothing in the shape of bribery. I know that frequently after, during Lanigan's stay in Cashel, he was very kind and generous, and a good-hearted poor fellow. May God have mercy on him; he was my near relative and my dearest friend. He gave assistance frequently to the poor people of the Commons: some of it passed through my hands.

8571. Was that near the election, or shortly after his return?—A long time after his return—to persons that wanted charity.

8572 Were they periodic distributions after the election?—No.

8573. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you hear anything about a sum of £15 being promised to voters on the Commons after the election?—No, I did not.

8574. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know anything of the election of '65?—Yes, that was the first time that I heard money talked of as a fixed thing, and there was a figure put before me as a sort of tariff.

8575. By whom was it put before you?—I do not immediately recollect. I think it was by James Cahill: there was one person here in town that drove out to my house two different evenings to tell me that his daughters—I do not know which of them—were strongly pressed by some persons canvassing in the interest of Mr. O'Beirne to take money for the house. I think he mentioned some £70 or £75. He came to me as a friend of Lanigan's.

8576. Mr. GRIFFIN—What is that gentleman's name?—Mr. Quirke.

8577. Is he alive still?—He is.

8578. Where does he live?—In the Main street.

8579. Is he a printer and stationer?—Yes.

8580. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That was for Mr. O'Beirne?—For Mr. O'Beirne. £70 or £75.

8581. You said something about his house?—Yes; that was what he gave me to understand. He asked me did I think it would be right for him—in fact, he made use of the word "rob"—to rob his children.

8582. That is by refusing to take the £70?—Yes, exactly, I said it was a question of morality he was very well able to decide for himself; but if he expected that I, as a friend and relative of Mr. Lanigan's, should hold himself responsible for the loss he should thus incur, he was mistaken, and I would do no such thing.

8583. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Then you think his object in coming to you was to get some promise from Mr. Lanigan's side?—Yes, I suspected so. If you wish I will give my reason for suspecting. The second evening that he drove to my place, this Mr. Cahill that I spoke of, again came out to me to tell me that he was sure that bribery would be used at Mr. O'Beirne's side.

8584. What Mr. Cahill is this?—Mr. James Cahill of Lady's Well; he is dead since; and Mr. Johnson or Mr. O'Beirne—either of them—stated to Mr. Lanigan in London that they would beat John Lanigan the next time; that he beat them before, but that if they could get any footing in the town they would try and buy off the supporters he had on the Commons.

8585. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You were told that?—This was reported to me, as a threat Mr. O'Beirne or Mr. Johnson made, or that it was made on his behalf to Mr. Lanigan. They asked me to state this to Mr. Lanigan.

8586. Were they supporters of Mr. Lanigan?—Oh, very sincere supporters; and to tell him so—that it would be necessary for him to meet them with their own arms. I made it known to Mr. Lanigan, not that I doubted for a moment the reply that I would get; but still from the way they spoke to me, I thought as a friend—I thought it right, to make him aware of what was going on. He told me if sixpence bought the city of Cashel, he would not expend it in bribery.

8587. I suppose you do not know as a fact how Mr. Quirke voted at that election?—For Mr. O'Beirne. He was up on the trial then in the Common Pleas.

8588. That is the occasion we have heard Mr. Coman speak of?—Yes; it ended in a non-suit; they could not get any evidence. So far for the election of '65.

8589. Do you know that money was expended in 1865?—Of my own knowledge?

8590. Yes?—I do not, sir.

8591. Did you hear from any one that they had refused bribes?—From themselves?

8592. Yes?—No, but I heard it generally rumoured amongst my parishioners that they were bribed.

8593. Is that then all you can tell us with regard to the election of 1865?—As well as I can recollect now. With regard to the election of '68, I was coming to town on my own private business, and there was a meeting of Mr. O'Beirne's supporters and others at the cross of the Race Course that I had to pass coming from New Inn to Cashel.

8594. That is on the place called the Commons?—Yes, it is just adjoining the Commons; the Race Course in point of fact, belongs to the Commons. At that meeting Mr. O'Beirne was addressing the people, and when I came up I was asked to support him, and I said I would as earnestly as I could; that on personal grounds I had great reason to be displeased with him; that he came here to Cashel to put out my own relative for whom I had great respect and affection; that he put him out by unfair means; but on principle, seeing how he conducted himself in the House of Commons, always voting at the popular side, and what is better still always present and voting on every important question—that on principle I would support him and give him all the assistance I could and canvass in his favour. At a public dinner given to Mr. Bagwell, in Clonmel, where there were fourteen or fifteen of our popular representatives, I heard them all speak so favourably of Mr. O'Beirne, that I was still more desirous to stand up for him, if I could, legitimately. I had a conversation that evening with Captain Graham, who has a large property in my parish, in which there were twenty or twenty-two, or thirty voters.

8595. Voters of Cashel?—No, but of the county. I want to state what occurred between us. At the late election he made those voters go for Mr. Waldron, and against me—against the popular side.

8596. Is that the Captain Graham whose name we have heard mentioned?—Yes. He asked me would I support Mr. O'Beirne and I told him I would, and then he stated to me that if I did so he would be most happy if there was a contest for the county to have those voters go for whatever person I would sustain. That is the only conversation public or private, save and except talking on canvassing that I had about the election; until it being publicly represented to me by my own people, that I could not with any sort of good grace ever again canvass, while bribery and promises of money were being so largely published and boasted of as a ground of preference for a Parliamentary candidate, by not only lay people but clergymen—some few—one or two bishops——

8597. What conversation is this you are now speaking of?—A conversation several of my own parishioners had with me.

8598. Those were not electors of Cashel?—Not electors of Cashel.

8599. If they are electors of Cashel I should be glad to hear you?—Some of them were, sir.

8600. Tell me the name of any elector of the borough of Cashel that had such a conversation with you, because it may be quite to the purpose of our inquiry?—If you allow me to ask permission of one elector I will mention his name.

8601. You must mention his name?—Must!

8602. Must, sir. Mr. Westropp, who was a candidate for one of the boroughs in England, where they had an inquiry of this kind, got a few hours to consider whether he would go to prison or mention names he wished to conceal. I do not say that, except to mention it to you as a precedent that no person can exercise any privilege before us?—I do not want to incur any peril at all; I simply wish to state the truth, but I do not understand how it is that I am not at liberty not to mention a name.

8603. You must, if he is an elector of Cashel that had conversation with you with reference to corruption, give his name?—To the best of my recollection Mr. John Ryan, of John-street.

8604. State what passed?—That it was very unbecoming to have promises of money for churches, and schools and things of that kind, put forward as a ground of preference; that, in fact, it was a bribe under a disguise.

8605. He was a supporter, I presume, and intended to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I do not think he did. I think he did not vote at all.

8606. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You are not a voter yourself?—In the borough?

8607. Yes?—No, I am not. This was simply the conversation we had; that was the substance of it. Hundreds of persons mentioned it to me outside the borough—my own parishioners——

8608. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Mr. Ryan enter into any details of bribery?—No, but simply of large sums being expended, in bringing in the Christian Brothers and other such things.

8609. And you say he expressed an opinion that ——?—That it was very unbecoming, and was, in fact, a bribe in disguise.

8610. Did he express that as his own opinion?—As his own opinion.

8611. Well, sir, what further?—To, as far as I could, remove the impression from the minds of the people, I published a letter in the Freeman of the 29th October.

8612. I do not think it is necessary for you to go into that, Mr. Ryan?—Very well, sir.

8613. Did Mr. Ryan mention in that conversation any other specific things about the election?—Nothing further than that.

8614. Besides the sum you have named for the Christian Brothers, did he mention any other sum?—Not any particular sum, but as well as I recollect he spoke of the unbecoming scattering of money among the poor people of the town. I recollect another person who spoke to me, Mr. Daniel Kyte. He said he did not think he would live to see Cashel so fearfully disgraced. He said that to me outside in the yard of this court.

NINTH DAY. October 13. The Rev. John Ryan.

8615. What was the date?—The date of this conversation?

8616. If you please?—It was some day during the trial of the election petition.

8617. What was the date of your letter that you spoke of?—The 29th, I believe, of October, in which I said——

8618. I do not think we need go into the letter?—Very well.

8619. Anything further?—No, I do not recollect anything else except a correspondence that took place afterwards between me and my ecclesiastical superior with reference to that letter.

8620. Had it anything to say to any corrupt practices in the borough of Cashel?—Perhaps it had.

8621. We are to inquire into the supposed existence of corrupt practices here, and if it has anything to say to that it will be our duty to hear it. If it has not anything to say to it, we have nothing to do with it?—The best thing for me to do then in that case would be, to place these papers in the hands of the Commissioners and they can peruse them, and if they contain anything that it would be necessary for me to appear about in open court, I shall be happy to do so; and if not, of course, I need not.

8622. Did those communications between you and your ecclesiastical superior on the subject take place by writing or were they verbal?—Verbal and in writing.

8623. Are the written ones to the same effect and purport as the verbal ones, and can we judge from the written ones?—I think so.

8624. Then I think that is the best course you can pursue. Of course we are not to enter into any other field of inquiry. God knows the one we have is wide enough, and we do not want to extend it. Will you have the goodness to select the papers?—I will select them and give them to Mr. MacSheehy.

8625. You will attend then, I suppose, if we require you to attend again?—I will be very happy to do it.

8626. You spoke of a gentleman, sir, with reference to the election of 1857, who, I think, canvassed at the election that time, of whom you made use of the expression that he came "to fleece Cashel"?—Yes.

8627. Was the gentleman whom you meant at that time proposed as a candidate?—No, sir; he was a solicitor.

8628. Was he ever a candidate?—Never.

8629. Then anything that occurred never eventuated in his coming into connexion with the electors of Cashel as a candidate?—He was not a candidate ever.

8630. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he put forward a candidate?—He was the law agent of Mr. MacGarrell. As well as I recollect he was the law agent of Mr. MacGarrell.

[Mr. Munster handed in a piece of paper which he said contained a question he wished to have put.]

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We will consider that question with the correspondence.

Mr. Munster.—That seems to be a very one-sided way of considering it.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I do not understand the use of the word "one-sided." There are no sides here for us. We know of no sides. We are sent here to inquire into the existence of corruption here, and we know of no sides.

Mr. Munster.—As far as that transaction occurs, if this reverend gentleman says it was a bribe—a corrupt one—I say it was no such thing; and if he is at liberty to put in documents to show it was, I submit I ought to be at liberty to cross-examine him as to what he said or did on the subject, and also to put in documents on my side.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We have already said that we shall afford you every facility for putting questions which we think relevant to the inquiry, through the court. I have not refused to put any question you have given in since the inquiry commenced, and we will not refuse to put any question we think a proper one. You now ask us to put a question relative to correspondence which we have prevented the Rev. Mr. Ryan from opening; and I certainly will not put questions touching that correspondence which we are going to read. I will not put a question, as we have prevented the Rev. Mr. Ryan from entering into it, until we read the correspondence, and see if it is within the subject-matter of our inquiry.

Mr. Munster.—I am not speaking of that correspondence; I am speaking of the correspondence published in the newspaper at that time.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I have also stopped that. I would not let Mr. Ryan read what he put in the newspaper, and therefore I will not put any question with reference to it, because I do not believe it touches our inquiry. If you send in any witness you wish to have examined, we shall be most happy to have him examined. If you suggest the gentleman, whose name you have put on that paper, as a gentleman you wish to have examined, we shall examine him if he can give evidence touching the inquiry.

8631. Witness.—Unless the strict letter of the law, and obedience to the law of the realm, forces me to answer any questions coming from this person here, I will not hold any communication with him beyond this one sentence.

8632. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Ryan, I really have nothing to say to this. It would be quite as becoming if you addressed Mr. Munster, in other words, than as "this person." We must have everything conducted here in the very properest manner?—I am desirous of doing so.

8633. Mr. Munster wishes to ask you, did you ever give the advice—I presume Mr. Munster means to the electors of Cashel—at the late election, to take the money of the Saxon and to vote against him?—No, Never.

8634. You never did?—Never.

8635. To any person in Cashel, or connected with Cashel?—Never. [Mr. Munster.—I am very glad to hear that, sir.]—I told them to take all the money he would give them, but I did not tell them to vote against him.

8636. You told them to take all the money he would give them?—Certainly.

8637. For their votes?—No. They would be very great fools if they refused it.

8638. Did that imply or include money to be given for their votes?—Oh, no.

8639. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you not say you thought it very unbecoming to have this money lavished about the streets?—In the way it was lavished.

8640. What was your objection to that lavishing; did you think it corruption?—The class of people that were getting it, and the way in which it was given for charity.

8641. Corrupting them?—Corrupting their morals—not corrupting their votes.

8642. Whether it was corrupting their morals or their votes, did you, being of that opinion, advise them to take all the money he would give?—I told them to take what they got and spend it properly.

8643. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is it not your conviction that the voters on the Commons are the most corrupt portion of the constituency?—They are not. I think not. I believe the poor men that are sorely tried in bad times, and that take a sum of money—that they are not near so corrupt, or their conduct so censurable, as those that are in the upper classes of society, and get, through the labour of parliamentary elections and the grossest jobbing, situations for their——

8644. We need not go into that?—I am explaining my reasons.

8645. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you believe the voters on the Commons to be corrupt?—I do not think the voters on the Commons, or in the town, are corrupt. I think the people that come here with money are the corrupt parties.

8646. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you believe they would take money for their votes?—It was sworn here, in my presence, that they did. Where the corruption exists is on the part of the corruptor.

8647. Did you ever hear that Mr. Munster ever gave money to people who really wanted help?—Yes. I heard a person swear here, the other day, that he gave a sovereign to a poor woman whose child was sick, I think.

8648. Have you not heard of other instances of Mr. Munster's giving assistance to persons who were in want of it?—Yes. I heard of some poor woman whose child died at the Rock, and he either went to the wake himself, or paid some persons for going to the wake; about a guinea, I believe.

8649. And I presume many other instances?—I could not say. I do not know much of the gentleman's charitable disposition. I heard of moneys given to a bazaar, but whether they were for charities or political purposes, I have my own opinions.

Mr. GRIFFIN.—With reference to this correspondence I wish to say for myself, and I am only repeating what the Chief Commissioner has already said, the reason I thought this correspondence should be handed in was, that the reverend gentleman appeared to be going into a very wide and irrelevant discussion. We therefore allowed this correspondence to be put in, to see whether it was pertinent to our inquiry or not. If we think it is pertinent any inquiry respecting it shall be conducted in open court by the examination of witnesses.

John Flavan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. John Flavan.

8650. You are not a voter I believe?—No, sir.

8651. Did you get money from anyone to give to a voter?—I got £30, sir.

8652. From whom did you get the £30?—Danny Ferris, sir.

8653. Is that Mr. Daniel Ferris, junior?—Yes, sir.

8654. When did you get it?—One or two nights, sir, after the election.

8655. After the election?—After the election. I am not sure which.

8656. Where did he give it to you?—He gave it to me in a small room inside his own shop.

8657. Did he tell you from whom he got it?—Well, he said something about Mr. Patrick Laffan, and then, I am not sure, I didn't ask him.

8658. You say he said something about Mr. Patrick Laffan?—He did, sir.

8659. Try and recollect what he did say?—He mentioned Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir, but I couldn't say any more about it.

8660. Did he mention Mr. Patrick Laffan's name to you at the time he was giving you the money?—I think he did, sir.

8661. To whom did he tell you to give the £30?—He told me it was for John Farrell, sir.

8662. Is John Farrell anything to you?—He is, sir.

8663. What is he to you?—A brother-in-law, sir.

8664. Did you go to John Farrell?—I gave it to him.

8665. When did you give it to him?—A few days after the election; I couldn't really think how many days.

8666. Now at the time he gave you this money to give to John Farrell, did he tell you what it was for?—He did not, sir.

8667. You suspected I suppose?—I suspect, sir! I couldn't say.

8668. But he did not tell you?—He did not, sir.

8669. Do you know yourself of any transaction between Farrell and him?—That is all I know about it in the wide world, sir.

8670. Do you know anything else about the election?—I don't know a single ha'p'orth else in the wide world about the election. I never interfered, sir.

Mr. Munster.—Might I also ask to have that letter [hands it in] considered in connexion with the others? It is the letter I wrote to the Archbishop. There is one thing I should wish to say about it.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Not at present. When we have read the correspondence we can hear it.

Mr. Munster.—I wish to say I have not read it since I wrote it. There are two witnesses I should earnestly wish to have sent for—Mr. H. F. Cogan, M.P., and Mr. Lane Joynt.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If we consider their evidence capable of giving any light on the matter in the least degree, we certainly shall summon them.

Mr. Munster.—With regard to that I have only to say Mr. Cogan's name appeared in the bank account as having furnished £400 to Mr. O'Beirne, and incessant attacks have been made on me.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That will do now.

John Farrell of Main-street, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. John Farrell.

8671. You got £30 from your brother-in-law John Flavan?—Yes, sir.

8672. Was it for your vote?—I suppose it was, sir.

8673. Could it be for anything else?—By gor, I couldn't know could it be for anything else.

8674. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

8675. Had you any conversation with anyone before the election with reference to your vote?—No, I hadn't, but Mr. Patrick Laffan called to the house to have me go down to the hotel.

8676. When was this, now?—I think this was a day or two days before the voting came on.

8677. To Corcoran's hotel, I suppose?—Yes, my lord.

8678. Did he tell you what you were wanted there for?—Well, no; he said I was wanted down, and that I was to go to the Commons to do business. The same day I went down.

8679. Did you go down to the hotel?—Yes.

8680. What took place when you went to the hotel?—I went in, and there was some man talking to him on the stairs. I don't know who the man was, but Mr. Pat Laffan told me to come up, that he wanted me. Then he asked me what I was going to do. I said I hadn't my mind made up. Then he said if he had a message he would leave it with Ferris, and I said whatever message he had to leave it with Dan Ferris. He asked me if he had a message could he leave it with Dan Ferris; and I told him to do that.

8681. Was this conversation in a room in the hotel?—Yes.

8682. Could you tell me what room it was?—Well I could not, sir.

8683. You know what is called the first floor; it is not the ground-floor, but up stairs?—It is not the ground-floor, but up stairs.

8684. Was it on the second floor?—The best of my knowledge, as far as I could say, the first floor. I didn't much delay.

8685. Was it a bedroom?—No, there was no bed in it. I see no bed. I didn't stay hardly four minutes.

8686. When you go into the house what do you call the rooms down stairs? Do you call that the first floor?—Yes.

NINTH DAY. October 13.

John Farrell.

8687. And the floor over that the second floor?—Yes, the second.

8688. And was it there the conversation was?—I couldn't exactly say.

8689. But at any rate it was not a bed-room?—No, there was no bed in it.

8690. You say you did not know the man that was with Mr. Laffan?—I didn't.

8691. Did you ever see him before?—I don't think I did.

8692. Then he was not belonging to Cashel?—I don't think he was, but I didn't much mind.

8693. Do you know Mr. Leahy?—I do.

8694. It was not Mr. Leahy?—No.

8695. Or Pat Cunningham?—I couldn't say who he was.

8696. Was he dressed as a gentleman, or how?—Like a very plain man, some way that way; I couldn't say who he was.

8697. Did Mr. Laffan tell you how much the message would be?—No.

8698. Did he write what it would be?—No, sir, no figure.

8699. The thirty pounds was the message?—Yes.

8700. And you got it all safe?—All safe.

8701. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you vote in 1865?—No.

8702. You had no vote?—No vote.

8703. Were you living in 1865 at the place which you hold?—I was living in that place, but I had no vote in 1865.

8704. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, sir; I had not.

8705. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was your father alive?—No, he was dead before that.

8706. It was there you were living?—It was not at that time my father died, sir.

8707. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know of any other man having got money at the election of 1868?—I never meddled with them at all, sir, I am always about my business; nor I didn't lose twenty minutes by the last election—twenty minutes.

8708. Mr. MOLLOY.—Have you a family?—Yes.

8709. Have you sons?—I have.

8710. What are their names?—One is Patrick, another Martin, and John.

8711. What else?—And a little girl about three years of age.

8712. Were any of your sons engaged in the election?—Oh, not at all; they know nothing about any election.

[Mr. Munster handed in a document which he said had reference to the Christian Brothers' school, and which he wished to be considered with the correspondence already received.]

John Flavan.

John Flavan re-called by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8713. I forgot to ask you if you got any money yourself?—No, sir; I never got a penny.

8714. Did you ever put in a claim for any money?—I did, sir.

8715. For how much?—£15.

8716. But you did not get any money?—No, I never got a shilling.

8717. You never asked for it again?—Never.

8718. Or got any answer to your claim?—Never.

8719. Mr. MOLLOY.—What did you do at the election?—I done nothing at all, sir.

8720. Except to carry the money to Farrell?—That's all, sir.

Captain Dudly Byrne.

Captain Dudly Byrne sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

8721. Mr. Byrne, I believe you hold some public position in the county of Tipperary?—I am constable for the barony of Ikerrin.

8722. You were in Cashel before the last election?—I was.

8723. Taking an active part, I believe, for Mr. Munster?—I was as active as I could, sir.

8724. Do you know anything of money having been given or promised to voters at the last election?—I do not, sir.

8725. You do not know anything of money having been given to voters?—I do not, sir; I am not cognizant of one sixpence being paid to any voter.

8726. You were very frequently in Corcoran's hotel?—I was, sir.

8727. Were you there the night before the election?—I am sure I was, sir.

8728. Although you tell us you do not know of "sixpence,"—I think you said—having been expended in the way I have suggested, I presume that though you do not know, that is to say, you did not see it, still you strongly suspect it was being done?—I do.

8729. Did you bring any man into Cashel during the election, a stranger to the place?—No, sir; I didn't bring him during the election.

8730. Before the election?—No, sir; I didn't bring him into Cashel at all, sir.

8731. Was there any man here, a stranger in the place, whom you knew, that you have heard was here about the election?—There was, sir.

8732. Who was he?—His name was Larkin, sir.

8733. Where was he from?—From Templetuohy, near Templemore.

8734. Was he employed about the election?—I don't know that he was employed about the election, sir; if you mean by that question was he employed in getting votes, or assisting to get votes.

8735. The meaning of my question is very plain—was he employed about the election?—He was, sir.

8736. You did not tell me his Christian name?—Luke, sir.

8737. Luke Larkin?—Yes, sir.

8738. Does he live near you?—He lives, I suppose, your worship, within about three or four miles of me.

8739. Is he at home?—He is; I presume he is. I saw him—I won't be positive I saw him on Monday—but certainly I saw him within three or four days of the present period, and I have no reason to presume he is not at home.

8740. I suppose you had some talk with him about this commission?—Not one syllable.

8741. I was mistaken then?—You were. I had not one word of conversation about it.

8742. Who employed him about the election?—I did, sir. If you will allow me I will tell you exactly the circumstance.

8743. That is exactly what I wish you to do. We not only permit you, but that is what we have the pleasure of having you before us for?—Mr. Patrick Laffan asked me could I get a person who would, I presume, give money to voters. I got this man. I met Mr. Laffan in the town of Thurles, and there Larkin came—to Thurles—to meet him.

8744. One moment now. Mr. Patrick Laffan asked you to get a man to give money to voters?—Your worship, I can't exactly bear my evidence to the exact words that Mr. Laffan might have used, but that was the substance of it, which, I suppose, means that, though it may not be exactly so in words.

8745. Was it in Thurles you say Mr. Laffan asked you that?—About what the man was to do?

8746. About getting the man?—No, it was here in Cashel.

8747. What did you say about Thurles?—Mr. Laffan went to Thurles to meet the man who was coming over here. Mr. Laffan did, sir.

8748. What is Larkin's address?—"Luke Larkin, Templetuohy." Thurles is the road to his place. He is only about eight miles from Thurles, whereas I am twelve or fourteen. He is within eight miles of Thurles.

8749. In what direction does he live from Thurles? Directly north, sir.

8750. Is it between Thurles and Templemore?—No, your worship, it is on the high road from Thurles to the Queen's County, which runs through the village of Templetuohy.

8751. What is this man Larkin?—He has lands, sir.

8752. A farmer?—Yes, sir.

8753. Did you write for him?—No, I sent for him, and he came to me, as well as I recollect. Yes, I think I sent for him, and he came to my own house, and it was at my own house I mentioned it to him.

8754. Now, Captain Byrne, will you tell me, if you please, what you said to this man when he came to your house?—I can't exactly, your worship, tell the words.

8755. Not the words but the substance?—The substance. I told him, as well as I remember, that he was required in Cashel to give money to voters; but the exact words I cannot now bring to mind, but the substance was that which I have now repeated.

8756. Did he ever tell you afterwards how he had been employed here?—He did on one occasion.

8757. He told you that he gave money to voters?—He did. I don't think, your worship, I ever had a conversation with him a second time on the subject.

8758. Captain Byrne, do you think you gave me a candid answer when I asked you if you knew of any money being given to voters, and you said you did not, and never knew of sixpence being given to any voter?—You asked me did I know of it.

8759. I asked you did you know anything of money having been given or promised to voters, and you answered that you did not. Now it turns out that you procured the man who gave the bribes, and that that man told you he gave them; yet when I asked you if you knew of any money being given to voters, you said, "Not a single sixpence"?—I was not present at it, and I don't know the names of the men that got money, or the sum."

8760. I did not ask you that?—I wish to tell the truth and nothing else; if I am misunderstood by you it is not my intention or desire.

8761. You will understand now, Captain Byrne, that you are to answer my questions, not according to the letter in which they are put to you, but you are to answer them in the spirit in which they are put. When I asked you if you knew anything of money being given at the election, I think you might have told me that you did, because you brought a man here who gave money?—I didn't bring him here, sir; I didn't bring him beyond Thurles. I assure you I don't want to give improper answers.

8762. Mr. GRIFFIN.—I assure you you are giving such.

8763. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did this man Larkin tell you that he gave money to voters?—He did.

8764. Did he tell you how much he gave?—He did not.

8765. He did not name any sum at all?—I don't think he did.

8766. Or any number of voters to whom he gave it?—He did not.

8767. And you have told me that you do not know the name of any voter to whom money was given?—On my oath I do not.

8768. Did you hear the name of any voter to whom money was given?—I don't remember.

8769. Were you in communication with this man Larkin while he was here?—I never had the slightest communication with him while he was in Cashel. I never saw him.

8770. Did he tell you where he stopped?—He told me he was stopping at the house of a person named Cunningham.

8771. Did you ever know or hear of any person giving out money from a room in Corcoran's hotel?—Never, until I read it in the newspaper—the first time I ever heard of it.

8772. Were you engaged, Captain Byrne, in purchasing a horse for Mr. Munster?—For Mr. Munster?

8773. Yes?—I never bought a horse for Mr. Munster.

8774. Did you buy any horse here in Cashel?—I did not, nor anywhere else.

8775. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you concerned in the purchase of a horse from Doctor Moloney?—Not in the least; I read that in the newspaper with much surprise—that I had bought a horse from Doctor Moloney for £55. I never bought anything in the world from Doctor Moloney.

8776. Were you in negociation with him?—No, I was not.

8777. Do you not know anything directly or indirectly of it?—I do. Patrick Laffan asked me to look at a horse: I went with him and did so. I told him I considered him a very worthless animal. There is the whole "head and front of my offending," about that.

8778. What was the horse worth?—About £15 or £20, perhaps.

8779. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you tell Mr. Laffan that the horse was not worth more than £15 or thereabout?—I told him, as well as I remember, that he was a very inferior animal; I wouldn't say I said £15.

8780. You conveyed to him the same opinion you give us now?—I did, and that was all I had to do with the buying of Doctor Moloney's horse.

8781. Did you hear anything about the price?—I don't know whether I heard it from Doctor Moloney; but Patrick Laffan told me he wanted £75 or £65 for him, but I can't exactly specify the sum.

8782. That was about five times the value, according to your estimate?—His value would be a matter of opinion.

8783. According to your opinion, £75 would be about five times the value?—I think the highest he was worth would be £15 to £20.

8784. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You are a good judge of a horse, doubtless?—There is no use in my singing my own praise in that matter.

8785. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You are aware that the horse was bought for Mr. Munster?—I was not aware for some time after the horse was bought.

8786. But after some time you were?—I was, your worship.

8787. Did you ever tell anybody but Mr. Laffan that you thought he was so worthless an animal?—I might.

8788. Did you ever tell Mr. Munster?—I don't think I did.

8789. Did you ever mention to him that you had been looking at this horse for him?—I should say I did not, to the best of my recollection, ever speak to Mr. Munster on the subject at all. I have no recollection of having done so.

8790. I suppose you knew Patrick Cunningham about the election?—I did, sir.

8791. Have you seen him lately?—I saw him during the last month.

8792. How long ago?—At Fair-day, at Holycross.

8793. Not since then?—Not since then, sir.

8794. Were you in communication with Mr. Munster, or any person from him, yesterday or to-day, with reference to coming here?—Was I in communication with Mr. Munster?

8795. Yes, or any person from him with reference to coming here?—A person from his establishment came to my house.

8796. When?—Yesterday afternoon, sir.

8797. May I ask who it was?—A woman, a Mrs. Emery.

8798. At what time did she come to your house yesterday?—I should say, your worship, as nigh as possible about five o'clock.

8799. I want to find out when she left this to go to your house?—You cannot possibly expect me to tell you that.

NINTH DAY. October 13. Captain Dudly Byrne.

8800. Do you know the hours at which the cars leave this to go to the train that would go about this hour, or something like that?—There is a train about ten minutes after two at Goold's-cross for Dublin.

8801. Is that the train by which a person leaving this would reach your place?—That or any other; they all stop at Templemore.

8802. Is that the train by which a person would reach your place, leaving this at that time?—Yes.

8803. How far do you live from Templemore?—Four miles, your worship.

8804. The reason I ask you is this—We sent a young man yesterday from this to find you out?—He had no great difficulty.

8805. How soon after you saw him did you see Mrs. Emery?—The field where he saw me was about a quarter of a mile from my house. I parted him after showing him up to the road; after parting him I got to my house, and a car was then driving up with Mrs. Emery.

8806. Did she bring any message to you from Mr. Munster?—She told me my name had been mentioned in the court, but I don't think she mentioned it as coming from Mr. Munster.

8807. But I suppose she told you your name was mentioned in connexion with the bringing here of the man who gave the money?—She did not.

8808. Did she not tell you your name was mentioned?—She said it was: something in connexion with "the man in the moon."

8809. Or the man in the room—which?—On my word I thought it was "moon," sir.

8810. We understand that perfectly. We know there was at one of the Election Commissions a man who performed the same functions as your man, who was called "the man in the moon"?—On my solemn oath I never heard of it until I read it in the newspaper.

8811. Of course not of "the man in the moon"; no more did I either?—Nor I never heard there was a person so employed at Corcoran's hotel.

8812. But you knew that Larkin was so employed here?—Yes.

8813. And you knew what Mrs. Emery alluded to when she spoke of "the man in the moon"?—I read it in the paper before I saw her at all.

8814. Answer my question; did you understand what Mrs. Emery meant when she spoke of "the man in the moon"?—I did.

8815. Had she no other business to you than to say your name was mentioned in connexion with "the man in the moon"?—Not that I am aware of.

8816. Did she ask you if you had been served with a summons?—I don't know that she did; she may or may not; I can't positively state.

8817. It seems rather strange that she should go to Templemore to tell you that your name was mentioned; recollect all that she said and tell me?—I have told you.

8818. Did she say no more than that?—No more than that.

8819. Did she suggest you should not be at home?—I don't think she did.

8820. You do not think she did?—I am sure she did not.

8821. Did you tell her at all that you were served with a summons?—I did; I won't say that I did or did not, but I might have told her, for it had been served fifteen minutes before that; the summons was served on me in front of my house; I walked up to my house and she was the first person I saw; in all probability I did; indeed, a more reasonable conclusion to come to is that I did tell her.

8822. Am I to come to the conclusion that you do not recollect anything more Mrs. Emery said, than that your name had been mentioned in connexion with "the man in the moon"?—I don't recollect.

8823. Do you believe that was her sole business to you?—I can't say, sir.

8824. Did you mention to her the name of the man that was here—Larkin?—I did not.

8825. Did she ask you who he was?—Not one word in the world about it.

8826. Did she come back with you?—Did she come back with me?

8827. Has she returned to Cashel?—I saw her in Cashel to-day; I didn't come back with her; I slept in my own house, and came in this morning.

8828. At what time did you come in this morning?—I came in by the first train.

8829. At what hour did you arrive?—I should say, sir, a few minutes before 12 o'clock.

8830. You say you have seen Mrs. Emery this morning?—I did, your worship.

8831. In which house of Mr. Munster's does Mrs. Emery reside?—I saw her in John-street, but I cannot tell you in which house she resided.

8832. Did Mrs. Emery return from your place last night?—She did, sir.

8933. Did you communicate in any way the name of this man Larkin to any person since you were summoned yesterday?—Not to any person, in this town or neighbourhood.

8834. Where else did you communicate it?—I don't think I communicated it to any human being.

8835. Then why did you except this town and neighbourhood?—I thought you might be alluding to parties here.

8836. Did you make any communication to anyone in any way about Larkin yesterday or to-day?—Not a single being.

8837. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you send any communication to Larkin?—Not a word.

8838. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever tell Mr. Laffan or any person during the election, or any time since, Larkin's name or address?—You must tell me which of the Laffans you mean.

8839. I will not; you will tell me if you mentioned it to either?—I never mentioned Larkin's name to Mr. Laffan that sits here, the solicitor.

8840. Did you ever communicate to any person connected with Mr. Munster, Larkin's name?—Never, and since the day—I believe since the day before the election, I have never seen Mr. Patrick Laffan, nor never had any communication, direct or indirect, with him from that up to this morning. I don't think I saw him here at the election; I am not positive that I did.

8841. Did Mrs. Emery leave your house last night?—She did, sir.

8842. What way did she go, do you know?—She came back to Templemore station, and got the train there.

8843. Thurles, I believe, is intermediate between Goold's-cross and Templemore?—It is, your worship.

8844. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you send a letter to Mr. Pat. Laffan along with Larkin?—No, I did not; Pat. Laffan met me by arrangement in Thurles, and I brought Larkin there to meet him.

8845. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Byrne, did you receive any money from Mr. Munster, or any person connected with him about the time of the last election?—I did, sir.

8846. How much?—£25.

8847. From whom did you get it?—I got it from Mr. Richardson, sir.

8848. What was it for?—For travelling expenses.

8849. For yourself?—For myself.

8850. Did you keep it yourself?—By Jove, I got rid of it.

8851. I want to know did you get it for yourself?—Certainly.

8852. You did not give it to anybody else?—Certainly not.

8853. Did you see anybody else to-day at Mr. Munster's, besides Mrs. Emery?—I did, Miss Sterne.

8854. Anybody else?—No, except some person at the door.

8855. Were you in communication with either of them?—I didn't spend two minutes in the room; I didn't move my hat.

8856. Did you know of any promise of money, having been given to any voters at the last election?—No, I did not.

8857. Did you know of any voters asking for money at the last election, or before it?—I heard of voters asking for money, but I can't name to you any voter that did ask for money.

8858. Why can you not name them?—Because I didn't know these people.

8859. Did you canvass some of them?—I did, but I didn't canvass many.

8860. The fewer you canvassed the more you should be able to recollect?—I couldn't tell the name of any man that demanded money for a vote in my presence.

8861. That demanded money in your presence?—I can't name a single voter.

8862. Did you hear anything said by any voters, which obscurely meant or implied that they wanted money for their votes?—I heard men say that they should get money for their votes.

8863. You heard men say that?—Yes, I beg your pardon a moment.

8864. I am going to put that down; it is true, is it not?—Yes.

8865. Well, allow me to put it down; how many?—I couldn't say.

8866. About how many?—I couldn't tell you.

8867. I will give you a range from 1 to 200, that is the constituency of Cashel?—I can't put down any select number, I can't do it, nor name a single man that did it.

8868. I put down as I heard from you, "I heard men say that they should get money for their votes." Men is plural number and signifies more than one. Tell me how many more than two you heard say that in the course of your canvass?—I can't tell you.

8869. Did you hear a dozen?—I can't say that I did.

8870. Did you hear fifty?—I can't say that I did, if I heard fifty I would hear a dozen.

8871. Did you hear 100?—I can't say I did.

8872. Will you say you didn't hear a dozen?—Perhaps, I didn't.

8873. That is no answer to my question. I must have straightforward answers to my questions; "yes," or "no." Answer this question, sir—are you able to say that you heard more than three or four or five men say they required money for their votes?—I may or may not.

8874. Are you able to say whether three or four or five or more men, said they would require money for their votes?—I am not.

8875. Have you no recollection whatever of who those men were?—I have not, and I can't point out a single man of them.

8876. Do you know Patrick Halloran?—I don't,

8877. Did you canvass him?—I don't know.

8878. Did you canvass any men with Patrick Laffan at the Commons?—I canvassed men there with Patrick Laffan.

8879. Was it in the town or at the Commons you heard them say that?—I think it was at the hospital; there was no question put by Patrick Laffan to any voter in the Commons that I heard or was present at.

8880. It might have occurred in the conversations with yourself?—I can't say but that it did, or I can't say but it did not; I don't want to conceal the truth.

8881. Is your recollection no better than that?—My recollection is not good.

8882. Did you ever interfere in an election in Cashel before?—Never.

8883. At whose instance did you come to interfere in this?—At Mr. Leahy's.

8884. Was Mr. Leahy here during all the time these canvassings were going on about the election?—Well, he was off and on here; he was here some days, and would go away and come back again.

8885. I suppose Mr. Leahy knew this man of yours, Larkin, was here?—Not to my knowledge; he didn't to my knowledge.

8886. Did you never speak to Mr. Leahy about it?—Never opened a lip to him on the subject; clear and distinct on that; nor to any other person in Cashel; no, except Patrick Laffan, and that is the truth for you.

8887. Have you any knowledge of where Mr. Patrick Laffan obtained money to give electors?—No, sir.

8888. Had you any conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan about how money would be procured to give to electors?—No, sir, I had not; I had no conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan regarding election matters, except in a general way during the canvassing.

8889. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How did Mr. Patrick Laffan happen to apply to you as likely to get a man that would give money to voters?—Because I was very intimately acquainted with him. I don't know any other cause or reason.

8890. You said you have no doubt that you told Mrs. Emery instantly that you had been served?—I think I must, sir. It would be very reasonable to suppose that I did.

8891. Did she say nothing about her being too late, or anything of that kind?—To me?

8892. Yes?—Not a word.

8893. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you tell her whether you would attend on the subpœna or not?—I don't think I did; but I think I told the summons-server that I was particularly engaged, and that I couldn't possibly be able to come over. Can I leave now, sir? I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman, I have particular business to-morrow in Roscrea.

8894. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—At what hour do you want to go away?—I want to go by the next train; about four o'clock I should say.

8895. I think we shall be able to dismiss you by that time, but it will be only to let you go for a day; because if Mr. Larkin comes here, or if he does not come here, we may want you again. We can discharge you for to-morrow. I suppose it will not be necessary to send over for you, but that it will be sufficient for the secretary to write you a letter?—Oh, certainly; and if you wish I will have Mr. Larkin to come here.

8896. We want Mr. Larkin?—If you put the matter in my hands I will have Mr. Larkin come here to-morrow. That will save you the trouble of sending.

8897. We have not sent him a summons yet?—There will be no necessity to send him a summons. I will write to him to come, and he will come.

8898. We cannot rest on that. We will serve him with a summons in the ordinary way; because if you wrote to him, and he was not served with a summons, he could not be punished for non-attendance, as he will be if he does not come. I shall, however, feel obliged if in addition you will write to him?—I will write to him from this town before I leave it. If you give me a sheet of paper I will do it this moment for you.

8899. You are not going away at present, until a little later.

Patrick Halloran sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Halloran.

8900. You are a voter on the Commons, I believe?—Yes, sir.

8901. Were you a voter in 1865?—Yes, your worship.

8902. For whom did you vote in 1865?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

8903. What did you get for that?—I was employed as an agent in '65; I was required by Mr. Johnson, and was employed as an agent on the 17th of March by Mr. Johnson.

8904. How much were you paid?—I was paid £15. He left town in March and returned again to town in April. I went to him and stated to him I met some disappointment in regard to stock and wanted money badly, so he gave me £15 for a certain use.

8905. Is that a second £15?—No, sir.

8906. Only £15 altogether?—Yes, sir.

8907. Did you get more than £15?—No; only as there was a holyday approaching I came to him for an order to get some drink to keep the men out of the town. I asked for an order and he said he would give me no order, but he would give me money to get it. So he did.

NINTH DAY. October 13.

Patrick Halloran.

8908. How much money did he give you?—He gave me £2.

8909. That is £17 altogether you got from Mr. Johnson, or anyone?—That is all the money ever I received. I voted in 1857 and 1859 and that is all I ever got.

8910. Was there ever money lent to you?—No, sir.

8911. Did you ever pass a bill?—No, sir.

8912. You heard that there was money going at the election?—I did; every election since Mr. Perrin was returned I heard money talked of.

8913. Did you hear of money at Lanigan's election in 1859?—Well I did not. There was some allusion made to money. I could hear something about it, but I took no heed of it.

8914. Would you refuse money if it was offered to you?—I would if I did not wish to support the candidate.

8915. But from one of your own principles would you take money if it was offered?—Begor it is very like I would, sir.

8916. Do you know if many of the men on the Commons got money for voting at the last election?—I didn't hear that any man on the Commons got money at the last election.

8917. Oh, you did?—I might hear it from the boys and the mob of them.

8918. Did you not hear that two or three men of the Commons swore that you said they got money?—Oh, I did, and at the time of the petition, and I heard it before the election, and at the time of Perrin I heard talks of it, but no more than that I don't know.

8919. Would you take money yourself if you were offered it?—Begor I may, sir.

8920. And Mr. Munster was of the same politics as Mr. O'Beirne?—Mr. O'Beirne was a tried man, sir.

8921. But Mr. Munster was of the same politics was he not?—That he wasn't: I don't know.

8922. On the virtue of your oath was there not £30 between them?—There was, and £5,000 between them; and there was a cheque of £5,000 put into my hands by the agents of Mr. Munster it didn't entice me.

8923. A cheque for £5,000 put into your hands?—Yes, sir.

8924. By whom?—By Mr. Michael Laffan. He didn't entice me in the least, sir.

8925. Where did he show you the cheque for £5,000?—At the cross of the Commons, sir, and he went out to canvass the men.

8926. Did he show it to others there?—I cannot say.

8927. Were there others present when you saw it?—No.

8928. Only the two of you together?—Only the two together. I disapproved of people going into a carriage to him just like going to confession to a priest. I disapproved of parties wanting me to go into that "confession box" as we called it. I don't wish to apply names.

8929. You do not mean any disrespect of course?—I do not, sir.

8930. Why did you disapprove of it?—Because I said there was too much gibing and talking when any man would go in. They would say "that man is making his confession now." Some people asked me to go in and I said I would not, that I disapproved of it altogether.

Captain Dudly Byrne interposes.

Captain Dudly Byrne.

8931. Captain Dudly Byrne.—I read in this paper, the evidence of a person named [name not understood,] who says that I saw him at Cunningham's house. I wish to tell you, I was never at Cunningham's house in my life.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I beg your pardon: you cannot interrupt the examination.

Patrick Halloran's examination resumed; by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Halloran.

8932. Go on?—I went away from the place for fear I might be persuaded to go into the carriage, but Mr. Laffan followed me on the road above the cross, and spoke something regarding he never met me on his canvass on the Commons before, and all to that, and in case that I did vote for Mr. Munster or joined him, that I would be recompensed.

8933. Mr. Michael Laffan said that if you voted for Mr. Munster you would be recompensed?—Yes, sir; but he didn't mention any sum. With that he put a cheque of £5,000 into my hand to let me see that they were plenty strong in money.

8934. Mr. GRIFFIN.—This was Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes, sir.

8935. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you chance to recollect upon what bank it was a cheque—did you read it?—I did, sir.

8936. What bank was it on?—As far as I could see it was on the Bank of Cashel, sir; but I cannot swear to that, because I paid but very little heed to it, because I was not inclined to support him, and for that reason I paid but very little heed to it.

8937. Which was it a cheque or a receipt for £5,000?—I think it was a cheque, sir.

8938. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What was the form of it—do you remember the words?—I could not sir; but I remember it was for £5,000. I am unacquainted with such bills altogether. I am well able to read both figures and writing.

8939. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Tell me as an honest man, did you expect any money from Mr. O'Beirne?—In sixty-eight, sir?

8940. Yes?—No, sir.

8941. If Mr. O'Beirne was returned as a member still, would you not expect something from him?—No, sir, because I considered Mr. O'Beirne had no money, and I was inclined to support him from the first day that he came to Cashel.

8942. He was a stranger was he not?—He was not, sir; I voted for him in '65. Before ever he came I signed a requisition to bring him to Cashel in '64. I think I was bound to support him.

8943. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan?—I think I did, sir, in '59.

8944. Why did you leave Mr. Lanigan who was a countryman of yours?—Mr. Lanigan stated in Templemore on a certain occasion, that he was under no compliment to any man in the Commons for returning him. He stated that in the presence of men from Templemore, and they circulated it when they returned, what he told them, that he was not under any compliment to any man on the Commons for his return, because he said if it was contested it would be as it was before.

8945. Was it that that turned you against him?—It was that, sir; for there was a party to oppose the town that wanted to return a party to represent them, and so they sent for Mr. O'Beirne and wanted to return Mr. O'Beirne to be independent to them.

8946. Did you hear of any other voters on the Commons asking or expecting money?—No, sir.

8947. Do you mean to say that none of them got money from Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—I couldn't say but every man there was as much inclined to support Mr. O'Beirne as myself.

8948. We all know that they got money in '65 from Mr. O'Beirne?—I never heard it until the time of the petition it was reported they got money, but I knew nothing about it.

8949. Sure the bills are here in court?—So I see that.

8950. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you never hear of these bills being passed in 1865?—No, sir, nor never told any person that I got any money myself, that I got £15 from Mr. Johnson, because he told me.

8951. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What did Mr. Johnson tell you not to tell?—Not to tell anyone that I got this money, "but," says he to me, "if others knew it they would expect to get the same.

8952. Did you see Mr. Byrne that was examined here before you?—Yes, your worship.

8953. Did you ever see him canvassing at the election?—I see him at my house.

8954. At your house?—Yes, sir, himself and Patrick Laffan came to my house.

8955. Was he canvassing you?—He wasn't, sir, rather retaining.

8956. What did he do?—Captain Byrne and Mr. Patrick Laffan came to my house, and they told me they would give me a cheque for some money. I refused to take a cheque.

8957. What did they say the cheque was for?—If I could keep my neighbours together, sir—that's all they mentioned—and that I would give them an account of it.

8958. How much did they offer you a cheque for?—Five guineas, sir.

8959. Was that the only cheque they offered you?—That's all, sir.

8960. And you say you refused it?—I did, sir, different times. Mr. Leahy then and the children were about the house at the time, and Mr. Leahy called out the children with him to show him something about the place, and left Mr. Patrick Laffan and myself together.

8961. Was Mr. Leahy along with them?—He was, sir.

8962. Then Mr. Leahy and Mr. Laffan were together?—Not Mr. Leahy, but Mr. Byrne that was here on the table.

8963. Mr. Byrne?—Yes, sir.

8964. Mr. Byrne took your children out?—Yes, sir.

8965. Why did he take them out?—I suppose he thought I had a delicacy before the family.

8966. And he wanted to have no persons there between you and Mr. Laffan?—That's what I considered, sir.

8967. Was it after he took out the children that Mr. Laffan offered you a cheque?—It was, sir.

8968. I believe you got a cheque in the end?—I did, sir, but never acted.

8969. Did you get cash for it?—No, sir; I came in one day and offered it to Mr. Michael Laffan and he refused to take it.

8970. Who told you to do that?—I was noticed that it was illegal.

8971. When?—The very same day.

8972. Who gave you the notice that it was illegal?—I was served with notice by a man I think of the name of Keeffe. He was sent out from Mr. O'Beirne, I believe not to take this.

8973. He was a friend of Mr. O'Beirne's?—Yes.

8974. And he went to apprise you not to take this?—Yes.

8975. After seeing him you came and offered the cheque to Mr. Laffan?—Yes.

8976. And he would not take it from you?—No, sir.

8977. Was Mr. Byrne there when he offered you the cheque?—He was there when he first offered it.

8978. And it was after your refusal he called the children out?—As far as I can recollect it was, sir.

8979. Mr. Laffan wishes to have these questions put to you, and I have no objection to put them. You said on the day Mr. Munster was there in his carriage that you went away and Mr. Laffan followed you?—Yes, sir.

8980. And that he said if you voted for Mr. Munster you would be recompensed?—Yes.

8981. Mr. Laffan wants to ask you, whether, what he asked you was to become an agent?—I could take it in that sense, and I would be well recompensed if I joined their body.

8982. Did he say if you voted?—I couldn't say, but if I joined their body.

8983. If you became one of his supporters?—Yes.

8984. You would not swear he said a word about your vote?—I couldn't swear, sir.

8985. Did he say a word about making you an agent?—He employed it in some sort of way: if I joined their party and done what I could in favour of them that I would be recompensed.

8986. Was it for doing that he said you would be recompensed?—I suppose it was, sir.

8987. Did he then say that he could give no money?—No, sir; I didn't ask any money.

8988. Did he say that he could not give any money?—I don't suppose he did, sir.

8989. Did this all occur when he showed you what you call the cheque for £5,000?—Yes, sir. That is all the conversation I ever had with an agent of Mr. Munster from that day to this, and didn't want it then either.

8990. Have you told me all you know?—Indeed I did, sir.

8991. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you go to anyone to know if the service of the summons on Sunday was of no value?—Indeed I didn't, sir. Sure I appeared on it, sir; I was in here on Monday morning, sir.

Mrs. Caroline Emery sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

8992. You went to Sorrel-hill, Mr. Dudly Byrne's place, yesterday?—I did.

8993. What time did you leave Cashel?—By the train that left sometime about two.

8994. You had a conversation with Mr. Byrne?—Yes.

8995. What took you to his place?—I took a letter.

8996. A letter?—Yes.

8997. From whom did you get that letter?—Miss Sterne.

8998. To whom was the letter directed?—I think it was directed to Mr. Munster [witness hands in a letter addressed to "Henry Munster, esq."]

8999. Was that your only business in going over to Mr. Byrne?—No; I told him that his name had been mentioned in the court.

9000. Who told you to tell Mr. Byrne that?—I don't know that I was told to tell him, but I told it because I knew it.

9001. You were not in court yesterday?—No.

9002. How did you ascertain it?—Miss Sterne told me.

9003. Had she been in court yesterday?—I don't know.

9004. Some person must have told you to tell Mr. Byrne that his name was mentioned?—I don't think Miss Sterne told me to tell it, but I know I told him in speaking; I don't think I was told to tell him—I believe not.

9005. To whom did Miss Sterne desire you to give these letters?—To Captain Byrne.

9006. Did you get any other message?—Yes; I was told that he might see Mr. Power about something; I didn't read it; I don't know what it is.

9007. Is there not a postal communication between Cashel and Mr. Byrne's residence?—I don't know; I am almost a stranger here.

9008. How long did you stop at Captain Byrne's?—I think until a few minutes past six.

NINTH DAY.
October 13.

Mrs. Caroline Emery.

9009. Had you any conversation with any person except Mr. Byrne?—With his family.

9010. Did you tell them how his name was mentioned in connexion with the Cashel election?—No; I should think not. I think it was mere general conversation.

9011. Did you tell them all about how the "man in the moon" was found out?—No; I said his name was mentioned as having sent the man in the moon.

9012. Did you ask any person who the man in the moon was?—No.

9013. To whom besides Captain Byrne did you speak of what occurred here yesterday?—I don't know that I did to anyone except the family.

9014. Did he ask you was the man's name ascertained?—No, he never asked me the question—he never said that.

9015. Did Mr. Byrne read these letters?—Yes.

9016. And gave them back to you?—Yes.

9017. Did you get a message from any person to bring to Mr. Byrne?—To Mr. Byrne?

9018. Yes, to Captain Byrne?—No.

9019. Do you know now whether there was a message sent by any person else to Mr. Byrne?—I don't think so; I don't know.

9020. Did you bring a letter or message to any person else besides Mr. Byrne?—No, that was the only letter I took.

9021. Mr. GRIFFIN.—At what o'clock did you start from this to Captain Byrne's?—I think about twenty minutes past twelve; I'm not sure, but I think that was the time.

9022. How long before that did you think of going over there?—I don't know about the time; it was not very, very long, I think.

9023. When was it arranged that you were to go?—That I don't know. Miss Sterne asked me a little time before I went.

9024. How long before you went did Miss Stearn ask you to go?—Perhaps an hour.

9025. Could you say it was so long as an hour?—I think it was an hour; but I'm not sure. I didn't know there was any importance attached to it.

9026. It was Miss Sterne told you Captain Byrne's name was mentioned in connexion with the man in the moon?—Yes.

9027. When did she mention that? Did she mention it at the moment that she told you to go to Captain Byrne?—Yes, it was I think about the same time.

9028. You think then that she told you about Captain Byrne's being mentioned, and requested you to take this letter to him about the same time?—Very nearly, I think. I can't say how many minutes between them.

9029. Did Miss Sterne tell you, or did you know it from any other source, that a summons was being sent for Captain Byrne?—No; I hadn't the least idea.

9030. You do not know whether he was summoned or not?—No.

9031. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did any person accompany you?—No.

9032. Was there anything in this envelope except the two papers that are here now?—I think not; I'm sure not, because I saw them.

9033. And you were simply to give the documents to Mr. Byrne?—Yes.

9034. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What did Miss Sterne say?—She asked me to take this over and to say that she thought Captain Byrne could do something with Mr. Power.

9035. Mr. MOLLOY.—But there must have been some other paper besides these two in the envelope?—There may have been, but I didn't see any other.

9036. You did not take them out?—No.

9037. Then for all you know there might have been some other paper inside?—I don't think there could have been, because Captain Byrne took them out and read them while I was present.

9038. And handed them back?—And handed them back.

9039. Did you return directly from Templemore station to Goold's Cross?—No, there was no train. The train only came to Thurles. I could only come by the mail train. To avoid that I came by Thurles.

9040. Did you take a car from Templemore to Thurles?—No, from Sorrell Hill to Templemore, and from Templemore to Thurles I came by train, and from Thurles I took a car to Cashel.

9041. You had some delay in Thurles?—I think not—no; I only stepped out of the train and into the car.

9042. You came by the down train from Templemore to Thurles?—Yes, from Templemore to Thurles.

9043. Does not that come to Goold's Cross?—No, not the train I came by; I couldn't come by train unless I waited for the mail, I think. That would only reach Cashel some time past eleven at night.

9044. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did Miss Sterne speak about this document—did she merely send you as a messenger—she did not say they were important?—She didn't say anything about them.

9045. Mr. MOLLOY.—When you got out of the train at Thurles, where did you go to?—To Cashel.

9046. Did you drive straight to Cashel?—Yes.

9047. Without any stoppage on the way?—Yes.

9048. Or without any communication with any person on the way?—Yes.

9049. Do you know whether the car that brought you from Sorrel Hill to Thurles, brought a message for any person?—I don't know. It was the same car that I took from Templemore. This car waited for me.

James Burns.

James Burns sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

9050. What are you, Mr. Burns?—A saddler.

9051. You have a vote?—Yes.

9052. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster.

9053. Mr. Munster dealt with you?—Yes.

9054. Did you get anything for your vote?—No.

9055. Were you promised anything for your vote?—Never.

9056. Who canvassed you?—Mr. Munster and Mr. Laffan. Mr. Laffan canvassed me first.

9057. Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes.

9058. When was that?—At the first onset of it.

9059. Was Mr. Munster in Cashel at that time?—No.

9060. What did you tell Mr. Laffan when he called?—I told him I'd vote for him. Mr. O'Beirne came to me and I told him I promised another. No, Mr. Scully was the second that asked me. I told him I promised Mr. Munster. "Sure he's not here," said he; "Mr. Laffan," said I, "is the man I told." "Well," says he, "whoever Mr. Laffan brings, you will vote for?" "No," said I, "but the man he told me." He asked me why would I vote for a stranger? I said, "because I promised him." Mr. O'Beirne came and I told him; "all right," said he, "I'll not press you." He came several times, but didn't come to ask me the second time, but he came. "I come," says he, "for a shake of the hand with you."

9061. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

9062. Were you living in Cashel?—No.

9063. In the same house?—No.

9064. No person belonging to you voted in 1865?—No—no person belonging to me.

9065. Mr. Munster bought goods from you?—Yes.

9066. How much?—a saddle, a side-saddle, and a lot of other affairs—horse clothing and lots of things.

9067. Was it you that made the saddle for the mule?—No, but the saddle made was used on the mule though.

9068. How much did you get for what you supplied Mr. Munster?—I got £25 for a double set of harness, £4 for a saddle, and £6 10*s.* for a side-saddle, and I believe £1 5*s.* for two sheets, 7*s.* 6*d.*, rollers, and 5*s.* for head collars, and any man has to pay the same thing for them.

9069. When was the set of double harness bought?—Before the election.

9070. How long before the election?—O, I couldn't say. I know the time. I have it in my book.

9071. Who paid you for them?—Miss Stearn gave me a cheque. Miss Stearn gave me all I believe, and paid me for the other things—yes, for everything that was got.

9072. Have you told us all the dealings you had with Mr. Munster, or any person connected with him?—Yes.

9073. All?—All.

9074. Do you know of none other?—None other whatever.

9075. Is your wife alive?—I have no wife.

9076. Is your mother alive?—Yes.

9077. Had she any dealings with Mr. Munster?—Not that I know.

9078. Do you know of any furniture being sold or hired to Mr. Munster?—I lent some furniture.

9079. Now, when I asked you before why did not you tell me that?—I didn't think of it.

9080. You have a bad memory?—No; I don't say I have a bad one.

9081. Why did not you tell about the hiring of the furniture?—I didn't hire them—I lent them.

9082. What furniture did you lend?—Six chairs and a table.

9083. When did you lend them?—The day he came over himself, I think.

9084. When was that?—Just before the election.

9085. What sort of chairs were they?—Ordinary chairs, the same as this [exhibiting the witness' chair.]

9086. He has them still?—No; he had them during the election. I sent for them back again. I believe he knew nothing about it—it was Mr. Laffan, I believe.

9087. You or your mother got nothing for lending these chairs?—Never, on my word made any money about them.

9088. Did your mother get anything for them?—Not that I know.

9089. Did she receive any present from any person connected with Mr. Munster?—Not that I know. I saw no such things in the place.

Edward Walshe sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

Edward Walshe.

9090. Your name is Edward Walshe?—Yes, sir.

9091. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

9092. You have got a house in the Main-street?—Yes.

9093. Had you any negotiation about letting it at the last election?—No; only Mr. Laffan came to me one night about nine or ten o'clock, I believe.

9094. Which Mr. Laffan's?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

9095. What did he say to you?—"Good night, Ned," says he. "Good night, sir," says I. "I think," says he, "this would be a good place for a tally-room." "I believe it would," says I. "Have you any objection?" says he. "Not the least," says I.

9096. Is that all that passed at that time?—That's all that passed at that time.

9097. Did you make any bargain with him as to what you were to get for the house?—Not a bargain at all more than that.

9098. Was your house used?—Yes, sir.

9099. When was it used?—The day of the polling.

9100. Did you get anything for the use of it?—Not a halfpenny, sir.

9101. Was there no bargain for it at all?—I made no bargain at all, but Mr. Laffan said he would see me for it.

9102. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

9103. What do you expect to get?—I will get as much as I can, sir.

9104. Was there any sum mentioned to you?—No sum at all.

9105. Did you send in a claim?—I did.

9106. How much was the claim for?—Fifty pounds.

9107. Do you think that a fair price?—I think it would.

9108. Under all the circumstances?—Yes.

9109. Would you charge £50 for it if you had voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I wouldn't vote for Mr. O'Beirne, at all, sir.

9110. As another witness said, you would not consider it an honest thing to let your house to one and to vote for another?—No, I wouldn't. I would be very sorry to do that.

9111. You expect to get £50?—They may be cutting me, sir.

9112. You would take forty-five?—I will if I get it.

9113. Mr. MOLLOY.—How was your house used the day of the polling?—Three clerks there, sir.

9114. How many voters went into it?—I couldn't tell you, for I came to the court-house and never was present. I didn't mind the day after.

9115. How long were the three clerks there?—They were there until the court was over here—four o'clock, I suppose.

9116. Had you a vote in 1865?—I had, sir.

9117. How did you vote then?—For Lanigan. I had a vote since Perrin was here. I stuck to Sir Timothy O'Brien and John Lanigan, and I never got twopence from any of them.

9118. For voting at the elections?—For all my votes.

9119. Was this the first time that your house was taken?—Yes, sir.

9120. Was it never taken before?—Never taken before.

9121. Did you not know that houses were taken, and that that was a way to pay people for voting?—They never took the house from me before, any of them.

9122. Did you not know when your house was taken that the vote would go along with it?—Some people set their houses and voted for others after. I seen them doing that.

9123. Who?—Oh the man is dead now—a man of the name of Doyle. He let his house to Sir Timothy O'Brien, and voted for Mr. Hemphill after.

9124. Did you know that it was a way of getting votes, to take a man's house, and pay him for the house, in order to get his vote?—It might be, sir.

9125. Did you know it?—I heard talk of it.

9126. Did you write out the claim yourself that you sent in?—No, sir.

9127. Who wrote it for you?—My daughter.

9128. How much did you put down in it?—£50.

9129. Did you ask for payment?—Well, I asked Mr. Laffan some time after and he said he would see me all right. That's all; I never minded.

9130. You asked him only once?—I did, and the next time he told me my claim was on the list.

9131. Did he say at what time you would be paid?—No.

9132. When did you send in the claim?—I believe it was in December.

9133. Did you go to him after that?—I never went to his house, but I met him at my own door when he would go by.

9134. How soon after sending in your claim?—Well, I couldn't really say that. I suppose it may be about a month.

9135. Did you ever speak to any person at all but Mr. Michael Laffan?—I never spoke to Mr. Munster or anyone else, but only to him.

NINTH DAY. October 13.

Edward Walshe.

9136. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—It is a hard thing to keep you out of your money all this time?—I am kept out of it, sir.

9137. Did you never press to be paid?—Never, sir.

9138. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did Mr. Laffan give you any reason why you would not be paid?—He told me he couldn't pay me until after the petition.

9139. Did you ask him since the petition? What did he say then? Did he tell you you would not be paid until after the Commission?—After the Commission, and it is in this way they humbugged me.

[Mr. Laffan.—I should like to have him asked whether I told him, after the Commission, or what I did say].

9140. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—When you applied to Mr. Laffan on one of these occasions for payment, you said he told you you could not be paid until after the petition?—Yes, sir.

9141. Have you any doubt he said that?—No, sir.

9142. When did he say that?—I couldn't recollect that, sir. After the petition then I spoke to him again.

9143. Where?—In the street, at my own door.

9144. What did he say then exactly?—He said that my name was on the list. "All right," says I, that way. Then I asked him after, sir, and he said there could be nothing done until after the Commission.

9145. When did he say that to you?—Well, I couldn't say when he said it.

9146. You have no doubt whatever he said it?—O, he said it.

9147. You are quite sure of that?—I am, sir.

Captain Dudly Byrne.

Captain Dudly Byrne again presents himself.

9148. Captain Byrne.—Since I was here you received the evidence of a person named Halloran.

9149. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I cannot have you coming up every moment. I asked you with regard to Halloran. I asked you distinctly did you go to Halloran's house, and you said you did not. Halloran came up and swore you did go to his house, that Mr. Laffan accompanied you, that Mr. Laffan in your presence offered him money, that he refused, that then you took his children out, and that Mr. Laffan in the absence of you and the children offered him money again?—Will you allow me now to say a word?

9150. I will not?—I think that is very arbitrary. I live a long distance from here. It is very arbitrary, sir.

9151. I asked you if you ever went to Halloran's house?—I don't know that I did, sir. I beg your pardon if I am wrong. I beg distinctly and respectfully to tell you I want no favour but simple justice. He said, if I am rightly informed, that Mr. Patrick Laffan tendered to him a cheque, and that I took his children, and was outside with them when he tendered the cheque, and that I took his children out of the house while Mr. Laffan was making arrangements with him, or something to that effect. On my solemn oath I was not present when he ever offered him a cheque, or one single farthing of money, and on my solemn oath I never took his children out of the house. I want to go from this court without any imputation of what does not actually belong to me.

9152. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were you never present when Mr. Laffan tendered a cheque to anybody?—So help me God I never was present, nor never saw it, and I defy in this open court any man to prove it.

9153. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If you wish to give evidence you must do it quietly. I will not allow that declamatory manner at all?—I apologize for it, sir; I don't wish to be derogatory to you or your brother Commissioners, but I must feel hurt when I hear those things asserted of me which are neither true in fact or any other way.

9154. Did I ask you if you got a letter yesterday by Mrs. Emery?—I did, sir; I got two letters.

9155. Enclosed in one envelope?—Yes, sir.

9156. Did you get anything more than the two enclosures?—Nothing in the world, sir.

Dr. Michael Phelan Cormack.

Dr. Michael Phelan Cormack sworn; examined br Mr. MOLLOY.

9157. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—About twenty-seven years.

9158. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Munster.

9159. For whom did you vote in 1865?—In 1865 I did not vote at all. I had been ill at that time.

9160. How did you vote in 1859?—In 1859? I don't know whether I voted on that occasion or not.

9161. Did you ever vote for John Lanigan?—No.

9162. You did not?—No.

9163. Was the election of 1865, the only election in Cashel at which you did not vote?—I am not quite sure.

9164. Who canvassed you for Mr. Munster?—No person.

9165. No person?—No.

9166. You were not canvassed by Mr. Munster, or by any person on his behalf?—I do not recollect that I was.

9167. When did you make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—Some short time after he came here.

9168. You took a warm interest in his election?—I did.

9169. What were you doing at Corcoran's hotel before the election, on the morning of the polling?—Well, I was asked to see a person who had got ill there, and I delayed there during the night, until morning.

9170. You went to attend a person on the evening before, who got ill?—I was in the hotel. I was upstairs and called down to see a man who had got a weakness or was inclined to faint.

9171. You did not go to Corcoran's hotel for the purpose of seeing this man who was ill?—No, I was upstairs at the time and came down.

9172. What time was it when you went to Corcoran's hotel?—It was nightfall, I think—rather late.

9173. And you remained until daylight next morning?—I did.

9174. What part of the house were you in?—I was upstairs, and downstairs occasionally.

9175. What were you doing downstairs?—Looking after this man on two or three occasions. I went upstairs and lay on the sofa.

9176. What was the matter with the man?—He was inclined to faint. I prescribed a little stimulant for him—some brandy.

9177. Was he a voter?—He was a voter, I think, from the Commons?—There was a number of men there, but I didn't know them.

9178. In the room upstairs, who were with you?—Mr. Leahy was there, and the two Mr. Laffans I think. I could not exactly recollect every person passing in and out. There were a number of persons passing up and downstairs.

9179. Did you see Mr. Watkins?—Yes.

9180. And Mr. Scully?—Yes, Mr. Jerome Scully.

9181. Was not Mr. Dudley Byrne there?—I am not quite distinct. He may have been there. There was such a number of persons passing up and down that I could not exactly be positive.

9182. Was Captain Dudley Byrne there that night or in the morning?—He may have been there, but I cannot swear positively as to whether he was or was not.

9183. What was Mr. Patrick Laffan doing there?—I could not tell you, I saw him there.

9184. Did you see Patrick Cunningham come to him?—I did, two or three times.

9185. Did you see any persons passing to the upper story of the house, from the drawing-room?—No, unless the servants, I do not recollect.

9186. You have a family?—I have.

9187. Did you receive any favours or compliments from Mr. Munster?—No.

9188. Any presents?—I never received a favour since I became an elector in Cashel from any candidate.

9189. Did any of your family?—With the exception of a mere trifle. There were some presents made after a bazaar, perhaps worth a few shillings. There was a little workbox my daughter got.

9190. Was there a watch?—No; there was a box of pins and a box of needles, I think a travelling rug; some trifling things after the bazaar—the bazaar in Thurles, and I think a bazaar in Dublin.

9191. Were any of your family at the bazaar in Dublin?—No, but Mr. Munster had some small articles that were bought in for him or not sold, which he distributed about town. He made presents to several parties in Cashel, electors and non-electors. He sent a work-box to my daughter, or Mrs. Cormack, I am not sure which.

9192. He made presents to people in Cashel?—Yes, electors and non-electors.

9193. Had you any dealings with Mr. Munster?—No dealings connected with the election.

9194. Connected with the election or otherwise?—None whatever.

9195. Had you any money transactions with Mr. Munster?—Before the election?

9196. Before or after?—Oh yes, I had, a long time after.

9197. What were they?—There was a loan on property.

9198. What was the amount of the loan?—About £160 or £165, I am not quite sure which.

9199. When was the loan?—On the 31st December.

9200. A loan on mortgage?—Yes.

9201. It was you that proposed to Mr. Munster to lend it?—It was.

9202. Besides that loan on the 31st December, had you any other money transactions?—Yes, another loan on a different property.

9203. You gave him a security for it?—Yes.

9204. What was the amount of it?—The first was an insurance for £600—one of my insurances.

9205. Did he lend you £600?—No, £165.

9206. Is that in addition to the loan of £165 you spoke of?—No, that is the loan I spoke of.

9207. You told me there was a loan on the 31st December?—Yes, for £160 or £165.

9208. I asked you had you any other money transactions with him, and you said a loan on other property?—Yes.

9209. What was the amount of that transaction?—£120.

9210. What was the date of it?—I forget exactly now—some time in May or June.

9211. May or June last?—Yes, in this year.

9212. Had you any other transactions with him?—No, except an occasional fee.

9213. How much did you receive in fees from him?—I cannot be quite positive—only a few pounds.

9214. I suppose that was for professionally attending Mr. Munster?—Attending Mr. Munster and other members of his family, also one or two poor persons.

9215. Did you receive any other money from Mr. Munster, except the £165 and £120, and those fees?—I do not recollect.

9216. Did he ever lend you any other money?—No.

9217. Did any person, connected with Mr. Munster, lend you money?—No.

9218. Was the £165 paid in one sum?—This loan of 31st December? No, it was paid in different sums, I believe.

9219. Was it all paid before the 31st December?—No, subsequently; paid on the 31st; it was paid by cheques, I think, by Miss Sterne.

9220. And who paid the £120?—It was paid in different payments; there were different payments made—some to my daughter, and some to myself. I have not a correct account of the payment, but it was in several sums.

9221. Were you to pay interest on this loan?—Yes, 5 per cent.

9222. Half-yearly?—No, yearly.

9223. When does the year's interest become due?—The 31st December next.

9224. What was the amount of the fees that you received?—Well, I cannot be positive.

9225. Did they exceed £10?—No, I do not think they did.

9226. They were under £10?—They did not exceed it. No, they were about £10 I think. They were so few that I did not keep an account of them.

9227. I see here on the 2nd January, 1869, under the head of travelling, charities, and other payments at Cashel after the election, "January 2nd, Doctor Cormack, £9; ditto, ditto, £36, value received." What was the value for this £45?—The insurance.

9228. Did you not say that that transaction was completed on the 31st December?—The loan was negotiated on the 31st December, and there were different payments made after.

9229. I thought you said that the £165 transaction was completed on the 31st December?—On the 31st December.

9230. And the money paid?—Not all the money paid.

9231. How much remained unpaid then?—I could not tell you exactly; but it was all paid up subsequently in different sums. I gave him a £600 insurance.

9232. It is entered in another part as a loan?—Yes, it is as a loan on the insurance or mortgage; it is rather a mortgage I should say. I handed over my policy of insurance to Mr. Munster's solicitor.

[The short-hand writer reads question and answer No. 9219.]

9233. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You said the £165 was paid on the 31st December, do you wish to alter that?—I wish to alter that. The amount was negociated on the 31st December. I handed in my policy of insurance to Mr. Munster's solicitor on the 31st December.

9234. And you say the £45 paid afterwards was part of it?—I am not quite positive.

9235. Do you say that the £45 paid after the 31st December formed portion of that money?—Decidedly.

9236. In short, did you get any money from Mr. Munster except what is included in that amount?—No, but that £165.

9237. You were asked by Mr. Molloy if your daughter went to a bazaar in Dublin, and I think you said "No?"—To a Dublin bazaar?

9238. Yes. Mr. Munster wishes to have that question repeated. Did Miss Cormack go with a party to a bazaar in Dublin in December, and to Cork at Easter?—She did; she went to Dublin.

9239. And to Cork?—And to Cork.

9240. Did you forget that?—I did. I have been up two nights: My memory is defective.

9241. Mr. Munster.—Would you ask him, sir, did he go with my children and with Miss Cormack on the 31st December?—Witness.—I did.

9242. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know of any other persons—ladies from Cashel, going to the bazaar in Dublin?—Mrs. Boyton.

9243. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did your daughter go at Mr. Munster's expense to Dublin, and to Cork afterwards?—I could not tell you whether she went at mine; I could not tell you.

9244. Mr. Munster wishes you to be asked, did not

NINTH DAY. October 13.

Dr. Michael Phelan Cormack.

Mr. Munster lend you money on a policy of insurance on an office of which he was a director?—Yes.

9245. Did not Mr. Munster also advance money on deposit of a lease?—Yes.

9246. With arrangement for future advances?—That is the second loan.

9247. Mr. Munster.—Please also ask if he did not go to Dublin to see my solicitor, Mr. O'Hagan, on the subject?—Witness.—Yes, certainly; that was the day it was negotiated.

9248. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When was that loan first spoken of?—I think it was on the 30th.

9249. You never said anything to Mr. Munster or any of his agents about borrowing money before that time?—I do not remember that I did; I may have done so, perhaps a day or two before, but I do not recollect.

9250. You say you did not speak to Mr. Munster or any of his friends about getting a loan at any time before the election?—I did, but not to Mr. Munster.

9251. To whom did you speak?—To Mr. Leahy.

9252. About what time?—Some short time previous to the election.

9253. Was it in October?—October or November, I am not quite sure which.

9254. What did Mr. Leahy say then?—I asked him if he would get a bill negotiated for me in London.

9255. You asked Mr. Leahy?—Yes.

9256. When you spoke to Mr. Leahy asking him about getting a bill negotiated, what did he say?—He said he thought he could get Mr. Munster to do it.

9257. I suppose when you spoke to Mr. Leahy you thought Mr. Munster would be likely to do it. You did not expect Mr. Leahy to become personal security for you?—I thought he might, as knowing me.

9258. What did Mr. Leahy say to you?—He said he thought Mr. Munster might lend me the money.

9259. Mr. MOLLOY.—How much of the loan was paid by Miss Sterne's cheques?—I cannot recollect now; I think in different small sums, as well as I can recollect.

9260. Did you receive cheques from Miss Sterne?—Cheques, and I think some money too.

9261. Where did you cash the cheques that you received from Miss Sterne?—I think the National Bank, Cashel.

9262. You are certain you cashed the cheques received from Miss Sterne in the National Bank?—Yes, I think so.

9263. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How was the £120 paid?—It was paid by cheques and different sums.

9264. It was not paid in one sum?—No; principally, I think, to my daughter.

9265. Is that advance on the policy guaranteed by your brother to Mr. Munster?—No; he has my policy of insurance.

9266. Is there any guarantee from your eldest brother for that advance?—At present?

9267. Yes?—Not that I can recollect.

9268. Mr. Munster.—There is a promissory note or bill I think?—Witness.—The bill I gave Mr. Leahy to get negotiated had my name and my brother's on it.

9269. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You gave that bill to Mr. Leahy before the election?—Before the election. I think I enclosed it to him to London, if I mistake not.

9270. What was the amount of it?—A hundred pounds.

[Mr. Munster.—I am wrong].

9271. Was Mr. Munster in Cashel when you sent that bill to Mr. Leahy?—He was.

9272. Had you any conversation with Mr. Munster himself about it at the time—in October or November?—Yes, subsequently to my applying to Mr. Leahy.

9273. In consequence of what Mr. Leahy told you, you had a conversation with Mr. Munster about it?—Yes.

9274. Was that before the election?—Yes.

9275. What did Mr. Munster say to you?—He offered to guarantee the amount through his banker in London.

9276. That is, in fact, to get the bill negotiated for you?—Yes.

[Mr. Munster.—Might I ask you to ask him if his brother is not a perfectly solvent person].

9277. Your brother is a perfectly solvent person?—Oh, yes; he has property for ever, unencumbered.

9278. Had you your mind made up to vote for Mr. Munster at that time?—Decidedly. If I had been offered £500 for supporting Mr. Munster I would not have voted for him—that is as a bribe—or £1,000. I never received anything, as I told you before, on account of my vote as long as I am an elector of Cashel. It would be the very thing that would prevent me of voting for him if I was offered it.

Mr. John Phelan, of Main-street, was called, but did not appear. Thomas Rawlins was called, but did not appear.

James Walshe

James Walshe sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9279. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Munster.

9280. Did you receive any promise or consideration for voting for him?—No, sir.

9281. None whatever?—No, sir.

9282. Who canvassed you?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

9283. Were you a voter on a former occasion?—No, sir.

9284. Were you canvassed by anybody else?—I wasn't, sir.

9285. Tell me all that took place between you and Mr. Michael Laffan when he was canvassing you?—He told me that Mr. Munster was coming to town, and that he was an excellent man of large means, that would improve and serve the town. He asked me to keep myself disengaged until I would hear from him again. He came to me a second time then, and he was led to think I would vote for him.

9286. How was he led to think you would vote for him?—I told him I would be happy to vote for him, but I didn't say candidly I would.

9287. Was that after Mr. Munster came?—I think it was.

9288. Now tell me candidly how much did you expect for voting for him?—I didn't expect anything.

9289. Nothing at all?—No.

9290. Did anybody else canvass you but Mr. Michael Laffan?—Mr. O'Beirne asked me would I vote for him, and I told him I would.

9291. Did anybody else canvass you for Mr. O'Beirne besides himself?—No.

9292. Was money offered to you by Mr. O'Beirne or any one on his behalf?—No.

9293. What family have you?—I have one sister that lives with me, sir.

9294. Have you no other family?—I have three more sisters in town, but they are married.

9295. Was there any sort of consideration promised you for your vote?—No.

9296. Did you ask any?—I didn't.

9297. When Mr. Laffan asked you the second time you said you thought you might vote for him; what induced you to vote for him?—No consideration induced me; I voted from myself.

9298. You had known that Mr. O'Beirne was the former member?—I did.

9299. And you say no inducement of any kind was offered to you?—No.

9300. Do you know did your sister get anything?—I know she didn't.

9301. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you any talk with any of your relatives or connexions about it?—No.

9302. Did you hear that money was going?—I did.

9303. How did you hear it?—By rumour, or report.

9304. Did any person talk to you about how you were to vote, except Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Laffan?—They didn't.

9305. No person else in the world?—No person.

9306. You had no conversation as to how you would vote except with these two?—I hadn't; I didn't interfere with anything—I had business to mind.

9307. Did any person interfere with you or ask you?—No, sir.

9308. What business are you in?—I did business at the time for Mr. Power in the commercial way.

9309. A commercial traveller?—Yes.

9310. You had relatives that took a great interest in Mr. Munster's behalf?—They may, unknown to me, I'm not aware of it.

9311. Did you know that your brother-in-law took a warm interest?—I heard he did.

9312. And did he not speak to you?—He didn't, because it was useless; I would do what I wished myself.

9313. You never had any conversation with Michael O'Sullivan about how you were to vote?—No.

9314. And he never asked you?—I'm not aware; I think he didn't ask me. I'm positive he didn't, though I think he knew I would vote for Mr. Munster, and he didn't ask me.

9315. Did your sister tell him?—She didn't.

9316. Did your sister get any promise?—No; I positively swear she didn't, nor money in any way.

Thomas Rawlins sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Rawlins.

9317. Are you a voter of the borough of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

9318. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

9319. You got some money before the election?—Yes, sir, I did.

9320. How much did you get?—Five pounds five, by my own mistake.

9321. Is that all?—I got more after, sir.

9322. How much did you get afterwards?—£5 after that again, sir.

9323. From whom?—From Mr. Laffan—not this present Mr. Laffan [identifying Mr. Michael J. Laffan], but a brother of his.

9324. When did you get the first five guineas?—Some time before the election—five guineas they called a detainer.

9325. That was from Mr. Michael Laffan—was it not?—It was, sir.

9326. Did Mr. Michael Laffan tell you to go anywhere to get that money?—He told me that I could cash it in the bank, sir.

9327. Were you ever in Mr. Meara's house about that money?—I was, sir.

9328. How did that come to happen?—I will tell you, sir, how it came. The morning of the polling, sir, he see me here, that I wasn't very much inclined to give my vote.

9329. Who saw you?—Mr. Laffan, sir, the way he tricked me in the detainer that he gave me.

9330. I want you to come to the day of the retainer?—That was the first day—the detainer. Mr. Laffan gave it to me at Corcoran's. He sent for me. He told me that Mr. Munster was a good, charitable man for the town. "Here," said he, "take that." I took it for a spree of drink. When I discovered the error of it I got uneasy, and his brother gave me £5 to keep counsel, not to mind speaking any more of it. No more I didn't either.

9331. Where did he give you the cheque?—In Corcoran's hotel.

9332. In Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, sir.

9333. Do you recollect afterwards going to Mr. Meara's house?—This was the morning of the polling.

9334. Who told you to go to Meara's house?—Mr. Laffan here, sir [identifying Mr. Michael J. Laffan].

9335. How many days was that after you got the cheque?—I couldn't tell you.

9336. About how many?—I believe 'tis about a fortnight.

9337. About a fortnight after you got the cheque?—It would be a fortnight before the election that I got the detainer.

9338. On the morning of the polling you say Mr. Laffan saw you were not inclined to vote?—It appeared to me like that. He sent me down to Meara's and I got five guineas there.

9339. What did he tell you?—To go down to Meara's, and I went down, and he reached me it in a cartridge and I went away—'twas made up in a cartridge.

9340. Then you got £5 afterwards from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Before that, sir, I got it.

9341. Did you not tell me it was before the election you got it?—I got £5 from Mr. Patrick Laffan before I got Meara's five.

9342. That is £15 10*s.*?—£15 10*s.* I got, sir, altogether.

9343. Did you get any more after the election?—No, sir, not a penny.

9344. When did you get that £5 from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—A few days after I got the detainer.

9345. Where did you get it?—Below in Corcoran's house.

9346. Who was present when Mr. Patrick Laffan gave you that?—No one but myself and himself.

9347. Did you say it was not enough?—I told him wasn't I entitled to get as much as any other.

9348. How much did you say you heard they were getting?—£30.

9349. Did you tell him you expected £30?—He said if I kept counsel until the election was over I would get it. I said to give me the £5 he had in his hand, and to deduct it out of the £30 when he would be paying it. There's the whole truth.

9350. And then you took the £5 on account?—I did, sir. If he was to give me any more, sir, 'twould shorten the bill.

9351. On the morning of the polling Mr. Laffan told you to go to Meara's, and you say Meara gave you £5 5*s.*?—£5 5*s.*, sir.

9352. Mr. Meara does not give the same account of that transaction. You say that Mr. Laffan saw you were not inclined to vote. Tell me all that occurred between you on the morning of the poll?—He sent me down to Meara's.

9353. I want you to tell me what he said to you. What did you say to him that showed him you were not inclined to vote?—I didn't care whether I voted.

9354. What did you say to him?—I said nothing to him.

9355. How did he see that you were not inclined to vote?—Because I was scolding him all through for giving me the detainer.

9356. What did you say?—I said he had no right to do such a thing, that I would stand to my word.

9357. What did he say?—He said, "Go down to Meara's," that he wanted me, and I got five guineas there then.

9358. What did he say to go to Meara's for?—To get money there.

9359. Did he say so?—He did.

NINTH DAY.
October 13.
Thomas Rawlins.

9360. What did he say?—"Go down to Meara's," says he, "and there's five guineas there for you;" and I went down and got it, which Meara won't deny that he gave it to me.

9361. Mr. Meara says that when you went down there he put out five guineas for you, and that you would not take it?—Take it! I would, and ten if he gave it to me.

9362. Did you meet Mr. Laffan in John-street on the morning of the polling, and ask him would you vote; and did he say to you: "You cannot vote unless you pay back the five guineas"?—There was no word about it at all, sir, because he kept me all the night in the house to secure my vote next morning.

9363. In what house?—In Corcoran's. We were there all night.

9364. Who told you go to Corcoran's the night before?—Mr. Laffan here [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]. We were to meet there to be ready for seven o'clock in the morning.

9365. Did you spend the night there?—Of course, great part of the night there.

9366. Did Mr. Laffan ask you to give back the five guineas you got as a retainer?—He might as well ask me to give back the first five guineas as the second, he gave me to keep it in.

9367. Did he ask you to borrow it and pay it back?—What need he when I had it in my pocket?

9368. Did he say to you, you ought to borrow the money and pay it back to him?—There wasn't a word at all about it. What did I want to borrow it from Meara, when I had it myself?

9369. Did you tell Mr. Laffan at that time of the £5 you got from his brother Patrick?—Not a word: he knew about it; but, after the election being over, he sent for me to get back the £5 from me. Three times he sent for me to get back the £5 5*s.* that I got from Meara, to have it all right in the books. I told him when I would be paid according to every man—"when I'll be paid," says I, "you can keep the £5 as well as the other.

9370. Mr. Laffan wishes to have you asked, are you quite sure that Mr. Laffan never said anything to you about borrowing the money to pay back the five guineas?—That's all foolishness; why should he ask me to borrow the money from Meara, when I had my own money?

9371. Did you ever tell Mr. Michael Laffan that you got £5 from his brother Patrick?—Not until after the election; and the answer he made me, he didn't want to hear any more about it, but to give it back to him.

9372. I want you to listen to what Mr. Meara says occurred. He says that you went down to his place, that he offered you five guineas, that you would not take it; that Mr. Laffan came in very soon after and got five guineas from Mr. Meara and gave it to you, and you went out with it. Now, was it from Mr. Meara you took it, or was it Mr. Laffan that gave it to you?—Mr. Meara when I went in brought me inside behind the counter, and handed me it. There wasn't one word about it. He gave it to me.

9373. Do you say you took it from his hands in his shop?—Out of his hands he gave it to me in the shop.

9374. And you kept it, of course?—That's true, sir; out of his hands he gave it to me. Only for I was entitled to get it, I suppose he wouldn't give me 5*s.*

9375. You got it at all events?—I'm sure of that, sir; I did.

9376. And that is altogether £15 10*s.* you got?—£15 10*s.*, and if I got more I would take it.

9377. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you expect to get the balance of £30?—Well, I got no promise for it, sir, from any man.

9378. Did you ask any man?—I was in the room, and Mr. Leahy came to me, and I was complaining about that detainer to him, and he said to make my mind easy, that it was for a good purpose I got it, and that I would be well recompensed after the election.

9379. That conversation was before the election?—After the election, sir.

9380. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mention it again?—A night or two before the polling I was in a room at Corcoran's Hotel. Mr. Leahy told me not to be uneasy about the detainer; it was for a good purpose I got it, and that I would be well rewarded or compensated after the election being over. That's all the promise I got about it.

9381. You say this occurred a night or two before the election?—Yes, sir.

9382. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you not complain to any one since the election?—Since?

9383. Yes?—No, sir; I didn't know I had any complaint to make to anyone. What complaint had I to make?

9384. Did you not ask anybody when you would get the £30?—I couldn't be talking about what I had no claim on. Sure they needn't give it to me if they hadn't a mind.

9385. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne at all?—Well, he came once to my house—three days or so, and I told him I was pledged to Mr. Munster under the detainer they had on me.

9386. Was it after you got the retainer Mr. O'Beirne came to you?—O, it was, sir. I hadn't anything to say but one word, sir.

9387. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get a notice from Mr. Richardson to go up to Corcoran's Hotel?—To attend the meeting?

9388. Yes?—O, we all got instructions.

9389. From Mr. Richardson?—I don't know who it came from, sir.

9390. What were you complaining of the retainer for?—That he had no right to give me a detainer. Couldn't he ask me fair for my vote, and not to trap me that way?

9391. Was it because it prevented you from getting money at the other side?—I didn't want any money from the other side, or his side. I should be left to my own liberty.

9392. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

9393. How much did you get then?—I set my house to Mr. Johnson, occasionally, if he wanted it, to give him the use of it. He never occupied it. I don't think he ever put his foot inside the door.

9394. How much did you get for the house?—£30, sir.

9395. And you say he never occupied it?—He never came near it, and if he wanted it of course he would.

9396. It was there for him?—Yes, 'twas.

9397. When was the £30 paid to you?—After the election, sir.

9398. Did you sign a bill?—No, sir. He sent me £30 in a letter.

9399. How did you vote in 1859?—I didn't vote in '59.

9400. Had you a vote?—No, I hadn't a vote in '59.

9401. You had only a vote at the two last elections?—At the two last elections.

9402. Did Mr. Johnson take many other houses in 1865?—Yes, he did, sir; he took my house.

9403. Did he take any other houses in 1865?—I don't know what he done with any other man.

Daniel Foley sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9404. You are a voter, I believe?—Yes, sir.

9405. Where do you live?—In the Commons, sir.

9406. Do you know of any money having been given at the last election for votes?—No, sir.

9407. Did you ever hear of it?—No, sir.

9408. Never heard of it at all?—Oh, I did sir; I could hear it here.

9409. But did you hear it before this time?—I heard a rumour, sir, but no proof of it.

9410. You heard it at the Petition?—Yes, I believe I did, sir.

9411. Did you live in the Commons in 1865?—I did, sir.

9412. And you knew that there was money given in it?—No, sir, nothing but rumours, as the present case, sir.

9413. Did you never hear that there were bills passed on the Commons in 1865?—I did, sir; a rumour, sir.

9414. And that those bills were passed for money that they got for their votes?—Upon interest, I heard, sir.

9415. It was not hard to pay the interest, I believe?—I couldn't tell, sir.

9416. They paid principal and interest together; did they not?—I couldn't tell, sir; I got none.

9417. You got none?—No.

9418. At any time?—No.

9419. Never at all?—"At any time"—I'm not saying that word yet, sir.

9420. What did you get at any time?—£25, sir.

9421. When did you get it?—Not for my vote, sir.

9422. For your services as an agent, was it?—I asked it, sir; but I got it as a grant.

9423. From whom did you get it?—From Mr. O'Beirne himself.

9424. When?—Something about the 20th October last, after he canvassing my house. I gave what you call a plumper. I went about—on the 16th October; I went about the 20th October—from the 16th to the 20th October.

9425. You went in to Mr. O'Beirne's, you say?—He canvassed my house first, sir. I gave him a plump vote in presence of some respectable people in the town. Four days after I came into him, and said there was £25 calling on me in the bank. He stopped, and hesitated, and I put it to his breast that I was paying rack-rent to the Corporation land. He turned over and said, "In '65 and '68, you and your mistress also treated me respectful, both—a bottle of grog and all this, and it would be very bad for me to refuse your request; when is it due?" I pulled the docket out of my pocket, showing when it was due. He took it, and put it into his desk, and kept it there, and gave me no money. In four or five days after it became due, and I learned it was paid.

9426. What was the docket that you gave him?—The docket to take up to the bank.

9427. It was a bill then?—Yes, sir, a bill. I didn't know the name of it.

9428. You raised the money in the bank?—Yes, sir, with my security, Mr. Sturdy.

9429. Whose name was on it?—Mr. Sturdy.

9430. That was on the bank here in Cashel?—Yes, sir.

9431. And you recollect when it fell due?—I think about the 28th or 29th of October, in or about that day.

9432. And you were never asked by the bank to pay?—Never, sir.

9433. Did you ever get that bill since?—No, sir.

9434. You do not know what became of it?—I went in on the following day to the bank. I went to the master of the bank and asked who paid it, and he said he didn't know. I asked about the bill, and he said whoever came with the money took up the bill.

9435. Who did you ask at the National Bank?—The present master that is there, sir.

9436. Mr. Barron, is it?—Yes, sir.

9437. Did you ever ask anyone afterwards who paid it?—No, sir.

9438. Did you ever go to Mr. Sturdy about it?—No, sir.

9439. You were satisfied when you found it was paid?—I was, sir.

9440. At the time you went to Mr. Laffan did you tell him that Mr. Munster's people were offering money to the Commoners?—No, sir; I never spoke to Mr. Munster, or went near his agents.

9441. Did you tell him that they were offering money to some people on the Commons?—No, sir, I had no recourse to the way of them at all, sir. My father was dying then, sir, and was buried in a few days.

9442. Your father was living then?—He was, sir, up to '59, and he gave a vote in '55.

9443. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you ever hear that there was any rent paid to Mr. Sturdy for you?—No, sir.

9444. Was that bill for rent?—No, but for cash to cut my harvest. 'Twas up about the 28th July, I believe.

9445. Did you pay the last rent yourself?—I did, sir.

9446. When did you pay it?—I paid all rents myself; never forwarded one pound cash in any way, but gave my cash to Mr. Sturdy. If I was short of a bill I only went to the bank, and Mr. Sturdy and myself would take it up.

9447. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you look for money at the last election?—No, sir.

9448. Did you go to any person for money?—No, sir.

9449. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Sturdy; the Commissioners of Cashel for a part.

9450. Did you suggest to any person to leave money in Mr. Sturdy's hands for you?—I did, sir; I met Mr. Pat. Laffan on a Sunday at my own land. He asked me for information about the Commons people. I told him I heard Mr. Munster was a good, charitable man. "I'm paying a very rack-rent for it. If you go to Mr. Sturdy and get it free, or bring me a receipt for half-year's rent, I will look for all information." "How much is it?" says he. "Fifty pounds," says I. "Will you come in to-morrow to Cashel?" "No," says I to him, "I have too much to do." That's all that passed between me and anyone for Mr. Munster.

9451. Did you ever ask any person for money?—No, sir; I gave a plump vote in presence of two townsmen here, sir.

9452. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it after you promised the plumper to Mr. O'Beirne that you had the conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I couldn't say, sir. By chance I met Mr. Patrick Laffan and had a few words.

9453. Could you not tell was it before or after?—I could not, sir.

9454. Could you not tell if you had a conversation with Mr. O'Beirne before that?—Well, I couldn't remember.

William Cashen sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

William Cashen.

9455. You voted at the last election?—I did, sir.

9456. For whom did you vote?—Mr. O'Beirne.

9457. How much did you get for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I didn't get as much as would shave me.

9458. How much did your son get?—I can't tell about that, sir.

9459. How much did he tell you?—He told me £5 for being an agent, I believe, to him.

9460. How much did he get for you?—He got nothing for me; I didn't get anything at all.

9461. If your son told any person that there was £20 given for your vote, would it be true?—I don't know whether it would be true or not.

NINTH DAY. October 13.

William Cashen.

9462. How many sons have you?—I have seven or eight, if they were together.

9463. One was employed by Mr. O'Beirne?—He was, sir.

9464. Were any of the others employed?—No, sir, there wasn't.

9465. Who canvassed you?—Who canvassed me?

9466. Yes?—No one. I came in of my own accord.

9467. You voted in '65?—I did, sir.

9468. What did you get for voting in '65?—I got nothing in '65.

9469. Did you sign any bill?—I don't know whether I did or no, sir. 'Tis too long ago. If I saw the bill I would be able to judge. If it is in your power to show me the bill, sir, I would be thankful to you. Is it in your power to get the bill from him and let me see is it in my own handwriting?

9470. No. Mr. White says he witnessed a bill you signed for Mr. Johnson?—I can't remember that.

9471. Did you get any money from Mr. Johnson?—No, sir, I never spoke to Mr. Johnson.

9472. Did you get money from Mr. White?—I don't know whether I did or no. 'Tis gone out of my memory.

9473. Who canvassed you at the last election?—No man at all. I came in of my own accord, and if Mr. Scully went on I would go for Mr. Scully, for I had no friendship for any of them.

9474. If he gave you money you would go for him?—I wouldn't; my father did the same, and I'll do the same way myself.

9475. Did you get any money from Simon Tracey?—I don't know the man at all; I believe he would rather keep it himself, the beggar, whoever he is. Ha! What a cash-keeper I would have—Tracey, the ragman!

9476. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What is the name of your son who was employed for Mr. O'Beirne?—His name is William, sir.

9477. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get any money from Mr. Munster?—I wouldn't take his money; I got five guineas from Mr. Laffan.

9478. And you took it?—I did, sir; I cashed it below in the bank.

9479. What was the five guineas for?—He told me he had a little job for me; it was on Spy Wednesday I got it; he said he would come to the land to me, and he didn't; I came in afterwards and threw it on the table to him.

9480. Why did you throw it to him?—Because he was deceiving me.

9481. Which Mr. Laffan was it?—I don't know; to the best of my opinion it isn't this man at all [pointing to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]; it was below in Corcoran's I got it.

9482. Where did you get the five guineas?—In Corcoran's hotel.

9483. What brought you there?—I was brought down there by Mick Beary.

9484. Did he tell you what for?—No; the man didn't say anything about it.

9485. What did he say to you?—He brought me down there.

9486. Did you not know it was Mr. Munster's hotel?—I didn't care whose hotel it was; I was richer when I went out; I suppose he was the sergeant he had listing the people.

9487. When did you see Mr. Laffan since you got the money?—He gave me the money on Wednesday; I thought he'd go out to show me how to do the job; he didn't come; and on Saturday I see posted on the wall the meaning of it; I went and made a little ball of the money, and threw it to him, and he wouldn't take it; I went up and told Mr. Grace, and he told me to go down again; I made a little ball, and put the five shillings in the three notes, and left it to him.

9488. Did you cash it in the bank?—I did, sir.

9489. Did you lay some of the money out?—I didn't a penny, sir.

9490. Did you keep it rolled up?—I did, sir, all through.

9491. You knew nothing of the trick that was played on you until you came into town on Saturday?—I did when I see it posted up, sir.

9492. Did you bring the money with you?—I did, sir.

9493. Why did you bring it in?—I have money with me now.

9494. What did you bring the five guineas rolled up into Cashel for?—'Twas no load for me to bring it.

9495. What did you want of it in Cashel?—I may get a tow or a pig, because we are dealing in them.

9496. Did you expect a fair in Cashel that Saturday?—Isn't there a maket there in Cashel every Saturday?

9497. Did you get money that Saturday in Cashel?—Sure I did.

9498. From whom did you get the money that Saturday, in Cashel?—From who?

9499. That is what I want you to tell me?—I left it to Mr. Laffan in a little ball to him. What did I care about his money?

9500. After you saw these things posted up to whom did you speak about it?—When I see it posted up I gave him up altogether.

9501. Did you speak to any person?—No, sir, I didn't.

9502. No person told you to give back the money?—I went to Mr. Grace about it and he told me to give it up altogether—to keep no hoult of his money.

9503. Are you able to read and write?—I can write my name, sir.

9504. Can you read?—Wisha, badly.

9505. Who read the notice on the wall for you?—Anything going that way in print I would make it out myself without bringing any handy man to it.

Thomas Walsh.

Thomas Walsh, of the Commons, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9506. Are you a voter and of the Commons?—Yes, sir.

9507. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne.

9508. Did you vote for him at the election of 1865?—I did, sir.

9509. And what did you get from him for voting in 1865?—Nothing, sir.

9510. Would you not save me the trouble of going through all the questions I had to ask other witnesses, and tell it out?—I will tell you everything.

9511. Did you pass a bill in 1865?—No, sir.

9512. Did you get anything in 1865 from anyone?—No, sir.

9513. Did you get anything at the last election?—No, sir.

9514. Or pass any bill?—No, sir.

9515. Did you know there was money given for voting in 1865?—Some of my neighbours were engaged with it.

9516. And did you never ask any yourself?—No, sir.

9517. Who canvassed you at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

9518. When?—The day he went out on the Commons. I don't recollect what day it was.

9519. Are you sure you never passed a bill?—No, sir.

9520. At any time at all?—At any time, sir.

9521. Either before or after the election of 1868?—Yes.

9522. Did any of your family get any money for your vote in 1865?—No, sir.

9523. Have you a son?—I have one young one.

9524. Do you say that none of your family got anything for your vote in 1865?—No, sir, nor I didn't, sir.

9525. Did you vote in 1859?—I believe I did, sir.

9526. For Lanigan?—Yes, sir.

9527. Why did you not vote for Lanigan in 1865 as you did in 1859?—Twelve months before the election we signed a requisition to have Mr. O'Beirne come.

9528. Why did you sign that requisition?—We considered he would be a good member of Parliament.

9529. Why did you fall out with Lanigan?—It was supposed he would never contest Cashel again.

9530. When he did contest it why did you not support him as before?—How could I when I requested Mr. O'Beirne to come, and signed my name.

9531. Who got you to sign your name?—Some of the people of Cashel, I believe, signed to it.

9532. Do you mean to say you are so conscientious that you would not vote for a man after signing a requisition to another?—I do, sir.

9533. You would not do it?—I would not, sir.

9534. I am glad to hear it. Did anyone canvass you on behalf of Mr. Munster?—No, sir.

9535. Were you ever convassed by Mr. Laffan, or anyone else, on behalf of Mr. Munster?—No, sir.

9536. Or by Patrick Cunningham, or any of them?—No, sir. I pledged to Mr. O'Beirne the day of his canvass, and I suppose they knew I was a staunch supporter of his.

9537. And that no money would buy you?—No, sir; all that he brought hither from England wouldn't change me if I liked him.

9538. Were you an agent for Mr. O Beirne?—No, sir; I had something else to do.

Jeremiah O'Connell sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN

9539. You voted at the last election for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

9540. After the election did you hear of any money having been given to any of your family from the other side?—Yes, I did.

9541. What was the sum?—I heard £35.

9542. Who did you hear gave it?—I heard it must have come from Mr. Munster or his agents.

9543. Did you hear what particular person gave it?—No, I didn't hear.

9544. Which of your family got it?—I can't say was it my wife or daughter. I heard it was in the house. I was told before the polling that it was in the house, and advised by some to vote for Mr. Munster, yet it didn't influence me in the slightest. I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

9545. Did any of Mr. Munster's people speak to you afterwards about having voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—No; I never heard one of them to say a word after. Mr. Laffan was the only man I met, and I found him gentlemanly on the occasion.

9546 Which Mr. Laffan?—I don't know the two asunder. I think it must be this gentleman [identifies Mr. Michael J. Laffan]. He made no promise to me, and I found him very honorable on the occasion.

9547. What occurred about that money since, Mr. O'Connell?—I heard it was taken from the house the same night, at the closing of the poll.

9548. Taken back?—Yes, it was given back, by all accounts.

9549. Do you know to whom it was given back?—I can't say: I didn't see it: I was only told about it. I really didn't put a question about it. I heard it was given back, and I would insist that it would.

9550. Did you see it, Mr. O'Connell?—I never saw it.

9551. For whom did you vote in '65?—I didn't vote at that time; I was the officer of this house at that time; I was then an officer of this house.

9552. Was any inducement offered to you, or any promise made by Mr. O'Beirne?—Not a word. He called once, and was rather inquiring about my health.

9553. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I suppose the members of your family that were in the house at that time are all here still?—There is one, my lord, here—my wife.

Catherine O'Connell sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9554. You heard your husband's story about the £35?—I did, sir.

9555. Was it with you it was left?—It was left in the room, sir.

9556. Who brought it to you?—Some old man I never saw before. Mr. Laffan informed me it would be left there.

9557. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir. My husband knew nothing of it.

9558. Did you see the man leaving the money there?—I didn't see him leaving it, but I saw him go into the room.

9559. How was he dressed?—He was in a plain country farmer's dress.

9560. With frieze coat and knee breeches?—I couldn't say; but he was a very old man—an aged man.

9561. Would you know him again if you saw him?—I wouldn't, sir. I never saw him before or since.

9562. Was the money in notes, or what way?—It was in notes, sir.

9563. And £35 was the amount?—£35.

9564. When did you tell your husband of it?—The morning after.

9565. And when was it left?—The night before. He said he would have nothing to do with the money, and nothing would induce him to vote for Mr. Munster. He said he would have nothing to do with Mr. Munster or his money; that he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

9566. I suppose what you saw take place was, that you saw the man go into the room?—I saw him go in, sir, to the room.

9567. And the money was there after he came out?—It was.

9568. And it was not there before he went in?—No, sir.

9569. I must ask you to tell me all that occurred between you and Mr. Patrick Laffan, as well as you can recollect?—Mr. Pat. Laffan asked me would I ask my husband to vote for Mr. Munster. I told him I would, but I didn't think it was any use, as I knew his mind was made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne; and also promised—not actually promised, but that I heard him say he would vote for no one else.

9570. How long was that before the leaving of the money?—It was the evening of leaving the money.

9571. Some short time before?—The evening of it, sir.

9572. What did Mr. Laffan tell you about the money?—Mr. Laffan asked me did I think anything would induce him to vote. I told him I thought it would not; that I knew his mind was made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

9573. What else?—He said he would send a man to leave something in the room, and so he did; and when my husband was informed about it he made nothing of it. He said no money would induce him to vote against Mr. O'Beirne.

9574. You heard your husband say that he received no inducement from Mr. O'Beirne's side?—No, sir, he got not a penny, nor anyone of his family, nor asked for it, nor expected it; and I returned the money to Mr. Pat. Laffan the evening of the polling.

9575. Did you go with it yourself?—He came to my house for it.

9576. Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Mr. Patrick Laffan.

9577. What occurred when he came?—He seemed rather angry for my husband not voting. I said I had no influence over him in regard to his voting. He took away the money. I didn't think it right to keep the money as he didn't vote for Mr. Munster, so I returned it to him.

NINTH DAY.

October 13.

John Feehan sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

John Feehan.

9578. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—I believe twenty years.

9579. For whom did you vote at the late election?—Mr. Munster, sir.

9580. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. Lanigan, sir.

9581. What did you get for voting at the last election?—Nothing, sir.

9582. Were you promised anything for your vote?—No, sir.

9583. Are you to get anything?—No, sir.

9584. What family have you?—I have three boys, sir.

9585. What are their names?—Pat., John, and Thomas.

9586. Are they to get anything?—By gor, I don't know, sir. Mr. Laffan sent directions to me to have a bill put in for the boys.

9587. What Mr. Laffan sent you those directions?—Michael, sir.

9588. When did he send you that message?—Some time after the election.

9589. Were they engaged at the election in any way?—They were at all times about him, here and there.

9590. What were they doing?—About the streets often, sir.

9591. Who canvassed you for Mr. Munster?—Mr. Michael Laffan came first.

9592. What did he say?—That Mr. Munster would be a good, kind man; a good man for the town, and so on, and I told him pull away.

9593. Did he say anything about how much money would be spent in the election?—I can't recollect it now, sir.

9594. Try and recollect?—I can't recollect it, sir.

9595. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did he say anything about money?—I think he made some remark.

9596. Did he say anything about £5,000?—Some remark like that was made, sir.

9597. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you shown any cheque?—No, sir.

9598. You voted for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir, independent; and never got a shilling in my life.

9599. How soon after the election did Mr. Michael Laffan desire you to send in a claim?—At the time there was a notice for any men that had anything due to send in their claim.

9600. Did you send in a claim?—I did, sir.

9601. Who wrote the claim that you sent in?—I did it myself.

9602. Why did you not put your own name to it?—I had nothing to do with it, sir, and didn't want it.

9603. Who desired you to put it in Pat.'s name?—As being the eldest boy I put in his name.

9604. Did you receive any money?—Not a penny, sir.

9605. Did any of your sons?—For my vote, sir?

9606. Any money?—Once Thomas received 10*s.*

9607. For what did he get it?—Drawing some sand that was used as gravel.

9608. How much did you put in the bill?—£2.

9609. How much did you put in the bill for the boys?—£50, sir.

9610. Did you not put in a bill for £55?—No, sir.

9611. Are you positive you put only £50 in the bill you put in?—I can't say; I think I did.

Mr E. H. Biggin.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9612. Give me claim number 72, Mr. Biggin?—Here it is, sir.

John Feehan

John Feehan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9613. Is that yours [claim is handed to witness]?—It is, sir.

9614. Is that all in your handwriting?—It is, sir.

9615. "Henry Munster, Esquire, debtor to Patrick Feehan, for his services during the election, amount £55?"—I thought it was £50, sir.

9616. Mr. MOLLOY.—It is dated 28th December; a few days after Christmas—to whom did you give it?—I gave it to Mr. Laffan, sir.

9617. What did he say?—He began to smile. I said to do as he liked with it, and he said he would do his best with it.

9618. Did you ask him since for it?—I met him one day, and he said he had nothing to do with it; that there was money due to himself that he couldn't get. Something like that he said.

Mr. Michael J Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan presents himself.

9619. Witness.—The date of the sale of O'Donnell's house to Mr. Munster was 7th November

[Adjourned.]

TENTH DAY.

October 14.

TENTH DAY.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1869.

Mr. Thomas E. Close recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Thomas E. Close.

9620. You are already sworn?—Yes, sir.

9621. I find an entry of money paid by one of your sons to Patrick Cunningham. I want to ascertain if you know anything about it, and which son paid it?—Is it in my son's handwriting, sir?

9622. No. I find an entry of money paid to him by young Mr. Close?—That is Alfred, the young boy that is in Dundalk, I expect; because there was no money paid by Harry in regard to the election, but I know that Alfred did pay money on Mr. Munster's account. He was a week, I think, employed by Mr. Munster, or Mr. Biggin, paying accounts.

9623. Your son Alfred was?—Yes, sir.

9624. And he is now, you say, at school in Dundalk?—In Dundalk. The money was given to him and he went and got the receipts from different persons. So he told me.

9625. You do not know how much he paid?—No, sir. I have not the least idea.

9626. I presume, if we require your son's attendance, it will be sufficient to intimate it to you?—Oh, certainly.

9627. You will have him brought down?—I do not wish to put any extra expense.

9628. If we bring him down we will give you the money to bring and send him back?—What I mean is I would not wish to put you to extra expense in bringing him.

9629. A letter from you will bring him?—Yes, sir.

Patrick Cunningham was called, but did not appear; Edward Holland was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mortimer Shea.

9630. Did you serve a summons to attend here on Mr. Holland?—I did, sir, this morning.

John Sturdy was called, but did not appear.

Mr. John Phelan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. John Phelan.

9631. You are a voter of Cashel, Mr. Phelan?—Yes, your worship.

9632. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne.

9633. Were you an elector in 1865?—No, your worship.

9634. Can you tell me where you lived in 1865?—In the same place I live now, your worship.

9635. That is in the Main-street?—Yes, your worship—in fact it is Friar-street, and the Main street. I think 'tis Friar-street.

9636. Do you know of any other John Phelan living in Cashel except yourself?—No, your worship.

9637. Do you know the number of your house?—I don't know the number; I think there's no number.

9638. Is it 44?—I don't think there's any number.

9639. How do you spell your name?—P-h-e-l-a-n.

9640. Are you known by the name of "Whelan?"—No. I never received a letter spelled that way. I never signed my name so.

Mr. John Davis White presents himself.

Mr. John Davis White.

9641. Mr. White.—Forty-four, Main-street, is my office.

9642. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is this the gentleman whose name is mentioned in those notes?—No, sir.

Mr. John Phelan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. John Phelan.

9643. Were you canvassed at the last election by both the candidates, or persons on their behalf?—I was canvassed by Mr. Munster—by his agents.

9644. By whom?—By both the Mr. Laffans, and several others.

9645. Which of the Laffans canvassed you first?—Mr. Michael Laffan hoped I would vote, and Mr. Patrick Laffan made use of the same language.

9646. Were they together?—No, separate times.

9647. What answer did you give Mr. Michael Laffan?—I gave him no decisive answer.

9648. Your mind was not made up as to how you would vote, I suppose?—It was perfectly made up, your worship.

9649. But you did not give a decided answer to Mr. Michael Laffan?—No decided answer.

9650. Did you also give an ambiguous answer to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Of course, your worship, in the same language, in the same terms.

9651. Did not other persons call on behalf of Mr. Munster on you?—Your worship, there were several persons, innumerable persons; I couldn't recollect the persons that called to me.

9652. Was there any offer of money made to you?—There was, sir, by two or three.

9653. Who were they?—Miss Cormack offered me money, the first person.

9654. Who is Miss Cormack?—The daughter of Dr. Cormack.

9655. Do you know her name?—I think Mary, your worship. Miss Mary Cormack.

9656. You say she offered you money?—Yes, your worship.

9657. For what did she offer you the money?—To vote for Mr. Munster, your worship.

9658. When did she offer that to you?—Long before the election, your worship.

9659. Detail the circumstances?—Well, your worship, I will. I had business to Dr. Cormack's, in fact I had business with him; it wasn't electioneering business. I went there for money he owed me, on several occasions. On several of these occasions she asked me was my mind made up to vote for Mr. Munster, and offered me half notes.

9660. How much?—£40. I said £40 was nothing, but wouldn't a hundred or two be more to the point.

9661. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had she half notes in her hand?—No, I didn't see them, your worship.

9662. You say she asked you would half notes for forty pounds do?—Yes, and if I expected more she would ask, but to mention what sum I would take.

9663. Has this document that you have in your hand anything to do with it?—No, your worship. This document I had on the occasion to settle with Dr. Cormack. I happened to call there on business. 'Twasn't on electioneering [hands in the document].

9664. I understand that you called on Dr. Cormack in reference to money he owed you?—Yes, your worship.

9665. I believe you lend money sometimes?—Not often, sometimes I do.

9666. Was an offer made by Miss Cormack on more occasions than that?—Each time I called on Dr. Cormack with regard to this business, I met Miss Cormack or Mrs. Cormack, and on each occasion she introduced the subject.

9667. Only Miss Cormack?—And Mrs. Cormack, they were both there.

9668. Did Mrs. Cormack say anything about it?—She took part in the conversation. She said to make up my mind and I would be compensated by her or Mr. Munster.

9669. You said something about two hundred pounds?—I said forty was nothing, but two hundred would be something. I said forty pounds I didn't much value it.

9670. When you said that, what was said?—Wouldn't forty pounds do, or wouldn't half notes for forty pounds or for fifty pounds.

9671. When you said two hundred pounds what was said?—She said that was——

9672. Preposterous, I suppose?—Yes, your worship.

9673. How many times did this conversation take place?—I am certain, your worship, on five or six occasions.

9674. Did you call five or six times on the same business, and with reference to the same money?—Entirely. On the same business, your worship, altogether.

9675. Then I suppose your business was postponed the first time you came?—Oh, several times, your worship.

9676. Was there anything said on any of these occasions with reference to getting money from Mr. Munster?—No, your worship, no.

9677. Who else besides Miss Cormack and Mrs.

TENTH DAY. October 14. John Phelan.

Cormack spoke of money?—James Connors offered me fifty pounds, your worship.

9678. When was that?—It was subsequent to Miss Cormack—some few days previous to the election.

9679. By-the-bye, can you fix the date of the interview with Miss Cormack, with reference to that document in your hand?—This document, your worship, was dated—— This was a decree. I had two decrees. He paid the amount of one to myself.

9680. When?—Some time previous to this. I had two decrees. He paid one first to myself, and he promised to allow me something liberal for the accommodation I gave him. When I went to demand the second decree or the interest, he promised for the indulgence, Miss Cormack said she had a conversation with Mr. Laffan, and that he said no decree would pay interest, and she wouldn't pay it. I got annoyed—this was a decree against his body. I went into Mr. Walpole, the bailiff, the sheriff's bailiff, to get him arrested, and he went in and paid the amount of the decree.

9681. How much was the amount of the second decree against the body?—£20 5*s.* 10*d.*

9682. Do you say he was arrested on it?—He was, your worship, on the second decree. I had one against the goods.

9683. When was he arrested?—Well, your worship, I suppose some time in January. This is the sheriff's letter—Mr. Fitzgerald.

9684. I want you to fix the date of the conversation with Miss Cormack in which she offered you that forty pounds?—Some time previous to the election.

9685. But now you are speaking of January?—Yes; he was arrested, your worship, first, and then let go; the bailiff let him go; then I applied to the sheriff, and on the second application Walpole, the sheriff's man, met him, and he went to Mr. Munster's office and saw him, and paid the amount to the messenger.

9686. Can you tell what was the date of the first arrest?—I cannot.

9687. You say he was let go?—He was.

9688. By whom?—By Walpole, the sheriff's man; all those decrees go to the sheriff.

9689. You say Walpole took him to Mr. Munster's office?—He went to Mr. Munster's office.

9690. Where is that?—In John-street, your worship, near the church.

9691. Did Walpole give you any reason for letting him go the first time?—Through courtesy, your worship, and he promised to pay him in a few days; Walpole is living in town, and he gave it to him.

9692. I asked you if you knew about what time that occurred?—I couldn't.

9693. Was it before the election or after?—Before the election.

9694. Was the first arrest before the election?—I couldn't tell you; Walpole will keep the entry in his book, and he will be able to ascertain it.

9695. You say James Connors offered you money?—Yes, fifty pounds.

9696. Where did he offer it to you?—In the Main-street.

9697. Say what occurred when he offered you the money?—He said the boys were very anxious. Your worship, I'm a cattle dealer, and pay for cattle that persons buy. He said they were all very anxious for the return of Mr. Munster, and we are sure to be compensated; that I wouldn't of course sever from them, but would be one of their party.

9698. They wished you to be with them?—Yes, sir; I said of course I wouldn't vote for Mr. Munster; I didn't say it at the time; I said my mind wasn't made up sufficiently, and I gave him a dubious, or ambiguous answer.

9699. Why did you not tell him your mind was made up to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, if you say it was?—It was, your worship.

9700. Then why did you not tell him?—I had a reason of my own, your worship; there were lots of money in some of their hands belonging to me; I should remember the election; it made a most indelible impression on me; Mr. Munster gave £35 to a man that went off to America with £75 belonging to me.

Mr. Munster.—Ask the name of that man, if you please.

9701. Witness.—Michael Noonan.

9702. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I must get a little more closely from you your own knowledge of this?—Michael Noonan called to me; he's now in America.

9703. Was he a voter?—He was, your worship.

9704. He voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes, your worship.

9705. Well, you say that at the time he owed you money?—I gave him money to pay for cattle.

9706. How much money?—I gave him £53, your worship.

9707. Well?—And he kept the money; long before the election he had the money; he had the money since the Christmas before the election.

9708. The Christmas of 1867?—The Christmas before the election, that is 1867.

9709. You say he had the money from the Christmas before the election?—The Christmas of 1867, your worship.

9710. Well?—He asked me to vote for Mr. Munster and I was sure to get the same amount he was getting; I didn't see him for some time afterwards, and he told me he got the money, and I remarked not voting for Mr. Munster I would have got the same amount of money.

9711. How much did he tell you he had got?—£35, your worship.

9712. Did he tell you who paid it?—Well, your worship, he didn't; no he didn't.

9713. When you said a moment ago he got £35 from Mr. Munster, you did not mean from Mr. Munster's own hands?—No, but some agent or party connected with the matter.

9714. Is there anything further about Noonan?—No, your worship; but he's gone to America, and I haven't seen him since.

9715. Well now, was this Michael Noonan a buyer?—He was, your worship.

9716. We were on the subject of Connors having offered you these £50?—Yes, your worship.

9717. You gave him an evasive answer?—Yes, your worship.

9718. Did he come to you again?—He did; he said he wouldn't come at all any more, but to know would I take £50. I would lose money besides. He said the £50 will do so-and-so. I gave him the same answer, your worship.

9719. Did anybody else come to offer you money?—Several persons came to offer it.

9720. I want to know who they were?—I couldn't tell; a good many persons.

9721. You have mentioned two—Miss Cormack and James Connors. Do you recollect the names of any others?—No, your worship, I don't.

9722. Did Mr. Patrick Laffan ever say anything to you about it?—No, your worship; he said I wouldn't be forgot, that Mr. Munster was a very liberal man, and kind, and that when he was so liberal, and kind, and generous, that of course those persons that supported him should not be forgotten. In fact, your worship, I never went near Mr. Munster at all. 'Twas Mr. Dudley Byrne that first brought me to the notice of Mr. Munster, and brought me up to Corcoran's Hotel, and said Mr. Munster laid out an immensity of money for the railway to Cashel.

9723. The telegraph, you mean?—Yes, your worship, the telegraph, and that he would lay out more, and that it was the interest of every one to support him.

9724. That was Mr. Dudley Byrne?—Yes, your worship. That was the first introduction: in fact, I couldn't at all go to his room but for that.

9725. That was at Mrs. Corcoran's?—Yes, your worship, Mrs. Corcoran's. It was a fair day, your worship.

9726. Did Mr. Byrne allude to anything further than making the telegraph and things of that kind?—

He said 'twas the interest of every voter to support Mr. Munster.

9727. Did he say anything else with reference to it?—No, your worship.

9728. Who was there when Mr. Dudley Byrne took you up?—Mr Richardson was there, and Mr. Leahy, about eleven o'clock in the day.

9729. Was there any allusion there made to Mr. Munster's liberality and generosity, and likelihood of remembering those who supported him?—No, your worship.

9730. Nothing of that kind passed at all?—No, your worship.

9731. You tell me you cannot recollect the names of the others who offered you money?—No, your worship.

9732. But you were offered money by others?—I was, by several persons, your worship.

9733. Did Mr. Michael O'Sullivan offer you any?—He said if I went with him that I'd be well compensated.

9734. But he did not specify any sum?—He said £70, your worship.

9735. Seventy pounds?—Yes, your worship.

9736. Tell me the details of the conversation, when and where it took place?—I happened to be in his shop.

9737. Was that after the election?—Yes; and he said if I had gone with him I would have got £70.

9738. Did anything further take place?—No, your worship: he said I was a very good man, a liberal man, and a man of means, and doing many acts of kindness, and why didn't I vote for Mr. Munster; something of that kind, your worship.

9739. Had you more than one conversation with Mr. O'Sullivan?—I might have had several.

9740. You said that he told you you would be compensated, and then you also spoke about £70; I want to know did all that take place in one conversation, or were there several conversations?—To the best of my belief in one conversation.

9741. That was after the election?—After the election.

9742. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he ever tell you before the election that you would be compensated?—No; but he always thought I would vote.

9743. Had you any conversation with him before the election about voting?—I had several conversations; meeting him, conversing, and going backward and forward. "You will vote for Mr. Munster, I'm sure," and so-and-so; nothing more than that.

9744. Did Mr. Meara ever speak to you?—No, your worship.

9745. Or Mr. Hackett?—No, your worship.

9746. You are not able to recollect any others?—No, your worship.

9747. Do you think it is a matter you might recollect? You recollected Mr. O'Sullivan when I mentioned his name?—I did, your worship.

9748. It is a very wide field of guess-work for me to mention names?—There were such a number of persons coming backward and forward, you couldn't recollect.

9749. It is strange: a great number of persons coming to you and offering you money. You have mentioned three. Do you say there were a great number?—There was scarcely a day, scarcely an hour, passed at the election that I didn't meet persons in the street—persons that had perhaps no authority, encouraging me what to do.

9750. And these offers of money were made publicly in the street to you?—Numerous offers in the street, they were in the street.

9751. I really wish you would try and recollect the names of some other persons that offered you money?—At present, I cannot.

9752. If you recollect any names, you will have the goodness to come to me?—I shall, your worship.

9753. I want to know was there on any occasion any positive offer of money—I do not understand you to say the money was ever produced?—No.

9754. On some occasions it was only a general talk of how you would be compensated?—No, your worship; we had a talk of certain sums, and sums proposed.

9755. You mentioned sums proposed only in two cases?—Only in two cases.

9756. Were you offered a specified sum in more instances than those you have mentioned?—No, your worship, no.

9757. I think you told me that you did not vote in 1865?—No.

9758. Had you a vote then?—No; it was the lowering of the franchise that entitled me to a vote in '68.

9759. You voted, I believe, as a lodger?—Yes, your worship.

9760. It was the creation of that franchise that gave you the right to vote?—Yes, your worship.

9761. Now, Mr. Phelan, I want to know why you were so strongly interested in Mr. O'Beirne?—No person in his behalf ever canvassed me. Mr. O'Beirne came to me about the late election. I happened to be speaking to a countryman near the bank. He caught me by the arm, and said, "My friend, let us have a little chat. I suppose I may look forward for the same support you have always shown me." I said, "Of course," and coupled with Mr. Grace, who took the greatest possible interest in my behalf, exclusive of Mr. O'Beirne, I wouldn't vote contrary to Mr. Grace.

9762. Did Mr. O'Beirne say, "My friend, I suppose I may look forward for the support I had always from you?"—Yes, your worship.

9763. Did you support him in 1865?—I took all the interest I could in Mr. O'Beirne. He always recognized my letters, and got employment for several humble people through my letters.

9764. When did you get employment for people?—I suppose seven or eight years ago. Some very humble people came to me. I had very little knowledge of Mr. O'Beirne, but I wrote to him. He knew me. I spent some evenings with him in Cashel some seven years ago. The moment these persons took my letters to him he gave them employment.

9765. Did you vote for Mr. O'Beirne in 1857?—My brother, Paul Phelan, solicitor, was his agent in '57.

9766. Do you tell me you did not receive any sort of consideration?—Not a single shilling, only what I lost.

9767. And do I understand that you mean by that to say, you received no inducement of any kind?—No inducement of any kind, nor a pound, nor a sovereign, nor a thousand pounds. I looked forward to Mr. O'Beirne's interest, his patronage and friendship, and no money could compensate for that.

9768. Mr. MOLLOY.—How did you lose money?—I gave money to parties who were buying stock.

9769. How did you lose money to Mr. O'Beirne?—A few shillings. I dined with him and subscribed towards dinners; that's all the money.

9770. I suppose you were one of those who dined at Miss O'Dwyer's?—Yes, your worship.

9771. And I understand now that you paid for your dinner?—I did, your worship, on such occasions.

9772. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You said you did not get any inducement, that you rather preferred Mr. O'Beirne's patronage?—His patronage and kind friendship and interest, your worship.

9773. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever lend money to Mr. O'Beirne?—I never lent him a shilling. He never asked me, or any one on his behalf.

9774. Did you pay any money to anyone for voting for Mr. O'Beirne, or offer any compensation for voting?—No; but I had decrees and I never used a threat against them.

9775. You never made use of the decrees as a means of making them vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, your worship. In fact there are some in court at present I could call on—I have decrees against them.

9776. You say you never made use of those decrees for election purposes?—No, your worship.

9777. That is a potent mode of influencing a man's

TENTH DAY. October 14. John Phelan.

vote if you wished?—Oh, putting the screw on him, your worship, if he didn't coincide with my wishes.

Mr. Munster.—I wish to ask him if there were several voters, butchers, of the name of Noonan?

9778. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Answer that question?—Only one, your worship.

9779. Was there only one Noonan a voter in Cashel.?—Yes, Michael Noonan.

9780. Mr. Munster.—When did he go to America? Witness.—About two or three months after the election—about three months.

9781. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it before or after the election?—After, he went. He hadn't the means to go then. It was your money [to Mr. Munster] that he got that did that much after the election.

9782. Address me and do not address anyone else in court?—Yes, your worship.

9783. There is a matter for you to explain in that. You said something about £75 that he took from you?—£53 your worship, £46 and £7.

9784. Do you recollect using the words seventy-five at first?—There was money besides that, that if he had remained in this country I would have got. £75 is the money he owed me altogether, but lately 'tis £53.

9785. I do not understand that?—I will explain. I used to give money to lay out for cattle. Sometimes he'd give back the money and sometimes not. He owed me £75 and latterly I gave him £53.

9786. Do you mean that before he owed you the £53 he owed you the balance of other dealings?—Yes, your worship.

9787. Why did you leave all this money in his hands from Christmas 1867 to March 1869?—There are persons in business who owe me money for the last three years.

9788. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do they pay you interest?—No, they buy cattle, and give me half of the profit. If they get £5 profit I am to get £2 10*s*. I leave it all to their own principle.

9789. You did not get the profit from Michael Noonan?—I got a very small profit. I only gave such money on his own principle.

[Mr. Munster.—Would you please ask him, sir, how, if he is a friend of Mr. O'Beirne, he did not state this at the trial of the election petition?]

9790. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you hear the question? The question is, how it occurred that you, a friend of Mr. O'Beirne's, did not state this at the trial of the election petition?—I wasn't examined at all. I was summoned, but not examined.

9791. Mr. GRIFFIN.—By whom were you summoned?—I got the usual summons.

9792. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—From whom?—Mr. Munster.

9793. Are you quite sure of that?—I am, your worship.

9794. And you were not examined?—I wasn't examined, your worship.

9795. Were you told by Michael Noonan before the election that he had got the £35?—Oh, decidedly, your worship.

9796. You knew it?—Yes, your worship, and that made me more confident and more secure, as I thought, of my money. He left two daughters and a wife here.

[Mr. Munster.—Please ask him why he did not communicate that fact to Mr. Grace while Noonan was here and able to contradict him.]

9797. Did you communicate that fact to Mr. Grace?—I did, your worship. The only valuable property he had was a house.

9798. Did you communicate to Mr. Grace the fact of Noonan having told you he had got £35?—No, your worship, I didn't. I thought it was what resources he had.

9799. Why did you not tell Mr. Grace that?—It didn't occur to me, your worship.

[Mr. Munster.—Please ask him if he discounted or cashed a cheque for £60 given by Mr. O'Beirne for Ryan and Hogan.]

9800. Did you hear of that cheque?—I did.

9801. Did you discount it?—On my solemn oath I didn't. If I saw Ryan and Hogan in difficulties; and if they presented it to me I would have discounted it never doubting that it was a solvent and good cheque.

9802. I presume you did not cash any cheque of Mr. O'Beirne's?—No. Any cheque, or bond, or bill, or any paper, any negotiable transaction whatever. I was never applied to, never asked.

[Mr. Munster.—Please ask him if he ever dealt for horses with a man named Pat. Ryan, as he says he did with cattle dealers.]

9803. Did you ever advance money to Patrick Ryan to purchase horses?—He left Cashel with £170 of mine in his pocket. He left Cashel to avoid the summons pending the petition here. Mr. Munster sent him money to buy a horse in the County Kilkenny. The horse was subsequently killed.

9804. Pat. Ryan. What Pat. Ryan is that?—He is a cattle dealer; he was doing business for me.

9805. Is he an elector?—He is, your worship. He voted for Mr. Munster.

9806. That is Patrick Ryan of Lady's Well?—Yes, your worship.

9807. You say Patrick Ryan owed you £170?—He was placed in the same position as Noonan.

9808. You had advanced money to him to buy cattle. Which was it cattle or horses?—Cattle, your worship.

9809. You say he left Cashel owing you money?—He did, your worship.

9810. By whom was he summoned—by Mr. Grace or Mr. Laffan?—I really don't know.

9811. And you say he went away?—Yes, to avoid the service of the summons, to the county Kilkenny.

9812. Do you state this on information?—Yes; he told me himself.

9813. Did he tell you that he went away to avoid the service of the summons?—Of course; he had no other object.

9814. Did he tell you he had done so?—He did; he said he wouldn't perjure himself for all the money in the bank.

9815. Did he tell you how much money he got from Mr. Munster?—I didn't ask him that, your worship.

9816. Did anything further occur about the horse?—The horse was killed.

9817. Have you been paid the £165?—Every shilling of it.

[Mr. Munster.—Please ask him if he means Pat. Ryan had actually got the money in his pocket or owed him that sum].

9818. When you say that Pat. Ryan had £165 of your money in his pocket, do you mean that it was a balance due of previous transactions, or that you had paid him £165?—That is bulk money I gave him to go to a fair on one particular occasion.

9819. On what occasion?—He was away from me about three weeks or a month.

9820. That does not tell when you gave him the money. Was it in 1868 or 1869 you gave him the £165?—It was before the election petition was to be tried.

9821. Between the election and the petition?—Yes, your worship.

9822. What fair did you give it to him to go to?—I couldn't tell; I forget now.

9823. Did you give it to him for the purpose of enabling him to go away to avoid the summons?—No; but for the purpose of buying cattle. He had the money two or three weeks before.

9824. Before he was summoned?—Yes; he couldn't be summoned, he left.

[Mr. Munster.—Please ask him if Pat. Ryan told me that he hadn't £16 or £20 to buy a horse at that fair would it be true.]

9825. If Pat Ryan told Mr. Munster that he wanted £16 or £20 for the purpose of buying a horse—that he was short £16 or £20—would that be true?—I really, your worship, couldn't tell.

9826. Was the £165 you gave him for the purpose of purchasing cattle?—Decidedly.

9827. Would he have been justified in applying any of it to the purchase of horses?—He may, your worship, on any description of cattle, or goats, or donkeys, or anything he chose.

9828. It was for general investment in cattle of any kind?—Yes.

9829. Mr. Munster.—Will he pledge his oath that on that particular occasion Pat Ryan didn't go to Cahir?—Witness.—I couldn't tell, your worship. I had a man in Liverpool, another in Manchester, and people in Scotland about everywhere.

9830. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you know anything of his movements after he left Cashel?—I heard he was selling convenient in the county Kilkenny. He bought a horse; I heard that Mr. Munster actually intended to sue him for the value of the horse. Ryan had some demand against Mr. Munster as a set-off against the value of the horse. I only heard so, your worship.

Mr. Munster.—I should like to ask him if he knows a woman commonly known as Ansty Scully.

Mr. Grace.—I want to know whether Mr. Munster can command this court. We, the inhabitants of Cashel, will have to pay the expense of this Commission, and I don't see that it should be prolonged by Mr. Munster, owing to whom it is held; and if I make an observation, I don't see why I should be snapped at by Mr. Munster.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—The Commissioners here will exercise their discretion, and will not be influenced by anything but the sound exercise of their judgment. They will receive questions from Mr. Munster or from you, or from any person. Our object here is to sift the transactions of the past election to the very bottom, and we will accept questions that we think will aid us, from any person, and will put them. Mr. Munster has asked us to put questions, and we have put such questions as we thought pertinent to the inquiry; and we have refused to put some that we thought not pertinent. We will accept questions from you, from Mr. Munster, or from any person in the court. Our object is to gain information, and with that object we will receive a question from any person that requests it.

Mr. Grace.—The reason I object is that I think he put questions not pertinent, and to give annoyance.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I would not allow any question to be put in any way if I did not believe it was a legitimate one, and likely to gain information for us; and when you were interfering at that time, you drowned my voice, in addressing Mr. Munster, to know if that question had anything to say to the election. If you had just remained quiet, you would have found that I was taking the very course that you think we ought to take.

Mr. Grace.—The longer the inquiry is prolonged the more we will suffer.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You said something about your being snapped at.

Mr. Grace.—Not by you.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I did not understand it as such. But if you or any person is interfered with in making any suggestion to the Commissioners, mention the matter to me, and we have full power to deal with any person, no matter who he is, who interferes with our duties in court.

Mr. Grace.—I do not mean to interfere beyond giving evidence in court.

Mr. Munster.—I submit that whether I asked a question pertinent or impertinent it is for you to decide. Mr. Grace has no right to give audible expression to his dissent or dissatisfaction in that way.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I want to know, Mr. Munster, what your question has to do with the inquiry. Has it anything to do with our inquiry?

Mr. Munster.—I think it may have.

9831. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I must see how it has. Do you know (to witness) this person Mr. Munster has named?—I didn't catch the name.

Mr. Munster.—The woman that was making a disturbance in court the other day.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you see that weak-minded woman?

Mr. Munster.—That is the very question I wish to ask him.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Will you give me some clue as to how it will be in the least degree pertinent to the inquiry?

Mr. Munster.—That person, whether mad naturally, or only under the influence of stimulants, took a very prominent part against me in the election. I wish the question to be put, which I think Mr. Phelan is very likely to know, whether that woman got any money, and if so, what money to his knowledge at this election?

9832. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know of her having got any money?—Witness.—I only paid £1 17*s.* to get her clothes out of pawn on Saturday last.

9833. Do you know of her having got any money? Did you give her any money, or do you know of her having got any money at the election?—I heard Mr. Vincent Scully gave her five shillings, your worship. I didn't hear Mr. Munster gave her any money; I know she applied to him.

9834. Do you know of any other person giving her money than Mr. Vincent Scully?—I heard he gave her five shillings. She is a servant and does business for me. I gave her £1 17*s.* in payment of her wages. She only comes backward and forward and does business for me. I only have her as an object in place of anything else.

9835. Do you know of her having taken any part in the election at all?—She was roaring and bawling amongst the mob, putting down Mr. Munster, and shouting for O'Beirne and Scully.

9836. Mr. GRIFFIN.—She is able to do some work for you?—Yes; she is very strong.

9837. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Then she was no more than a member of a mob, roaring and screeching, and very often going into violence?—Yes, your worship.

Edward Holland sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edward Holland.

9838. Are you the clerk of the telegraph office?—Yes, your worship.

9839. By whom are you employed?—By Mr. Munster.

9840. Does the telegraph belong to him?—Yes, from this to Thurles.

9841. Does the telegraph from this to Goold's Cross belong to him?—Yes; there is no station at Goold's Cross. We work from this to Thurles.

9842. Then you have no telegraph to Goold's Cross?—No.

[Mr. Munster.—There is a telegraph to Goold's Cross, where the wire runs to the station, and then along the line].

9843. Is there any other person employed in the office but you?—Yes; a messenger.

9844. That boy Tierney whom we have heard of?—Yes.

9845. Do you receive the telegrams you get?—Yes.

9846. Where did this come from [witness is handed telegram from Patrick Cunningham to Thomas Cunningham]?—I received it from Thurles. It came from Limerick.

9847. When you receive telegrams from the wires do you enter them in a book?—No, your worship.

9848. You only write them on those slips that you have prepared?—Yes.

9849. Do you keep no record of them?—No; no record. I send a copy to our head office in Dublin—a copy of that telegram—a copy of all telegrams received.

9850. Are you in communication with the head office in Dublin?—No; with Thurles. I send them by post every fortnight.

9851. Do they lie in Thurles or do they go on?—I send them to Dublin, and they are sent from that to Liverpool.

TENTH DAY.

9852. How does that come?—I do not mean that I send them back by telegraph. I send copies of the telegrams by post.

9853. I understand very well. Do you make a duplicate of each message as you get it?—Yes.

9854. And you send that duplicate to Thurles by post, and it gets to Dublin, and thence to Liverpool?—Yes.

9855. How is it that it goes to Liverpool? Are you in connexion with the branches in Ireland whence telegrams go to Liverpool?—The line from this to Thurles belongs to Mr. Munster, but the accounts go to the company.

9856. Do you not keep any record then of your messages?—I only keep a record of the messages that I send from this office. I only put down the station to, and the charge. I do not put down the names from or to, or anything else.

9857. When persons go to your office they have to write on one of those ordinary telegraph forms?—Yes.

9858. Is that preserved?—I send them to Dublin, and they are sent to Liverpool. I think they are destroyed after three months.

9859. Are you speaking of telegrams sent from your office?—Yes; I'm not quite sure, but I think I heard they are destroyed after three months.

9860. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you keep no record of the hour you receive the telegrams?—No; I put down the hour I receive it on the duplicate.

9861. Do you send out a docket with the messenger to bring back, certifying the hour he delivered it?—Yes, that is put on the back of the message. It is gummed on the duplicate that I keep.

9862. When did you send your last fortnightly bundle of those telegrams to Thurles? You send them every fortnight; when was the last fortnightly bundle sent?—The last accounts were made up to the 30th September. That was on Thursday, I think, and I did not send them until Monday, for I had to wait to get forms to make them out.

9863. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Have you got the telegrams that you received since the 30th September?—Yes.

9864. Have you got the messages that were given to you for transmission since the 30th September?—Yes.

9865. Do you tell me you believe this [Patrick Cunningham's telegram] did come from Limerick?—Yes.

9866. Did you send any telegram lately, do you recollect, from anyone to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, I did not.

9867. Or to Dr. Laffan of Dublin?—Yes, I sent telegrams to Dr. Laffan.

9868. Have you got these telegrams?—Yes.

9869. Where are they?—In the office.

9870. Go for them if you please, and produce them; bring all the telegrams that you have sent.

9871. Mr. MOLLOY.—Go for them?—The company, I think—I should get an order from them.

9872. We will send you to gaol if you do not bring them.

9873. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You are directed by the Commissioners to produce all the telegrams. I am quite sure that you do not mean to disobey their order, and I suppose that any hesitation shown on your part to produce the telegrams is from uncertainty whether you are bound to obey us or not?—Yes, I only wish to show I am bound to secrecy.

9874. I know that. I may tell you that I have seen Mr. Sangier, the Secretary of the Telegraph Company, do what you are now required to do. He came up on an election petition in Sligo, and in the same way he told the court that he was bound to secrecy, but it did not avail him. He was obliged to produce all the telegrams. You must produce all the telegrams. Now, having been informed that, you are bound to obey. Look at me; do not look about the court. Having now told you that you are bound by law to obey me, if you do not produce the telegrams I shall have to send you to prison?—I will produce those that I can.

9875. That is exactly what you should do. I have explained to you the necessity that there is on your part. You understand that you are to bring up all the telegrams that you have below?—All the telegrams that I have in the office.

9876. Yes, all the telegrams that you have there or anywhere else, sent and received, both?—Since the 30th September, I have no further telegrams.

9877. Bring all that you have. You mean to obey the order of the court?—Yes.

9878. Mr. GRIFFIN.—I do not know whether you have them all in the office or not. Bring all that you have got in your possession or control.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—I was going to say I have duplicates of the telegrams sent by me, and that I can produce them. I have not the slightest objection they should produce anything I sent.

Mr. Munster.—I have here every telegram I sent or received, on the table, except those in my pocket-book.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—I suggested to Mr. MacSheehy that I should like to have my telegrams produced, for I thought the Commissioners regarded with some distrust my readiness to produce my brother.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I must say, that as far as my brother Commissioners and myself have formed or expressed any opinion on the matter, we have said that you appear to give your evidence, and to answer every question, with the utmost candour.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—When you see the telegrams, I think you will be perfectly satisfied I am anxious to have him come here. I have a private letter from my brother—I do not wish it to appear on the short-hand writer's notes—and I offered to show it to Mr. MacSheehy.

Mr. MacSheehy.—And I declined.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—I am quite ready to show it to any of you to read it. There is in yesterday's Times an advertisement which I have here to show you. [Hands in the paper.]

Mr. GRIFFIN.—There was an advertisement in Saunders about it yesterday.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—I did not see that.

Mr. Henry Newport Barron.

Mr. Henry Newport Barron sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9879. I believe you are manager of the National Bank here?—Yes.

9880. I want to learn something about a bill that was paid in your bank, due on or about the 28th October?—The 29th October it was due.

9881. Then you know all about it?—It was due the 2nd November, and paid on the 29th October.

9882. John Sturdy and Daniel Foley were the names on the bill?—Yes.

9883. What was the date of it?—I have not the date of it.

9884. You have only the day it was due?—Yes.

9885. By whom was it drawn?—Mr. Sturdy, and a man named Foley.

9886. By whom was it accepted?—Accepted by Daniel Foley.

9887. For £25?—Yes, £25.

9888. When was it due?—It was due on the 2nd November.

9889. On what day do you say it was paid?—On the 29th October.

9890. I should say it is not a usual circumstance to pay a bill three days before it becomes due. Do you know who paid it?—Captain Graham.

9891. Are you able to tell me how he paid it—whether by notes or by a cheque?—Well, he had a cheque of Mr. O'Beirne's.

9892. For £25?—For £30.

9893. And did he apply that cheque to the payment of the bill, taking the remaining £5?—He got cash for the cheque, and paid the bill then—£25, and kept the balance.

9894. He paid the bill out of the cash?—Yes.

9895. Do you recollect any other bill belonging to

Mr. Graham in the bank about that time?—He has had a number of bills. He has a bill account there.

9896. It is hardly fair to ask you this without giving you notice of it: Had he a bill with the name of a man named Ryan on it, also a voter? Do you know a man named William Ryan of the Race-course?—Yes, I know a man of the name of William Ryan there.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.—It is John Ryan, a tall man, the poor-rate collector; John Ryan of the Race-course. He is called "Long John," I believe.

9897. You know that man?—Yes.

9898. He had a bill becoming due before the election?—Just before the election he had a bill current.

9899. Who paid that bill?—I couldn't say that. [Witness identifies the man known as John Ryan of the Race-course].

9900. There is another man, William Ryan of the Race-course. Perhaps you would have the goodness to look to your books, and see if William Ryan had a bill falling due just a little before the election?—There was a man named William Ryan that used to be in the bank with Mr. Meara, if that is the man you allude to.

9901. I want to find out about that bill: its date, and the parties. It was about the election, and it arose in Mr. Meara's evidence?—Would you wish me to go down now?

9902. If you please; or any time that is convenient to you if not convenient at present?—I will go now.

9903. Have you the particulars of John Ryan's bill?—There was one bill for £15, and another for £25. Please bring me particulars of any such bills falling due about the time of the election; and also bring me particulars of all bills Mr. Graham had falling due about the time of the election?—I will bring his account if you like.

9904. That will be the shortest way?—I will do that.

Edward Holland returns, and hands in telegrams; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edward Holland.

9905. These are all that you have got?—That I received.

9906. And all that you have found?—Yes.

9907. These are all that you have?—Yes.

9908. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked this question: have you any means of knowing how many telegrams Mr. Munster has received, and how many he has sent, since the opening of the telegraph?—No, your worship, unless the company wish to give the number.

Miss Mary Teresa Cormack sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Miss Mary Teresa Cormack.

9909. Do you know Mr. John Phelan?—Yes.

9910. Do you recollect his being in your father's house some short time before the election?—Yes.

9911. Do you recollect asking him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Asking him who would he support, I think.

9912. Do you recollect asking him if half notes for £40 would induce him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Certainly not.

9913. Did you ever say anything to him about money?—He came, and I am not in the habit of meeting him, being a person I do not wish to come in contact with, though he sometimes came to papa's house. I happened to be in the parlour, and being desirous Mr. Munster should have supporters, I asked, I think, everyone that came, what way he would vote—who would he support. He next said, "Miss Mary, I understand you are very intimate with Mr. Munster; I have some cattle to sell if he would buy them; he could put them to grass with your father," pointing to a field opposite the house, "and make you a present of them after the election." Mr. Patrick Laffan after that some time came in in the evening. I think I mentioned the fact to him just as it was, and I think he said from Phelan's character they didn't wish to have anything to say to him. He came afterwards, and spoke of people having houses to let, and that sort of thing; and I, knowing that his support was not wanted, said, in that kind of way, "I suppose you would let your room, too, and wouldn't £75 be a very nice thing for your room," at the same time very cautious not to say "they," or "I will give it," or anything of that sort, for I had not the money, nor ever offered it.

9914. He says you did not offer it at all?—No, I never did at any time.

9915. Do you recollect mentioning that to Mr. Patrick Laffan also?—Yes, and his reply again was, they did not wish to have anything to say to him.

9916. That is, that they were afraid of him and would not entrust him by making any offer?—That is the meaning of what Mr. Patrick Laffan said; I considered so.

9917. Now, Miss Cormack, when you spoke to him about houses being taken, did you understand that that was a way in which money was given to people for their votes?—I didn't know much about it, but I understood that; I suppose anyone's house that they took they expected to support them.

9918. And you understood that that was a mode of bribing a voter?—In fact he gave that to me to understand from the way he expressed himself, that they were taking houses for large sums. I never knew anything about it before.

9919. Was it he that began the conversation about taking houses?—Yes, repeatedly.

9920. Did you speak of this to anyone else but to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I said it to mamma and papa, in a jocose way.

9921. Did you speak of it to any of Mr. Munster's agents except Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I said something about it to Mr. Richardson, and he said he had nothing to say to that part of the business.

9922. To that branch of the business?—I may make a mistake as to his words.

9923. It is not necessary for you to say the exact words, but the purport of what he said and what you said. Did you mention it to anybody else?—I think not.

9924. Did you mention it to Mr. Leahy?—No, I do not think I did to Mr. Leahy.

9925. Did Mr. Laffan tell you to say anything to Mr. Phelan about it?—He did not.

9926. Did you ever mention it to Mr. Munster himself?—Never.

9927. You were on terms of intimacy with Mr. Munster?—Yes; perhaps a long time after the election I may have amused Mr. Munster by telling him something of the sort, which he laughed at.

9928. But you do not recollect telling him at the time?—Oh, certainly not.

9929. Was your mother present at any of those conversations?—Yes, I never had a conversation with him except in presence of mamma.

9930. I mean, when Mr. Phelan was present?—Oh, yes, I was never alone with him.

9931. And do you say that the beginning of anything producing a conversation of this kind was his reference to the cattle?—Yes.

9932. Do you recollect Mr. Patrick Laffan saying anything to you but that Mr. Phelan was from his character or something a person they were afraid to have anything to do with?—No, I do not remember his saying anything else.

TENTH DAY. October 14.

Miss Mary Teresa Cormack.

9933. Tell me if you got any hint—even a hint—towards authority to speak to Mr. Phelan?—Not the slightest, from any one.

9934. It was entirely of your own motion?—Altogether.

9935. You were very anxious Mr. Munster should be returned?—Very anxious.

9936. And gave him all the aid in your power?—Canvassed every one indiscriminately.

9937. Can you search your recollection Miss Cormack, and say whether, at any of those conversations, there was ever a sum of £40 mentioned?—Never to my recollection.

9938. Do you recollect his saying that £40 was nothing; that £100 or £200 was the sum?—I don't remember his saying £40, but I remember his saying £100. I don't know any conversation but about houses—I think it was in connexion with houses; I don't remember, it is so long ago.

9939. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say anything to him about half notes?—Yes, I said, "would you take half notes for your room?"

9940. Because he was not to be trusted with whole notes?—Certainly.

9941. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Now, Miss Cormack, Mr. Phelan tells us that he said, "those cattle might be put on grass on your father's land, and Mr. Munster make them a present to you after the election." That leads me to ask a question—a question which we are obliged from our duty to ask you, but which we would rather not—if you have received presents from Mr. Munster?—Very trifling ones, indeed, the most important not value for more perhaps than £2, a great many small ones.

9942. You, I believe, went to Dublin?—Yes, to a bazaar.

9943. With Mr. Munster's friends?—Yes.

9944. And also I believe to Cork?—Yes.

[Mr. John Phelan hands in in writing a question which he wishes to have asked].

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Any way that this question would be answered would not bear in the slightest way on this inquiry, therefore I will not put it.

9945. Mr. Phelan.—I think it is incumbent on me to mention one circumstance—that Cunningham, who was examined before you, was looking for me the day before the election to know where my cattle were—that Dr. Cormack wanted to buy my cattle.

9946. What Cunningham?—Mr. Phelan.—Thomas Cunningham that was examined here before you.

9947. Mr. Munster.—I want to ask Miss Cormack whether she did not go to Dublin with my wife, and I did not make presents to all the ladies who went?—Witness.—Yes, Mr. Munster was very kind.

9948. What Mr. Munster says is the case?—Yes.

Mr. Munster.—I have not heard the date of this transaction, and I wish you to ask Miss Cormack, to the best of her recollection, how often I saw her before the election.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—She may never have seen you at all; she was very anxious to serve you about the election; you were very fortunate in having such a fair advocate.

Mr. John Phelan.

Mr. John Phelan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9949. Now, Mr. Phelan, you say that Thomas Cunningham came to you?—Yes, your worship.

9950. When?—I think, to the best of my belief, the morning before the polling, to know where the cattle were that I had for sale; that Dr. Cormack came to know where the cattle were that I had for sale.

9951. That Dr. Cormack came to whom?—To him, to ask him where the cattle were that I had for sale.

9952. What did you say to that?—I gave him some ambiguous answer, your worship—that I had no cattle for sale.

John Ryan was called, but did not appear.

John Sturdy.

John Sturdy sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

9953. Mr. Sturdy, you are a voter, I believe, in Cashel?—Yes, sir.

9954. And you voted, I believe, for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

9955. Were you a voter in 1865?—I was, sir.

9956. For whom did you vote then?—Mr. O'Beirne.

9957. Your name was on a bill, I believe, with a man named Daniel Foley, for £25?—Yes.

9958. Was that accepted for his accommodation or a matter of business?—A matter of business—'twas an accommodation.

9959. An accommodation acceptance?—Yes.

9960. It was paid in the bank; did you pay it?—No.

9961. Were you ever called upon by anyone to pay it?—No.

9962. Do you know who paid it?—No.

9963. Did you ever hear who paid it?—No.

9964. You never heard who paid it?—No, I didn't.

9965. Did you ever ask Foley if he paid it?—I heard it was paid; that is all I know about it.

9966. Did you ever ask Foley who paid it?—No, I didn't; he told me it was paid.

9967. Did you ever ask him was it he that paid it?—I did not.

9968. That is very odd, now?—I don't think it is.

9969. Are you aware that I know who paid it?—It may be so; I never made any inquiry about it.

9970. Had you ever a talk with anyone about it?—No.

9871. You never had a talk with anyone about it at all?—No.

9972. Do you know Captain Graham?—I do.

9973. Had you never any conversation with him about it?—No, I hadn't.

9974. Had you a conversation with Captain Graham with reference to the election?—Why, he generally used to come backwards and forwards to my house, and we used to have some conversations about the election.

9975. Had you ever a convesration with Captain Graham as to money going on Mr. Munster's side?—No.

9976. Did you take an interest in Mr. O'Beirne's election?—I did.

9977. Had you anything to say to the sale of a house to Mr. Munster?—No, I had not.

9978. Did you ever get a cheque for any sum of money?—I did.

9979. For £80?—I did.

9980. What was it for?—For the purchase of a house.

9981. And did I not ask you had you anything to say to the sale of a house to Mr. Munster?—Mr. Laffan. 'Twas he that came about the sale of the house.

9982. Therefore you had something to do with it?—I had certainly.

9983. Tell me what you had to say to it?—What I had to say to it is, that O'Donnell, the tenant, I wanted him to purchase the house. There was other property convenient to it which also was sold; and I wanted O'Donnell, the tenant, to see if he could purchase it. He delayed for some time, and he could not accomplish it. So I understood then that Mr. Laffan was going to make an offer for it.

9984. When you wanted O'Donnell to purchase it he delayed for some time?—He did.

9985. Do you know where he would have got the money to purchase it?—I believe from his friends.

9986. Do you know their names?—No.

9987. Do you know the name of any person from whom he sought to get money to purchase the house?—I don't know; he never told me that they were going to do it.

9988. Did you ever go to anyone to try to get him to buy the house?—No.

9989. Did you never ask anyone to buy it except O'Donnell himself?—I think there was some parties came to me.

9990. Who were they?—I believe a man of the name of Geary.

9991. Is that Denis Geary?—Denis Geary, the shoemaker.

9992. He came to you, and he was about buying it. For whom was he about buying it?—I understood for himself.

9993. Did you ever know that Captain Graham was looking after it for anyone?—No.

9994. Or that he was talking of lending money to O'Donnell to buy it?—No.

9995. You never heard anything about it?—Never.

9996. A cheque was paid to you?—Yes.

9997. That was the purchase-money of the house?—Yes.

9998. Dr. Butler, of Thurles, was the owner, I believe?—I handed it over to him.

9999. Your own house was sold also, I believe?—No, Ferris's was.

10000. How long have you been an elector of Cashel, Mr. Sturdy?—Many years.

10001. You voted, I suppose, in 1859?—Yes.

10002. For Lanigan?—No.

10003. For whom?—Well, I don't recollect now. I believe—I don't know whether O'Beirne was a candidate.

10004. Lanigan, Hemphill, and Carden were the candidates?—Hemphill I voted for.

10005. Hemphill you voted for?—I didn't vote for him afterwards. I promised him I would.

10006. Did you vote for him in 1859?—No.

10007. For whom did you vote when the three candidates were Hemphill, Lanigan, and Carden?—Hemphill.

10008. Did you vote for any of them?—I might have voted for one.

10009. Who was that?—I believe I must have made a mistake—for Hemphill.

10010. Why did you say you must have voted for one?—Because I recollect that there was some party or another that I might have voted for.

10011. Whom did you promise to vote? You said you promised somebody and did not vote for him afterwards?—I promised Counsellor Hemphill.

10012. You said you did not vote for him afterwards?—I can't recollect now, but his address at first pleased me very much, and then he changed it. Afterwards I believe I changed from him. It must be that way as far as I can recollect now.

10013. Do you know of any money having been paid to any voter on the Commons at the last election?—No, I don't.

10014. Understand me now. I do not mean to say you saw the money paid. I want to know do you know of any money having been paid to anyone?—Why, there were several rumours.

10015. Did anyone tell you he got money?—I don't recollect they did. They were very cautious about it.

10016. Do you know of anyone asking money?—No.

10017. Did anyone come to you to interfere with you, and try to get his house taken, or to get money in any way?—No, not his house.

10018. Or to get money in any way?—No.

10019. Now, Mr. Sturdy, that was a curious answer you gave me when I asked you did anyone come to get his house taken, or to get money in any way. You said: "No, not his house"?—Why, you said his house.

10020. But I made my question very general. Did you know of anyone coming to you to get money in any way?—I believe Daniel Foley came to me, as far as I can recollect now. I think he came to me to interfere with him and Mr. Johnson, who was here, to know if I could do anything for him.

10021. With Mr. Johnson?—With Mr. Johnson?

10022. That was not the last election. Mr. Johnson was dead?—That was, I believe, '65.

10023. At the last election I ask you?—No. There was no person came to me.

10024. Did anyone offer you money?—No.

10025. It is very strange. You seem to be an exception to all the rest of Cashel nearly. Are you sure Foley came to you to try and get money in 1865?—He wanted me to interfere, and to see him.

10026. With whom?—With Mr. Johnson.

10027. Did he come in 1868 when a bill was falling due—£25? And were you not at all uneasy that he might not be able to pay it?—I wasn't one bit uneasy.

10028. And he never came to you to say anything about that bill, or interfere, or do anything for him?—He told me a good while afterwards.

10029. I did not ask you about a good while afterwards. I asked you did he come about a bill to get it settled, or paid, or anything like that?—No; he didn't.

10030. And you say no other man did?—No.

10031. Do you know of any money having been given to anyone?—No.

10032. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did anyone ever pay you rent for Daniel Foley?—No; he always paid himself.

10033. Did anyone ever offer to pay you rent for him?—No.

10034. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What rent do you collect in the Commons?—His holding.

10035. Any more?—No. Oh, yes; there is another man.

10036. Who is the other man?—Hickey.

10037. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is he a voter?—He is, sir.

10038. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know did John Hickey get any sort of inducement or promise?—No.

10039. Do you say you do not know?—No.

10040. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What is his Christian name?—John.

10041. Mr. MOLLOY.—What did you tell him when he spoke to you about interfering with Mr. Johnson to get money?—I told him I would have nothing to do with it. That was my answer to him.

Thomas Cunningham brought up by the Bridewell-keeper; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Cunningham.

10042. Now, Mr. Cunningham, you recollect where we were the last day you were here?—I do, sir.

10043. You recollect that man that was stopping in your house?—I do, sir.

10044. And do you recollect that persons went up into the room to him there?—I do, sir.

10045. Tell me the names of the persons whom you saw going into the room to him there?—Up as far as the door, sir; Denis Ryan and William Ryan, and Michael — I forget.

10046. Hally, is it?—Hally, sir, and John Moloney went in passed me in.

10047. Did you see anybody else go to him there?—I can't recollect any person going in now, sir.

10048. Did you see anyone of the name of Cummins?—He didn't go in that day.

10049. Any other day?—He came to the shop to me one day. He told me, "If anyone else gets more than £30, haven't I a right to get it?" "Don't ask me them questions," says I; "I know nothing about it."

TENTH DAY.
October 14.
Thomas Cunningham.

10050. That is the son of Richard?—Yes, sir.

10051. Did he tell you he got £30?—He didn't tell me; but he said, "If anyone got more, I would have a right to get it." "I know nothing about that," says I; "don't ask me about it."

10052. We heard that this man's name was Luke Larkin. Did you see anybody else there with him?—Larkin, sir?

10053. Yes?—At my place, sir?

10054. Yes?—No; but I brought to my mind since a man that lives down near Thurles, named Darmody. I can't bring to my mind his name, I can't recollect him.

10055. What was John Darmody doing there?—He used to be inside in the room, sir, when he was with him.

10056. He used to be there with Larkin?—I couldn't say Larkin was in my place.

10057. But he used to be there with the other man?—I know he was there at all events.

10058. With the other man in the room?—The place was locked with them inside, sir, and no one could go in there.

10059. Were there two of them there?—I suspect there were two, sir, that time; I went up with the bill.

10060. What bill?—That little docket that was in the envelope.

10061. That Ryan gave you?—Yes, sir; I gave it in to them.

10062. Are you sure you saw Darmody there in the room?—I saw him in the room.

10063. Are you sure whether Darmody's name is John?—I think his name is John.

10064. Do you know anyone in this town named Darmody?—I do, sir.

10065. What is his name?—James Darmody, I think, sir.

10066. Is he a voter?—I don't know whether he is, sir, or not; I believe not.

10067. Did you ever see a man named James Darmody there?—No, sir.

10068. Do you know Michael Darmody?—I don't know anyone of that name, sir.

10069. Did you ever supply any money to your son, or to any of these men?—No, sir, I didn't.

10070. If you tell the whole truth, no harm can come to you for having done it?—I didn't, sir; I never gave them any money.

10071. You never gave money to your son, or Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, sir; I didn't.

10072. Now, perhaps you could recollect if your son, Patrick Cunningham, was at home since we commenced this inquiry?—I am told he was, sir, but I didn't see him.

[Patrick Cunningham here stands up, and says, "I am in court, sir, since eleven o'clock—I am his son."]

Witness.—A man that was put in twenty-four hours last night with me, told me he seen him driving down in Cahir.

10073. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever see Mr. Dudley Byrne in your place?—I didn't, sir, to my knowledge.

10074. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know Mr. John Phelan?—I do, sir.

10075. Do you recollect going to him with a message about some cattle of his that he had for sale, the morning before the election—do you recollect going with any message to him? Did you say to him that Dr. Cormack sent you on a message about cattle, or that Dr. Cormack was asking you about them?—I think Dr. Cormack was asking me about some heifers Phelan had, but I don't recollect I went to Phelan about it.

10076. Do you recollect what Dr. Cormack said?—I can't recollect. I think he said Phelan had some heifers and he wanted to buy them. He talked to me at the door about them.

10077. Are you sure that he did?—I'm sure that he did, sir, talk about the heifers.

10078. You do not recollect how many he spoke of?—I don't, sir.

10079. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was that the day before the election?—I can't recollect what day, sir; I know Mr. Cormack told me he bought some heifers on the Saturday, I believe, previous to it.

10080. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you recollect any other persons that went up to the room?—No, sir, I can't recollect any other persons, but what I say.

10081. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Are you sure you saw Michael Hally go into that room?—I know he came into the shop at any rate. Whether he went up I can't say.

10082. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever see a man of the name of John O'Brien there?—No, sir. He came into my shop and went out again.

10083. Why did he come in?—He was passing the door and came in. I think I offered him a treat and he wouldn't take it.

10084. Did he ask for anyone?—No, sir, he was only speaking to myself, and turned out again.

Mr. Henry N. Barron.

Mr. Henry N. Barron returns; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10085. Mr. Barron, have you those particulars?—On the 25th November, William Ryan and Tom Carew, indorsed by Andrew Meara, for £25.

10086. What about Captain Graham's bills?—His account is here. It was due on the 25th November, and paid in cash on the 21st.

10087. By whom was it paid?—Our books do not tell that you know.

10088. What other notes?—Another bill, Tom Carew and William Ryan due 30th November.

10089. What William Ryan?—William Ryan of the Racecourse.

10090. Is that the same William Ryan?—The same William Ryan.

10091. What is the amount?—£25.

10092. Due on the 13th?—Due on the 13th, and renewed on the 12th to the widow, Mrs. Carew.

10093. The other?—These are all William Ryan's.

10094. You mentioned two?—Yes, two bills of William Ryan; there is also, John Ryan, £35, dated November 19th, due 22nd February, and renewed 24th September, indorsed by Captain Graham.

10095. Was Mr. Graham's name on the original bill as well as on the renewal?—Yes, on both.

10096. Now pass up Captain Graham's account if you please?—Yes [hands in his ledger and explains the account to the Commissioners].

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We do not wish to expose a gentleman's private affairs. There is no evidence in the account.

Thomas Cunningham.

Thomas Cunningham comes forward.

10097. Witness.—When you asked me about the money for my son or Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir, was it to influence voters? I got money though.

10098. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What money did you get? Did you get money?—I did, sir, for myself.

10099. From whom?—From my son.

10100. You told us that before?—I thought it was to influence voters you wanted to know from me.

Patrick Cunningham sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Patrick Cunningham.

10101. You have been away from home and avoiding appearing as a witness?—No, not avoiding.

10102. Be candid, now?—I really am, sir.

10103. It is very necessary for you to tell all the truth?—I will, sir.

10104. Is it not the truth that you were keeping away to avoid a summons?—No, sir, not to avoid.

10105. Were you served?—No, I was not served; I was not.

10106. Were you from home?—I was, sir; I went on business on last Monday week.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Mortimer Shea.

10107. When did you serve the summons on Mr. Cunningham?—October the 6th, sir.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Patrick Cunningham.

10108. Did you not know that a summons had been left at your house?—Not until, I believe, Friday or Saturday.

10109. Were you not back here in Cashel?—I was on Thursday night; about 8 or 9 o'clock I passed through Cashel.

10110. Did you know then that a summons had been served for you?—Not at that time, that I came through Cashel.

10111. Were you speaking with Mr. Laffan?—I went up to his office.

10112. Did Mr. Laffan tell you that you were wanted here?—He didn't say which, sir, I think; he really did, I believe; but not that I can think of; Mr. Laffan said to put no questions to him; that he didn't want to say anything to me, and he left the office and went out.

10113. Did Mr. Laffan advise you to come here and give evidence?—I don't know that he did; I disrecollect it.

10114. You do not recollect that he did?—I mentioned in his office that I intended to go to the races in Limerick; that I didn't see that I was so much wanted; some parties owed me money, and I thought I would be back in time.

10115. If Mr. Laffan swore on his solemn oath that he did speak to you, and advised you to come here and tell everything you knew, would he be perjuring himself?—I didn't do that.

10116. Would he be perjuring himself in swearing that?—I didn't hear him say that.

10117. You did not hear him advise you to come and give evidence?—He advised me.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

10118. Did you, Mr. Laffan?—Yes; I said the first thing to him, "You have no business to come near me." After that I told him—"You are better come and attend the Court; I will have my brother there."

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. — Patrick Cunningham.

10119. You knew you were wanted, and you went away?—I did, sir.

10120. Now, Mr. Cunningham, you have not commenced well?—I really thought I would be back in time enough after the races.

10121. Now, listen to me; you have not commenced well; you have not been candid in saying you did not stay away to avoid coming here?—Well, certainly not.

10122. Did you not speak to Murrin?—I met him in Cahir.

10123. Did you not tell him in Cahir that you were staying away not to be here? Perhaps you are not aware of what has come out in evidence here. It has come out in evidence that you are deeply compromised in illegal acts with reference to the last election; numerous acts of such a character that you may be indicted for every one of them, and if found guilty you may get for each of them two years' imprisonment. You stand just now in an exceedingly unpleasant position I must say. I do not know if you have read in the papers that I have said here to several witnesses, that no matter how deeply they may be implicated, no matter how illegal their acts have been with reference to the election, if they candidly tell the Commissioners here all they know, if they avoid prevarication, if they avoid an attempt to conceal anything, by telling honestly and candidly all they know, we have power to give a certificate that will free them from all responsibility for their past actions except for perjury—and that we cannot free you of. Now listen still to me. As you have only recently come here, and as you are called up here now without, perhaps, reflection on your part, I do not purpose to pursue your examination further at present. You can retire now and go home; search all the documents and accounts that you have; put down on paper the names of all the persons with whom you had any dealings at the last election; search your memory; take plenty of time to think of all that you have done; come here to-morrow morning prepared to tell me all that you know without withholding or concealing anything; and if you do, if we find that you have told us all that you know, we shall be in a position afterwards to give you a certificate that will enable you to stay in this country without fear or apprehension for any past transactions. But it will not do when you come up to-morrow merely to give evidence and tell us of such cases as we know already. If you conceal anything which comes out on subsequent examination it will not do to tell us afterwards that you forgot it, because as I have already said you have not commenced very well. I sincerely hope that you will consider your position. You are a young man; you are I believe in a very respectable position in this town; you seem a young man of very great intelligence, and you may be likely to raise yourself to a very good position by your industry and energy, and it would be a great pity to have your prospects blighted at the commencement of your career, and to be a sorrow and trouble to your father and every one connected with you. I give you to to-morrow morning to think on all you have to say, to search all accounts and documents that will assist you, and then to come and tell me all you know and so save yourself from the consequences of the lamentable position in which you now are.

TENTH DAY.
October 14.

Luke Larkin sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Luke Larkin.

10124. Larkin, you live at the village of Templetuohy?—At Templetuohy.

10125. You were here during the last election?—Yes.

10126. Who directed you to come here?—Captain Dudley Byrne.

10127. Was it by a letter?—In person he introduced me to another young man that I came with, but he didn't come with me.

10128. Where did he introduce you to him?—In Thurles; and I came with him from Thurles in here with a man I knew afterwards to be a man of the name of Patrick Laffan, not knowing him at the time.

10129. Where in Thurles did he introduce you to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—On the street.

10130. I asked—but did not catch your answer—did Mr. Byrne write to you to come to Thurles, or did he tell you by word of mouth?—He wrote to me, but he was with me in Thurles.

10131. Have you the letter that he wrote to you?—No. I couldn't say whether he wrote to me or a messenger. 'Twas on a Sunday, and I couldn't say but 'twas a messenger that came to me.

10132. When you went to Thurles and saw this person whom you afterwards learned to be Patrick Laffan, did Captain Byrne tell you what he wanted you for? Did he only introduce you to Mr. Pat Laffan?—He only introduced me to Mr. Patrick Laffan, and told me nothing about what I was about to do. He never told me anything in the world more, nor I didn't know coming to Cashel with Mr. Patrick Laffan. He never introduced a word to me until the day afterwards. I knew nothing in the world, but I knew I was coming something about the election, but didn't know of what it was.

10133. Did you come in from Thurles with Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes.

10134. And you say you didn't know anything of what you were to do until the day after?—No.

10135. Before I enter into this part of your examination I wish to know if you were in court when I was speaking to Patrick Cunningham?—I was, your worship.

10136. Then you heard me tell Cunningham that no matter how deeply he was involved, if he candidly told the truth, we can give a certificate that will free him from all consequences. Did you hear that?—Yes.

10137. You understand that if you tell me the entire truth, we can give you a certificate that will free you from all consequences?—Yes, sir, I will have nothing from your worship.

10138. I believe you are a postmaster?—Yes.

10139. You have an additional reason, then, for telling the entire truth. When you came here where did you go to?—To Mr. Cunningham's.

10140. By Mr. Patrick Laffan's directions, I suppose?—Yes.

10141. Were you before that acquainted with Cashel?—I believe I wasn't in it for fifteen years except one time coming through at a fair; not acquainted with Cashel.

10142. You say you got instructions on the second day what you were to do?—Yes.

10143. From whom did you get these instructions?—From Patrick Cunningham.

10144. What were you to do? What did he tell you?—He told me—he gave me a lot of notes, bills, and he gave me money.

10145. Were they blank bills?—They were filled.

10146. Were there names in them?—There were.

10147. Just tell me what they were?—"Three months after date I promise to pay" such a man—whether it was Thomas Callaghan or Carthy I can't recollect.

10148. Michael M'Carthy, was it not?—I couldn't say; I think it was Callaghan.

10149. Well?—"The sum of £30 or £35," as the case stood.

10150. Were some of them £30, and some £35?—Yes, sir; £30, and some £35.

10151. How many of those did he give you?—I couldn't tell, but I had more than was necessary I considered.

10152. You might give me some idea as to the number—did you get 30, or 40, or 50, or 60, or how many?—I think I got about between twenty and thirty—about—I think about that. It might be more: something that way.

10153. You said you got some money from him also?—Yes, from Patrick Cunningham.

10154. How much did you get from him?—I got £120 in the first instance.

10155. Where did you get that £120?—In Pat Cunningham's house.

10156. When did you get it?—The first day that I was after coming there. When he gave me the instructions he gave me that much money, and the notes.

10157. How many days was that before the polling?—That was, I think, on Monday, whatever day the polling was.

10158. That was on Monday?—It was on Monday.

10159. And the polling was in the same week?—It was in the same week.

10160. It was on Friday?—Monday or Tuesday; I couldn't say.

10161. Did you get more money from him afterwards?—Yes.

10162. How much more money did you get?—I got some from him, and some from Mr. Laffan, and from —, from both of them.

10163. Can you say how much you got from both of them afterwards?—Entirely?

10164. Yes?—£802.

10165. Does that £802 include the £120?—All I ever got from first to last.

10166. Then £802 was all you got altogether?—Altogether.

10167. And you got some of that from Patrick Cunningham and some from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes.

10168. Are you able to say how much you got from each; for instance, how much did you get from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I couldn't say.

10169. Did you keep an account of the money you got?—I did, your worship.

10170. What did you do with that account?—I have a scrap of it here, and were it not for that scrap I could give no account. I believe it can hardly be understood except by myself to read it. I will tell you how I got the sums of money: I got £120, £100——

10171. Have you got the names of the persons from whom you got them?—No; the different persons I have not.

10172. Go on now?—£120, 100, £29, £91, £90, £50, £91, £15, £50, £11, £120.

10173. You are under a mistake. That does not make £802, it only makes £767, so that you left something out?—Well, I will read them over again, £120, £100, £29, £91, £90, £50, £91, £15, £35——

10174. You left out that £35 before, that makes it £802. Did you take that account at the time you got the money?—Yes.

10175. Just show me the book [witness hands in his little book]. You have a date to this. Is that the date that you got the money first? You say "16th November," here at the top?—November it must be, sir. [Book returned to witness.]

10176. I see that you have a list there of the persons to whom you paid away this money?—Yes, your worship.

10177. Give me that list now. Commence with the first payment you made. What is the first name?—Thomas Dwyer, £30; William Ryan, £30; Robert Cashen I think, 'tis blotted, but I'm not certain, 'tis like Cashen, £30; Pat. Griffin, £30; James Cummins, £35.

10178. What was the first name you called to me?—"Thomas Dwyer," and it looks like "Francis Dwyer," 'tis in a blotted form; 'tis either Thomas or Francis.

10179. Would it stand either for Francis or Thomas. Show it to me?—'Tis more Francis I think, when I look closer at it now.

10180. It is quite plain—Francis. Go on now. James Cummins is the last you gave me?—Michael Noonan, £30; Richard Butler, £30. The next is some Gleeson, in trust for Croagh, half notes for £30.

10181. Do you recollect a man coming to you for money there, and refusing to sign a note; bringing a note to you and refusing to sign the bill? He brought a letter to you?—Yes.

10182. Do you recollect his refusing to sign the bill?—I know there did a man refuse to sign a bill and went out.

10183. And carried away the letter with him; do you recollect that?—I don't recollect. It might occur of course; when he brought the letter in his hand, and didn't sign the note, of course he kept the letter—it was his, not mine.

10184. Have you any Christian name for Gleeson there?—No, sir; I only heard the name afterwards, in the course of time, and in order to check the case, I make the remark in it. I only entered it, half-notes for £30, to a young man I don't know. I was ordered to give it to him.

10185. Who ordered you to give it to him?—Pat. Cunningham.

10186. Was it half notes you said?—Half notes.

10187. Do you recollect the young man?—No.

10188. Do you think you would know him again?—I wouldn't.

10189. Did the young man bring a note from Pat. Cunningham, or did Pat. Cunningham tell you to give him half notes?—Verbally, I think, he told me.

10190. Verbally?—Yes.

10191. What did you do with the second half notes?—I kept them, of course, until I gave them to Cunningham in the course of time.

10192. You gave them up to Cunningham afterwards?—No; I didn't give the other halves, or Cunningham may have them; I have no recollection of it; if I only gave the half notes—whether it is one or the other I don't know.

10193. Do you know where you gave him these half notes?—It must be at Cunningham's.

10194. What is the next after the half notes to a young man by the verbal order of Pat. Cunningham?—Patrick Fitzgerald, £30.

10195. Where did you give that money?—I think at Cunningham's.

10196. What is the next?—Edward Hogan, £30.

10197. Is it "Edward," or "Edmond?"—"Edward" I put down—whether he was "Edmond," or "Edward" on the book I don't know.

10198. Do you say about Hogan you do not know whether it is "Edward," or "Edmond?"—I don't know whether it is.

10199. How did you make out his name? Did you see it in any paper?—No.

10200. How did you learn his name?—It must be that Cunningham had told me his name, and when he told me I only checked it off.

10201. Go on now?—James Darmody, £30; John Dwyer, £30; Jeremiah Connolly, £70.

10202. Are they in your own handwriting?—Yes.

10203. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did every man sign those bills except this one man Croagh?—No.

10204. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Connolly sign a note?—Yes.

10205. What is the next after his name?—John Reilly, £30; Edmond Foley, £35.

10206. [Mr. Grace, did he poll for you?—Mr. Pierce Grace.—I think so.]

10207. What is the next?—A man I didn't know, £35, sir; no name; not named.

10208. Do you recollect how you paid it?—I do, by order of Pat. Cunningham.

10209. Where did you pay it?—I consider 'tis at Corcoran's hotel. I went there for the last two days.

10210. Did he pass any note?—No. If he did I would have a name, of course.

10211. What is the next?—Pat. Laffan, £7.

10212. You paid Mr. Pat. Laffan?—Yes, £7.

10213. What is the next?—To Pat. Laffan, £10.

10214. Next?—William Brennan, £35.

10215. What is the next?—To Pat. Laffan, £35.

10216. Next?—To a man unknown, £35.

10217. By whose order did you give that?—Pat. Laffan's order.

10218. What is the next?—To Patrick Croagh, £10.

10219. Patrick Croagh, is it?—Yes; it was for Pat. Croagh, I think. It was to Mr. Laffan I gave it. I wrote "sand" over it, it was to pay for sand.

10220. What is the next?—To a man Pat. Laffan ordered me to give £30; no note.

10221. You do not know who the man was?—No.

10222. Would you know any of those men if you saw them again?—I don't know that I would.

10223. Do you recollect when you gave that £30 where was it that you gave it?—Oh, yes; I gave that £30 in Corcoran's hotel. He desired me to give it to a man that came in.

10224. What is the next?—£35 to a person down street—down the street—some man told me, I don't know whether it was Pat. Laffan or Cunningham that told me, to give it to him.

10225. Where did you give it to him?—I gave it to him at the house.

10226. Where?—Down the street, some place.

10227. Whom did you give it to—was it to a man or a woman?—To a woman.

10228. Was it £35?—£35.

10229. You went into a room and laid it on a table?—I left it on a table and walked out again.

10230. And you saw the woman there?—A woman standing there.

10231. Had you any talk with her?—I had no conversation with her about this or that, nor with any other person that ever got a shilling.

10232. What is the next?—Thomas Looby, £30.

10233. Had you any more money than that?—Yes.

10234. How much?—I had £45 on hands, and I handed it over to Patrick Cunningham.

10235. That makes but £792—that left £10 in your hands, out of £802. How did you come to have £45 balance?—Well, now, we'll go over the items again, perhaps. I kept nothing on hands—I know I hadn't a shilling on hands.

10236. Did you get any money back from anyone?—No; but when I was going home I hadn't a shilling to take me home. I asked Mr. Pat. Laffan for money to take me home and waited a day for it, and he gave me £3.

10237. Did you get any money back of any that you paid?—Of any that I paid? No.

10238. You said you gave back £45?—I have it entered here; and, were it not for having the entry made, I wouldn't have it.

10239. You have given us an account of £792. That would leave only £10 in your hands out of £802. You got £802. You have given us an account of £792; that leaves a balance of only £10 out of £802. I want to know how you came to have £45, instead of only £10?—There must be a thirty-five entered here that I must have returned back to Cunningham, in one of these persons. Somehow or other it must be, for I know I hadn't a single shilling on hands, and I know I gave that much money to him in the latter end.

10240. Now, listen to me, do you understand what I say? You got £802 and you have given me a list of £792, that would leave only £10 in your hands as balance of the £802. You told me you paid back to Patrick Cunningham a balance of £45; that makes £35 in your hands more than you account for here. How do you account for that?—I must double in, that thirty-five, some way or other.

10241. Perhaps I could help you. Did you go back to the house down street where you left the money?—No.

10242. You only went there once?—I only went there once.

TENTH DAY.
October 14.
Luke Larkin.

10243. Well then you must go over the list again. Perhaps you got £35 from somebody else?—I will go over it again. There is £35 here of half notes; and I can't say that I ever paid that.

10244. Do you count the £35 half notes that you had, as money that you handed back to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—That is what I considered; that I got the half notes, and gave it back to Mr. Pat Laffan.

10245. Did you give half notes for £35 back to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes.

10246. And did you count that as part of the £45?—Out of the whole payments; but the £45 in the latter end I gave him. I know I had that £45.

10247. Were the £45 all whole notes?—They were all whole notes—notes and gold.

10248. It was to Pat Cunningham you gave back the £45?—Yes.

10249. Where did you give it back to him?—I can't say whether it is at his own place, or at the hotel.

10250. As each of these men came to you did you get an order from either Cunningham or Mr. Laffan? I got an order always from Cunningham.

10251. From Cunningham?—From Cunningham.

10252. Did you pay any money on Mr. Pat. Laffan's order?—I did, of course, what he ordered me in the items that are remarked there.

10253. There are only two altogether:—"A man unknown, per Patrick Laffan, twice: one £30," and the other "£35"?—Yes; and to himself £10 and £7.

10254. Quite right. Were all the rest paid on Cunningham's order?—On Cunningham's order.

10255. Were they all written orders?—Written in an envelope; their names and amount. Whoever brought it to me I made them no answer, but "sign that," I said to them. If they made any remark about the note, "I know but very little about it," said I. "Yourself is better acquainted with it than what I am. If you sign that I will pay you. If you don't sign it I won't pay you."

10256. Was there any other writing in the envelope but the name and amount?—No other writing.

10257. Was it only written on the envelope inside without any paper in it?—No paper.

10258. Just the name and amount?—Just the name and amount.

10259. Was there anything written outside on the envelope—any superscription?—No; no superscription.

10260. We heard that there was something the matter with your face at that time?—I read that off of a paper. I never wore a shawl on my face, nor a comforter; but I wore a thick handkerchief outside, which went as far as my chin. I didn't disguise myself from any man, nor hadn't a second suit of clothes to disguise myself. I went down freely amongst the family, and down to the room down stairs, and up street, and in and out, and over the way, and didn't disguise myself; for I was really disgusted in the end how I was placed.

10261. How much were you paid for yourself for all this work?—I never got a shilling, nor asked a shilling of them, from that day to this, but the £3 expense Mr. Laffan gave me going home the night.

10262. Mr. Patrick Laffan gave you that?—Mr. Patrick Laffan gave me £3; he said I would get more money afterwards; and, of course, only expecting it I wouldn't come to Cashel; I used often earn £20 in less time.

10263. Were you in Cashel here with any person besides Mr. Pat. Laffan and Pat. Cunningham?—No; I made no acquaintance whatever.

10264. Or with any gentlemen that were acting for Mr. Munster?—No.

10265. Did you see Captain Byrne?—I never had a word with him in Cashel, nor from the first time, until I seen him afterwards when the election was over a fortnight, I believe, at his own place, nor never told me a word about anything that was that day, nor anything about it afterwards.

10266. Are the whole of these figures and writing in this book in your own handwriting?—In my own handwriting after a scribbling manner, and I only took checks from one thing or another, from time to time, what I heard.

10267. Did you make the entries when you were paying the moneys here in Cashel?—Yes, and when I got the money; each page is headed with the date.

10268. How long were you here altogether?—I came on Sunday night; I consider, and went home on Saturday night; the election was over the day after I leaving.

10269. How many of these days were you giving out the money at Corcoran's?—I should think only two.

10270. And were these the day of the polling and the day before?—I don't know whether I was there the day of the polling; I don't think I was there the day of the polling.

10271. Do you recollect where you paid Looby?—I paid him at Corcoran's.

10272. Do you recollect the old man himself—a very old man with white hair? He says you had only your shirt and breeches on when you paid him. Is that so? He says you got out of bed in the morning at Corcoran's?—I never slept a night at Corcoran's.

10273. Were you there early any morning?—I didn't go there only one morning; I breakfasted one morning at Corcoran's.

10274. He says that you paid him this money in a top room at Corcoran's hotel, and that it was a bed-room?—It was a bed-room.

10275. And that you had only your shirt and trowsers on?—I was never at Corcoran's without having my clothes in full on me, nor never wore a shawl nor comforter.

10276. Looby said that you were just getting out of bed there?—I never slept a night there, nor had my outside coat off, and the dress I wore at the same time was very remarkable.

10277. How so?—No change.

10278. Is that the dress you have on you now?—No, 'twas a dark, very short frock coat, with pockets.

10279. And knee breeches?—Knee breeches and leggings. Most of the people wears trowsers now.

10280. You say most of the people who got money from you signed notes?—Yes.

10281. What did you do with the notes?—I left all the notes at Cunningham's after me, and all the envelopes.

10282. Did you give them up in charge to anyone?—To Pat. Cunningham. I left them there after me in a drawer in his house.

10283. How did you get this money? Was it in notes or gold?—'Tis marked "G" for all the gold; I got notes and gold.

10284. You got £120 in gold, and £100 in gold, and £29 in gold, and £91 in gold. Now, I see "£15 in notes" here, and two crosses before it, what is the meaning of that?—That is £15 I got from Pat. Cunningham.

10285. Are you able to distinguish what you got from Cunningham?—Them were notes.

10286. Here is another "35," with two crosses before it; an entry, past that. What is the meaning of the two crosses?—I could not tell you. 'Tis more by chance I have a recollection of anything but only just a check; but if I thought it would come to this I would have a more regular account.

10287. I see here "E. K." I think, "not named," and "pocket, £35." What is the meaning of that?—I can't recollect. I can't recollect.

10288. Have you any mark here by which you would be able to tell me whether the money you paid was in gold or in notes?—The greater part of it was in gold; I couldn't say.

10289. Take that page and read all that is on it for me. What is the first?—"William Brennan."

10290. What is the next?—The half-notes, £35.

10291. To whom were the half-notes given?—The "L" stands for "Laffan" to these half-notes. I can't say that they were discharged by me; and that is the £35 I consider that is the surplus.

10292. Look at what is written across the page

there. There is "Note returned to C." What is that?—"Note returned to C." It must be Cunningham.

10293. You say you had no conversation with any person to whom you paid this money?—No conversation about the election, or voting, or anything like that; but when they would talk to me about passing the note, "It is no care of mine to know anything about it. Yourself is a better judge. If you sign it I will give the money; and I have nothing to do with it more than that."

10294. Did Mr. Laffan tell you what you were to give this money for?—No.

10295. Did you know that you were giving it to men for their votes?—I consider that it was given to electors.

10296. For their votes?—Yes.

10297. Did not Mr. Laffan tell you what you were to do?—Mr. Laffan didn't tell me that.

10298. Nor Cunningham?—No; but they told me to pay so much to such people would come in, nor they didn't tell me where they were from, nor anything. I made no inquiry of them whether 'twas or no.

10299. Mr. Griffin.—Open that book, the last entry before "Thomas Looby"—the last entry but one in the book—you see there "a man unknown, £30?"—Yes.

10300. On Mr. Laffan's order?—Yes.

10301. Do you remember whether Mr. Laffan came up into the room to you to give you that order?—He must have come to me.

10302. That was in Corcoran's hotel?—Yes; for 'twas the last day.

10303. The day before the election?—Yes.

10304. Mr. Molloy.—When an envelope was brought to you did you look amongst the bundle of notes or bills that you had to find out the bill with the man's name inserted in it? Were the bills given to you with the mens' names?—No, the man's name was in ne'er a bill. The man's name that was down payable was in the bill; but the man who was to get the money, his name was not in it until after he writing it.

James Connors recalled, and confronted with Larkin.

James Connors.

10305. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Is this the old gentleman that you saw?—Connors.—Well, I couldn't swear, sir.

10306. Do you recollect seeing him and paying him any money?—Larkin.—I do not sir.

10307. Mr. Griffin.—Do you remember this man?—Larkin.—I don't. Connors.—Begor, I couldn't swear to him.

10308. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Mr. Connors, in your evidence you told us that Mr. Patrick Laffan took you up, knocked at a door, and sent you in to this man, and that you received £35?—Connors.—Yes.

10309. You said you saw Patrick Fitzgerald go up also?—Connors.—Yes.

10310. Was that before or after you got the £30?—Connors.—Before, sir.

10311. Before you got the £30?—Connors.—Yes, it was the night before the polling I got the £30, that day at night.

10312. When did you see Fitzgerald go up?—Connors.—I'm not sure was it the day of the nomination or the day before it.

Luke Larkin's examination resumed by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

Luke Larkin.

10313. I want you to remain a while, Mr. Larkin. I have no reason, Mr. Larkin, to doubt that you are telling me the truth. I will pay your expenses for coming here. You can write home and say that you will be "all right here." Mr. Munster desires to ask these questions of you. Open the book. Are you able to say now how much you paid altogether on Monday, how much on Tuesday, how much on Wednesday, how much on Thursday, and so on?—No; but I am able to say what I received.

10314. Are you able to say how much you paid out on each day?—The 17th I paid this side and the 18th I paid that; but I couldn't distinctly swear what was the amount I paid on each day; but I have these headed "16th" "17th," and "18th."

10315. But you are not able positively to say that all the payments were on these particular days?—There might be a payment slipped in.

10316. Are you able to say anything except what is written here now?—No, sir.

10317. "November 16th" is the first entry in this book, and that day it appears you received in gold and notes £340?—You will see the amount carried forward then from that to the other side.

[Mr. Munster.—Will you be kind enough to ask him what time of the day he received it.]

10318. There must have been four items here. Are you able to say what time of the day you received it?—I could not, sir.

10319. I asked this question before Mr. Munster was in court: Are you able to say from whom you got that £120?—From Pat. Cunningham, sir.

10320. And from whom did you get the £100 in gold?—I couldn't say; I remember he gave me the first.

10321. Pat. Cunningham gave you £120 in gold, and that was the first. You do not recollect who gave you the £100, the £29, or the £91?—I couldn't positively state; no; I never received a shilling from any other man.

10322. You have here "received on the 17th, at the hotel, £90 and £50?—I consider that was received from Pat. Laffan.

10323. From Pat. Laffan?—I think so.

[Mr. Munster.—Can he say what time of the day that was?]

10324. Are you able to say at what time of the day you got it?—I couldn't, sir.

10325. Was it early in the day—was it in the morning?—'Twas not in the morning, sir, I suppose.

10326. You have here the "18th, £91, £15, £35 and £50." Do you believe from this entry that you received that on the 18th. It is all under the date of the 18th, and you have the tot carried forward?—Yes.

10327. The next is dated "19th." It appears to have been £11 and £120. Look at that £120. What is in front of it—is not that Pat. Laffan?"—Yes, Mr. Laffan.

10328. That £120, then, you identify as being received from him?—Yes.

10329. And you received no more after the 19th it appears?—No.

10330. There is another question Mr. Munster wants to have asked, but I do not see how it arises. How would you earn more than £20 in a week? What is your occupation?—I hold one hundred acres of land, and I hold a post-office and other matters besides. I am connected with contracts, and it is a very serious disadvantage to me to be from my place to-day.

10331. We really cannot help that?—I got such a short notice to come such a distance.

TENTH DAY. October 14.

Edmond Hogan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edmond Hogan.

10332. Mr. Hogan, are you a voter?—No, sir.

10333. I believe you are the son of a voter?—Yes, sir.

10334. Is your father's name Edmond?—Yes, sir.

10335. I believe your father is an old man, and nearly blind?—He is.

10336. For whom did your father vote at the election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

10337. Did you see the witness that was on the table last?—I did.

10338. You got £30 from him?—Well, I couldn't say it is from him.

10339. But you got £30 from some man—Yes, sir.

10340. Where did you get it?—In Mrs. Corcoran's hotel.

10341. Did you know the man who paid it to you?—No, sir.

10342. Was it a man like the man that was here just now?—I couldn't say. His face was covered. I couldn't say.

10343. You say his face was covered?—Yes. He wore a handkerchief around his chin, and I think he wore it on his forehead.

10344. A handkerchief around his chin?—Yes, something white, and I think he wore it on his forehead.

10345. Who told you to go to him to get that money?—Patrick Cunningham.

10346. That was for your father's vote?—Yes, sir.

10347. Did you tell your father you had got it?—I told him in a day or two after. I gave it to him in a day or two after I got it.

10348. Did you tell him before he voted?—No.

10349. Did you tell him you were promised it?—No; I was never promised it until I got it.

10350. At what time did you get it?—I believe it was a day or two before the election. It was at night I got it; I believe eleven o'clock.

10351. A day or two before the election?—Yes.

10352. Would you say that you got it on Tuesday, 17th?—I couldn't tell the day of the month.

10353. You say it was in Corcoran's hotel you got it?—Yes.

10354. Were you at home after you got that money? Yes; I went home after getting the money.

10355. Do you mean to say that you did not tell your father then?—I didn't tell my father.

10356. Did you tell anyone in the house?—I don't suppose I did until after the election.

10357. Why did you not tell anyone about it?—I considered 'twas better not to speak of it; I considered my father might hear of it, and might be sworn at the election.

10358. Did you tell your father to vote for Mr. Munster?—No; he made up his mind to vote for Mr. Munster.

10359. Did you ask him would he vote for Mr. Munster?—No.

10360. How did you signify to him that you had got it?—Not a word he ever spoke to me, nor I to him.

10361. What family is there besides yourself?—My wife.

10362. You surely did not keep that secret from her?—That I had the money?

10363. Yes?—No; I don't suppose I ever spoke a word to her about it.

10364. You never spoke to her about it?—Not until after the election.

10365. What did you do with it?—Put it in my trunk and locked it.

10366. Does not your wife keep your money?—That wasn't my money.

10367. Does she keeep your money?—Sometimes she does and sometimes myself.

10368. Had she recourse to the trunk in which you put it?—No.

10369. Why did you say it was not your money?—I considered it was my father's money.

10370. Had you any conversation with your father as to how he would vote, or ought to vote?—No.

10371. Had you any conversation with him at all as to money going for the election or anything of that kind?—No.

10372. Do you think your father understood that you were going to see about it?—I don't believe he did, nor I hadn't the least notion of it myself at the same time.

10373. And who was it that came to you then?—To tell me to get the money?

10374. Yes?—Patrick Cunningham.

10375. You say that you came without any notion of getting that money?—Yes; I came in different nights.

10376. Did you meet Patrick Cunningham?—Yes; I went in there different nights before the election.

10377. Tell me how you came about getting the money?—Mr. Patrick Laffan called me and asked me who would my father vote for. I said I believed he would vote for Mr. Munster. After that he sent me to Pat. Cunningham and he asked me some questions. I told him the same. He asked me how much would my father expect for his vote, and I said I didn't know.

10378. Who asked you that?—Patrick Cunningham.

10379. You say that Patrick Cunningham sent for you?—He called me.

10380. In Corcoran's hotel?—Yes.

10381. Did Mr. Patrick Laffan ask you how much your father would expect?—No.

10382. Only Cunningham?—Only Cunningham.

10383. Did you say he expected £30?—No; I said I didn't know.

10384. What was said then?—Patrick Cunningham said that £30 was all that was given. I said that I wasn't going to make a bargain for myself; but of course my father would expect as much as anyone.

10385. You said that your father would expect as much as anyone?—Yes.

10386. Do you know how your father voted in 1865?—Yes, I do: he voted, I believe, for Mr. O'Beirne at that time.

10387. How much did he get at that election?—I couldn't tell you. He never told me whether he got anything or not.

10388. He never told you?—No, nor I never asked him.

10389. Did you ever see a note of his for £30?—Never.

10390. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he ever vote for Lanigan?—No.

10391. Never?—Never.

10392. For whom did he vote in 1859?—I believe for Hemphill.

10393. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you get any money in 1865?—No, nor a halfpenny before.

10394. Never before?—No.

John Ryan.

John Ryan, of the Racecourse, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10395. Mr. Ryan, you are a voter, I believe?—Yes, sir.

10396. I believe you voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

10397. How much did you get, Mr. Ryan, for voting?—I never got a penny for voting, sir.

10398. Are you aware that we have heard a great deal of you?—Yes, sir.

10399. And that I know the whole story from beginning to end? You will attend in the morning, Mr. Ryan. We adjourn the Court now.

Adjourned.

ELEVENTH DAY.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1869.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan hands in a telegram, informing him that his brother Patrick will be in attendance to-morrow, and states, "I have since received a further communication."

' John Ryan, of the Racecourse, recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. John Ryan

10400. Mr. Ryan, you told us that you voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes, sir.

10401. Do you recollect before the last election having a bill becoming due at the bank?—Before the last election?

10402. Yes?—There was, sir; there was a bill of mine always almost in the Cashel Bank, sir.

10403. There was a bill of yours becoming due with Captain Graham's name upon it?—There was a bill of Captain ——[name not heard]. It was in the bank at the time of the election, sir, before the election, and after the election too, and in it still, sir.

10404. What was the amount of it?—£35, sir.

10405. What was that bill for?—To convenience me, sir. That was what it was for.

10406. Do you recollect going to Mr. Meara?—I recollect going to him on yesterday, sir.

10407. Yesterday?—Yes, sir.

10408. About what?—About why he mentioned my name in Court here on the day before, and he said it was Mr. Laffan that suggested the question to him, didn't I go to him for money or something of that kind. There were eight or ten in his house at the time I went, sir; I asked him publicly; he said he didn't know at the time Mr. Laffan asked him the question. I said, "You will have to come up again, because I never spoke to you about election purposes, or any person, to that effect."

10409. Do you recollect going to Mr. Laffan and telling him that you had this bill with Captain Graham's name on it in the bank?—Going to Mr. Laffan?

10410. Do you recollect going to Mr. Laffan and telling him you had this bill in the bank?—I never went to Mr. Laffan unless he sent for me.

10411. Do you recollect going to him and telling him that you had this bill in the bank, with Captain Graham's name on it?—Mr. Laffan and Mr. Leahy were present one day, and Mr. Leahy said to me—this was the last day that I had any dealing with him about the horse—Mr. Leahy said if I wanted money, as I said before about the horse, he would relieve me in any form, and if I went to Mr. O'Meara and gave him a promissory note for money I would get what I wanted there; Mr. Laffan was present and he said that could be done. "Is that the way you are going to treat me," said I, "after coming in here the last fortnight about my horse," that is the way it was, sir.

10412. You say that Mr. Leahy said to you, that if you wanted money for your horse he would get it from Mr. O'Meara; to do what?—He would get Andrew Meara in the Main-street, says he; "see him," says he, "and give him a promissory note and you will get what you want." Mr. Laffan had his hand on the railing; he turned in and said himself would go to Meara and see it all right. "Is that the way Leahy," says I, "you are going to treat me after coming here the last fortnight; good bye," says I, walking away from him. I never had any communication since with Mr. Leahy or Mr. Laffan.

10413. Had you been with Mr. Leahy and Mr. Laffan before that about this horse?—Yes, sir.

10414. Tell me the first time you went to them, or to either of them?—What brought me to Mr. Munster's party at all was this, Mr. Patrick Cunningham was out at the Racecourse, himself and a man named Mat Dwyer, I think—he is a weaver in town here, I took out the horse to give him a canter in the field. Pat Cunningham called me on the side of the road. Mat Dwyer was with him. "John," says he, "we are buying horses for Mr. Munster." "As you are a friend," says I, "you ought to get him to buy this horse." "Bring him in," says he. I called and brought him to his father's into the yard, and I asked Patrick who was to buy him, and he said then that he would get a person to buy him. "If you do," says I, "Pat, you will lose nothing by it yourself." He went up the street then, and I stopped at his father's, and I gave a little dusting down to the horse, and Captain Dudley Byrne came down with Patrick Cunningham, and went into the yard where the horse was. He went into the yard, and then Captain Dudley Byrne came with him, and when he came in I thought he was the bishop's brother, and I asked him, "How do you do Mr. Leahy?" "Oh, you do not know me at all," says he. I said no more then. He looked at the horse and handled his joints down. I told him the price, and he shook his head and said nothing. He inspected him again at another time.

10415. On another day?—No, but on that day, sir; at the very same time, sir; the whole occurred after he asking the price.

10416. What occurred then?—They didn't buy the horse from me that day then, sir. They said it was Mr. Edmund Leahy that had the buying of the horse, and if I came in another day with the horse that I would be all right. I came in another day with the horse and Mr. Leahy wasn't at home here in Cashel at all at this time. They said he would be in in a few days, and I met Mr. Patrick Laffan and he asked me the price of the horse. "I suppose you know that," said I, "£70, because you were with Captain Dudley Byrne before that," says I. "That is too much money," says he. I would want Mr. Dolan the veterinary to inspect him." "So you can," says I; and so he got Mr. Dolan to inspect him on that day, and he looked at the horse for a while, and we didn't make the deal then on that day, and I went home, and as I was coming in the next day Mr. Dolan was riding out against me. "Are you going in with the horse," says he. "I am," says I. "I am going out," says he, "to inspect him." At the workhouse I met him. I brought in the horse and he inspected him, and went out to the Commons and said he would be back in an hour or two. He was not back at the time he said, and Mr. Laffan said the horse was a nice, gay looking little horse, and if he tried him at the carriage he would give me the money, £70, on account.

10417. Who said that?—Patrick Laffan, your worship.

10418. That he would give you £70, on account?—He would give me £70, on account.

10419. On account of what?—He tried the horse then to Mr. Munster's carriage.

10420. What do you mean by "on account"?—I didn't know, sir, the meaning of it.

10421. Did you ultimately sell the horse?—I didn't, sir.

10422. Did you come to Mr. Leahy about it?—To Mr. Leahy.

10423. Yes?—No, sir, but I was at Corcoran's, and he came in there to me.

10424. What occurred between you?—That was what happened this day, as I told you. He told me it was not horses he wanted, but votes.

10425. Mr. Leahy?—Yes, Mr. Edmund Leahy.

10426. He told you that?—Yes; that they could easy get horses, he said.

10427. In any of these conversations did you leave Mr. Laffan to understand, or was it the arrangement or understanding, that if you got £70 for the horse you would vote for Mr. Munster?—It was not, sir.

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 15.

John Ryan.

10428. Was it your intention to have done so?—No, sir, if I got a £1,000 for it at that time I wouldn't vote for Mr. Munster.

10429. Now, be careful?—I promised Mr. O'Beirne. I was going out to the workhouse. There was eighteen or twenty on a car. I wasn't at home. They were coming in after canvassing the Commons. I took off my hat and I said, "Three cheers for Mr. O'Beirne: you may be sure of me," said I, on the public road.

10430. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is there more than one Mr. Leahy that you met?—No, sir, I met but one man.

10431. The time that Captain Dudley Byrne came to look at the horse you thought he was Mr. Leahy?—I did, sir.

10432. Then you did not know Mr. Leahy up to that day?—I didn't, sir.

10433. How did you come to know him so well in so short a time that you called him "Leahy" afterwards?—I called him Mr., sir.

10434. You swore you said, "Leahy, is that the way you are going to treat me"?—Mr. Leahy often met me in Corcoran's hotel, and we had a drink there.

10435. Did you become so intimate with him in a fortnight?—I never called him "Leahy" but the evening I was getting out of Mr. Munster's party. I wouldn't wish to disrespect any man, sir.

10436. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you say anything to Mr. Laffan about a bill of yours in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it?—I might have mentioned it to Mr. Laffan, sir.

10437. Tell me how you mentioned it?—Mentioned it, sir!

10438. Yes; tell me what you said to Mr. Laffan about that bill of yours, with Captain Graham's name on it?—I didn't speak of Captain Graham's name on it.

10439. Tell me what you said?—What I said to Mr. Laffan was, if I sold the horse it would fit me; that there were bills due of me in the town I would like to pay them.

10440. Do you swear you never said to Mr. Laffan that you had a bill in the bank due with Captain Graham's name on it?—I won't swear that sir, because Captain Graham was always—

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10441. Mr. Laffan, do you recollect the occasion of this man's coming to you?—I recollect that occasion, for I have seen him there a dozen times.

10442. What occurred when he came to you on that occasion with reference to the bill?—I think it was the day before the polling he came in and told me me this bill of £35 was due or would be due, and he said before that Captain Graham's name was on it. He asked me for £35 then to take up the bill, and that he would return it in two or three days; and he said he could not ask Captain Graham to renew the bill because he would have to go under a compliment and vote for Mr. O'Beirne. I then told him I would not lend the money: it would look too like a case of bribery. I said, "to relieve you, so that you might be free to vote for us, I will get Mr. O'Meara to put his name on a bill in place of Captain Graham." Mr. Ryan showed by his manner that that did not meet his approval. I went to Mr. O'Meara and asked him would he do it, and he said, to be sure he would. I do not think I saw Ryan afterwards.

10443. Was there anything said on that occasion about the horse?—I cannot tell you was there on that occasion.

10444. Was there any one present besides you and Ryan?—To the best of my recollection there was no one then present.

10445. Where did it happen?—In our room in Corcoran's hotel.

10446. Did Ryan plainly lead you to believe that if you gave him that £35 he would vote for Mr. Munster?—He did.

10447. Unquestionably?—Unquestionably: plainly.

John Ryan.

John Ryan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10448. Now, Mr. Ryan, what do you say to that?—I never spoke a word of the election to him, sir; and as to mentioning Captain Graham's name, that the bill would be due and he wouldn't renew it again, it was only a day or two before the poll this bill was taken out of the bank. I got it a day or two before the polling—I got it out of the bank then.

10449. What do you mean by taking it out?—I got a bill for £35 a day or two before the polling, and Captain Graham's name was not on the bill half a year before that, sir.

10450. Do you say that is the truth?—That is the very truth, sir; and I couldn't say that to Mr. Laffan, sir.

10451. Had you a bill due in the bank on or about the polling day?—I couldn't say, sir, but I have the docket I am sure.

10452. Had you a bill for £35 falling due about that time?—I had not, sir.

10453. You had not?—I couldn't swear whether I had or not. I think it was due for a month before the polling.

10454. Did you tell Mr. Laffan that there was a bill of yours in the bank at that time?—I might have told him there was a bill in the bank, but I didn't mention Captain Graham's name.

10455. Did you tell me that you had no bill falling due at that time?—I didn't say that, sir. There was a bill of mine in the bank, sir. I have the docket at home.

10456. Had you a bill due about the 18th or 19th November?—No sir, I had not.

10457. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had you two bills in the bank?—I had, sir. I hadn't two bills in the bank. I had only one bill in the bank. Only a day or two before the polling Captain Graham put his name on a bill in the bank for me.

10458. For what purpose was that bill?—I wouldn't like to answer that; but if you wish I will tell you.

10459. You must answer?—There was a bill coming due in the Provincial Bank in Clonmel, £30 or £35. I wished to get it paid and to renew it again.

10460. And you went to Captain Graham to give you this bill for £35?—Yes. I went to Clonmel and paid the bill and took it out again.

10461. Was that the bill you spoke to Mr. Laffan about?—I dare say that must be the bill I spoke to Mr. Laffan about, sir.

10462. Was it after the conversation with Mr. Laffan that you went to Captain Graham and got him to put his name on the bill?—Well, I couldn't say that, sir.

10463. It must have been, according to your own statement, because you say that this bill was falling due. You mentioned the matter of the bill to Mr. Laffan and wanted £70 for the horse, and said you would take up the bill out of the £70?—Yes, sir.

10464. Therefore you had not released the bill at the time you were speaking to Mr. Laffan?—Well, I dare say not, sir.

10465. And therefore it was after you had been speaking to Mr. Laffan and failed to get money from him by the sale of your horse or otherwise, that you went to Captain Graham?—It was, sir.

10466. Where did you see Captain Graham?—I went to Brown's, the watchmakers, in town.

10467. Was it there you saw him?—It was; I had a long wait for him.

10468. Did you tell Captain Graham that you had been with Mr. Laffan?—On my oath I never spoke a word to him about Mr. Laffan.

10469. Did you tell him that you were about selling a horse to Mr. Munster?—I did, a good while before that. This was after Mr. Munster coming to town in the beginning. I met Captain Graham going out to his own party.

10470. Did you then tell him that you were selling the horse?—I did, sir.

10471. Did you tell him the price you expected for the horse?—I did, sir. I told him to keep it private, until I would have the horse off of my hands.

10472. Did you afterwards ask him for his name on a bill?—I did, sir. I asked him for his name on a bill for £35.

10473. For what purpose?—I didn't say for any purpose.

10474. Tell me what you said to him?—"Captain, I am coming to trouble you now, as I often troubled you before, to take a bill in the bank for me." "Will the manager give it," says he; "I didn't ask him yet," says I. "Go down to the manager and ask him," says he. "I have no objection." I went to the manager and asked him would he give a bill for £35. He said who would be on it with me, and I said a neighbour. He said wasn't there a bill of mine in the bank before; I told him there was. He refused. "Well," says I, "if I get Captain Graham's name to it, will you give it to me. He paused awhile, and I couldn't say what was the answer he gave me. When I came to Captain Graham, "by gor," says I to the Captain, "he won't much mind whether he will give it or not." "Give me the bill John," says he, "and I'll go down;" so he went down and brought the bill with him, sir.

10475. Captain Graham then agreed to give you his name on the bill?—He did, sir.

10476. Did you get it from him then and there?—The bill, sir.

10477. Yes?—The amount of the bill you mean; is it, sir.

10478. Did you get a bill signed by him then?—I put my name on it.

10479. And you got Captain Graham then to sign the bill?—Yes, sir.

10480. Had Captain Graham before that spoken to you about how you would vote?—Never, sir, at that time.

10481. Never?—Before that, sir; but he knew right well how I would vote.

10482. How did he know it?—I can't say was he at the Commons the day they canvassed or not. I was driving a donkey home from town, and when I saw them on the road I shouted, "Three cheers for Mr. O'Beirne," and they all shouted; I was on a car.

10483. Had you a vote in 1865?—I had, sir.

10484. For whom did you vote then?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

10485. Did you receive any consideration for voting for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—No, sir.

10486. None whatever?—None whatever while I am concerned in the borough, but I got a £5 cheque from Mr. O'Beirne.

10487. What was that for?—For car-hire, sir.

10488. Is that all the money you received under any circumstances from Mr. O'Beirne or anyone else?—Yes, or anyone else, sir.

10489. Had you no more than one conversation with Patrick Cunningham?—I dare say not, sir; anyway about the sale of the horse, but we often met.

10490. Did you ever speak with Cunningham, or he to you, about your vote?—Never, sir.

10491. Did Patrick Cunningham ever ask you how you would vote?—Well, I dare say he didn't, sir.

10492. Are you sure of that now?—I don't think he ever asked me.

10493. Be certain. Say "yes" or "no," or that you do not know?—I couldn't say whether he asked me or not. To the best of my opinion he did not.

10494. Is that the most you will say about it?—I can't say whether he did or not; but to the best of my recollection he did not.

10495. Had you many conversations with him?—No, indeed, I had not.

10496. Were your conversations confined to the sale of the horse?—It was about the sale of the horse, for I was in and out that time every day for a fortnight about him.

10497. Mr. MOLLOY.—Have you the horse still?—I have, sir.

10498. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Will you tell me what was your impression and belief with regard to what they were doing as to the buying of the horse. Do you think it was your vote they wanted to secure by buying the horse?—I'm sure it was.

10499. And that was what you thought at the time?—Well, I did, sir. I did think it.

10500. That is, that they were about buying your horse for the purpose of inducing you to vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

10501. You believed that?—I believed it; but if they bought him itself I wouldn't vote for him, sir.

10502. And that in point of fact the dealing about the horse was only a cover for dealing for your vote; you understand what a cover means; that it was only a cloak for dealing for your vote?—Yes, sir; and they gave me that to understand when we fell out.

10503. Mr. MOLLOY.—Then the horse was not worth £70?—I sold him for something less than half of it to a clergyman at some time before the election.

10504. How did you get him back again?—He was inspected by a "vet."

10505. And he was rejected?—I don't know, but Mr. Richardson got him back, and there was snow at the time.

10506. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—The bargain was off?—Yes the bargain was off, but I sold him for something less than half.

10507. What did you sell him for?—I don't know was it £22 10*s.* or £27 10*s.* I couldn't say with certainty.

10508. When was the sale of the horse to the clergyman?—I couldn't exactly say, sir.

10509. How long before the election? About a month or two months?—It was up to twelve months before the election.

10510. What age was he?—Well, he wasn't bred for myself; I couldn't exactly say, but I think he is rising seven or eight now. He is riz seven or eight. I couldn't say which.

10511. And he was worth as much when you were selling him to the clergyman as he was twelve months afterwards?—He was not, sir.

10512. Why not?—Because he was working on the farm at that time, and common tackling was on him when I sold him to the clergyman, and at this time he was in nice order, and I had four or five horses and would be glad to get shut of some of them.

10513. Your evidence is, that you would have taken £70 for the horse. You admitted that that was about double his value?—I wouldn't sell him for the half of it to any man.

10514. You sold him for £27 10*s.*?—I did for £22 10*s.*

10515. You would have sold him for £40?—I believe I would, if I got forty.

10516. Your evidence is that you asked seventy?—Yes.

10517. And that you believe Mr. Laffan and Mr. Leahy were about buying the horse for £70 for the purpose of getting your vote: and is your evidence now, that you would have taken the £70 and voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I would, sir.

10518. Did you pay the bill in the bank since?—I did not, sir, but I renewed it two or three times. It is in the bank still, sir.

10519. And Captain Graham's name is still on it?—It is, sir.

10520. You do not expect that Captain Graham will ever ask you to pay it?—I never asked him to pay it.

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 15.
John Ryan.

10521. Do you expect him to pay it?—I don't expect he will ever pay it.

10522. At the time that you got the bill, did you expect to be ever called upon to pay it?—I was quite sure of that, sir.

10523. You were sure you would be called upon to pay it, at the time you got it?—Yes, sir, by the manager of the bank.

10524. Do you think if Mr. O'Beirne was still the member for Cashel, if there was no petition, and if he was now sitting for Cashel, that you would be called upon to pay that bill?—I would, sir. I would be called upon to pay the bill.

10525. You believe that?—Yes.

10526. And you believed it at the time you took it?—Yes, sir, I did.

10527. Now, when you were examined on the petition before the judge, you told the judge that the names of Captain Graham, and of a granduncle of yours, were on the bill together?—Yes.

10528. And when your granduncle died Captain Graham renewed the bill by himself?—Yes; I dare say I have the bill too.

10529. Is that the bill we are speaking of?—It is, sir; but he left Cashel; at the time he was in Cashel I used only rap at the door, and he would come out and sign it there.

10530. Did you tell me a little while ago that you had a bill due in the Provincial Bank in Clonmel, and that you had no bill with Captain Graham's name on it at that time, and that you got Captain Graham's name on the bill to take up the bill in the Provincial Bank?—I did, sir.

10531. I ask you with reference to this bill of your granduncle and Captain Graham's, that Captain Graham renewed by himself, if that is the bill we are talking of here?—£25 was that bill, sir.

10532. Did you tell me that that bill, renewed after your granduncle's death by Captain Graham, was the bill we were speaking of all through?—I didn't take it for three months before the election. Yes; it was at the bank in Cashel for nine months before the election.

10533. Mr. MOLLOY.—Whose name was on the bill in the bank of Cashel?—John Anglyin, of Rose Green, two miles distance from this.

10534. Mr. GRIFFIN.—That was the only name on the bill?—John Anglyin; that was all, sir.

10535. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Listen again, and try to reconcile to me those answers of yours. You were asked before the judge respecting a bill of yours in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it, and you said, "I told you that Captain Graham's name was on a bill in the bank with me for the last three years, and I won't tell you any more about it?"—Yes, I said that, sir.

10536. You were asked, "A week before the election was Captain Graham's name on a bill in the bank for you," and you answered, "It was?"—I made the remark to the judge that I hadn't the date of it.

10537. You answered "It was," before the judge?—I couldn't say exactly.

10538. You were asked, "A week before the election was Captain Graham's name on a bill in the bank for you," and you answered, "It was." I will read the whole thing for you:—

"Was there a bill of yours in the National Bank at the time of the election or about it. I am not asking you what it is?—I had.

"Was Captain Graham's name on it?—He was not before this election; he was some years ago.

"But not at this election?—Not at the time of this election.

"Did you ever say to any person that there was a bill of yours in the National Bank with Captain Graham's name on it?—There was a bill in the bank of Captain Graham's for many years with me, and I renewed it often too.

"Did you say to any person that there was a bill in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it?—I never said it to any person except when I would go to the manager of the bank, I would ask him for a renewal of the bill. I had a bill for £23 for three years in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it.

"When did Captain Graham's name get off your bill in the bank?—Well, I have not the date of it.

"Was it long before the election?—Before the election?

"Yes?—Oh, I could not say that.

"Was it a month?—I could not say.

"Was it a week?—I could not say.

"Do you mean to say that you cannot tell me?—I told you that Captain Graham's name was on a bill in the bank with me for the last three years, and I won't tell you any more about him.

"You must. A week before the election was Captain Graham's name on a bill in the bank for you?—A week before the election?

"Yes?—It was.

"And after the election?—Yes.

"How much was that bill?—Well, I have not the docket of it here.

"Do you know how much it was?—I could give a guess about it.

"How much?—Either £30 or £35.

"Is it in the bank now?—Yes.

"With Captain Graham's name on it?—Yes.

"What was the consideration for that bill?—The consideration for that bill was, that he was a friend to me always.

"And lent you his name?—Yes; he and a granduncle of mine were on the bill together, and when the granduncle died, he did it by himself.

"Did he ever ask you to pay it?—I never asked anybody to pay that bill."

I ask you to try and reconcile that with your evidence to day that you had no bill in the bank with Captain Graham's name on it, and only got his name on the 19th November?—I couldn't say that to Baron Fitzgerald at the time he asked me the question, because this was the time of the petition, and it was a longer time. I had the docket of it here if he would give me permission to bring that evidence.

10539. Was your evidence then or now correct?—My evidence now is correct. I recollect it was a day or two before the election that I took the bill out of the bank, sir. I never looked after it since. I didn't think that bill would be brought at all here.

10540. Did you tell me you went to Mr. Meara yesterday, to speak of your name having been mentioned about a bill by him?—Yes, sir.

10541. What do you mean by saying you thought nothing would have been said about the bill?—Is it about Mr. O'Meara's bill?

10542. Yes?—I didn't speak to Mr. O'Meara about the bill until yesterday.

10543. Your evidence I must say is very unsatisfactory. Do you know Mrs. Boyton?—I do, sir.

10544. Do you recollect going to her place—where she was stopping rather?—I met her on the street, and she invited me in to tea.

10545. She invited you in to tea?—Yes.

10546. Mr. MOLLOY—Are you any friend or relation of hers?—Well no, sir, but there was a friendship in the family.

10547. What friendship?—There was an aunt of mine married to either a first or second cousin of hers—I don't know which.

10548. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Where was she stopping at the time?—At Miss O'Dwyer's hotel.

10549. Did you go in with her from where you met her, to the hotel?—No, sir, I did not.

10550. Where did you go when she asked you to go in to tea with her?—I dare say it was to the workhouse. This was early in the day.

10551. And she asked you to go in that evening?—She did, sir; she asked me to go in that evening.

10552. Did you go there then in the evening?—I did, sir.

10553. At what time did you go into the hotel?—I couldn't say, your worship; but the tea was over at all events when I went in.

10554. Whom did you find in the room when you went in?—Mr. Boyton, and I think 'twas a Miss Ryan, near Thurles, she introduced to me.

10555. Who else?—Mrs. Boyton. I think that was all that was there at the time I reached it.

10556. Do you know Mr. Raftery?—Yes.

10557. Was he there?—He wasn't there at the time I think that I went in. He was there after that.

10558. He came in after you did?—Yes, I think it was after me he came in.

10559. Were you long there before Mr. Raftery came in?—Well I'm not sure, your worship.

10560. Well now state what occurred when you went into the hotel to Mrs. Boyton?—We had some drink. Mr. Boyton asked me to sit down, and take some drink with him, and we had some drink, sir. I think Mr. Raftery came in afterwards, and they told him of the old acquaintance we were.

10561. Just state all that occurred in the hotel that evening?—We had some drink, sir. When I was going away, Mrs. Boyton said to me that she wanted to speak to me, and she asked me into a room there. Accordingly I did. I went in with her. Mr. Boyton, he stopped below at the time.

10562. He stopped below?—He stopped below where he was.

10563. Where was the room that you went into with Mrs. Boyton?—When you go upstairs, and turn in that way.

10564. Did you go upstairs from the room in which you took the drink?—I couldn't say, sir; for when I came out of the public sitting-room there it was very dark.

10565. Did you go up stairs?—I think I did.

10566. Are you sure?—I'm not sure, for 'twas very dark at the time.

10567. Would you not know whether you were going upstairs or down stairs in the dark?—I would; but we had a little drink taken.

10568. Were you not sober?—I was steady, sir.

10569. Were you sober enough to know whether you were going up stairs or down stairs?—I was, sir.

10570. Did you go up or down stairs?—I couldn't exactly say.

10571. At any rate you went into some room?—We went into some room when we came out of that room; I couldn't exactly say, for the place was dark.

10572. Was there a light in the room?—There wasn't a light when we went into it.

10573. Was there a light brought by anyone?—I couldn't say was it Mrs. Boyton herself that put up a light there; but there was a light there before we went away, sir.

10574. Was it a bed-room, or a sitting-room?—I dare say; I think I was in the room before, that it was a bed-room.

10575. And you say you only think it was a bed-room?—It was a bed-room, sir.

10576. Are you quite sure that it was?—Well, I'm not quite sure of that, sir.

10577. Then you are not quite sure whether it was up stairs or down stairs, and you are not quite sure whether it was a bed-room; but you were taken into some room?—I was taken into a room.

10578. Who went in with you?—Mrs. Boyton, sir; she asked me how was the Commons' people going to go; that herself was taking an active part in the election; that Mr. Boyton wasn't to interfere at all in it.

10579. Was there anyone with you but Mrs. Boyton?—No, sir, there was no person.

10580. Was the door open or shut?—The door was open when we went in, and she closed it out.

10581. You say that she said to you that she was taking an active part in the election, and that Mr. Boyton was not?—Yes.

10582. Were you in court the other day when Mrs. Boyton was examined?—No, sir.

10583. Did you read her evidence anywhere?—I did, sir.

10584. Was it that that reminded you about her taking an active part, and Mr. Boyton not doing so, because I observe you did not tell that before the Judge?—I wasn't asked the question before the Judge.

10585. I am not going to ask you any question at all, except this. I ask you to tell me all that occurred. Do not leave out anything under the pretence that I did not ask you. Tell me all that happened?—When we went into the bed-room she said to me how was the Commons' people going to go, and I said I didn't know; that of course that whoever would give them the most money that that was the way they would go.

10586. You said whoever gave most money they would vote for?—"Well," says she, coming over very close to me, "I have £1,225," says she, "to give to any person, and you are the most respectable man in the Commons, and I will give it to you, John," says she.

10587. She said she had £1,225 and she would give it to you as being the most respectable man amongst them?—Yes.

10588. What were you to do with it?—To distribute it amongst the Commons' voters, she said, honestly, and that I could deduct my own share out of it, too, if I wished.

10589. What did you say to that?—I told her I wouldn't have anything at all; that I wouldn't take an agency from anyone.

10590. Did you decline it absolutely?—No, sir; I told her I would call again about it. She said, "Well, John, you won't go until you take the money." I told her I wouldn't take it that night on any account.

10591. What did you mean by saying you would come to her again?—Because if I distributed that money, and the Commons' people deny it afterwards, the money might be recovered from me, and I wished to take advice on it.

10592. Then you had some notion of taking it?—I had, sir.

10593. And of taking your own share of it?—I didn't say that.

10594. But you had some notion of taking the money, and taking your own share of it?—Yes, your worship; 'twas a large sum and I didn't like to ——.

10595. You didn't like to throw away such a chance, I suppose?—Begor, that was it, your worship.

10596. Of course you would then have voted for Mr. Munster?—I would not, sir.

10597. Do you mean to say that you would have taken £1,225 and distributed it amongst the Commoners, keeping, of course, the lion's share for yourself, and then have voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—If I got the £1,225 I would, sir. I would vote for Mr. Munster on that account.

10598. You told us a while ago you would not take a thousand pounds and vote for Mr. Munster, and you now say you would take £1,200; is it because it is more than £1,000 that you would take it?—[Witness smiles.]

10599. Is that a thing to laugh at?—No, I didn't mean to do anything of the kind.

10600. You are not in a very laughable position at all?—I would be very sorry to——.

10601. Do you hold any public position in consequence of which you attend Mr. Rollestone?—Poor-rate collector, sir.

10602. To whom did you go to take advice as to whether you would take the money or not?—I went to Clonmel to Mr. Guiry's son, an uncle's son of mine.

10603. Is he a solicitor or attorney?—He is a magistrate, sir.

10604. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Where does Mr. Guiry live?—In the town of Clonmel, sir.

10605. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you take his advice on the matter?—I told him I came to him to get advice on a certain thing, to know would he go to Counsellor Hackett about it, and what Mr. Hackett would charge I would give to him. "You are a fool," says he, "to interfere in such a thing. Here's a letter from the Commissioners to the Youghal Union to the clerk. He was called on to resign if he interfered with any voter in the election." So I refused to go any further, and didn't tell him at all about it.

10606. That was about Mr. Kennedy, I think?—I don't know, sir. He read it out of the paper, at all events, for me.

10607. You said something about your having got

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

John Ryan.

a letter from Mr. Boyton to somebody. Who was that?—To Mr. Leahy he gave me the letter.

10608. What Mr. Leahy was that?—The man that was buying the horse.

10609. Is it Mr. Edmond Leahy?—Yes, sir.

10610. What was the letter about?—I couldn't say what it contained, sir; but I asked Mr. Boyton to have him interfere with Mr. Leahy to buy the horse. I didn't wish to have anything at all to say myself to the sale of the horse in the commencement of it.

10611. Was it before you saw Mrs. Boyton that you had this conversation with Mr. Boyton about the sale of the horse, and got the letter from him?—It was in the bank I got the letter from him.

10612. When did you get the letter from him?—Well, I couldn't say the time.

10613. Was it before or after the conversation with Mrs. Boyton?—It was before, sir.

10614. Was it on the same day do you know?—I dare say not, sir.

10615. Had you any conversation with Mrs. Boyton about the sale of the horse?—Mr. Boyton, the evening that she asked me to tea, asked me, "What about the horse, John? Is he bought yet?" or something to that effect about the horse.

10616. Did anything further occur about this £1,225?—Well, I was in town a few days after and I went to Mrs. Boyton. She was living at Abbeyview at this time.

10617. Was this after you were at Clonmel?—It was, sir.

10618. Do I understand you to say that you went to Clonmel the day after you saw Mrs. Boyton?—I didn't go the day after; I went to Fethard.

10619. How many days after you saw Mrs. Boyton did you go to Clonmel to Mr. Guiry?—About two days or three. I think 'twas the 2nd or 3rd of November, and the 5th of November was the old fair day that I went there.

10620. You say you went to Mrs. Boyton some days afterwards. When was that?—I couldn't say the time afterwards, but 'twas only a few days' difference.

10621. And she was stopping at Abbeyview?—At Abbeyview I met her.

10622. Did you go in for the money?—It was with that intention I went. She said she had nothing to do with it, and that Mr. Boyton wouldn't let her have anything to do with the matter.

10623. Then, what you told about Guiry's advice was not the reason you did not take it earlier?—It was.

10624. You told me this instant that you went after Guiry's advice to Mrs. Boyton to Abbeyview, to get the money?—I did, sir.

10625. Therefore Guiry's advice to you had nothing to say to your not taking it?—Well, it seems I didn't take his advice.

10626. What happened between you and Mrs. Boyton at the time that you were at Abbeyview?—We had only a few words of conversation; after that she brought me a glass of wine, and I took it and went away.

10627. Did you mean to keep the entire £1,225 for yourself?—I wouldn't, sir; I would distribute it if I got it, if I took it.

10628. To whom would you have given it?—Of course, to the Commons' people, sir.

10629. How did you know they would take it?—Gar, it was rumoured always they were in the habit of getting it.

10630. Did you know them to get it?—I never did, but what I hear by hearsay.

10631. And it was altogether voluntary on your own part, when you said to Mrs. Boyton that whoever gave the most money, it was for them they would vote?—Yes.

10632. Was that true?—It was.

10633. Did you know it?—That was my opinion, your worship.

10634. You live on the Commons, and know the place and the people there?—Well, I don't know many of the Commons' people, although living in it until lately. There were people on the Commons'-road that I didn't know until this election petition took place any way, but to hear their names.

10635. In the interval, between the time you saw Mrs. Boyton first and came to her again, had you any talk with any of the people of the Commons about money?—Never.

10636. After you were offered the £1,225, and believed you would have got it, do you mean to say that you did not speak to any of them?—Not to any one man.

10637. Did you swear you would distribute it?—I would, if I got it.

10638. And did you never speak to any man about it?—Never; only to Father John Ryan, of New Inn, the day we were going to Clonmel. He had a spring car and I had one of my own, and I walked two or three miles of the road, and I told him I could be the richest man of my name in the Commons that ever came, if I took the offer that was made a few nights ago.

10639. That you would be the richest man that ever came of your name, if you took the offer you got the other night?—Yes.

10640. How much did you intend to keep of the £1,225?—I hadn't my mind made up to that.

10641. Was it to that you were alluding when you spoke to Father Ryan?—It was.

10642. What were you alluding to when you said you would be the richest man of your name in the Commons?—What I alluded to was to know would he advise me to take it.

[Mr. Munster.—I should like to ask Father John Ryan to be ordered out, as I should like to examine him.]

10643. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If you please, Mr. Munster, do not disturb the Court. I ask you again—[to witness]—and let me have a distinct answer to the question—was it to that offer of Mrs. Boyton you alluded when you spoke to Father John Ryan?—Yes, indeed, your worship.

10644. Did you tell him what the offer was?—I told him £1,225.

10645. And you say you told that to Father John Ryan for the purpose of getting his advice?—Yes; that is the reason I told him of it.

10646. What advice did he give you?—Well, he didn't say much on the matter. He didn't tell me to take it or not to take it.

10647. What did he say to you?—He only drew down about Mr. O'Beirne, and didn't say what I would do about the money at all. He only drew down about Mr. O'Beirne what a nice man he was, a gentlemanly man, and from his career in Parliament no person ought to go against him.

10648. Did he give you any advice about the offer?—On my oath I couldn't say what he said to me. He only shook his head and he walking away, this way, when I told him of it.

10649. Did he give you any advice as to whether you ought to take it or not?—I think by what he said that his advice would be to take it, your worship.

10650. Do you say that you understood that?—Well, he spoke very low, your worship, and I spoke very easy. I used to speak to him very high, and he would hear every word I was saying, and he would speak very low to me.

10651. Did you hear what he said to you?—I think what he said was: "Take it, John." That was the way he spoke to me, your worship.

10652. Unless you intended to keep the entire money what did you mean by saying you could be the richest man of your name on the Commons?—How, unless I kept all the money myself?

10653. Yes?—You know it was at my own election whether I would or not.

10654. Did you mean to keep it?—I didn't. If I took it I would distribute it.

10655. What was the meaning of your saying to

Father Ryan you might be the richest man of your name?—Getting such a lot of money.

10656. But if you were only to get it to distribute it. How much did you intend at the time to distribute?—I hadn't my mind made up as to what I would do at the time; but if I took it I would distribute it.

10657. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Would you distribute the whole?—I would not.

10658. Would you distribute half?—I would, your worship.

10659. Would you distribute more than half?—I would, your worship.

10660. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Mrs. Boyton show you the £1,225?—No, your worship, she did not.

10661. She did not show it to you?—She did not, but she said she had it for me though.

10662. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did anybody ever tell you that if money was given to you for bribery or any illegal purpose, it could not be recovered back from you?—I dare say there was many spoke of it to know if it was given for your vote it could not be recovered.

10663. Did you know whether it could or not?—I don't know at present.

10664. Had you a suspicion that it could not?—I had a suspicion that it could not.

10665. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you recollect being asked by Mr. Butt, at the petition, "Did you at the time of the election in 1865 get money from anyone?" and did you answer "O, it is not necessary that I should answer that. It has nothing to do with this. Shall I answer it, my lord?" And when Mr. Baron Fitzgerald said, "You must answer it," did you reply, "I never got a penny from e'er member." Is that true?—I never got a penny by e'er a member.

10666. Listen to the question. Mr. Butt asked you, "Tell me, did you get any money from anybody in 1865?" And you answered, "I never got a penny from e'er a member." Is that true?—'Tis, sir.

10667. Did you not get a £5 cheque?—That was for car hire.

10668. But did you not get it?—But it was for bribery I understood from Mr. Butt.

10669. He asked you this, "Did you get any money from anybody in connexion with the election of 1865, or connected with it?" You answered, "I did not get any money connected with an agent from the election. Nor was I concerned in that election." Now were all these answers true?—I never got any money from anybody in the election of '65.

10670. Did you not get £5?—Twasn't that time I got it.

10671. When did you get it?—Many days after Mr. O'Beirne came here this time.

10672. Why did you not tell that to Mr. Waters?—Sure I told him I got a £5 cheque.

10673. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I asked you if you got money for the election of 1865, and you said you did not except a £5 cheque. You never told me it was at the election of 1868 you got it?—Just after he coming at the election of 1868 I demanded this £5 from him.

10674. Mr. MOLLOY.—Where did you get the cheque cashed?—In the National Bank.

10675. How soon after you got it did you get it cashed?—I dare say a day after I got it or two.

10676. Who gave you cash for it?—Mr. Boyton.

10677. Are you sure that the cheque was only for £5?—I am quite sure.

10678. Was it in October or November that you got that amount?—It was in either one or the other of the months.

10679. Did you get any more in the election of 1865?—On my oath I never got a penny in any other form.

10680. Nor a cheque?—Nor a cheque.

10681. Nor a bill to raise any money?—Nor a bill to raise any money.

10682. Did you apply to Mr. O'Beirne for this £5?—I did, your worship.

10683. How long before the election of 1868 did you apply?—The one day.

10684. Did you apply to him shortly after the election of 1865?—No.

10685. Had you any conversation at all about it in 1865?—I hadn't, your worship.

10686. You had no conversation about it?—No conversation.

10687. What took place the day you went for the £5 cheque?—I went to William Corcoran's that lived here in town. I told him some Commons' people were not able to come to the election of 1865, to Miss O'Dwyer's hotel, and to send out cars for them, and accordingly he did so, and billed me afterwards for £5 car hire; and Mr. Johnson, he was in Dublin, and I went to him, and they said he was sick at Miss O'Dwyer's hotel, and I heard afterwards that it was a scheme; that he wasn't sick, but didn't want to see any person.

10688. Then you were acting in the election of 1865?—That was all I done, your worship.

10689. Was not that acting in the election of 1865?—That was only to oblige.

10690. And you swore to Mr. Butt that you were not acting in the election of 1865?—Sure I wasn't concerned only to oblige him to do that much.

10691. Who were you obliging?—Mr. Johnson, sir.

10692. Did you pay Corcoran the bill?—Yes, I paid Corcoran the bill.

10693. When?—I believe four or five weeks or three weeks after the election.

10694. After the election of 1865?—Yes.

10695. How much did you pay him?—£5.

10696. And you never applied to Mr. O'Beirne for it?—I didn't until he came here, because he promised a situation to my brother-in-law.

10697. When did he promise the situation?—In the election of '65.

10698. Who is your brother-in-law?—Patrick Moloney.

10699. When was the situation promised?—Previous to the election.

10700. Of 1865?—Yes, and at the last election of '68 as well he promised it to him again. He made applications several times to him, but the situations Mr. O'Beirne would get for him I dare say he wasn't able to fulfil them. They wouldn't suit him and he wasn't able; he wouldn't take them then.

10701. Did you ask Father John Ryan that day at the racecourse whether you would take the £1,225?—I did; I asked him.

10702. Did you ask him would you take the £1,225?—I did, I asked him would I take the £1,225, and he said this way——we were walking very fast after the horses.

10703. Did you ask him whether you would take it and keep it for yourself?—No, I never asked him a word of the kind.

10704. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he say anything to you to the effect that you could vote for Mr. O'Beirne, whether you took it or not?—I havn't any doubt but he said it another day he was coming to town.

10705. Was this afterwards?—I couldn't say was it after or before it. He was speaking that day Mr. O'Beirne was at the Commons, and to the best of my belief, he said to take money from anybody, and to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

10706. That was not addressed to you in particular?—Oh no, your worship. All the Commons' people were expected there at the Cross.

10707. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes to ask you how long before this negotiation did you buy the horse? How long had you him before the election of 1868?—I had him, I think, two years.

10708. How much did you give for him?—'Twas money I got with him for a horse; 'twas a swap.

10709. How often did you go to Abbeyview to sell the horse?—I went there many times. There used to be a message to me to bring the horse.

10710. How often did you go?—I went there five or six times, your worship.

10711. You said Mr. Leahy in his conversation with

ELEVENTH DAY.
October 15.
John Ryan.

you, said it was not horses they wanted, but votes? Did he say anything as to any number of horses Mr. Munster had?—He did; he said he got two horses from some gentleman, I think Mr. Stuart. He made mention of some horses they bought.

10712. Did he say Mr. Munster did not want the horse?—He said they did not want horses at this time.

10713. Do you know how many horses he had at the time?—No, I do not.

10714. Did you ever tell any person that if Mr. Munster gave you £100 for your horse, you would get the Commoners to go with him?—Not to my knowledge.

10715. You never told anybody that?—I never told anybody that to my knowledge.

10716. Did you say to Dr. Cormack on his way to Rockwell, that if Mr. Munster gave you £100 for the horse, you would get the Commons' voters to go with him?—I couldn't say, your worship; but to the best of my opinion, your worship, I never spoke to that effect.

10717. Is it your evidence that you never said that to Doctor Cormack?—I couldn't say it, because we had some conversation about Mr. Munster, and Doctor Cormack was continually praising him.

10718. Did you ever tell anyone that you would take £40 for the horse?—Mr. Dolan, he was the vet. that inspected him, your worship, and he said that £40 would be about the value of the horse, and I said I dare say it would be about the value of him; there was a great many saying a good many things about the horse.

10719. You said that Mrs. Boyton did not show you the money at all?—She didn't show me the money.

10720. Did she tell you she had it?—O, yes; she said she had it in a box, or something of that kind.

10721. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you see the box that she said the £1,225 was in?—To my knowledge I don't think I saw the box; it could be there unknown to me.

10722. Had you ever any conversation with Miss Kate O'Dwyer or with Anastatia Bishop about the box?—On my oath I never had.

10723. Who is Anastatia Bishop?—I don't know who she is; I know her by eyesight.

10724. Did Mr. Guiry tell you that money received as a bribe, or for distribution in bribery, was not recoverable?—I don't think Mr. Guiry had any conversation as to that, your worship.

10725. Is your former evidence correct, that you did not enter into the matter with Mr. Guiry?—Any further, your worship, than what I stated.

10726. Mrs. Boyton says that the interview at the Rock hotel was on the 3rd of November, is that correct?—I can't say, your worship; it was either the 2nd or 3rd of November.

10727. You fix it by the date of the old fair?—Yes, your worship; I went to Fethard the day after; that's the way I recollect it, and but for that I wouldn't recollect it at all; Monday was the day this occurred; Monday was the day of the week, because I was taking off my account to the workhouse.

10728. Do you know what the date of the fair at Clonmel on Monday was?—The 5th November; it was an old fair day, I recollect.

10729. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was that the day you met Father John Ryan?—That was the day the two of us were going in to the fair together, your worship.

10730. Monday was the day of the conversation with Mrs. Boyton?—Yes, I think Monday was the day.

10731. You are sure of that?—I'm sure that was the day, for I was taking my account to the workhouse.

10732. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever get any money for distribution in bribery?—Never.

10733. And keep it?—Never.

10734. Do you know of anybody that did so?—Never; I don't know of anybody that did so, your worship.

10735. Did you ever hear that anyone had done so?—I never heard of anybody doing so, your worship; I am not very long dealing with elections at all, and I'd sooner have nothing at all to do with them.

10736. Did you sign a requisition to Mr. Scully?—No, your worship, I didn't.

10737. You did not?—No.

10738. Did you hear of its being signed in the Commons?—Yes; I heard my name was forged to it.

10739. You never authorized anyone to sign it?—No.

10740. Do you know how many signed it?—No; but I met Mr. Vincent Scully a Saturday, and he handed me a circular and said wasn't I one of the parties that supported him, and I said I was; I didn't know what he meant at the time; he handed me a paper in the street—himself and Mr. Jerome of Silverfort—and I took it and put it in my pocket.

10741. Did you ever say to anybody that you could use your influence as a poor-rate collector in inducing persons to give votes?—No, for I collected no poor-rates in the borough.

10742. Did you ever say you could use your influence as poor-rate collector in inducing persons to vote?—Not to my knowledge; but I might have said it in the election of 1865, because I went to Tipperary and stated to Mr. Waldron that there were cousins of his and they came to me.

10743. Do you know how many voters there are on the Commons?—I often had the barony-sheet, and to the best of my opinion, I think, 'tis 200.

10744. In the Commons?—No, but for the whole borough.

10745. How many on the Commons?—I couldn't say, your worship, how many.

10746. Did Father Ryan tell the Commons' people to take the money of the Saxon and to vote against him?—I didn't understand that he spoke of Saxons on that day, your worship. I was riding my horse, coming to town, and I met him walking the horse; I didn't hear him say that. He didn't say that while I was there; but I heard him say to take the money and vote for O'Beirne.

10747. Was it to take money from everybody?—Yes, but to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, your worship. Do I require a certificate, your worship, as being a poor-rate collector?

10748. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—As soon as the evidence is completed we shall name a day when we shall consider applications as to certificates. You will have notice of the day we shall name. Let any person who thinks he wants one come up, and we will consider whether we shall give it.

The Rev. John Ryan.

The Reverend John Ryan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10749. Did you hear what that man said; that he overtook you on the road, and said to you that he might be the richest man of his name on the Commons if he had accepted an offer made to him. Tell us what you recollect of the conversation?—He overtook me on the road going into Clonmel, and he said to me that he might have been the richest man of his name on the Commons of Cashel if he took a sum of money offered to him a day or two ago—£1,250 as I recollect, but he makes it now £1,225—to be distributed by him amongst the Commons' voters to get them to vote for Mr. Munster. I asked him, "Did you take the money?" "No," said he. "Why?" said I. "Because," said he, "I was afraid that the Commons' people if we took Mr. Munster's money should vote for him, and we are all anxious to support Mr. O'Beirne. Could I take it," said he, "and still vote for Mr. O'Beirne?" "As you have not taken the money," said I, "it is not necessary for me to decide such a question of morality for you." With regard to the other observations he made as to what I said at the Commons of Cashel——

10750. Is that all that occurred on the road?—That is all that occurred on the road going into Clonmel. With regard to that particular transaction that he spoke of, I do not recollect whether he mentioned the name of the person who offered the £1,200; but I recollect distinctly he named that sum and the purpose for which it was offered.

10751. And your recollection is it was £1,250?—As well as I recollect, but I am quite sure that he mentioned the sum of £1,200 to me. With regard to the meeting that had been held on the Commons of Cashel which I alighted on on my way from the town, I said, amongst other things, that I stated in favour of Mr. O'Beirne, that I heard there was a very wealthy Englishman come amongst them to purchase, if possible, their "sweet voices;" and I said that he and every other Englishman owed to us Irish people——

10752. Without repeating the entire, give us the substance very shortly?—That I would be very glad wealthy people came to canvass them and to scatter money amongst them; but that at the same time they should not allow their votes to be influenced by any person that came to purchase them.

10753. I am afraid you gave them bad advice?—Did I?

10754. They had no right to take money in any way?—Not for their votes; but if a man chose to scatter money amongst the poor people.

10755. Did you mean for their votes?—No, not at all. I said distinctly "take whatever you get, but take care and vote according to your conscience." I think they would be very great fools if they refused it.

10756. Father Ryan, did you recollect this occurrence with Ryan when you were giving your evidence the other day?—With Ryan?

10757. Yes?—It did not come before my memory. If I thought of it I would have told you that as well as everything else; but I recollected it this morning, and I went to Mr. M'Sheehy and told him about it before the court sat.

10758. I am aware you did, and Mr. M'Sheehy communicated to me almost verbatim, the very words you have now said to me?—I made a mistake, I think, as to the date that Mr. Doheny was a candidate; it was in '47, not '52. Another correction I wish to make is, that Mr. Roe was a candidate before the late Judge Perrin. I asked the shorthand writer to make these alterations in my evidence, and he told me to mention them to the Court.

Thomas Looby, of Lower Gate, and Luke Larkin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Thomas Looby and Luke Larkin.

10759. You recollect the account you gave of the man you saw in the room at Corcoran's?—Looby.—Yes, my lord.

10760. Look at this man?—Looby (looking at Larkin).—My lord, he is very much about the same man's size, but still I can't prove he's the man. He was in his shirt-sleeves, and it was pantaloons he had on in place of that knee-breeches.

10761. He is not dressed now as he was then?—Looby.—No, my lord; a pantaloons and shirt-sleeves.

10762. Do you think you would recognise him if dressed in the same way again?—Looby.—He is about the same size, my lord.

10763. Do you think you would know him if he was in his shirt and pantaloons again, as you saw him at Corcoran's?—Looby.—I couldn't rightly ascertain, for I hadn't my specs on, my lord, in the candle-light, and one small candle lighting in the room.

10764. Do you [to Larkin] recollect this old gentleman?—Larkin.—No, your worship; but I can positively state I didn't wear trousers for the last forty years, nor hadn't my coat off in the hotel, nor didn't sleep in the hotel.

10765. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you ever your coat and waistcoat off in Corcoran's hotel?—Larkin.—Never.

10766. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You are quite sure that the man you saw had his coat and trousers off?—Looby.—Yes, my lord.

10767. Are you sure of it?—Looby.—I am, my lord; he had nothing but a shirt-sleeves and pantaloons on.

10768. You are quite sure of that?—Looby.—Quite sure, my lord, to the real best of my belief.

10769. Mr. MOLLOY.—You have no doubt that the man had his coat and waistcoat off?—Looby.—No doubt.

10770. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you speak to the man in the room?—Looby.—I went into the room. "Sit down," says he. The bed was there; he got out of the bed. "I have commands here for you," says he, so he throws me a bundle of notes. "Count that," says he. "I can't," says I; "I havn't my specs." "Put your name to this." I took it, and wrote "Thomas Looby."

10771. Do you recollect anything of that, Mr. Larkin?—Larkin.—No.

10772. It appeared to you that the man was shortly after getting out of bed?—Looby.—Yes, out of bed he riz.

10773. Do you swear you never slept in that house?—Larkin.—I do; that I never slept or took off any part of my clothes there.

10774. My impression is that you are both telling the truth, and that you are both accurate?—Looby.—I hope, with the help of God, I am at all events.

10775. Do you not think [to Larkin] if you saw this old gentleman once that you would know him again? You do not see a great many like him?—Larkin.—No.

10776. Do you not think you would know him again?—Larkin.—I don't think I would.

10777. Do you know another Thomas Looby?—Looby.—I do, my lord.

10778. He lives in Hughes' Lot, east?—Looby.—Yes, my lord.

10779. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I am afraid we have not got the right Thomas Looby for this man, and not the right man for you. Do you not know this man Looby?—Larkin.—I don't, my lord.

Looby.—Don't you live in Templemore?—Larkin.—I do.

Looby.—And you don't know me?—Larkin.—No.

Looby.—Well, I'm going there for these last seventeen years to fairs, so you must be a queer man not to know me.

10780. Patrick Cunningham.—It was I conveyed Mr. Looby up, and there was no other gentleman there than this man [pointing to Larkin], so I don't know how the mistake is between them.

Luke Larkin's examination resumed by Mr. MOLLOY.

Luke Larkin

10781. Larkin, where did you eat your breakfast on the morning of the polling?—On the morning of the polling I think 'twas at—I know the day of the polling I was at Mr. Cunningham's.

10782. At Cunningham's?—The day of the poll.

10783. Did you breakfast there that morning?—I couldn't say that.

10784. Were you at Corcoran's hotel on the day of the polling?—I couldn't say that, but I was the day at breakfast—I took two breakfasts, I think, at Corcoran's hotel.

10785. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You ate two breakfasts, you say?—I think I did.

10786. Mr. MOLLOY.—Are you able to say whether you went to Corcoran's hotel on the day of the polling before daylight?—I couldn't say that; I don't recollect.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Witness acknowledged himself under the obligation of the oath he had previously taken.

10787. What was done with the notes all these persons signed?—I have them.

10788. Where are they?—They are just as I got them the day Larkin was leaving town, and I didn't open them nor touch them since, sir. I was told by Mr. Laffan to keep them safely. [Witness hands them in.]

10789. Mr. GRIFFIN.—By which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10790. Mr. WATERS Q.C.—You were concerned in the last election for Mr. Munster?—I was.

10791. Have you the envelopes that were left?—No; there were no envelopes there, sir. Yes, the names of the parties the notes were from. They were torn up to pieces. There was nothing on the envelope but the name of the party that passed the note, and the money he was to get—the man's name.

10792. When did you begin to be concerned in the election?—I think only in October, as well as I can recollect.

10793. Who employed you?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

10794. Were you engaged in the election of 1865—I was.

10795. For whom?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

10796. Did you distribute any money for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—No, sir.

10797. None at all?—Oh, I did; something over, I think, £120; I think something over £100 as well as I recollect.

10798. Was it to voters?—No, sir, to car-drivers and people of the street.

10799. Have you made out, as I directed you yesterday, the sums of money you know to have been distributed in 1868?—To drivers, car-drivers, sir?

10800. Certainly not?—To voters?

10801. Have you made out a list of the persons to whom you distributed money in '68?—Yes, I have, sir.

10802. Where is it?—There is only one party I gave money to, only these that passed bills.

10803. Who is the one party to whom you gave money except those that passed bills?—A man of the name of John Bowes, and Phelan. I gave Mrs. Phelan half-notes for £30.

James Phelan.

James Phelan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10804. You have sent me a note?—Yes, sir.

10805. You complain that you got those half notes from Cunningham, and were promised the remainder in a couple of days; and that since you have applied to Cunningham and Mr. Laffan for the corresponding halves. You ask me to order Cunningham to pay you those halves. I cannot do anything of the kind, because the conclusion that my brother Commissioners and myself have so far come to—of course it is not final—is that it was given as a bribe, and we cannot assist any man in getting money that was intended as a bribe?—Cunningham took my house for £30, sir.

10805A. I have given you an answer now that, so far as we are able to form an opinion, we think that that money was given as a bribe, and we cannot assist you in getting the other half-notes.

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10806. You said you gave money to a man named Bowes?—Yes; not to Edmond Bowes, but to his son—to John Bowes.

10807. How much?—£20.

10808. To John Bowes?—Yes.

10809. Was it for his father?—Well, we made no remark about the father, but he asked how things were going on about the town, and that he expected to be treated the same as others.

10810. Is the father a very old man unable to manage matters?—Yes.

10811. And that money was given for the father's vote?—I expected the father would support us. I asked no vote connected with the late election.

10812. I know how those things are done, Mr. Cunningham. That was meant for his vote, was it not?—I expected he would support Mr. Munster.

10813. It was meant for his father's vote?—Yes, he gave no value to me.

10814. That was the intention with which you gave it?—Yes, he gave no value for it.

10815. I find his father did vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

10816. You mentioned another name?—The only money that I gave out of my hands was the £50 I had connected with Ryan and Murnane.

10817. Did you not give the £20 for Edmond Bowes out of your hands?—Yes, I am after saying that.

10818. And the only other money you say that you gave out of your own hands was the money connected with Ryan?—Yes, to Ryan and Murnane, and Carroll's.

10819. You got back £50 from Ryan?—Yes.

10820. And you paid Carroll's money out of Ryan's?—Yes. I gave two letters for Looby—a man of the name of Duggan.

10821. What did you do with the balance, £15?—£15: I gave £8 of it, I think, to Mr. Patrick Laffan, £7 or £8 I cannot say as to the exact amount; and I paid balances on small bills through the town, which I believe Mr. Michael Laffan paid again back to Mr. Patrick Laffan again, sir. He charged him, I think, in his account with that £7 or £8 paid by me.

10822. From whom did you receive the £50 that you gave to Ryan and Murnane?—Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir.

10823. From whom did you receive the £20 that you gave to Bowes?—I got £90 on that occasion; I didn't get it exactly on that occasion. There was £30 given to me, together with £60 that was enclosed in the two letters, one for Duggan and one for Heffernan.

10824. I am afraid you are going to a different day?—It was on the same day that I gave Bowes the £20, the £60 was enclosed in the two letters, one for Duggan and one for Heffernan, which I was to hand to Looby to give to those parties on that day that I gave £20 to Bowes.

10825. What did you do with the balance?—It went for sundry small things connected with the election; and there it is, charged in this account, as I returned it.

10826. Do you recollect what you did with it?—No, not with the balance of the £10.

10827. Do you recollect the day you got the £90; where was this £90 paid to you?—£60 in Mr. Laffan's office. The £90.

10828. Was it all paid to you in Mr. Michael Laffan's office?—This was some time after the election. Heffernan, as well as I recollect, went to Mr. Patrick Laffan and said he wanted to go to some fair, and if he had any money on hands to give it to him. Heffernan followed Mr. Patrick Laffan to the office, and he said he would see him in the course of the day; so immediately after Heffernan leaving him and Duggan, the £60 was put, £30 in each envelope, with the name on the back, and no more. I think there were sovereigns in one envelope.

10829. You say that you got that money in Mr. Michael Laffan's office?—Yes.

10830. From whose hands?—From Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10831. Was Mr. Michael Laffan there?—No; no one but both of us.

10832. Do you know where Mr. Patrick Laffan got the money?—I don't. I think on one occasion he said he got money from Mr. Leahy.

10833. Was it you that put the money into the two envelopes?—I couldn't say that—whether it was Mr. Patrick Laffan or I.

10834. But it was put in in your presence?—Yes.

10835. And you handed the two envelopes to the man called Looby?—"Looby or Duggan;" Duggan is his name. He followed me to my father's house, and I handed him the two envelopes.

10836. Where did you receive the money you gave Ryan?—In Corcoran's Hotel.

10837. From whom did you receive it?—From Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10838. Who was present when you got the money?—No one, sir.

10839. Larkin, who was on the table here, was, you are aware, engaged in distributing money to voters and taking those bills from them?—Yes, sir.

10840. Do you know the evidence he gave yesterday?—No, sir; I read some of it this morning.

10841. Where did you read it by the way?—I read it out of one of the notes that was taken on yesterday.

10842. By whom were the notes taken?—I went up to Mr. Biggin last night, to know would he give me the notes of the day's proceedings, and he said he would send them down to me; so he sent them down by a girl to me. I went to look for him to Mr. Munster's yard.

Mr. E. H. Biggin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10843. I doubt, Mr. Biggin, that Cunningham can tell the reason that lay in your mind for lending those notes. I should say it is you who know the reason. On consultation with my brother Commissioners here, I may say to you that we are of opinion that we ought not to attribute it to more than indiscretion on your part, but that it was exceedingly indiscreet of you to take notes here, and send them to any person who was to be examined the next day as a witness?—Because I thought it was for a good reason. I did it to help him.

10844. You might help him another way. We say no more than that it was a very great indiscretion?—I am very sorry, sir.

10845. If we thought it was from a different reason we would deal very severely with you. You must not make use of any notes taken. If you do we must certainly prevent you from taking any?—I will not, sir, again. I did not wish to do anything wrong at all.

10846. We tell you now that it is certainly wrong. I wished this witness to come up here to tell his own story entirely unassisted and undirected. If he forgot anything, one could very easily see whether it was withheld designedly or not. But we did not want to have him assisted by being told what another man had said.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10847. I will read over rapidly the names until I come to such as I wish to ask you about [the Chief Commissioner reads the list given by Larkin]. "Half notes to a young man by Cunningham's order, £30;" a verbal order that you gave to him for some young man. Who was that?—It must be a friend of Croagh's, I think.

10848. "Half notes to a young man by the verbal order of Pat. Cunningham?"—I don't recollect any man getting half notes for £30 but Croagh.

10849. Croagh is down before that. Gleeson got half notes for Croagh?—He is a young man; quite a young man; there must be a mistake in that; Gleeson is the only man that got them.

10850. Larkin seems to have kept his account with marvellous accurracy, considering that he did not expect to be examined here, and I am inclined to think that Larkin is not mistaken. "To Gleeson, in trust for Croagh, half-notes for £30"?—It must be half-notes for £40.

10851. No, "half-notes for £30 to a young man"; he says it was on your order; have you any recollection of it?—I have not not, sir.

10852. You must search your recollection?—If he did, I would have the remaining halves.

The Chief Commissioner reads the remainder of the list.

10853. Who is Connolly?—A son of John Connolly.

10854. For whom was the £70—thirty-five of it for John Connolly?—I couldn't say, sir; he made the arrangements with Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10855. Do you know Peter Connolly?—I do.

10856. What is he to Jeremiah Connolly?—An uncle to Jeremiah Connolly, an uncle to John Connolly.

10857. Peter and John Connolly are brothers?—Yes.

10858. Was £70 paid to anyone?—To Jeremiah Connolly.

10859. Not for his own vote, surely?—I don't know, I couldn't say.

10860. You do not know?—I don't.

10861. Did you ever hear Peter Connolly got a portion of it?—I couldn't say.

10862. I suppose you suspected?—The son of John Connolly is doing business constantly for Peter Connolly.

10863. "A man unknown, by Patrick Cunningham's order at Corcoran's, £35"; who was that?—That is a man of the name of Edmund Stapleton.

10864. Had you previously given that money to anybody else to give to Stapleton?—I had, to a man of the name of Denis Ryan.

10865. Did Denis Ryan return the money to you?—The following day he left it in town, in some place. He said Stapleton was under the influence of liquor, and he wouldn't give him the money. The following day he brought this to Corcoran's hotel and gave the money, so accordingly I returned the money to Patrick Laffan. He turned round and put his hand to his pocket, and I put the money down into it. I took a note of it after he coming out, because he asked me "who was that man, he wouldn't sign a bill." I said, I knew him. He said he wouldn't take the money in his hands, so he turned round to me and I put the money into his pocket.

10866. Did you make the arrangement with any of those voters, as to the sums they were to be paid?—I did; with a few, sir.

10867. Did you make an arrangement with Francis Dwyer?—Yes.

10868. Is that Francis Dwyer of Lady's Well-street?—Lady's Well; yes.

10869. Did Francis Dwyer ever tell you he got the money?—No, indeed.

10870. Did you see him get it?—I didn't see him get it.

10871. Do you know Dwyer's writing?—No, sir; I don't.

10872. Who wrote all those notes?—I think they were written by Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10873. Do you know his handwriting?—Some of them were, I think.

10874. Look to them and see are there any of them written by you?—[Witness inspects them]—No.

10875. Mark P. L., in pencil, on those that are in

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Patrick Cunningham.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's writing?—I think they are all written by him, sir. They are in one hand—I think they are all in the same hand, sir.

10876. Are they all in Mr. Patrick Laffan's writing?—Yes. You asked me about Dwyer. Dwyer never told me he was paid. I told him to go up to the room, to this gentleman that was here, but he never told me he was paid.

10877. You made an arrangement with Francis Dwyer?—Yes.

10878. And you told him to go up there?—Yes.

10879. And you saw him go up?—Yes, I see him going up.

10880. Up to the room?—Yes.

10881. That was Francis Dwyer of Lady's Well a voter?—Yes.

10882. He voted for Mr. Munster?—He did.

10883. Did you make an arrangement with William Ryan?—Yes, I did.

10884. That was £30?—£30, sir.

10885. For his vote? Was it for his vote?—It was never spoken of, sir.

10886. But it was for nothing else but his vote?—I couldn't say; I got directions for to send them down to sign bills; I told them there was a gentleman at the house: he was there inside, and I objected the second day in leaving him in my house, and he was—I got directions to send him up to Corcoran's.

10887. From whom did you get directions?—From Mr. Patrick Laffan.

10888. Did you make an arrangement with Denis Dwyer?—Yes, sir, I sent him up to this man.

10889. Is that Denis Dwyer of Friar-street, Cashel?—Yes, sir.

10890. And he got £30?—Yes.

10891. Did you see him go up to the room?—I did, sir.

10892. And the arrangement you made with him was for £30?—£30, sir. Francis Dwyer's house was taken, and he signed a note for the money.

10893. Who made the arrangement with Robert Cashen?—I think it was I did, sir.

10894. For his vote? He voted for Mr. Munster?—He did, sir.

10895. Did you see him go up to the place where that man was?—I think it was in my father's house he got the money. I think I accompanied him down myself. I gave him one of those envelopes with his name in it.

10896. You say it was in your father's house Robert Cashen got the money?—Yes, to the best of my recollection, the evening after Mr. Larkin came, on Monday evening.

10897. Who made the arrangement with Patrick Griffin?—I did, sir.

10898. Is that Patrick Griffin of Friar-street?—Yes.

10899. That was £30 also for his vote?—Yes.

10900. Do you know where Patrick Griffin was paid the £30?—At my father's house.

10901. Did you see him paid it?—No, I didn't.

10902. Did you take him up to the room where that man was?—Yes, I showed him the room.

10903. James Cummins is, I believe, son of Richard Cummins?—Yes.

10904. Is Richard Cummins a very old man?—A very old man.

10905. The arrangement you made was with the son?—With the son.

10906. And it was for his father's vote?—I suppose so.

10907. Just answer me. I know very well you may not have used the very words, but was it for anything else than his father's vote that you made this arrangement for £30?—It was not.

10908. Where was he paid the £30?—In Corcoran's.

10909. Did you see him go into the room where Larkin was?—I sent him up to the room.

10910. I asked you already about Francis Dwyer, and you told me that he was paid the £30 at Corcoran's?—At Corcoran's.

10911. And that you saw him go up to the room where this man that was called "the man in the moon" was?—Yes.

10912. Is that the man whose house was taken?—Yes.

10913. Was he to get £30 for the house besides?—£30! no, he was not, sir; he was only to get the one £30.

10914. And this sum of £30 that he was paid there was the payment?—Yes, by signing the note.

10915. Did you make the arrangement with Michael Noonan?—No, I didn't.

10916. Who made the arrangement with Michael Noonan?—I think it was some of the boys as well as I can recollect.

10917. Did you give an order to him for the payment of the money?—Not to my recollection. I might have given an envelope.

10918. Do you recollect his getting the money?—I do.

10919. Did you see him get it?—No, I did not.

10920. Where did he get it?—At Corcoran's, I think. I can't say whether it was I showed Noonan the room, or some of the boys.

10921. Did you see him going where the man was?—He went into the room.

10922. He was a voter and voted for Mr. Munster?—He did.

10923. You have no doubt he is the man whose name is down here as having been paid by Larkin £30?—Not the least doubt of it.

10924. I believe he is since gone to America?—He is.

10925. And the £30 was given to him for his vote?—Yes.

10926. Who made the arrangement with Richard Butler?—I think it was I did.

10927. Thirty pounds for his vote?—Yes.

10928. He voted for Mr. Munster?—He did.

10929. Where was he to get the money?—I can't exactly say whether it was at Corcoran's or my father's; there was about five altogether paid at my father's.

10930. Do you recollect the fact of his being taken to Larkin?—I recollect I took him myself.

10931. And he is the man to whom Larkin paid the £30?—Yes.

10932. You have already proved that Patrick Croagh got £30?—Yes.

10933. Do you know who gave the £10 paid to Croagh for sand used at Mr. Munster's residence?—It was Mr. Patrick Laffan gave him the order.

10934. Larkin has an entry for £10 paid to this man for sand supplied for Mr. Munster's place at Abbeyview. Who got the money from Larkin, do you know?—I saw him when he was going about it.

10935. Croagh himself says he got the money from Mr. Hackett?—Yes, I recollect being in Mrs. Dolan's shop and I see Croagh there, and Mr. Patrick Laffan came in, and was telling Hackett about this large bill Croagh put in about the sand. I believe an arrangement was made and Hackett did pay him.

10936. You say the half notes for Croagh were given to Gleeson?—Yes, the £30. You have half notes there charged for £35. I am charged with half notes for £35 by Larkin. It ought to have been £40.

10937. How is that?—It was for a man of the name of Kennedy in Friar-street—Patrick Kennedy.

10938. He voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

10939. Did you pay the £40 to Patrick Kennedy?—No, they were sent by this man to him.

10940. What man?—Mr. Larkin. A man of the name of Dwyer carried the money to him, to the best of my recollection.

10941. What Dwyer?—Matthew Dwyer of Friar-street. He was doing business during the election.

10942. For whom was he doing business?—For Mr. Munster. Half notes were paid to Dwyer. I have the remaining half notes since Larkin gave them up to me.

10943. Did Kennedy ever tell you he got the half notes?—About a fortnight or a month ago he was speaking to me, and he said what about the balance of what he got in the letter.

10944. The second half notes?—Yes. He met me the evening I returned to town from Limerick, and I told him that of course everything now connected with the election, that I should tell it.

10945. What do you know about James Darmody; he got £30; was it you who made the arrangement with him?—No, I didn't.

10946. Who made the arrangement with him?—I can't say.

10947. Do you know that he got the money?—No.

10948. Do you know anything of the circumstances under which he was paid?—No.

10949. Or where he was paid?—No; he was frequently in at Corcoran's hotel. I can't say whether I sent him up to the room, there was so much confusion there; I might have done so.

10950. Who was Matthew Dwyer?—A messenger that was there.

10951. Whose son is he?—He is the father, sir. The father was doing business there, a messenger during the election. Matthew Dwyer may not know what was in the letter at the time.

10952. Do you know anything of the arrangement made with John Dwyer of Main-street?—I sent him up to this man and told him to sign a bill.

10953. You saw him going up to the room?—Yes.

10954. What do you know about John Reilly?—I think it was the son that went up to the room.

10955. Was it you that made the arrangement with the son?—No; it wasn't I made the arrangement with him.

10956. With whom else was it made do you know?—I think with Patrick Laffan.

10957. What is the son's name?—Patrick Reilly. The father and son were both together, and I couldn't say who went in. I showed them both up, and both were on the landing together. I couldn't say which went in; 'tis very likely that 'tis the father that did go in.

10958. Do you know anything about Edmund Foley?—Yes.

10959. Edmund Foley voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

10960. Tell me about his case. Was it you that made the arrangement with him?—It was.

10961. Did he promise to vote for Mr. Munster?—He did.

10962. That is, if you gave him £35?—Yes.

10963. He got the £35?—He got the £35.

10964. And he afterwards voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—He voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

10965. Where did he promise you to vote for Mr. Munster?—In Corcoran's hotel, five minutes previous to getting the money.

10966. What day was that transaction?—I think the day between the nomination and the polling.

10967. Were you present when Foley voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was in court.

10968. Did anything occur about his vote?—There was a little excitement I believe. I sent to the house in the morning for Foley to know what was keeping him. It seems there were some other parties in town here—I disrecollect who I sent—and they told him to be off. I believe he was dragged out by the O'Beirne party.

10969. Did you ever hear of his having got any money from Mr. O'Beirne's party?—I did not.

10970. Do you know who made arrangement with William Brennan of Friar-street?—I can't say whether it was Patrick Laffan or I made the final arrangement with him because he was speaking to both of us; but I directed him up to the room.

10971. Do you know he was paid £35 there?—Yes.

10972. Did you see him going into the room?—Yes.

10973. And he voted afterwards for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

10974. Do you know anything about James Bowes, of Canopy-street?—No; I believe he didn't get a shilling.

10975. Do you know anything about John Arthur of the Main-street?—No, nothing more than his house being taken.

10976. By whom?—For the telegraph office for Mr. Munster's use.

10977. His house was taken by Mr. Munster for the telegraph?—He gave it to him at the former rent.

10978. Did he get any money?—No, I believe not; to the best of my belief he didn't get a shilling except some small orders for whiskey, to the poor of the town at Christmas, I think.

10979. Do you know anything about Michael Carew, junior, of Lawlor's-lot?—I do.

10980. What about him?—I think he got £40.

10981. From whom?—I think from Mr. Patrick Hackett.

10982. Do you know anything of James Carew of Price's-lot?—I made a mistake, it was James I meant, and not Michael Carew.

10983. Do you know anything of Michael Carew, junior?—No, I don't. I hear he was retained, and I see him doing business for Mr. Munster, in and out about the hotel, that is all I know.

10984. Do you know anything of Denis Considine of Main-street?—No; I believe his son done some business there during the election. He was. His son was employed, I think, during the election.

10985. By Mr. Munster?—Mr. Laffan, I believe, had him engaged for some short time; I don't know how long.

10986. Is the son's name Michael, do you know?—Well, I really couldn't say.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10987. Mr. Laffan, is this the Michael Considine who has the claim in for £40 for acting as agent?—It is, sir.

10988. Would you give me the claim if you please?—There it is [hands in a document].

10989. Is this a claim put in by himself, or one that you directed to be put in?—It came from himself. Whether I had any conversation with himself before I do not recollect. It is very likely I had a conversation with him before he put in the claim.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

10990. Do you know anything of Thomas Connors, of Canopy-street?—No, I do not.

10991. Thomas Cunningham of Main-street is your father?—Yes.

10992. The very last answer that he gave us yesterday was that you gave him £30 for himself?—For who, sir?

10993. For his own use?—Yes, that was the £30 I got.

10994. Are you sure of that?—I am.

10995. On a previous day your father said he got £20 out of the £30 you got?—£19 12*s.* was for car-hire.

10996. He told about the £19 12*s.* also. Now, did you get more than one £30?—Not that I recollect.

10997. Do you recollect how you got that money? Was not the money you got a cheque?—It was.

10998. Did you give that cheque to your father or did you cash it?—I cashed it.

10999. Your father said you gave him at least £20 out of it, and afterwards he came back and said he got £30 from his son, for his own use?—Not that I recollect. There was only one £30.

11000. Try and recollect, and let me know about it?—I will see and let you know about it.

11001. Your father told us that he got from you

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Patrick Cunningham.

£20 at least out of the £30 [the Chief Commissioner reads Thomas Cunningham's evidence on the matter]?—I gave the £30. It wasn't to my father I gave it at the time, but to my mother. I think I gave all the money together.

11002. Do you know anything of John Hanley, of Hughes's-lot?—No; I do not.

11003. Or of Edward Hanley?—No.

11004. Did you hear of their having got any consideration for their votes?—I heard they didn't.

11005. Do you know was Hanley promised it, or that he expected it?—No; I don't.

11006. Do you know anything of Patrick Kennedy, of Friar-street?—No.

11007. Do you know Edmund Long, of Lady's-well?—I heard he was not paid.

11008. Was he promised anything?—I didn't promise it to him.

11009. Did you hear Mr. Laffan say he was promised?—I think Mr. Patrick Laffan said it once, to the best of my recollection.

11010. Did you hear what he was promised?—No, I did not.

11011. Do you know anything of Patrick Maher, of Friar-street?—No.

11012. Do you know anything of Thomas Maher, of Canopy-street?—His son was employed during the election in Mr. Laffan's office.

11013. Do you know anything of James Mulcahy?—His son was employed during the election—previous to it.

11014. Do you know was he paid anything?—I think not.

11015. Do you know any men named George Looby, Maurice Looby, James Looby, and Edward Looby?—No. Thomas Looby, Maurice Looby, and John Looby, they are the only three voters I know. They are voters.

11016. Do you know Maurice Looby who is not a voter?—I believe I do; a son of John Looby.

11017. I am speaking of John Looby, of the Green?—Yes.

11018. Do you know whether Thomas Looby, of Hughes's-lot has sons?—One son, I think.

11019. Do you know his name? Is it George?—I think it is George.

11020. Was he employed at the election?—I didn't see him.

11021. Was Maurice Looby employed?—I didn't see him employed.

11022. Did you see either Maurice or George employed at the election?—I didn't.

11023. Do you say they could not be employed without your knowing it?—There were several persons connected with the election; they might be, too, without my knowledge.

11024. Do you know anything of James Looby?—I don't know him.

11025. Do you know anything of John Murphy, of Friar-street?—No. He was in Mr. Munster's employment sometime after the election, and previous to it I believe. That is all I know of him; working about the roads and walks the same as anyone.

11026. What is he?—A working man. He was up about Mr. Munster's yard and place.

11027. Do you know John O'Brien, of Main-street?—I do.

11028. Do you know of any arrangement having been made with him?—No, I do not.

11029. Do you know Matthew O'Dwyer?—Yes; he is dead.

11030. He voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—He did.

11031. Do you know of any arrangement having taken place about that?—I think not.

11032. Do you know Patrick Phelan?—Yes.

11033. What do you know of his vote?—There was no arrangement made with him.

11034. Or with Martin Phelan, junior?—I heard Martin Phelan was retained; that is all I know about it.

11035. Do you know anything of James Phelan, of Main-street?—Yes, I took his house from his wife.

11036. Is that the man that was here, and applied to us to get him the second halves of the notes he received?—Yes. I never had anything to say to himself.

11037. When did you take the house from Mrs. Phelan?—I think about two or three days previous to the election: three or four days.

11038. That house was not made any use of at all afterwards?—It was not.

11039. And the half-notes you gave the woman were meant for her husband's vote?—Yes, it was; the house was not large enough.

11040. Do you know anything of William Quinlan?—No, I do not.

11041. Or of John Quirke?—No, sir.

11042. Did you make any arrangement with Thomas Rawlins?—No, sir. I heard some rumour of he getting a retainer; that is all I know.

11043. Do you know anything of William Ryan, of Main-street?—No, sir.

11044. Do you know anything of John Ryan, of Friar-street?—I think he didn't get a shilling either; not a farthing; nor, I believe, a promise of it. I don't know he got a promise of it either.

11045. Do you know was he ever engaged with Mr. Patrick Laffan about his vote?—Well, I couldn't say, sir.

11046. Do you know any man named Thomas Ryan; is he a son of this John Ryan?—I think he is a nephew of his; I know he came to me once or twice since the election and asked me would he ever get anything for his support of Mr. Munster.

11047. Who is John Ryan?—John Ryan is a voter.

11048. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he believe he would get something?—Well, he believed he would get something; but to the best of my belief he was not promised it by anyone; I don't think he was ever promised it.

11049. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know anything of William Ryan. Which of those William Ryans is called "Big Billy"?—I believe William Ryan of the Commons: I believe he didn't get a farthing.

11050. Who is William John Ryan?—I think he is on the Commons.

11051. Is that the man called "Little Bill"?—I think he is "Little Bill."

11052. Who is "Little Billy"?—I think he is a brother of Denis Ryan.

11053. Do you know Michael Sullivan of Main-street?—No; but I heard he got very near a £100 for refreshments; that is all I know.

11054. What do you know of Edward Walsh?—His house, I heard, was taken by Mr. Laffan for a tally-room.

11055. Who is James Walsh of Main-street?—I believe he didn't get a shilling, nor a promise of it either.

11056. Do you know Gabriel Watkins?—I do.

11057. Do you know anything of an arrangement made with him?—I don't know, sir.

11058. Or with John White?—No, sir.

11059. You say that all those bills were drawn by Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Well, I think so, sir.

11060. They have been signed by the persons to whom Larkin paid the money?—Yes.

Luke Larkin recalled, confronted with Patrick Cunningham, and examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

ELEVENTH DAY. October 15. Luke Larkin.

11061. Take those bills, and look at the amount of money that is written on each of them in the body of the bill; the first there is "£30"; is that written by you?—Larkin.—I don't think I wrote anything in the bill at all.

11062. In every one of those bills the amount of money that is written is in a different handwriting from the rest of the bill. I want to know was it you that wrote those amounts. Are you able to say, Cunningham?—Cunningham.—I think 'tis Larkin's, sir. Larkin.—I think the first, second, third, fourth; as the amount was in the docket that I got I put down in them.

11063. You put down in these the amount of money you paid to each man?—Larkin.—Yes.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Cunningham.

11064. Those bills were given to Larkin with blanks for the amount to be given?—Yes.

11065. All those bills, fifteen in number, were given to Larkin with blanks in them which he has filled in, in some instances £30, in some £35, and in one £70. Look at this bill, which has £30 written on the face of it. Do you know if it was for any particular man?—No, sir.

11066. Do you know if anybody was paid money except those you have named to me?—No, sir.

11067. Not one at all?—Not one at all; there are two of those filled up, and one left blank.

11068. Do you know another man named Thomas Looby, a voter, besides the old man who has been up here to-day?—I do, Thomas Looby of [name not understood], I think.

11069. Do you know of that man having got money?—Well, I couldn't exactly say; I think he did; I don't know; I can't say he did; if he did I think he would sign a bill.

11070. Did you ever make any arrangement with the second Thomas Looby as to the amount he was to be paid for his vote, or as to his getting anything for his vote?—Not that I can recollect.

11071. How much money did you get altogether from all persons who gave you money in connexion with the election of 1868?—The money I got from Pat. Laffan for Larkin I only used to convey it to him from time to time; when he would be out Larkin would say to me, I am out of money, and I would get it from Mr. Laffan and would give it to Larkin.

11072. Was yours the hand that gave all the money to Larkin?—Not all; I kept a check on the money.

11073. Larkin acknowledges to have received £802; do you know how much you gave him?—I cannot exactly say.

11074. Did you ever keep any account of the money you got from Mr. Pat. Laffan?—No, indeed.

11075. Did you ever get any from any other person;—I did.

11076. From whom?—I got £177 from Mr. Michael Laffan.

11077. From Mr. Michael Laffan?—Yes.

11078. What did you do with that £177?—I paid car-drivers and the ring-leader of the mob; I gave money from time to time; here is my account for it; I applied to Mr. Michael Laffan for it this morning; I furnished him with the account of it.

11079. How were you paid it?—There is the way I was paid it, sir. [Hands in a document.]

11080. Was any of this money applied in payment of any men by Larkin?—Not a shilling.

11081. Was any of this money applied in payment of the other man, Bowes?—Not a shilling, sir.

11082. Do you say that the entire of this sum of £177 was expended simply in paying mobsmen about the town?—Mobsmen and car-drivers. I have receipts in full at present, I think; in fact the car-drivers' amounts exceed £60.

11083. Where were these cars used?—Driving through the town and to the Commons, Mr. Munster having a great many visits during the election.

11084. What was Richard Donnell paid £4 16*s.* for?—For some refreshment that was given on an order. He is a voter.

11085. Is that the man whose house was purchased?—Yes. They are some small orders; I think it was I gave them to him.

11086. Then that £4 16*s.* is exclusive of £11 which he says is still due to him?—Yes.

11087. Did you give orders to Mr. Sullivan for drink?—Yes, I sent some orders there.

11088. Do you know that voters got refreshments in his house?—Well, I think they did.

11089. Do you know if voters got refreshments in Mrs. Corcoran's hotel?—Yes, they did.

11090. We have heard that £228 was paid for refreshments in Mrs. Corcoran's hotel during the election. Were there voters in Mrs. Corcoran's hotel almost daily during the election?—Generally every day.

11091. And were there refreshments supplied to them freely as they came?—I don't say freely.

11092. But that any voter that came there got drink on having asked for it?—No, Mrs. Corcoran was very cautious unless there was some one there to give her an order.

11093. Who do you say gave orders?—Any elector that went in there might order a bottle of sherry and it would come up.

11094. Were you frequently in communication with Mr. Edmond Leahy about the election?—I was with him several times.

11095. Had you any conversation with him about votes to be procured by money?—No; he always kept away from that, but I firmly believe that he must have been under the impression that such a thing was going on.

11096. Do you know where Mr. Laffan got the money?—I could not say. On one or two occasions he told me he got money from Mr. Leahy.

11097. I find that he spent eleven hundred pounds. Do you know from whom he got it?—On one or two occasions he told me it was generally from Mr. Leahy.

11098. You yourself did not get any money that was applied in paying for votes except from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—No, not that I can think of.

11099. Now, you must be very careful?—But I think on one of the days previous to the nomination, there was a son of Mr. Richardson, I think; I can't exactly say whether he gave me some money, or gave it to Mr. Patrick Laffan.

11100. How much would that be?—I cannot say, sir. He was a young son of Mr. Richardson.

11101. Would you not be able to say about how much it was—£100 or £50?—I don't know it was so large. I think it must be about £50 or so. I kept no check on the money getting from Pat Laffan for to give to Larkin, and it was Larkin kept the check on the amount that he was getting from time to time.

11102. You got money from a son of Mr. Close?—Yes.

11103. How much was that?—£19, £12, and £2 or £3.

11104. What was that for?—For car-hire.

11105. Was it money or a cheque?—A cheque, I think.

11106. Are you sure you got no other money than that from him?—No, no other money.

11107. Were you present in court, and did you hear the evidence given this morning by Ryan?—Yes.

11108. Did you speak to him about his vote?—Well, I cannot say that I did; I might have spoken to him but not that I can recollect. There was such a thoroughfare at Mrs. Corcoran's, and I had so much to do connected with the election, that I think things might have escaped my memory. I was going to the Commons, and Mr. Munster was about buying a horse, I think, from Dr. Moloney. I was going to the Commons; Ryan was coming up and said, "I heard Mr. Munster is buying a horse," he says. Says I, "He wants another, a match for the carriage." "I have a nice horse," says he. "Bring him in," says I, "and I will give notice that you brought him in, and if he suits he might buy him from you." That was all the conversation between us.

11109. Had you no conversation with him about his vote?—Not the least, but I am quite certain his coming to Corcoran's about a bill to be taken up for him in the bank.

11110. Where was this?—It was at Corcoran's. It was after Ryan leaving. I heard Mr. Laffan say so.

11111. But you were not present yourself?—No.

11112. Do you know Patrick Maher of the Main-street?—I do.

11113. Do you recollect a conversation with him?—Yes, I was just looking in the paper this morning, at the evidence that he gave here.

11114. Tell me what occurred between you and Patrick Maher?—I will, sir. [Produces a newspaper.] He says here, in his evidence, that I sent for him to go to Corcoran's hotel, which is an untruth. There isn't a word, I say without fear of contradiction, in the statement he has made here of truth.

11115. It would be better for you now, Mr. Cunningham, to tell me from your recollection what occurred between yourself and Maher as well as you can recollect?—On this night, sir—I will—on this night he came to me. He and Carroll went down to my father's, twice looking for me. My father said I was not in for the last three or four hours. They came once or twice to Corcoran's. I was making up some small bills connected with the election. I told them at Corcoran's if anyone came, to say I was not there. The third time I heard they were told I was up stairs in Corcoran's. Carroll came up and knocked at the door. I asked who was there. He said "Carroll." I opened the door and let him in. "Maher," says he, "is outside, and wants to see you." "I don't want to see Maher," says I to Carroll. "Let him come in," says he; and he pressed so much, I let him come in. Both of them wanted to stay inside; I told Carroll to go out while I was speaking to Maher. I had a glass of sherry about eight or nine o'clock at night; he would take nothing. He said, "Will you take my house from me." "No," said I, "I am after getting instructions"—and I think it was from Patrick Laffan—"that we have sufficient houses taken." "Well," says he, "I'll vote for no man that will not take my house," says Maher. The moment he talked of voting and taking houses, I objected, and said, "I can do nothing for you." He then said, "Why not take it as well as Carroll's?" After that, I see there was no chance to get him away, and I said, "I will borrow £20 for you from my father in the morning, if you pass him a bill for it. Look up on Monday, and come in the morning." The moment he heard that he walked away. I heard Maher saying, if there were six candidates at one time come to Cashel, that he would take money from them all. I cautioned Mr. Michael Laffan and his brother after, not to go to Maher's house. It does not then look likely that I would send for that man to offer him money.

11116. Were you not at this time buying as many votes as you could?—I was not.

11117. Have we not the bills, and do we not know that over £1,200 was spent in purchasing votes at this time?—Yes.

11118. Then why did you not enter into a treaty for the purchase of Maher's vote?—He came with that object.

11119. Why did you not enter into a treaty with him?—I did not want to have anything to do with him.

11120. Why?—I heard him on one occasion say that if six candidates came to Cashel he would take money from each of them.

11121. Is it because you were afraid of him?—I was afraid of him in one sense.

11122. It appears a singular thing and requires explanation. You came to contradict Maher, and it requires some explanation why you did not enter into any arrangement with him?—I misdoubted the man altogether. I cautioned Mr. Laffan not to speak to Maher, or his brother, in ever offering Maher a farthing. The only way I had of getting rid of him was saying, "I will give you £20 on an I O U, from my father, as you are so badly off as you say."

11123. Mr. GRIFFIN.—If he had taken that money from your father, was it understood that he was to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, it was not. I was well aware what he wanted.

11124. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Why did you require Carroll to leave the room while speaking to Maher, if you did not intend to enter into an arrangement with Maher?—I didn't want to have anything to do with him.

11125. Why did you ask Carroll to leave the room if you did not intend to enter into any arrangement with Maher?—It is customary with me the few arrangements I made during the election, that there was no one there besides.

11126. Did you not tell me that you were not going to make an arrangement?—I was not.

11127. If you made up your mind to have no arrangement, why did you tell Carroll to leave the room?—I could not say; but I didn't want to have both present at the time.

11128. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You did not "misdoubt" Carroll?—I did not misdoubt Carroll, still we wanted Carroll's house at the time it was taken.

11129. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Maher appear to you to be quite serious?—Not he; I wouldn't trust him for four pence.

11130. I mean did he appear to you to be desirous of getting money?—He did, and said he would vote for no man that wouldn't give money.

11131. Mr. MOLLOY.—If you would not trust him why would you believe him by borrowing money from your father?—That was the only way I had of getting rid of him, and I was well aware that he would not accept it.

11132. Mr. GRIEFIN.—How did you expect to get rid of him by that?—Even if he accepted of it I could sue him for it back again. I didn't go to give it to him although making the offer.

11133. You knew that he would not accept it?—I did.

11134. Then how would making the offer get rid of him?—I knew he would leave then at once, sir, as he had no chance of getting it the other way.

11135. What do you mean by his "getting it the other way"?—To take his house on behalf of Mr. Munster.

11136. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know James Cullen?—Yes.

11137. Did you ever send for him, or meet him?—I went to his father's house, William Cullen. I wanted to employ the son for Mr. Munster.

11138. That was with the object of getting the father's vote?—Well, yes.

11139. What occurred?—Well, he didn't give me a decided answer at the time. The following morning I heard the son was employed by Mr. O'Beirne.

11140. Had you any conversation with the father?—No more than that, to employ the son.

11141. Did you think the father understood what you meant?—I can't say. I think this was the first time he had a vote—the father. I cannot say whether he understood it or not.

11142. Tell me exactly what you said to the father?—He is a cooper. I asked him could he spare the son for a week or a fortnight; we might want him about the election. He said, "I will consider it, and let you know."

11143. Did you say what he was to get?—No; I didn't mention any sum.

11144. Did you give him any idea whether it would be a considerable sum or otherwise?—No, I did not; I didn't say what sum he was to be paid.

11145. Do you know if the son was engaged in the election for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

11146. Did Mr. Patrick Laffan ever tell you how much money he got from Mr. Edmond Leahy?—He did not.

Patrick Cunningham.

11147. You say you believe that Mr. Edmond Leahy knew what you and Mr. Patrick Laffan were about? I do believe he must have some knowledge of it.

11148. He knew there was something underhand?—That is my belief. He should know it.

11149. Do you know at what time he got the money from Mr. Leahy?—There was no money, I think, advanced until Mr. Leahy came to town, unless some small things. All I see was the £50 for Ryan and Murnane. That is all I could say.

Edmond Stapleton sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edmond Stapleton.

11150. Are you a voter?—Yes, sir.

11151. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

11152. Were you an elector in 1865?—Yes, sir.

11153. For whom did you vote then?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

11154. Were you an elector before that—in 1859?—No, sir.

11155. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan?—No, sir, I never was an elector before that.

11156. Did you ever receive any money in 1865 for your vote?—No, sir.

11157. Did you get any money on a bill?—No, sir. The time Din Ryan and my brother was in London he sent a cheque for £30 to me, which my brother gave me.

11158. Who sent the cheque to you?—I suppose Mr. O'Beirne.

11159. What was it for?—I don't know, sir.

11160. Did you answer me that you never received any money for your vote?—That is in '67, sir.

11161. On your oath was that for your vote in 1865?—I suppose it was, sir.

11162. Why did you tell me that you never received any money for your vote?—Because I didn't get it in '65; because I didn't get it, sir, that time; and that was the reason, sir, then that I told you.

11163. At what time in 1867 did you get it?—I believe it was about Christmas, sir, some time about Christmas they were there, sir.

11164. Was your brother Richard in London also?—Yes, sir, and Denis Ryan.

11165. He got £40, I believe?—I didn't hear, sir.

11166. Did he never tell you?—I heard afterwards; but he never told me.

11167. What did you hear afterwards that he got?—I heard that he got £40, sir.

11168. Were you canvassed to vote for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I was, sir, by Denis Ryan. He came to me on a Saturday, and he met me down at Mrs. Corcoran's hotel, sir.

11169. Denis Ryan did?—Yes, sir.

11170. That is this man here?—Yes, sir.

11171. What did he take you there for?—The night of the nomination—he didn't mean anything to me that night. He took me down. He met me then above in the street and brought me down to Mr. Coman's, and we took some drink there. He brought me down then, and we were listening on to speeches; that's all. Then he came next day to me above in the street and brought me down to the hotel, and he showed me the room up there; and Pat Cunningham came out. He was at a front room on the stairs, and they both went back into the room, sir.

11172. Well?—That was all then, sir. He gave me a cheque of £35, and I put it into my pocket.

11173. Who gave you the cheque?—I couldn't know; a man, sir. He wore a shawl and blue coat. It was dark, and I couldn't exactly see.

11174. Is that the man [pointing to Larkin]?—I couldn't exactly say. He is different a little now.

11175. Did you know what it was given to you for?—For my vote, I suppose.

11176. For Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir, of course.

11177. Did you keep the money?—Yes, sir.

11178. And you voted afterwards for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

11179. How much did you get from Mr. O'Beirne, or any of his friends?—I never got a penny, sir, only that cheque that he sent me in '67, I believe.

11180. Were you promised anything?—No, sir.

11181. Why did you not vote for Mr. Munster when you took the money?—I wasn't intended to vote for Mr. Munster; but when they gave me the money I said it was too unlucky without taking it. I never had the least intention of voting for him.

11182. You knew that that money was given to you for your vote?—Yes, sir.

11183. I ask you did you expect anything from Mr. O'Beirne?—Of course, sir, if it was going about I would expect it, but I saw no one to get it.

11184. And, I suppose, if he was the member now, and that there was no petition, you would have asked for something?—I wouldn't, sir, nor didn't before.

11185. Did you not take it in '67?—I did, sir, when he sent it to me; but I never asked it.

11186. But you tell me that you would take it?—Well, of course, if it was going, sir, I did.

11187. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You knew that Denis Ryan and your brother Richard were going to London?—I didn't know, sir, until after they were gone; nor for five or six days after. I couldn't exactly say, sir.

11188. Had you any idea that they would mention your name to Mr. O'Beirne?—No, indeed, sir; I had no idea in the world of it.

11189. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever intend to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, sir, I did not.

11190. And you went and took refreshment at his hotel?—I didn't, sir.

11191. You did not?—No, sir; it is at Mr. Coman's he met me, and I do not think I took any drink there.

11192. And you were not drunk at Corcoran's hotel?—I was, sir; but 'tis from the drink I took outside, and I was smoking, and that raised in my head I don't think I took any drink there to the best of my belief, nor I saw no drink there either.

11193. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—It was from some man that you do not know that you got that thirty-five pounds?—Yes, sir.

11194. And not from Cunningham?—No, sir, nor from Denis Ryan.

Patrick Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Cunningham

11195. You told us one of these payments to Larkin, which was described by Larkin as "for a man, name not known, at Corcoran's, by Cunningham's order, £35," was to this man?—That is the man, sir.

11196. And is this the man into whose pocket the money was put?—It is, sir.

Edmond Stapleton's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edmond Stapleton.

11197. Was the money put into your pocket?—It was, sir. Will I get a certificate now, sir?

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We will appoint a day for giving certificates; we will advertise it in the Cashel Gazette.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Alice Stapleton.

Alice Stapleton sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

11198. You are Dan Stapleton's daughter?—I am, sir.

11199. He voted at the last election?—He did, sir.

11200. How much money did you get for him?—Ne'er a shilling in the world, sir, nor one didn't come to trouble me either.

11201. Did you get any money?—Never, sir.

11202. Did you say your father ever got money for any election?—Never, sir.

11203. Or any inducement from any person?—Never.

11204. Do you know Margaret Moloney?—I do, sir.

11205. Were you ever talking to her about the election?—Never, sir, in any form that money was concerned. I never went to her house that she wasn't praying for Mr. O'Beirne to get him returned. Anything further than that to my recollection I couldn't say.

11206. Your father had a vote before the last election?—Not to my recollection.

11207. Do you recollect the election of 1865?—I do, sir.

11208. Was he living in Cashel before then?—He was, sir; but had no vote.

11209. Are you sure he had no vote in 1865?—No, sir, he hadn't.

11210. Had he a vote in the election before that?—No, sir, to my recollection he hadn't; for the last twenty years I do not think he had e'er a vote.

11211. Did you ever get a cheque?—Begar, 'twas commonly reported, and that I went to neighbours with it. I never received it into my hands, nor never received the sight of anything, nor anyone come to trouble me, sir.

11212. Did your father?—Never, sir. I could hear it of the beggars of Cashel, I myself and four more went, I think, with a note, but I never see a sight of it, nor wasn't troubled with it either.

11213. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever get value of any kind?—No, I never took a glass of spirits.

11214. Did you ever get value of any kind?—No, sir; but 'twas drawn through me here on the petition that I got clothes on the morning of the election, and I didn't, sir.

11215. Now, do you understand what we ask you?—I do, sir.

Daniel Stapleton.

Daniel Stapleton sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

11216. For whom did you vote at the last election?—I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

11217. What inducement did you get for voting for him?—I got no money from him, nor no promise neither.

11218. Did you expect to get anything from him?—No, indeed, I didn't.

11219. Was that the first time you had a vote?—It was, sir.

11220. Did you get any cheque or any value of any kind for your vote?—I did not, indeed; on my oath I never did.

11221. Who asked you to vote for him?—Himself in person that came in in the yard on the day he was canvassing. I happened to be in the yard before him. He came in to me and he asked me did I know him, and I told him I did. He asked for my vote, and I told him I would give him my vote, and I was glad to have it to give to him. That's it now.

11222. Did anybody come to you on Mr. Munster's side for your vote?—Well, there did.

11223. Who came?—I was sent down for by a messenger from Mr. Pat. Laffan.

11224. Who was the messenger that came for you?—I can't tell. I wasn't within at the time the message came.

11225. In consequence of the message did you go anywhere?—I came in to him.

11226. Where did you go?—To the hotel to Mr. Pat. Laffan.

11227. What happened then?—We were talking for some time, and he asked me what would I take for my vote.

11228. What did you answer to that?—I told him I wouldn't answer him in that question. "What are you giving," says I. "Well," says he, "we are giving but £25." My hat was laid this way. I got a fright. I laid hold of it, for it was near me here, and I jumped up and went out the door.

11229. What frightened you?—I thought twas something he had before me for to break my vote.

11230. You had heard of these retainers?—Oh, yes, sir. While I was going out the door he asked me then what would I vote for, and I told him I wouldn't vote for him no less than £60. That's all the information I have to give.

11231. Did he offer more than £25 to you?—No; nor no one came next nor nigh me from that day until Mr. O'Beirne came into the yard to me. I pledged myself to him; and there was no more about it.

11232. Did you tell Mr. O'Beirne that you had been offered £25?—I never spoke a word of it to the gentleman.

11233. Or to Captain Graham?—Nor to Captain Graham.

11234. Or to Mick Keeffe?—Nor to Mick Keeffe.

11235. Or Simon Tracey?—Nor to any other man.

11236. If he gave the £60 you would have voted for Mr. Munster?—On my oath, I wouldn't. That now is the whole truth.

11237. And why did you mention £60?—Because I wasn't intended to vote for him, and to put him off o' me. That's now the truth.

11238. If you did not intend to vote for Mr. Munster whatever you were offered, why did you go to Corcoran's hotel?—Why, I'll tell you. I went in there to know if a message come for me, and I was never before there nor since.

11239. Did you not suspect what he wanted you for?—I didn't, indeed—I didn't, indeed.

11240. Did you not know that Mr. Patrick Laffan was very active for Mr. Munster?—I didn't know that at the time, nor anything about it.

11241. If Mr. O'Beirne had sent you £30, would you take it?—Why then, I would—why then, I would take it.

11242. You would probably think it a natural thing for him to do?—Well, I don't; but if he sent it, I would take it.

11243. It is what you expected from him?—I didn't expect it from him, nor from any other candidate.

11244. Had you a vote before;—I had a vote every day from the first that came to Cashel in my time—that is Judge Perrin. I had it for him; and I never gained a glass of beer by all the elections that ever came to Cashel.

11245. If you would take £30 from Mr. O'Beirne, why would you not take £60 from Mr. Munster?—I would take no such thing; nor I wasn't offered a penny from Mr. O'Beirne; but I had a respect for to give him my vote, and no more.

11246. Mr. MOLLOY.—You say no person canvassed you but Mr. O'Beirne himself?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

11247. No person else?—No person else.

11248. What was Tom Connors doing at your house one night before the election?—He was taking down my name to placard it on the walls of Cashel.

11249. Did he ask you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He didn't.

11250. What was he placarding your name for?—The twenty-nine that voted for Mr. O'Beirne was placarded; I couldn't tell you the reason.

11251. Had you a vote in 1857?—No.

11252. What is your stepson's name?—Thomas Flood.

Daniel Stapleton.

11253. He lives in the house with you?—He isn't this while back in the house with me.

11254. But he was there with you at the time of the election?—He was.

11255. Who else was there?—My daughter.

11256. Had you not some other relative in the house?—Yes, there is another little boy, Neddy Flaherty.

Francis Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Francis Dwyer.

11257. You voted at the last election?—Yes, sir.

11258. For Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

11259. For whom did you vote in 1865?—I had no vote in '65.

11260. Was the last election the first at which you had a vote?—Yes, sir.

11261. You got £30 for your vote?—He took my house for £30.

11262. Who took your house?—Pat. Cunningham, sir.

11263. Where do you live?—In Lady's Well-street, sir.

11264. When did he take your house?—Either two or three days before the election.

11265. Before the polling?—Yes, sir.

11266. What did he say when he took your house?—He asked me had I a room to set; that they expected a good deal of visitors and strangers, and that he would want a sleeping place for some of his servants. I told him that I had. He told me to go down to the hotel and he would meet me there, and that he would agree with me.

11267. Did you go down to the hotel?—I did, sir.

11268. How soon after he had spoken to you did you go down to the hotel?—There wasn't an hour between the time, sir; about an hour.

11269. When you went down to the hotel what did you do?—I met him going up stairs. Mr. Patrick Laffan was there; he asked me what I would take for it. I told him £30; I would take no less.

11270. What was the £30 for?—For the use of the house, sir.

11271. For the use of a room?—Yes, sir.

11272. How many beds were you to have in it?—Only one.

11273. Only one bed?—Yes, sir. He didn't mention only a sleeping place.

11274. Was it not your vote you were selling?—That was the agreement, sir.

11275. What did you believe you were selling? Did you not know it was your vote?—That was the agreement, sir. He never spoke of a vote.

11276. Did you not know that the £30 was for your vote?—I suppose it was, sir.

11277. Was there any use made of your room?—No, sir, he never occupied it. I suppose——

11278. You suppose what?—I suppose that was his motive.

11279. Was Mr. Patrick Laffan by at this?—He was, sir. When I went down he spoke to Mr. Patrick Laffan then.

11280. At Corcoran's?—Yes, sir.

11281. When you said you would not give it less than £30, what was said?—He said I would get it.

11282. Did he tell you where you would get it?—He did, sir.

11283. Where?—At Thomas Cunningham's, his father's.

11284. Did you go down there?—I did, sir.

11285. Did he give you any token when you were going down?—He didn't, sir. He said he would meet me there.

11286. Did he meet you there?—I went down, and he wasn't there. I went out in the back yard in search of him. I asked his father was he inside, and he said he wasn't; that he would shortly be in, and to stop a while. I stopped a little while and met him coming in.

11287. What did he do?—He told me to go upstairs.

11288. Did you go upstairs?—I did.

11289. Did you go into the room?—I did, sir.

11290. Did you get any money?—I did. There was a man sitting at the table, and he asked me my name. I told him. He asked me how much money. I told him £30. He asked me to sign a note. I did, and he paid me.

11291. Why did you sign the note if the money was for your room?—I made that remark, and he said it was only a form.

11292. Did you read the promissory note?—I didn't, sir.

11293. Would you know that man again?—I would not, sir, know him. He was shaded, and I didn't take any notice of him; I didn't see him.

11294. Is that your handwriting [is handed the bill]?—'Tis, sir. I can't see well without spectacles, but I'm nearly sure.

11295. You signed that note there?—I did, sir.

Mr. Henry Munster recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Henry Munster.

11296. Mr. Munster, have you had any communication from Mr. Leahy? At your suggestion the secretary wrote to Mr. Leahy, saying that you undertook here that on writing to him he would come. When I say that I mean that you believed it?—I expressed an opinion that Mr. Leahy would come here.

11297. Just so. And you told me that it was unnecessary to serve a summons on him; that he would come without it?—My recollection is not that, sir.

11298. Mr. GRIFFIN.—It was your opinion?—My opinion was that he will be here, and my opinion is so still.

11299. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Have you heard from him since?—I have not heard from him since.

11300. He has not acknowledged the receipt of the letter?—If you desire I will give you the two last communications I have had from Mr. Leahy.

11301. I do not want them?—I wrote to him the same day; no, not the same day.

11302. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it after the conversation in Court that you wrote to him?—After that conversation.

11303. Was it that day or the next day?—I think it was the next day. I missed that post. I have got a copy of the letter.

11304. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Give me his address again, I may not have taken it down correctly?—I have no doubt that you did take it down correctly, because I got two letters from him; and I received first that one which I believe to have been written last, which was to the effect that he was going to Brussels about tramways which are there, he being engaged in a scheme in which, to a certain extent, I agree to co-operate—laying down tramways in Dublin. The address is 21, Cardington-street, Hampstead-road, London, N.W., within a stone's-throw of Euston-street station. I have reason to believe that of the two last letters I received from him the one that I received first was written last, because it was posted at Euston station with three stamps, and I know very well what that means.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham recalled at the desire of Mr. Munster; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11305. Were you not engaged before Mr. Munster's arrival in Cashel?—Yes.

11306. Did you ever tell Mr. Munster that you were connected with, heard of, or that there were any corrupt practices at his side?—No, I never heard it; I don't understand the question.

11307. Did you ever tell Mr. Munster that you were connected with any corrupt practices on his side, or that you had heard of them?—Never.

11308. Did you ever give him any information of what you were engaged in?—Not the least.

11309. Did you tell Mr. Munster that you had to go to London to get payment from Mr. O'Beirne, and that he still owed you a considerable sum?—Yes.

11310. What was that due for?—A balance for my expenses going two or three times to Dublin, and different bills due here in '65. There is about £12 or £13 due to me.

11311. Did Mr. Munster ask you why you did not try to recover this money from Mr. O'Beirne?—I believe he did; I think so. Yes, he did.

11312. Did you come in and out at Abbeyview as well as both the Messrs. Laffan and Mr. Scallan?—Yes.

11313. Do you know of money having been paid in 1865? You have answered that already?—Yes.

11314. Were you not subpœnaed by Mr. Munster in his action against Carroll?—I was.

11315. And you gave evidence?—I did, sir.

James Cummins.

James Cummins sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

11316. You are the son of Richard Cummins?—Yes, sir.

11317. How did he vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster.

11318. How much did you get at the last election?—£35.

11319. From whom did you get it?—I don't know, sir.

11320. Was it in a room you got it?—It was, sir.

11321. From a strange man?—Yes, sir.

11322. That was for your father's vote?—The vote wasn't spoken of, sir, nor neither I didn't speak of my father's vote.

11323. Who spoke of your father's vote?—No one, sir.

11324. Did Patrick Cunningham?—He never opened his lips to my knowledge about it.

11325. Who told you to go into that room?—Pat. Cunningham, sir.

11326. Had you spoken to Mr. Patrick Laffan about the election?—No, sir.

11327. Had you told anybody that you were acting for Mr. Munster?—I had no recourse to anyone but Cunningham.

11328. Did Cunningham meet you and tell you to go there?—He met me in the street, and I believe I asked him if he could get me anything.

11329. You knew that Cunningham was engaged for Mr. Munster?—I heard it, sir.

11330. And then Cunningham told you to go to this place?—Yes, sir.

11331. And you got £35?—Yes.

11332. I believe your father is a very old man?—He is, sir; any of us is old enough.

11333. Do you live with your father?—I do, your worship.

11334. Did you give him the £35?—I never gave him a shilling of it.

11335. I suppose it was you that brought him up on the day of the poll?—I never spoke to him; I wasn't at home.

11336. Answer the question?—I told him to vote.

11337. Did you bring him up to the poll?—I don't know, sir; I wasn't at home when he left the house and I didn't see him till after the election.

11338. Did you suspect how he was going to vote?—I partly guessed that he would vote for Mr. Munster, sir.

11339. What made you suspect that? What reason had you?—And I didn't do anything about it; no idea I had of it, nor I never asked him who he would vote for.

11340. One would suppose you would be likely to hear from your father for whom he would vote than anybody else?—He was gone before I went to the house; I didn't see him at all, sir.

11341. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you think you are giving your evidence as a truthful man?—I have no doubt I am, your worship.

11342. I do not think so. What did you get the £30 for, on your oath?—I partly guessed.

11343. What did you get it for?—For my influence, I suspect.

11344. Influence on whom?—About the town and the neighbourhood.

11345. On your oath for what did you get the £30 from the man in the room at Corcoran's hotel?—It wasn't mentioned to me.

11346. What did you get it for?—I suppose it was for my father's vote; but it wasn't spoken of, sir.

11347. Did you get any money in 1865 for your influence?—No, sir; nor I didn't look for it.

11348. Mr. MOLLOY.—How did your father vote in 1859?—I don't know, sir.

11349. Did he vote for Mr. Lanigan?—I believe he did, once or twice.

11350. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How did your father vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

11351. Did he get anything for his vote?—I never heard of anything he got.

11352. Did you ever hear he got a cheque?—I have no knowledge of it.

11353. Did you suspect he got a cheque?—No suspicion that he did. Of course he wouldn't have it unknown.

William Ryan.

William Ryan, of the Racecourse, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11354. You are a voter on the Commons?—Yes, sir.

11355. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

11356. Do you know Andrew Meara, Main-street?—I do, sir.

11357. You were with him before the election?—I was, sir.

11358. And you talked with him about a bill?—Yes, sir.

11359. I believe you intimated that if he got Mr. Munster's people to take up the bill you would vote for him?—No, sir.

11360. Something like that?—No, sir.

11361. What else?—I told him it was due in a day or two after, and that I was paid for seven or eight bags of seed in town, and if I hadn't the rest of the money I would have to renew it.

11362. Why did you make this communication to him?—I always went to him when the bill was due.

11363. What did he say?—He said that he would renew it if I wanted it again.

11364. And there was no talk about the election?—He was most anxious I would go for Mr. Munster.

11365. Are you aware that Mr. Meara was examined here and told us the whole story?—By gor, I am, sir 11366. Then why do you not tell us the whole story candidly and honestly?—I can't think of anything, sir.

11367. You had a talk about the election?—We had, sir.

11368. Did he not ask you to vote for Mr. Munster?—He told me to leave the bill with him.

11369. Did he not say that he would make it all right if you voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

11370. You came back in an hour and said that you were made all right at the other side?—No, sir, but the parties about the wheat.

11371. Did you not say that it was at the other side?—No, sir.

11372. What arrangement did you make with Mr. O'Beirne's people?—No arrangement, sir.

11373. Who took up the bill?—Myself, sir.

11374. Who gave you the money to take it up?—I made it myself, sir.

11375. Were you not short on that day when you were talking to Mr. Meara?—I made it that evening; I had seven bags of wheat and they paid me for it in town.

11376. Do you mean to say that you did not get any money from anybody else?—I did, sir, for corn, sir.

11377. Did you get any money from anyone?—No, sir.

11378. On what bank was the bill?—The bank here, sir.

11379. What names were on the bill for you?—I don't know was it the Widow Ryan or Pat Ryan, sir; I couldn't tell you which—and Andy Meara and mine.

11380. Did you pay it before it was due?—I didn't, sir.

11381. On your oath did you pay it before it was due?—Yes, sir; I didn't; I didn't know whether it was a gone day itself; I couldn't tell you which.

11382. Was Tom Carew's name on it?—If it was the Widow Ryan's name wasn't on it.

11383. Have you got the bill?—I don't think I have, sir.

11384. What did you do with it?—I only keep them when I want them.

11385. Did you burn it?—I often burned one of them.

11386. What did you do with this bill?—I threw it at home.

11387. Do you mean to say you do not keep the bill when you pay it?—I don't, sir, of that kind.

11388. And you have no account of this bill?—I haven't, sir.

11389. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you Mrs. Ryan's name on the bill?—Yes, sir. That must be the bill.

11390. What is her Christian name?—Kate.

11391. What is the amount?—It was the same bill—twenty-five pounds. If Tom Carew wasn't on it she wasn't.

11392. Are you quite certain?—I am, sir.

11393. Are you certain that you had the Widow Ryan's name on the bill?—I had, sir.

11394. What was the amount of the bill?—Twenty or twenty-five pounds, sir.

11395. Upon what bank, sir?—On the bank below, sir.

11396. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it you that paid the bill?—Yes, sir.

11397. And do you swear that you had the money all of your own?—Yes, sir.

11398. And that you did not pay it until it was due?—I did, sir.

11399. You are quite sure of that?—I am, sir, the day it was due, or the day after.

11400. I will resume your examination to-morrow morning. Go home. Search for the bill. I recommend you to be very accurate in what you tell me?—So I am, my lord, quite positive.

Patrick P. Fogarty sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Patrick P. Fogarty.

11401. What is your father's name?—Rody Fogarty.

11402. Of Lady's Well?—Yes, sir.

11403. He voted at the last election?—He did, sir.

11404. For Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

11405. What inducement did he get for voting for Mr. Munster?—I don't know, sir.

11406. Come, tell us now, what inducement did he get?—He was talking to Mr. Laffan about it.

11407. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

11408. What was he talking to Mr. Michael Laffan about?—About the election, sir, I suppose.

11409. What was he saying to Mr. Michael Laffan?—I don't know, sir; I wasn't near them anytime they were in conversation.

11410. What inducement did your father get for voting for Mr. Munster?—He got no inducement, sir, but I believe Mr. Laffan said he would make him all right.

11411. You heard him say that?—I think he did, sir.

11412. Where was this? Was it in your father's house?—I don't think it was in my father's house himself and Mr. Laffan were speaking; but it was in my father's house I heard my father say it.

11413. Where did this conversation take place when Mr. Michael Laffan said he would make your father all right?—I think one time in Lady's-well, near Carroll's.

11414. Do you attend in your father's shop?—Not much.

11415. What were you to get for the election?—My father told me he put in a bill for me for £30.

11416. What did you do at the election?—Very little; I came the morning of the polling to take down the names of voters.

11417. And your father told you he put in a bill for £30 for that?—He said they had my assistance in the election.

11418. But you were only at the election on the day of the polling?—That's all, sir.

11419. How soon after the election did your father say he had put in the bill?—I couldn't say, sir, but although I came here that day I didn't take down the names of any voters, although I came up.

11420. Then, in point of fact, you did nothing. Is that it?—It is, sir.

11421. Is that your father's handwriting to that paper—[is handed claim]?—I think it is, sir.

11422. Read it?—"Cashel, December 7th, '68. Henry Munster, esq., debtor to Patrick P. Fogarty, for services at past election, £30."

11423. Did you render any services?—If it was wanting that day, I would, sir.

11424. How much was your father paid for the drink he supplied?—He wasn't paid all his bills yet, sir.

11425. How much is due to him?—I don't know that, sir. He wasn't paid more than £9 or £11, or something that way.

11426. Is that your father's handwriting [is handed another document]?—'Tis, sir.

11427. Read out that bill?—"Cashel, December 7th, '68. Henry Munster, esquire, debtor to Rody Fogarty to amount of drink supplied to mob, friends of the cause, and soforth, £35 12*s.* 6*d.*"

11428. Has your father the account in which that is entered?—I don't know, sir. I see a very long bill with him, sir.

11429. With your father?—Yes, sir.

11430. Who got this drink?—I didn't see many people get it, sir; but there's drink that I brought up to Abbeyview, I think he was paid that.

ELEVENTH DAY.

October 15.

Patrick P. Fogarty.

11431. £9?—Yes, sir.

11432. Who got some of this drink?—I used not to be within always.

11433. Did you ever see any person taking any of the drink that this bill is for?—I couldn't say that. I'm not sure of it.

11434. Who attends to the giving out of the drink in your father's shop?—My father, sir.

11435. And anybody else?—My aunt do be there.

11436. And you saw a long bill with your father?—I did, sir.

John Gleeson.

John Gleeson sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

11437. Where do you live?—Glenbane, sir.

11438. Did you get any half-notes at the last election from anybody?—I did, your worship.

11439. What was the amount of these half-notes?—£30.

11440. From whom did you get them?—From a man in Mr. Cunningham's house.

11441. Did he tell you what these half-notes were for?—He didn't.

11442. Did he tell you what you were to do with them?—No.

11443. What did you do with them?—I returned them to Patrick Croagh, that lives in the Commons.

11444. Who told you to give them to him?—Patrick Croagh told me to go to that man and I would get them. I kept them at first until the election was over.

11445. Who told you to do that?—Patrick Croagh.

11446. He told you to keep them until after the election?—Oh, no; but I was aware that I wasn't to give them.

11447. Who made you aware of that?—Mr. Munster's agents.

11448. How many told you?—Mr. Laffan and Mr. Cunningham.

11449. That is Pat. Cunningham?—I suppose so.

11450. They told you to keep them until after the election, and then give them to Croagh?—I told them I would. They said if I came forward, and to be in care of the notes until the election would be over, that they would be given; so I promised.

11451. What day did you get them?—I couldn't well account.

11452. You could not tell what day of the week it was?—No; but it was before the election. I was to hold the money in trust until the election was over, and I did, and then I gave the money to Pat. Croagh. I had no more to do with it than that.

11453. Which Mr. Laffan was it that told you? Was it this gentleman here [i.e. Mr. M. J. Laffan]?—No, Mr. Patrick Laffan. He didn't tell me what the money was for, but to go and I would get the money.

11454. I thought you said that Mr. Patrick Laffan told you that the money was for Croagh, and that you were to keep it until the election was over?—I believe it was that was the case; it was to be for Croagh. The money was to be given to any person Mr. Pat. Laffan would select to give the money to, and he wouldn't depend on Croagh getting the money.

11455. That was lest Croagh might vote the wrong way?—That is what I understood it. I kept the money in my possession until all was over, and I gave it to Pat. Croagh after.

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham recalled and confronted with Gleeson; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11456. I thought you told me that Gleeson was quite a young man?—I thought it was a younger man than this.

11457. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Who was the young man that got the "half notes by order of Cunningham?"—That is the man; I thought it was a friend of Croagh's; he is Gleeson.

11458. Here is the entry—"Half notes to a young man by the verbal order of Cunningham." You said Gleeson was the young man?—There is a young man, a friend of Gleeson's; I thought 'twas he got it.

Luke Larkin.

Luke Larkin recalled and confronted with Gleeson and Cunningham; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

11459. Can you tell—would you call that man a young man—would you enter in your book, if you paid him money, that you paid it to a young man?—No, I wouldn't say "to a young man" for that man [i.e. Gleeson.]

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham's examination resumed by Mr. GRIFFIN.

11460. Did you not give the other half notes to Croagh at Corcoran's hotel?—Yes.

11461. They cannot be the half notes the young man got?—No.

11462. Try and recollect who got them, because it is plainly not Gleeson?—It must be a mistake of this man Larkin.

[Adjourned.]

TWELFTH DAY.

October 16.

TWELFTH DAY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

Jeremiah Connolly.

Jeremiah Connolly sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11463. Where do you live?—In the Main-street.

11464. What is your father's name?—John Connolly, your worship.

11465. Is Peter Connolly your uncle?—He is, your worship.

11466. They are both voters, I believe, in Cashel?—They are, your worship.

11467. And they voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, your worship.

11468. You got a sum of seventy pounds from a man named Larkin before the last election?—I got it from some man; I can't say who it is from, sir.

11469. We now know his name to be Larkin. To whom did you give that money?—I gave some of it to my uncle and some of it to my father, and kept more of it myself.

11470. Where was it that you got that money?—In a room at Corcoran's hotel.

11471. Did you sign a promissory note at the time you got the seventy pounds?—I did, sir. [Identifies the document.]

11472. To whom did you give that seventy pounds—you say some to your uncle and some to your father?—Yes.

11473. And some to yourself?—Yes.

11474. How much did you give to your uncle, Peter Connolly?—Twenty pounds.

11475. How much to your father?—Ten pounds.

11476. And did you keep the balance yourself?—Yes, sir.

11477. Did your uncle know what you gave him that money for?—Well, I suppose he did. He couldn't think I could give it to him myself, because I hadn't it.

11478. Did you tell him where you had got it?—I didn't.

11479. Tell me what you said, as well as you recollect?—"Take this money," said I to him; that was all I said. I was giving him some money to keep for myself. "This is mine," said I, "and take that and keep it for yourself."

11480. How much were you giving him for himself?—£10, sir.

11481. You got this money for the votes of your father and uncle?—I got it for my services. I suppose I wouldn't get it if they had no votes.

11482. What services did you render—what were you doing?—I was writing, sir.

11483. Where were you writing?—In Corcoran's hotel.

11484. At what time did you give the £20 to your uncle?—I can't exactly say whether it was a fortnight, or three weeks, or a month after the election.

11485. After the election?—Yes, it wasn't less than a fortnight. I don't know was it a fortnight or a month; something, I suppose, between both.

11486. Had you any conversation with your uncle before that?—I had, sometime previous to the election.

11487. About his vote?—He told me whoever I would be employed by, he would vote for them.

11488. Did he say anything more than that about it?—He didn't, sir.

11489. But you say he understood what the £20 meant when you gave it to him, and how it was obtained?—I swear he did.

11490. Did he ever say anything to you that made you know it?—I'm not sure whether he said it or not; I can't recollect now, it is such a long time ago. He might have said "I suppose this is my share," or something, but I don't recollect whether he did or not.

11491. He did not ask you where you got the money—but took it and kept it?—He didn't, your worship.

11492. And you understood from his manner that he knew what it was for?—Yes.

11493. When you gave the £10 to your father, what did you say?—I can't say what I said to him.

11494. Your father knew also what it was for?—I suppose he did, your worship.

11495. Did your father say anything to you about his vote before the election?—He said if I was employed by any person, he would vote for him.

11496. Did you tell Mr. Laffan that your father and uncle would vote for any person that employed you?—Mr. Patrick Laffan came to our shop and he took me into the parlour, and he asked me how much would I take for my services. I told him. We agreed that I should take £70 for my services.

11497. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What do you mean by "we agreed?" Who are "we?"—I and Patrick Laffan.

11498. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You said Mr. Patrick Laffan when he asked what you would take for your service, you said, "We agreed I should get £70." Who are "we?" Is it your father and uncle?—No, sir.

11499. Who else?—I told you that we agreed to take £70, I and Patrick Laffan.

11500. Was your first answer incorrect? You said, "He asked me what I would take for my services," and you said, "I told him?"—I was going to say when I said I told him; I was going to say I told him I would take more; I cut it short.

11501. "I told him" was only a portion of an unfinished sentence?—Yes, sir; that it was unnecessary to tell you.

11502. Had you any conversation with your father and uncle as to how much you ought to be paid?—I had several conversations with them.

11503. With your father and uncle?—Yes.

11504. And did you in any of those conversations fix how much your father and uncle ought to get?—When I had conversation with them they told me at all times to get as much as I could for myself. They wanted to have nothing to do with it.

11505. When you say they wanted to have nothing to do with it, do you mean to say they wanted to have nothing to do with the arrangement that was to be made?—I mean to say that they wanted to have nothing to do whether they were to be paid for their votes or not, but to let me manage in the best way I could 11506. They left the thing in your hands to manage?—Yes, your worship.

11507. Mr. MOLLOY.—How long were you writing at the election?—I was writing all night one night nearly. I was up all night, at all events. I am not sure whether I was writing; but I was in and out of the room the day after. I am not sure that I was writing more than one, but I was that.

11508. Mr. GRIFFIN.—That was the night before the polling?—It was the night before the polling I was writing.

11509. How much did you ask from Mr. Pat Laffan first?—£100.

11510. Did he tell you £35 was what they were giving for votes?—He told me that £60 ought to be sufficient for me.

11511. Did he say anything about what they were paying people for votes?—Well, I'm not sure whether he mentioned about votes or not.

11512. Did he say anything about £35 being the figure?—He didn't, your worship.

11513. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—He knew that two votes depended on your services, did he not?—I suppose he thought they did.

11514. Did any person speak to you on Mr. O'Beirne's side, or did you speak to any person on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I did, your worship.

11515. To whom did you speak on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I went to Mr. Grace. I asked him to employ me during the election. This, I suppose, was a month before the election; perhaps it was more.

11516. What did Mr. Grace say?—He asked me how much did I require. I told him something—I can't recollect now what it was; but he told me he would give me £20 for my services. That was more than a month before the election.

11517. Mr. GRIFFIN.—About what sum did you ask from him?—I asked over £100.

11518. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—And Mr. Grace said he would give you £20?—Yes, sir.

11519. Did anything further occur between you?—Nothing further. He asked me, I think, how many persons did I think I could influence for to vote for them?—I told him four.

11520. Who are the four that you told him you could influence?—There is another uncle of mine in town who has a vote.

11521. What is his name?—John Cassidy.

11522. Your father, your uncle Peter, John Cassidy, and who else?—Thomas Tierney.

11523. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is he anything to you?—He is nothing to me.

11524. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you give any of this money to John Cassidy?—No, your worship.

11525. Had you any talk with John Cassidy about it?—No. After that he got a retainer, I think, from Mr. Munster.

11526. Who did?—John Cassidy.

11527. For whom did he vote at the election?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

11528. Did you try to influence John Cassidy?—Not after that; I had no conversation with him.

11529. After what?—After getting the retainer.

11530. But before it had you any conversation with him?—No, your worship.

11531. Did you never try to influence him?—I had asked him but once who would he vote for. He said he didn't know; that he was engaged.

11532. Did he say more than that?—No more than

TWELFTH DAY. October 16.

Jeremiah Connolly.

that. He told me one time that Mr. Laffan required his services up at the hotel, I think, in the evening. He asked me then would he go or not. I told him to go. That was the night he said he got the retainer.

11533. Did you tell him how much you were to get?—No, I didn't.

11534. Did you tell him that you were employed?—I had no conversation with him after that; it might be a month after; I don't recollect the dates.

11535. Did he tell you that he got a retainer?—He made it public after he got it. Mr. O'Beirne's party got up some printed document to the effect how he got a retainer and returned it, exposing the whole thing.

11536. Did you ever tell Mr. Laffan that you could not influence your uncle John Cassidy?—He knew at the time that he was decided on going for Mr. O'Beirne, when he exposed the retainer.

11537. I want to know if you can tell me why it was that Mr. Laffan gave him this retainer?—Well, I can't say; I wasn't ever speaking to Mr. Laffan at that time.

11538. And do you know when your uncle John Cassidy made up his mind to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I think he made it up when he got the retainer.

11539. And not before?—Not before; I'm not sure.

11540. Do you know if he got any inducement from Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I couldn't say; I heard him saying he didn't.

11541. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you influence Thomas Tierney at all?—No, your worship.

11542. Did you ever tell your father about how much you got?—Tell my father?

11543. Yes, that you got £70?—Yes.

11544. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you any conversation with any person else besides Mr. Grace on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I was talking to Mr. O'Beirne himself, but it was in a shop, and there was parties there present. I was introduced to him, no more than that.

11545. Was there no person else besides Mr. Grace talking to you on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—No person else.

Thomas Rawlins and Andrew Meara.

Thomas Rawlins and Andrew Meara recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11546. There is some trifling discrepancy between the two of you. Do you recollect, Mr. Meara, that you said that Mr. Rawlins came into your house; that by directions of Mr. Laffan you offered him five guineas; that he refused to take it; that in a few minutes Mr. Laffan came into your shop, and you gave the five guineas to Mr. Laffan himself?—Mr. Meara.—I think that's what occurred.

11547. You say that you were handed that money by Mr. Meara, and that you took it from him?—Mr. Rawlins.—Made up in a cartridge.

11548. Did you take it out of his hands in his shop?—Mr. Rawlins.—Out of his hands in his shop. He didn't give me time to speak one word when he gave it to me.

11549. It is not very material. I only want to clear it up. Is your recollection, Mr. Meara, so vivid and clear?—Mr. Meara.—I am almost sure it is; but I am not very sure.

11550. Then what Mr. Rawlins says may be correct?—Mr. Meara.—I won't alter it, sir.

11551. I dare say Mr. Rawlins has a very accurate recollection of how he got it. Mr. Rawlins looks upon it as a matter of absurdity that he could refuse the five guineas for a moment, or that he would have the slightest hesitation in taking it?—Mr. Meara.—One thing I forgot the day I was examined. I brought a bill one night down to Corcoran's hotel, and Mr. Pat Laffan gave me £8 or £10, and said it was, I think, for gravel or sand. I was sent by Pat Hackett with the bill. I took down the bill, and got either £8 or £10; I forget which—I heard since it was £10—and I brought it back to Pat Hackett, and gave it to him.

11552. Mr. GRIFFIN.—That was for Croagh?—Mr. Meara.—For Croagh; exactly, sir.

William Ryan of the Racecourse, recalled, and confronted with Andrew Meara.

Andrew Meara.

Andrew Meara examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11553. Now, Mr. Meara, repeat what you told us here the other day, that this man said to you. Do you recollect is this the man?—It is, sir.

11554. Do you recollect his coming to you and telling you he had a bill falling due?—Yes, the day after. It was the polling day, I think, it was due.

11555. Repeat now what he told you?—He told me on the same evening it would be due to-morrow. I went to Mr. Michael Laffan, and asked him.

11556. Did you say anything more than that?—I think all he said to me is, it would be due to-morrow.

11557. What did you say then?—"Very well," says I; "I will see about it." I saw Mr. Laffan, and told him the circumstance. "Couldn't you settle it," says he, "for him to-morrow?" "Very well," says I. After nightfall the same evening I saw him, and told him I would settle the bill for him. He came shortly after, and said "he was pleased," I think, "at the other side."

11558. Did he say he had sold his wheat, or got paid for his property in the meantime?—I forget that.

11559. Could you have mistaken his saying "he was pleased at the other side?"—He certainly said that.

11560. Have you a positive recollection of that?—I think I have; "that he was pleased at the other side." Perhaps it isn't the very direct answer, but it was tantamount to that. He said he would stop at the other side, or stay, as he was, or something that way.

11561. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Are you sure he said something about voting?—I think he meant it, sir, at all events, no mistake about it. He may not have given expression to it direct, but I think his meaning was that he would.

William Ryan

William Ryan of the Racecourse, examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11562. Now, Mr. Ryan, did you hear Mr. Meara swear that you said to him you were pleased at the other side, and would sooner vote, or something like that, with them?—I said I would sooner vote with them; "but being pleased at the other side," I didn't say that. I didn't say "pleased at the other side."

11563. What did you say?—I went in; I was weighing wheat, and there was a row at the shambles the same evening, and I and one of the parties with me, Pat. Ryan, went up to see what it was about. We were standing near Mr. Meara's door, and I saluted him. "We're weighing some wheat near here," said I, "and if I am not paid I must renew the bill." "Come to me to-morrow," says he, "and I will renew it."

Andrew Meara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11564. Did he say that, Mr. Meara?—He said something about wheat, and I said I would renew it for him the day after.

11565. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was your name on the bill?—It was, sir.

11566. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you quite positive there was talk of voting at the time?—I understood from him he was going to vote at the other side.

11567. Did you mean this conversation with Ryan to be an inducement to Ryan to vote at Mr. Munster's side?—I did, decidedly.

11568. Did he understand it so?—Well, I think he did.

11569. Did you believe that he understood it in that light from you?—I think he did.

11570. Had he any doubt?—I don't think he ought He perfectly well knew it was under that circumstance I offered it.

11571. Have you any doubt on your mind he understood your object?—I think he did understand it.

William Ryan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11572. Now, Mr. Ryan, tell me honestly did you understand that conversation as an inducement to you to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

11573. You did?—I did, sir.

11574. And if you had not got the money to take up that bill, would you have accepted Mr. Meara's offer and voted for Mr. Munster?—I wouldn't, sir.

11575. Would you have allowed Mr. Meara to take up the bill?—No, sir.

11576. You would not?—No, sir; I would renew it myself.

11577. Supposing he refused to renew it unless you voted for Mr. Munster, what would you do?—I could get another to do it.

11578. Did you bring the bill with you?—No, sir; I haven't it. Thomas Carew, I think, was on it, sir; he is dead now.

11579. I have all the names that were on it, the date, the amount, and everything about it?—Oh, I suppose you have, sir. The bill was raised after that again, sir, by Mr. Meara.

11580. The bill was due on the 25th, and you paid it on the 21st, four days before it was due? You told me yesterday you did not?—That is the date of the bill, and the day after that it was due I paid it.

11581. You paid it on the 21st, four days before it was due. Tell me honestly where you got the money with which you paid it before it was due?—I considered it was due, sir, and told him it was due, Andy Meara. My docket, I think, showed it was due on that day. He might make a mistake in the bill after, sir.

11582. Do you tell me positively still you received no money from anyone to assist you to take up that bill?—I do, sir.

11583. Did you get a bill from anyone to enable you to take it up?—No, sir.

11584. Did you get any assistance of any kind from anyone?—Not a shilling, sir.

11585. Did you get a promise from anyone that you would be paid the amount of the bill?—No, sir. Only Andy Meara said to leave it to himself. That is all.

11586. You would take the money from Mr. O'Beirne if he offered it to you after you had given your vote?—I would, sir.

11587. When you knew that you could get £25 from your conversation with Mr. Meara, and when you admit that you would take money for your vote, I want to know why you did not take that £25?—I didn't admit to take the money for my vote from him.

11588. You admit you would have taken £25 from Mr. O'Beirne if he offered it to you for your vote?—Yes, sir.

11589. Before the day of the election you would have taken it?—I would, sir.

11590. You say you got nothing?—Nothing, sir.

11591. You would have taken £25 from Mr. O'Beirne before or after voting, and when you were offered £25 from Mr. Meara I want to know why you did not take it?—I would, sir, go with Mr. O'Beirne for nothing, rather than take £25 from Mr. Munster.

11592. What sum would you have taken to vote for Mr. Munster?—About £50 or £60, sir.

11593. You would have taken that?—I would, sir.

11594. And you thought £25 too little?—Yes, sir.

11595. Did you vote in 1865?—Yes, sir.

11596. For Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

11597. I forget if I asked you whether you got anything from anyone as an inducement?—I didn't, sir.

11598. Nothing at all?—No, sir.

11599. You are quite sure you have not the bill?—No, sir.

11600. You made search for it and could not find it?—I haven't it, sir, nor the bills after it again.

11601. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you sign any bill in 1865?—No, sir.

11602. Did you get any promise or inducement of any kind for voting in 1865?—I didn't, sir.

11603. Were you or any of your relations promised situations?—There was a brother-in-law of mine promised it.

11604. What is his name?—Michael Ryan.

11605. He has not got a vote?—No, sir.

11606. Who promised him the situation?—It was after the election he was promised it, sir.

11607. Was there anything about it before the election?—No, sir, there wasn't.

11608. What situation was he promised?—I couldn't say, sir. He didn't mention any situation.

11609. Mr. MOLLOY.—You had another bill that was due the 13th November and that you renewed on the 12th, for £25?—I had no bill of my own but the one.

11610. How many bills had you in the bank in November last?—I had one bill on my own account.

11611. Was your name on two bills?—It was on three or four, I believe, besides my own; it was security on them.

11612. You were on a bill with Tom Carew?—Yes, sir.

11613. That is not the bill Mr. Waters has been asking about?—He was security on me, and I was on another.

11614. For him?—Yes.

11615. What became of the bill that you were security on for him?—His wife paid it after.

11616. Where did she get the money to pay it?—She had it.

11617. Where did she get the money?—I couldn't say.

11618. What is her name?—Margaret Carew, widow now.

11619. Is that the bill that the Widow Ryan's name was on?—No.

11620. That is another bill?—Yes.

11621. Was it another bill?—I suppose it was, sir; I couldn't tell you how many was in at the same time.

11622. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was Tom Carew a voter?—He was, sir.

11623. Where did he live?—Friar-street, Cashel.

11624. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You say he died?—He died before the last election, last August twelve months, or sometime; I believe July or August.

TWELFTH DAY.

October 16.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11625. Does your brother attend?—He came this morning, sir. He is in town. He wasn't up when I left the house, but if you wish for his attendance today, I have no doubt he will come up. He stated this morning he would like to look over the list of voters and see the different dealings he had.

11626. There is no use in his coming up unprepared. I will give him this day to prepare?—I told him if he had the whole thing looked over he would save an immensity of time—he could come up and tell it like Cunningham, who gave his evidence very properly.

11627. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You told him what was said by Cunningham?—Yes, I told him generally what happened about the Commission.

Patrick Ryan was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11628. Have you seen Ryan?—He hasn't returned since, your worship.

11629. Did you serve him with a subpœna?—I left it with his wife.

11630. When did you leave it?—On Thursday last. He was gone on Wednesday. They say he took the line from Limerick to Ballinakill in the Queen's County.

Roger Fogarty.

Roger Fogarty sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11631. You are an elector of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

11632. And voted, I believe, at the last election for Mr. Munster?—I did.

11633. Did you receive any consideration for your vote?—No, indeed, not a penny.

11634. Were you canvassed on behalf of both the candidates?—I was.

11635. Who canvassed you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, I think Mr. O'Beirne called to my place. I was absent in the country that day; I was absent when he called. So he didn't come anymore then. Shea came to me and spoke about Mr. O'Beirne and I told him that I would not vote for him. I said that I could do nothing of the kind that way; that I had promised Mr. Laffan I would vote for Mr. Munster.

11636. When did you promise Mr. Laffan?—I met him one time in the town, and he stated to me about Mr. Munster coming here; but the next time again I met him he still asked me to support Mr. Munster, and represented him as a good man, having means, and apt to take property in the country. "Well, very well," says I, "I have no objection."

11637. Which Mr. Laffan was that?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

11638. Now, Mr. Fogarty, you had a conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan also?—I had.

11639. And he said something to the effect that he would make it all right, or something like that?—No, Mr. Laffan never told me he would make anything right more than a treating bill I had.

11640. What was the treating bill you had for?—The treating bill I had there was, I think, £35 something.

11641. £35 12*s.* 6*d.*?—Yes.

11642. Have you been paid it?—No.

11643. Was that amount of drink given by you?—It was.

11644. To whom was it given?—To the mob, on orders from Mr. Laffan and Cunningham.

11645. Was it given to any others but the mob?—I think there was one or two voters came.

11646. One or two only?—That's all, indeed.

11647. Was it on several orders you gave this £35 12*s.* 6*d.* worth, or was it given in one day?—Oh, not at all; for five or six weeks.

11648. Are you able to charge your recollection so closely as to say that there were only two voters in those who came to you?—That's all I noticed; there may be some others. I didn't give any other party that took any drink.

11649. How much of the £35 12*s.* 6*d.* worth did the two voters consume?—No more than a couple of half glasses of grog or brandy, I think.

11650. Did they bring orders to you?—No, they did not.

11651. Did you not tell me that you gave these drinks on orders of Pat. Laffan and Cunningham?—I did.

11652. Do you recollect so very clearly what occurred twelve months ago as to except these two particular men and say they did not bring orders?—I say they didn't; I swear it.

11653. You say that from your recollection?—I know the two men, and they brought me no orders.

11654. But you included their drink in this?—I did; I made it all up.

11655. Why, you have a wonderful memory?—I included it all in the bills according as it went in. Whatever things would be given I put it down on a slip of paper and put it aside.

11656. Perhaps you recollect what they drank?—A couple of half glasses of grog or brandy.

11657. Was it in hot or cold water they took it?—If it was any they took it in cold. I believe that to be the case.

11658. What are their names?—Delahunty and Ryan, from the Commons.

11659. Which Ryan, because they are "as numerous as blackberries"?—Billy Ryan.

11660. Is it big Bill or little Bill?—I don't say, sir. I couldn't tell you which, indeed.

11661. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever furnish a bill but that one to Mr. Munster?—I did. I sent in a bill for my son.

11662. For the drinks I mean?—I did, for drink that went to Abbeyview.

11663. But for the £35 12*s.* 6*d.*?—Never.

11664. Did you ever send any bill with the dates on which the drink was supplied?—No; I don't recollect I did. No. I made out a bill with dates to it for Mr. Johnson.

11665. Who is Mr. Johnson?—I think the expense-agent of Mr. Munster—Mr. Richardson; but whether I left him that bill or not I can't say.

11666. From what did you make it up?—From small bits of paper that I took it down on.

11667. Did you get the orders in writing or verbally?—I got some of them in writing, and more verbally.

11668. And all the orders were from Mr. Pat. Laffan and Cunningham?—They were.

11669. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You put in a claim for your son's services?—I did.

11670. And you thought £30 was what he was entitled to be paid?—I didn't put in a shilling for him, nor think of it until after the election. I spoke to Mr. Michael Laffan on the matter.

11671. What did he say to you?—And he told me to put in a bill.

11672. You were aware that your son did not do anything?—I was aware that he was employed.

Roger Fogarty.

11673. Are you aware that your son did nothing?—Well, I'm not.

11674. If he swore on his oath here yesterday that he did nothing at all, would you believe it?—I would. Whatever he'd say I'd believe.

11675. He did nothing at the election?—Anything he'd say I believe.

11676. He says it now, and still you put in a claim for £30 for him?—I did.

11677. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You spoke to Mr. Laffan about it?—I did.

11678. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Laffan told you to put in a claim?—He did.

11679. When did you speak to Mr. Laffan?—After the election was over some time.

11680. Where did you see him?—Mr. Laffan.

11681. Yes?—I think in his office.

11682. I suppose Mr. Laffan did not send for you, but that you went to him?—I'm sure I did.

11683. You seem inclined to tell me candidly everything you know. I ask you to give me a straightforward answer to this question. You knew that there was money going at the election, and was not this £30 a way to get your share of it?—I had no notion of putting in that bill, nor I never got a penny for my vote, nor never asked it.

11684. I believe that; but I want a candid answer. Did you not know that there was money going at Mr. Munster's side for the election, and did you not put in this bill claiming £30 for your son, as a way to get that £30?—No.

11685. For what other reason?—The reason I put in that bill was this, that I considered if anyone was getting money, that I should be entitled to something for my services. There's people in the street with me I heard were getting money; I don't know but they got it.

11686. Do you not know that your son was only one day there?—He was only the day of the poll.

11687. You knew nothing of the employment he was at?—No.

11688. How did you fix on £30? Would not £30 be a fair salary for him for a whole year?—It would, but I considered he would give him what he liked.

11689. Would not it be honester for you to admit that that was a way you took to get your share of what was going?—No.

11690. If this £30 was got who would get it?—I'm sure I would.

11691. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When as you say, you went to Mr. Laffan after the election, what did you say to him?—I said, "'tis right I should send in a bill for the services of my son," or something that way. "Why not," says he.

11692. Did you say anything to him about the amount then?—No.

11693. Mr. Laffan did not tell you that your son did nothing for him?—No.

11694. You knew he had been only one day up at the polling?—I knew he was here on that day.

11695. You never knew that he was here on any other day?—No.

11696. With reference to that bill for treating, why did you not ask for the amount of that bill all this time past, it being now due more than a year?—I did, often.

11697. What reasons were given to you for not being paid?—I was told that there would be no bill paid until after the Commission.

11698. After this Commission?—After the Petition.

11699. After the Petition did you ask for it?—I did.

11700. What were you told then?—I was told it wouldn't be paid until after the Commission was over.

11701. Mr. MOLLOY.—When you made out the bill for Mr. Richardson to whom did you give it?—I think it was to either Mr. Richardson or Mr. Biggin.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

11702. I presume, Mr. Laffan, that this is one of the instances you mentioned before?—Not exactly; in some of those cases I put down the amount myself.

11703. But you knew this man's son did nothing?—I knew substantially he didn't do very much.

11704. Of course, this £30 was charged in the same light as the others?—Yes.

Roger Fogarty's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Roger Fogarty.

11705. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked who told you that the bill would not be paid until after the Commission?—Mr. Laffan.

11706. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan and Pat Cunningham, and I wrote to Mr. Munster for the amount, but—— 11707. Did you get an answer?—No.

11708. When did you write?—I wrote to him on two occasions.

11709. What were the occasions that you wrote to Mr. Munster?—I wrote to him, and stated to him that I wanted money, hoping he would pay me the amount of my treating bill.

11710. What were the dates, as well as you recollect?—I couldn't tell you.

11711. Were they twelve months ago?—Three or four months ago, or five, or six.

11712. Did you write since the petition was over in February?—I did.

11713. Were the two letters since then, or one before?—The two letters were since, one after another. I wrote to Mr. Munster, and got no answer. Then I spoke to Mr. Biggin. He said he saw no reason against it. "I would like to see Mr. Munster on it," said I. "Well," said he, "write to him, reminding him."

11714. And you did write?—I did write.

11715. And, as far as you think, these letters were both since the Petition?—Yes.

11716. Did you get any answer to either?—No.

11717. Did you call on Mr. Munster at Abbeyview ever to try to induce him to drop the petition, saying you would be with him the next time?—I called up at Abbeyview after the election. Mr. Leahy, Mr. Laffan, and Mr. Scallan were there, and I said to Mr. Munster, when he was talking of carrying on a petition, "Sir, it is my opinion it would be better to have no petition."

11718. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you know Michael Sullivan was writing to Mr. Munster?—I didn't know that Sullivan wrote to Mr. Munster, for Sullivan said to me to write to Mr. Munster about the bill.

11719. You and O'Sullivan were both in the same position about treating bills, and used to talk about them together?—Yes.

11720. Did O'Sullivan tell you he was writing to Mr. Munster?—He didn't.

11721. When did you hear first that O'Sullivan was paid?—Sullivan, I think, told me himself.

11722. Immediately after he was paid, was it?—Yes.

11723. Did he ever tell you what he had written?—He didn't.

11724. Did you say anything in your letter to Mr. Munster about being "one of his most warm advocates?"—No; I stated I wanted the amount of my treating bill.

11725. Mr. MOLLOY.—For whom did you vote in 1865?—I didn't vote in '65.

TWELFTH DAY. October 16.

Roger Fogarty.

11726. Had you a vote?—No, sir.

11727. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What was the amount of the value you supplied the two voters?—Nothing more than about eight pence or ten pence.

John Connolly.

John Connolly sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11728. You are the father of Jeremiah Connolly?—Jeremiah, sir.

11729. You are a voter?—Yes.

11730. And voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

11731. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne's party?—I was.

11732. By whom were you canvassed for Mr. O'Beirne?—By Mr. O'Beirne himself.

11733. And anybody else?—And a man named Pat Connors.

11734. Anybody else?—And a man of the name of Shea.

11735. Anybody else?—Not that I can recollect.

11736. Was there any sort of inducement held out to you by any of those persons on Mr. O'Beirne's side? No, but I was asked by them would I allow my son to do business for Mr. O'Beirne.

11737. Who asked you that?—Shea, sir.

11738. Is that Tim. Shea, the tailor?—Yes, sir; he said Mr. O'Beirne would feel very anxious for my doing so.

11739. Did you understand that as a means to be used to influence you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, I couldn't exactly say.

11740. What did you understand by it?—There might be something of that nature.

11741. Have you any doubt?—I have not indeed. At least I should think there was something.

11742. Was your son at that time employed by Mr. Munster?—He wasn't, sir.

11743. He was at that time unemployed by either side?—Yes, sir.

11744. What did you say when he asked you would you allow your son to be employed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I told him my mind wasn't made up to know which of them I would go for at the present time.

11745. Did he say what you would get for your son being employed?—He didn't.

11746. Did you know at the time of your son having gone to Mr. Grace?—Yes.

11747. And that he asked over £100?—Yes, he told me that.

11748. Did he say if he got £100 from Mr. Grace you would have voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—It is most natural to think I would. Of course I would, sir.

11749. Did none of the other persons who came to you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne say anything like that to you?—Well, Connors told me; he called me once in off the shop.

11750. What Connors?—Pat Connors.

11751. What did he say to you there?—He asked me would I have any objection to have a dealing with Mr. O'Beirne. I got rather angry with him to introduce any such matter. I gave him to understand I didn't want to take any part in public politics; that my mind wasn't made up to do anything, because it was some days before the election.

11752. He asked you would you have a dealing with Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, he asked me would I have any objection.

11753. I suppose the commodity was your vote?—That's the way he spoke.

11754. Had you any other sort of merchandise that would have suited Mr. O'Beirne at the time?—No.

11755. And you were very angry with him about it?—I was a little displeased; I told him if Mr. O'Beirne wanted my interest or influence for himself to come.

11756. He did not approach the matter as delicately as Shea did, about the employment of your son?—Well, he didn't; Shea came two or three times.

11757. Did Pat. Connor offer anything to you on that occasion?—No, he didn't.

11758. Only asked you would you have a dealing with him?—No, I got out as quick as I could.

11759. Your son told us, and he appeared to tell the truth very candidly?—First I commissioned my son to do the best he could himself, and of course I would give him my interest.

11760. You would vote for whatever side dealt liberally with him?—I would.

11761. Do you know what time your son was first engaged?—Well, I declare I couldn't say, sir. I never inquired anything about it.

11762. After the election you got £70?—It appeared £70.

11763. And he gave he says £20 to his uncle, your brother Peter, and £10 to you?—Yes.

11764. You knew where he got that £10 of course?—Yes; I thought he got it from ——

11765. Do you know what your son did with the rest of the money?—I couldn't exactly say; he paid a little bill that was due in Dublin of me.

11766. What was the amount of the bill he paid?—£30.

11767. Did he go to Dublin to pay that bill?—No.

11768. Were you to repay him for the payment of that bill?—No; it was a small bill that was due to a merchant in Dublin by me.

11769. And he paid that bill for you?—Yes.

11770. That made it £40 altogether that you got?—Yes.

11771. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, sir.

11772. Is this the first time that you had a vote?—O no, sir; I had a vote different times, twelve or fourteen years ago, in Mr. Perrin's time and Sir Timothy O'Brien.

11773. What is the first time you heard of money going among the electors of Cashel, either in the way of paying for houses, or paying voters' sons for their services, because they all amount to the same thing as paying money directly. What was the first time you heard of money given in Cashel?—Well, I heard there was money giving in Cashel before now.

11774. I want to know at what election you first heard of it. I do not mean only direct payment of money, but also payment for houses and sons of voters?—The first time I ever came to hear talk of it was when Mr. O'Beirne was going against Sir Timothy O'Brien.

11775. Did Sir Timothy O'Brien pay money then? I couldn't say, sir; I had no vote; I didn't interfere with politics at all, but I could hear it.

11776. Was the Pat Connors who canvassed you Mr. O'Beirne's expense agent?—Yes; I heard so. He called me in off the shop.

Peter Connolly.

Peter Connolly sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11777. You are the brother of the last witness?—Yes, sir.

11778. You are a voter?—I am, sir.

11779. And you voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

11780. Your nephew Jeremiah got £70 you heard?—Yes; I heard it yesterday, sir.

11781. Never before?—Never before.

11782. Now think of yourself?—On my oath I never heard it before. I understood he got it; but I never heard the amount.

11783. If you heard it was £70 would you have been satisfied with the £20 you got? Would you not have expected more?—I wouldn't; for I intended to do more than that for him myself.

11784. Your nephew, Jeremiah, said that you told him that whoever would employ him or pay him best you would vote for at the election?—That's the very word, sir, I told him.

11785. And did you then tell him to make the best bargain he could?—That's the very word.

11786. When was it that he paid you the twenty pounds?—After the election, sir.

11787. How soon after the election?—Well, I suppose—I couldn't exactly say; but to the best of my opinion it was in or about two months—two or one, I couldn't exactly say; I kept no account.

11788. I suppose you were canvassed, Mr. Connolly, by some persons on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, sir.

11789. By whom were you canvassed on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—The first time himself in person, and a few others, Dr. Coyle, Mr. Foley, and a few others—I didn't mind.

11790. Was there any inducement by employment of your nephew or otherwise offered through your nephew?—No; but I heard that Mr. Grace offered him something.

11791. Again I ask you was there anything offered you on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—Only what Mr. Grace offered my nephew.

11792. Did you ask anyone to employ your nephew?—Yes, I asked Mr. Munster to employ my nephew.

11793. Mr. Munster?—Yes, on the day he canvassed me.

11794. What did Mr. Munster say to that?—He said he didn't know what to say about it.

11795. Is that all that passed between you?—That is all, sir, that passed between us on that day.

11796. Did anything further pass between you with reference to the employment of your nephew?—Never, sir, to my knowledge.

11797. And all that passed between you was you asked him to employ your nephew, and he said he didn't know what to say about that?—Yes.

11798. Did he refer you to anyone?—No.

11799. Who was there at the time?—Mr. Michael Laffan.

11800. Did Mr. Michael Laffan say anything then about employing him?—No, he didn't say a word about employing him that time.

11801. Did you ever speak to Mr. Patrick Laffan about it?—I didn't, sir, never.

11802. Did you ever ask anyone on Mr. O'Beirne's side to employ him?—No; but the Monday before the election took place, Mr. O'Beirne, it appears sent down for me; two persons came to the house and told me Mr. O'Beirne wanted me. I said I would immediately. "Come on, come on," said they. "Oh, I won't," said I, "I'm not in a proper state to go up at all to any man or gentleman." So I cleaned myself and went up, and went into the room. Mr. Grace was there and treated me very kindly; but nothing at all about the election as I could understand.

11803. Mr. Grace was there?—Yes, by himself, when I went in. I was there a few moments when Mr. O'Beirne came in with a cigar in his mouth, and a pair of spatterdashes. I smelt something by that, sir; because why, I was canvassed twice by my landlord.

11804. You mean Mr. Bianconi?—Mr. Morgan O'Connell and my landlord came in, and they told me the old gentleman would be very thankful to me if I would vote for Mr. O'Beirne, and I told him plainly and distinctly I would vote for the best man.

11805. You meant, I suppose by that, the man that paid your nephew best?—Yes, sir; that was it. The Saturday before the polling, his agent's clerk came to me with a large sheet of paper in his hand, and he pointed to me as something threatening. He asked me wouldn't I vote for Mr. O'Beirne? "I don't know," says I to him; I smelled something by that. When Mr. O'Beirne came into the room, "good morning, Mr. Connolly," says he, "good-morrow, sir," says I. "I suppose," says he, "you are coming to vote for me"? "Well, Mr. O'Beirne," says I, "I gave my vote to my nephew." I was canvassed twice through my landlord, I didn't like that; I would have my head severed from my body before I would be forced by anyone. I am under no compliment to my landlord, when I'm paying £4 for my land value £1 6*s*. I didn't like any coercion, consequently I gave away the vote for Mr. Munster.

11806. Did you state any sum you would vote for?—No, I never mentioned any sum.

11807. You gave Mr. O'Beirne plainly to understand that you gave your vote to your nephew, and would vote where your nephew was best treated?—Yes, sir.

11808. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you say anything about £50?—No, sir; I didn't say anything about any money.

11809. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you vote before?—I did, sir.

11810. For whom?—For Mr. Lanigan.

11811. In 1865?—Yes sir.

11812. Before that did you vote?—I had no vote before that.

11813. Did you get any consideration from Mr. Lanigan?—Not as much as a farthing.

11814. Did your nephew or anyone for you?—Not to my knowledge; I never knew anything about it.

John Kingsbury recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Kingsbury.

11815. I understand that you have something to tell us—I wish you to say it now?—Yes; when you spoke to me before I didn't recollect, my mind was in an agitated state, it was immediately at the time my wife died. But I have to state, sir, I received £10, as a retainer, from Mr. Laffan.

11816. From which Mr. Laffan—is it this gentleman here [i.e. Mr. Michael J. Laffan]?—No, sir; his brother.

11817. Go on?—And when I had it two or three days the farthest, I was looking for Mr. Laffan, and I found him at last in John-street, and I accosted him, and told him I felt very uneasy about this money that he gave me, and I put my hand in my pocket and pulled out £10, and he wouldn't take it, sir. I requested him to take it. He said, "no." I asked the reason. From this time forward I never saw him, but I offered it to him and he wouldn't take it, and if there's any —; if you wish, sir, I'll return the £10. I have it in my pocket.

11818. I would rather not have it at all, thank you?—I want him to get it, sir; I don't want it; I took it, sir, and I'm very sorry for it.

11819. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you sign a document of any kind?—I did, sir.

11820. What was the document you signed?—I don't know the nature of it; but I put my name to it; I suppose it was a receipt.

11821. Was it on the occasion of your getting the £10 that you signed the document?—It was, sir.

11822. What did Mr. Laffan say to you when he gave you the £10—did he call it a retainer?—He did, sir.

11823. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it after you got the £10 from Mr. Laffan that you had the conversation you told us with Captain Graham?—No, sir; it was before that.

11824. Mr. GRIFFIN.—The conversation with Captain Graham was before that?—Yes, sir.

11825. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you quite sure about that?—I think so, sir; I am almost certain; it was before I got the retainer that I had the conversation with Mr. Graham.

11826. Do you recollect that conversation now? Have you thought over it since?—Yes, sir. It has been sworn that he put some mark on a piece of paper; he never did such a thing to me.

11827. How could you have said it immediately afterwards? Do you recollect saying it very soon after the interview with Mr. Graham?—I never saw Mr. Graham; the interview didn't last ten minutes, nor I suppose the half of ten minutes; I never received a farthing from Mr. Graham—never, nor from anybody else, only the £10 I told you of that I received from Mr. Munster; that was the extent of my affair.

TWELFTH DAY. October 16.

John Kingsbury.

11828. Have you anything else to say?—No, indeed, sir, I have not; I am exceedingly sorry, sir, I took it, or had anything to do with it.

11829. I could not take it back from you at all. I would be just as much troubled with it as you are. The only thing I can suggest to you—as your conscience will not allow you to keep it—is that you should give it in charity?—Very well, sir.

11830. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you ever see Mr. Munster in your house after the sale in it?—I did, sir, once; I think it was after the sale. After my sale, sir—the auction is it?

11831. Yes?—I think it was after the sale.

11832. When did that take place?—The auction, sir?

11833. Yes?—I declare I couldn't tell you; I think it took place in February; Mr. Watkins could tell.

11834. What occurred then between you and Mr. Munster?—I don't think there was anything occurred between Mr. Munster and I at that time; let Mr. Munster speak out if he has anything to say.

11835. Did you solicit anything at all?—Not a ha'p'orth, sir; he was condoling with me on the loss of my wife.

Captain John Graham.

Captain John Graham sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

11836. Captain Graham, you were a friend, I believe, and supporter of Mr. O'Beirne's at the last election?—I was.

11837. I believe you have no vote yourself in Cashel?—I had at that time.

11838. Did you vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

11839. You were strongly interested in behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

11840. And, I suppose, assisted him as much as you could?—I did.

11841. Were you long here, Captain Graham, before Mr. O'Beirne came to town himself?—I was.

11842. About how long?—Probably three weeks, or so; about that I'm not quite certain; sometime in September, I think.

11843. Are you able to fix for us, if you please, the date of Mr. O'Beirne's arrival?—I don't know; I think some day in October; I couldn't really tell.

11844. Do you know was it early in October?—Yes, about the middle of October I think, the 10th, or 15th.

11845. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he arrive before or after Mr. Munster?—Oh, before Mr. Munster.

11846. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I suppose you were endeavouring to assist Mr. O'Beirne before his arrival?—I was.

11847. Mr. Graham, do you know a man named Daniel Foley?—Yes, I do.

11848. Daniel Foley was examined here about a bill that fell due on the 2nd November, and we have his evidence with reference to it. He said he went to Mr. O'Beirne and showed him the little docket that bankers send out apprizing persons of bills falling due; that he spoke to him about his land being at a rack-rent, and that he left the docket with Mr. O'Beirne. And then Mr. Barron, the manager of the bank, deposed that you paid that bill on the 29th October. Do you recollect the circumstance?—I know nothing at all about Daniel Foley, or about the conversation; but I have a perfect recollection of Mr. O'Beirne giving me his draft, and asking me would I hand that in at the bank. I think it was for more than the bill. I got up Foley's bill. He wrote it on paper; I handed in the bill at the bank. I got the money; I think £30. The bill was taken up with part of it, and I handed the balance to Mr. O'Beirne.

11849. That is exactly what Mr. Barron said. When you called it a "draft" you mean a cheque, I suppose?—His draft, cheque or draft—yes.

11850. Do you recollect, Captain Graham, what you did with Foley's bill?—I handed it back to Mr. O'Beirne, and whatever money the balance was.

11851. The balance was £5?—I could not say; but whatever it was, I handed it back with the bill. My impression is, that Mr. Barron put the bill in an envelope, and I handed it back to Mr. O'Beirne—merely as a message.

11852. You were not present at the conversation between Foley and Mr. O'Beirne?—I was not; I knew nothing about it up to the time he handed me this draft-cheque. What he said was—"Graham, as you are passing the bank, would you take this."

11853. You know that Foley is a voter?—Oh, yes; I do.

11854. And, I suppose, you knew then it was he?—At the time it didn't strike me.

11855. But you knew it?—I might have known it, if I thought about it.

11856. Do you know the man himself?—I do.

11857. Did you ever accommodate Foley at the bank?—Never.

11858. I suppose Mr. O'Beirne made no observation to you when you handed back the bill to him?—None whatever.

11859. I presume—because your answers already imply it—that Foley never spoke to you about this bill before that?—Never.

11860. Now, Captain Graham, you know a man of the name of Michael Ryan?—Yes; I do.

11861. His house was taken by Mr. O'Beirne for the election?—It was.

11862. You had some conversation with Ryan with reference to his house before it was taken for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, long previously.

11863. We have learned that Ryan's house was taken in the interval by Mr. Munster's party?—So I have heard.

11864. You know all about that story?—Yes.

11865. Mr. Ryan says you were looking at his house, and that you gave him forty pounds?—I lent him and Murnane forty pounds.

11866. And he passed a bill to you for the amount?—He did.

11867. Have you that bill?—No, Ryan paid the bill and got it.

11868. Do you know the date of the bill?—I do not.

11869. You say it was a long time before the house was taken by Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

11870. It occurred, you say, after, and not before, the time Mr. O'Beirne came to Cashel?—It was.

11871. It was a three months' bill?—It was.

11872. And he paid it back some considerable time before it was due?—He paid it back, I believe, about a fortnight before the election.

11873. And that was a considerable time before it was due?—Oh, yes, it was.

11874. Ryan is under the impression that that was payment on account of rent?—Of rent?

11875. Oh, yes, he swore it that you had taken his house?—Ryan was under a mistake entirely about the house. If you allow me to tell exactly what occurred about the house I will.

11876. He says also that you were talking to him and Murnane about their votes for Mr. O'Beirne?—I might; I couldn't say I did on that occasion or not. Murnane promised me his vote.

11877. And Ryan did not?—I don't think he did; he may have done so, but Murnane was the man that I knew most about.

11878. You had no sort of transaction with Ryan about the house previously?—No, I had not.

11879. Did you ever lend him money before?—I did not.

11880. Now, Captain Graham, I expect you will—I have no doubt of it—answer in the spirit in which the questions are put, and not according to the very letter and words. We all know that money was given for houses, when it was meant to influence votes, and we know that money was given for the employment of voters' sons, when it was meant as a means to influence votes, and that these were little contrivances used on such occasions. I ask you now to tell us frankly and candidly if you had not some intention of influencing Ryan's vote?—Not exactly what you call to influence his vote; I had not.

11881. To obtain influence over him that would induce him to do what you wanted?—I should have liked to have made him a friend at the time.

11882. Just so. And that was what introduced the conversation about the house?—Oh, no, not at all. At that time I was determined to take a house for myself for two months or some time. I went to look at Ryan's house, and he asked forty pounds; I didn't at all like it. I mentioned the matter afterwards to Mr. Grace when I met him. I went subsequently to Mackay and looked at his, and subsequently I went to Browne's and took it.

11883. You are a native of Cashel, and resided here some time?—I did.

11884. And you come back here frequently in connexion with the management of your property here?—Yes.

11885. Do you take a house when you come back here? Do you not stop with friends?—I generally stop at Miss Ryan's; sometimes I stop with friends.

11886. You generally stop at Miss Ryan's?—Yes.

11887. Although you wanted, as you say, Ryan's house, you had not the idea at the time of taking that house so as to influence the man? You would not have thought of taking a house from a person who had no vote? That will be a fair way to put it?—Perhaps so; but my object in taking the house was taking it from a man who was friendly, or perhaps would be.

11888. You would not have been inclined to take a house from a man whom you knew had no vote, or who was unfriendly to Mr. O'Beirne?—Perhaps not.

11889. When you say perhaps not, I may take it that you certainly would not. I think that is what you mean. The thing is all over now, and we ask you to tell us all you know?—So I do.

11890. I should say that going back very deeply into your recollection you would say you certainly would not have taken the house from one who was not in favour of Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, perhaps not.

11891. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you not know it was considered "robbery" to let a house to a person at one side and vote for the other?—I have heard that sworn.

11892. Do you not believe it?—I wouldn't believe it if it wasn't sworn. Ryan has sworn it.

11894. I am only asking you had you a latent intention of influencing the vote by the taking of the house?—Not what you call influencing. I did not do it with a view to influence the vote. In fact I wanted a house at the time and was determined to have it. I asked Mr. Grace before I looked at this if he knew of any, as he knew them better than I did. Mr. Grace is a man that always lives in Cashel.

11895. Was there no desire to support Mr. O'Beirne's cause influencing you in lending the £40 to Ryan?—Nothing further than making friends of them, and not wishing to disoblige.

11896. And making friends of them so as to try to get them to vote for Mr. O'Beirne afterwards. Is not that so?—[No answer].

11897. After looking at Ryan's you looked at Mackay's house?—I did.

11898. Ryan asked £40?—Yes.

11899. Forty pounds was also the price asked by Mackay?—Yes.

11900. Had you any conversation with Mackay about his vote?—I had not that I remember.

11901. You subsequently took Browne's house?—I did.

11902. Did you ask Browne to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—He says I did not; but I would rather say I did subsequently.

11903. You know, Captain Graham, that the taking of houses was used in Cashel as a cloak for inducing persons to vote?—So I could find.

11904. Do you not believe it now yourself?—I do not discredit his judgment. The taking of the house was subsequent altogether to that.

11905. You know that the people of Cashel understand the thing in that way?—I have always heard so.

11906. Did anything take place between you and Browne that would lead him to believe that the taking of his house by you was meant to influence his vote? I do not say you said it, but did anything occur that would lead Browne to believe that the taking of his house by you was meant to be one of those transactions I have spoken of?—I never gave him to understand so, nor did anything occur to my knowledge to lead him to believe it.

11907. You would have been very much surprised, though, if Browne voted for Mr. Munster?—I would.

11908. And the ground of your surprise would be mainly that you thought you had made a friend of him by taking his house?—Yes, perhaps so.

11909. Now, although nothing occurred between you and him, although you say you said nothing, do you think that he looked upon it in that light?—I really could not say.

11910. You could not say that?—I could not.

11911. At what time did Brown say to you that he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I have no recollection of his ever saying it.

11912. Was he at any time in doubt of how he would vote?—I do not know, nor do I ever remember having any conversation with Browne about his vote, only that it struck me that I might have asked him, and I dare say I did, but I have no recollection of it.

11913. I interrupted you a short time ago when you were going to give me an account of the transaction that occurred between you and Ryan and Murnane, and the talk about the house and the vote and the lending of the £40. Now if you please I would like you to tell me what happened between you?—I went to look at Murnane's house, and I saw it would not suit me, and I think the best of my recollection is, that I then did ask Murnane if he would not vote for Mr. O'Beirne. Then I asked him subsequently—I think one or two occasions afterwards—and it was on one of these occasions I lent him the money—the £40.

11914. Would you enter a little more into detail with reference to the loan of the money. Ryan has such a very different recollection of the nature of the transaction that I would wish to get your account of it a little more in detail. You swore first that it was lent to him, and then he said he got it as payment of rent in advance?—That is not so at all. It was purely a loan.

11915. Is he entirely incorrect in saying that you took the house for £40?—He is incorrect.

11916. Incorrect?—Incorrect. I did not take it.

11917. You see there is a rather strange coincidence in the amount that he asked for his house, and the amount that you lent him?—It may have been in his own mind, but certainly nothing happened between us at all, as I recollect, to lead him to believe it. It may be in his mind that the house and the loan and all were jumbled up together. That may be.

11918. Would you enter into the circumstances of the loan of the £40? How did it come about, for you say it was not at the first interview?—No.

11919. Was it in the second or third?—It might have been in the second.

11920. Are you able to say?—I am not positive.

TWELFTH DAY
October 16.
Captain John Graham.

11921. Have the goodness to tell me all that occurred with reference to that loan?—It was more with Murnane than with Ryan that the loan occurred. I knew more about Murnane; I know Murnane much longer.

11922. How came it to pass that the transaction was more with Murnane than with Ryan, and that you took Ryan's bill?—I took both their bill.

11923. They both put their names on the bill?—Both put their names on the bill; it was lent to Murnane and Ryan on their bill.

11924. Who asked you for it?—Murnane.

11925. Are you sure that Murnane asked you for it?—I am positive.

11926. Did he give any reason, or state any pressing emergency as a reason why he asked for it?—No; I don't think he stated any cause.

11927. Because Ryan stated he kept it all along from the time you gave it to him?—Perhaps so.

11928. And still they asked you to lend the money?—They did. They may have had it in their minds with reference to the rent of the house.

11929. Or with reference to voting?—They might, certainly.

11930. But you had no more in your mind with reference to giving the money than that you wished to make a friend of him?—Yes; and to oblige Murnane with the money.

11931. And hoping by making a friend of him that he would at your request vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—There is a great deal in that.

11932. Do not say that it may, but is it what passed through your mind?—That is not exactly the way to put it, but I was certainly desirous to make friends of them.

11933. Is it too far to put it that you would not have lent the money if the election was not pending?—I do not think it would have ever occurred; I don't think they would ask me.

11934. And surely—excuse me for the word—you were not so dull as not to see that that was influencing them?—One should see that.

11935. You know old Mr. Kingsbury?—Yes.

11936. You had some conversation with him about voting?—I had, twice or three times. Will you allow me to tell the conversation?

11937. Certainly, sir, in your own way?—In '65 when first Mr. O'Beirne was returned here, having called on Mr. Kingsbury to ask him to vote, he said he had promised Lanigan, and if he knew I had taken an interest in Mr. O'Beirne he would have voted for him. That was in '65. In '68 he was almost the first man I asked to vote. I told him what occurred in '65 and he seemed inclined not to mind that conversation, but to be rather anxious that he should get some remuneration for his vote.

11938. Did you gather that from his language?—He said it plainly—plainly.

11939. Tell me what he said?—He said he had voted a good many years and was a very old man, or something of that kind; and that he never got a penny for his vote, and that he would expect it.

11940. What next occurred?—I told him it was impossible that any inducement could be held out for him in the nature of money, or anything; that it was illegal, and I impressed on him not to think of it. I had a second interview with him, I think, some short time after his wife's death, and he was exactly of the same mind and talked at once of being remunerated.

11941. What occurred then?—I told him again that holding out any inducement in the nature of money would be illegal, and that I could not do so.

11942. Is that the entire of what passed?—That was the substance of it. He said a good deal about his own affairs, and talked a good deal. He is a man I had known a great number of years, and I was rather surprised at his meeting me in the way he did.

11943. Did you say anything to him, or do anything, or in any way lead him to believe that if he voted for Mr. O'Beirne he would get remuneration?—I did not—quite the contrary.

11944. At any time?—No; quite the contrary. I heard it was sworn here—indeed I saw it on the paper that I did write on a piece of paper for him. I never did. Mr. Kingsbury was quite plain in his talk about money.

11945. The way it occurred was, that Mr. Kingsbury very shortly after one of his interviews with you said to a gentleman, that you had intimated to him, £20 or £25, he was not sure which?—That is not the fact.

11946. You say there is no truth in it?—There is no truth whatever in it.

11947. Did that fixing of £20 or £25, in relation to anything, occur between you?—Not in the slightest way.

11948. Do you say that anything passed between you that could possibly have a colour of anything of the kind?—Nothing, except what Mr. Kingsbury may have said himself.

11949. Did he mention any sum?—He did not, to my recollection.

11950. Because that might possibly account for it?—He did not.

11951. I think I asked you did you say anything that would lead him to believe that he would get something after the election?—I did not. In conversation I told him that no inducement could possibly be held out.

11952. You were a friend of Mr. O'Beirne in 1865 also?—I was. He was living here then. He was living at my house. It was more in that way than in the election that I was his friend.

11953. I suppose you know that since a good deal of money has been given with regard to the election of 1865?—I have seen it on the paper, and heard it rumoured.

11954. I suppose you do not doubt it?—I have no reason to believe it is untrue.

11955. Did you hear Mr. O'Beirne swear that he spent £2,500?—I didn't hear him swear it, but he told me himself that his election in '65 cost him about £2,500—between £2000 and £3,000.

11956. Then a good deal of that must have gone in taking houses and paying voters' sons, and so on?—No doubt.

11957. With the knowledge that money had been paid on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne, after the election of 1865, do you still say that nothing at all passed between you and Mr. Kingsbury in reference to it?—No.

11958. I mean in reference to subsequent remuneration?—No, Mr. Kingsbury talked of being remunerated.

11959. Could you have said to him, "I cannot say anything to you about remuneration now?"—No; I told him that I could not even hold out an inducement, that he would get it.

11960. You had an interview with Mr. Close?—Yes.

11961. And you know Mr. Close's version of the transaction?—Yes, I do.

11962. Now, I would ask you in the same spirit that I asked you before, to tell me frankly, did you not mean the employment of Mr. Close's son as a means of inducing the father to vote for O'Beirne?—Certainly not, and I will tell you why. Mr. Close at that time apparently was as friendly to Mr. O'Beirne as I was. I looked upon him as Mr. O'Beirne's supporter. He and his son were in his rooms at the time, and it was in leaving his room the conversation about his son occurred with me.

11963. Were you authorized by Mr. O'Beirne to offer his son employment?—Not at all.

11964. Had you consulted with Mr. Grace about it?—No, merely seeing him there at the time suggested it.

11965. It did not occur to you to make the observation in Mr. O'Beirne's presence?—No, it did not, it was on the lobby of the hotel.

11966. You went out with him?—I did, with Mr. Close.

11967. Then I suppose you thought of it while you were in the room?—I may have done so.

11968. I wish you to tell me if you did?—I could not tell you.

11969. Did you immediately on coming out say this to him?—I did, certainly.

11970. Then is it not most likely that you thought of it inside the room?—Yes.

11971. And you followed him and said it?—I did.

11972. Do you still say that it had nothing at all to say to being either remuneration, inducement, or—I do not know exactly the word to use—for Mr. Close?—What I meant was that he being a supporter of Mr. O'Beirne, he would be glad to get employment.

11973. Then why did you not mention that in Mr. O'Beirne's presence inside?—I had no authority from Mr. O'Beirne to do it.

11974. As you were doing it unauthorized, would that not be an additional reason to mention it in the presence of Mr. O'Beirne, who might ratify or refuse the proposition?—I do not know. I did exactly as I tell you.

11975. Did you mean it then, or think of it then, as an innocent mode of rewarding Mr. Close for his support of Mr. O'Beirne?—Well, I should think that would be it. I was anxious to serve him.

11976. You mentioned a sum of £20?—Fifteen or twenty, I said.

11977. Your recollection varies from that of Mr. Close, as to the way it was done. He thinks you wrote it in figures, and you say you spoke it with your mouth?—Yes, I am certain of that.

11978. May I ask you to say now to me, if Mr. Close was not a voter at all would you have suggested this?—I do not think I would.

11979. Well then in that way that I have put it to you, you meant it to be so far in connexion with his vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—With his being a friend of Mr. O'Beirne and voting for him.

11980. And I may say I suppose also if you knew he was going to vote for Mr. Munster, you would not have proposed it?—Oh, I would not.

11981. Therefore, the friendly feeling you had for Mr. Close in this matter was not merely personal, but was connected with him as a voter?—In both ways. I knew Mr. Close for a number of years in Cashel.

11982. But your personal friendship for Mr. Close was not so strong as to induce you to do that, if you knew he was going to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not unasked.

11983. And, therefore, it was your belief he was going to vote for Mr. O'Beirne and that that would confirm his allegiance to Mr. O'Beirne?—I did not think it would alter it.

11984. Was it—to use a phrase I have seen used elsewhere—to "strengthen" him? Have you seen that phrase used?—I don't remember whether it was in Sligo or in Cashel.

11985. Would you be glad to "strengthen" him for Mr. O'Beirne?—I would.

11986. Yes, in Sligo, that is the phrase. Did you mean to strengthen his allegiance?—Beyond what I have said as to the meaning, I can't say.

11987. Did you think Mr. Close would expect any compliment when you spoke of that sort of friendship?—I thought he ought to be very glad; he is not a very rich man.

11988. I say did you think that Mr. Close would expect some such electioneering compliment as that?—I had no reason to expect it.

11989. You had no reason to expect it?—No; none whatever.

11990. No reason to expect that, further than that he was not in affluent circumstances and £20 would be an object to him?—Yes, that's all.

11991. Do you know Thomas Williams?—I do.

11992. Had you conversations with him with reference to the election?—I had.

11993. You canvassed him for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

11994. When did you first canvass him?—Early, almost one of the first.

11995. Did he at once promise you?—He did.

11996. Did you canvass him more than once?—Not asking him to vote?

11997. Did you call on him with reference to his vote more than once?—I have been in his shop several times; I may have spoken to him each time.

11998. But did you go in there with that object?—Not, specially as I recollect.

11999. Did you ever hear that he was likely to go against you?—No, I never did.

12000. You never did?—I never did.

12001. Had you no conversation with him with reference to remuneration? Did he say anything about remuneration?—He did not.

12002. He never said anything at all about it?—He did not, nor never asked for it.

12003. In anyway whatsoever?—In anyway whatsoever.

12004. I suppose I need not ask you if you ever offered him any?—I did not.

12005. Of any kind whatever?—Of any kind whatever? No, sir.

12006. Did you ever hear he had promised Mr. Munster his vote?—I never did; I might have heard it casually. You heard every day during the election something or other; but I never heard that Mr. Williams had promised Mr. Munster.

12007. You have no recollection of ever having heard anything about it?—No, I have not.

12008. Do you know a man named William Ryan of the Racecourse?—Not, by name; I know two Ryan's—John Ryan and another young man, but whether his name is William I cannot tell you—fair-haired—sandy.

12009. Do you know him well?—Yes, I know his appearance very well.

12010. Do you know him more than by appearance?—I do not. If I saw him I would tell you the man I mean.

12011. Do you know a man named John Ryan?—Yes, I do. That is the man of the £35 bill.

12012. Your name is on that bill?—It is, for £35.

12013. For his accommodation?—For his accommodation.

12014. You had no transactions with him?—None, whatever.

12015. It appears he received the money on that bill just before the election?—He did; I believe it was a day or two before.

12016. I believe the very day?—It was quite close.

12017. Did you know him well before?—I did.

12018. How came he to ask you for this accommodation at the time?—He came to my rooms, having done so previously for him a year or two, or three before. He came to my rooms where I was lodging, and asked me to back a bill for him at the bank. I told him that I thought he had better get some of his own friends.

12019. Why did you tell him that?—I did not want to do it. I told him also that Mr. Barron, I thought, would not do it, as my name was heavily in the bank, I did not wish to do it. I then told him to ask Mr. Barron would he do it if I put my name on the bill. He came back and said he would. I then told him to leave me the bill, and my object was to ask Mr. Barron if he had other bills in the bank at the time. I took the bill to Mr. Barron and asked him, and whatever answer he gave me I put my name on the bill, folded it up, and handed it to Ryan sometime after.

12020. You had accommodated him before?—Yes, once, I believe.

12021. Is he a tenant of yours?—No, he is not; he is a poor-rate collector. I have asked Mr. Barron to produce my bill-book in the bank, or give me a copy of it. He said he produced his book.

12022. He produced his book. There was nothing read from it. He showed us the book, and we have only looked at it so far as was necessary?—Oh, I am quite sure of that—personally, I have no objection.

12023. Was there any other name to the bill but

TWELFTH DAY. October 16. Captain John Graham.

yours and John Ryan's?—There were two Ryans on the bill. My impression was, there were two John Ryans. I think the drawer was John Ryan also.

12024. That was this £35 bill?—Yes.

12025. Was that name on it at that time, I am speaking of the bill of the 19th November. There were two John Ryans on it when presented to you; one indorsed it?—Yes, when first he called he had no bill with him—he only asked me would I.

12026. You had spoken to him, I suppose, about his vote?—No, I had not.

12027. Never?—No.

12028. Never up to that time?—Never.

12029. Did you know he was going to vote?—I always looked upon him as a friend of Mr. O'Beirne's; he voted for him, I believe, in '65.

12030. And you believed he would vote for him?—I did.

12031. Was any arrangement made between you and him, that he was not to be responsible for that bill?—None at all.

12032. Did you ever mention to Mr. O'Beirne this transaction with John Ryan?—I do not believe I did; I had no conversation after it—certainly not at that time.

12033. Do you tell me now that that was entirely a transaction for the accommodation of Ryan?—It was.

12034. And had no connexion with the election?—None whatever.

12035. Do you know a man named Michael Dwyer?—Yes, Dwyer and Mackay. He is a tenant of mine, if that is the man. I think there are two Michael Dwyers.

12036. Michael Dwyer of Canopy-street?—Yes, I think he is a tenant of my own, the publican. Yes, that is he.

12037. Did you canvass him for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did.

12038. Do you recollect when you canvassed him?—Early. He is a tenant of mine.

12039. Did he ever tell you, or did you hear that his house was about being taken for Mr. Munster?—No.

12040. Did you never hear anything about it; until I mentioned it to you?—I never did.

12041. Not even a rumour?—I never did.

12042. Therefore I need not ask you if you had any conversation with him about it?—I never had to my knowledge. Oh! I am quite sure I had not.

12043. Did any conversation take place between you and him, in which he suggested his being recompensed in any way?—He never did.

12044. Do you know Cornelius Carroll?—Con Carroll? Yes.

12045. Is he a sergeant in the Tipperary Light Infantry?—That is another—James Carroll. He is a sergeant in the Tipperary Light Infantry.

12046. You are an officer in that regiment?—Yes; I asked him to vote, and he promised me.

12047. You say that nothing whatever occurred between you and Carroll?—Nothing whatever. The moment I asked him to vote for Mr. O'Beirne he said he would.

12048. You say also you asked Cornelius Carroll?—Yes, and he said he would.

12049. Did anything take place between you?—Nothing at all in the way of money.

12050. You told us that Mr. O'Beirne told you his election in 1865 cost him £2,500?—He did.

12051. Did he tell you how much his election in 1868 cost?—He never did; I believe myself it cost him very little.

12052. Now, Captain Graham, as you are a resident in Cashel, and as our duty is to inquire into corrupt practices generally with reference to the Borough, you must have a considerable knowledge of it. I ask you if you can assist us with any further evidence?—Not, except from hearsay. I believe every person that voted for Mr. O'Beirne voted for him neither getting it, nor expecting it; that is my belief.

12053. I presume you know that this transaction of Foley's was a corrupt transaction?—I had no knowledge of it whatever, nor at the time did I even think who Foley was.

12054. So you told me. You know now that it was?—I know now that he was a voter.

12055. And that Mr. O'Beirne was paying this bill for him immediately before the election?—Yes, I know that; but whether Mr. O'Beirne gave the money, or where he got it, I don't know.

12056. Except that Foley swore that Mr. O'Beirne paid it for him?—I did not see Foley afterwards.

12057. Do you know anything of any other payment made by Mr. O'Beirne during the election?—The only payment I saw made or knew of his making was Mrs. Bourke's; I was in the room with him at the time. She is a widow, living in the Main-street. He handed her a cheque for, I think, £52, or £50.

12058. In your presence?—In my presence. I was sitting at the table with him; he said, "Here Graham, look at that," and it was handed to Mrs. Bourke.

12059. What was that for?—She made some claim for clothes Mr. Johnson bought from her in '65, and some losses she was put to by her husband having left the town on a trial. In fact she often spoke to me about it.

12060. I understand she was a widow then?—She was.

12061. Has she friends or relatives here?—I do not believe she has; I think she is a stranger in this town.

12062. Has she no connexion of herelf or of her husband a voter?—I do not think she has; I think she is a stranger.

12063. You do not know of her having any relatives or connexion of hers, or her husband, here?—I do not.

12064. You say this £52 was for a former transaction?—So she claimed it.

12065. We have ascertained here that some man named Mologhney was paid £25?—So I heard.

12066. Do you know anything of that?—I do not, beyond what he swore.

12067. Do you say Mrs. Bourke's payment is the only payment you know of?—Mrs. Bourke's and taking up Foley's bill.

12068. Are they the only payments you know?—The only payments I knew Mr. O'Beirne to make.

12069. Do not confine yourself to anything you know to have been at all questionable, because we are obliged to seek by devious ways for our information here, and if you tell us anything we may be able to trace it further?—I want now to tell you of moneys I knew of beyond those, none of which you asked me about. Previous to Mr. O'Beirne's coming to Cashel Mr. Grace told me he had written to him that it was necessary to take a hotel. I said, "you ought." He said, "I should not like to take it without having money." I said, "pay it yourself," and he said he would not. I said, "I will give it to you," and I did in a day or two after hand him £50 to take a hotel.

12070. Was that for the purpose of taking Dunne's hotel?—Yes, it was. Then in a day or two after, he may have met me at the time, but I did not then go to him; but in two or three days after I gave him two or three other sums. He said he was anxious to pay £25 to Dr. Moloney, £19 to Mrs. Hanley, mother of Michael Hanley, who is dead; £15 to Keeffe. These were sums he said he had written to Mr. O'Beirne for and did not get. He returned me the £15 for Keeffe shortly after, inasmuch as Mr. O'Beirne himself had sent it to Keeffe.

12071. Keeffe is not a voter?—He is a man that manages mobs—the mob's man.

12072. When was the twenty-five to Dr. Moloney paid?—I don't know when Mr. Grace paid it; but I handed it to Mr. Grace long before Mr. O'Beirne came.

12073. When you say "long before," was it many weeks?—Weeks, or a month, perhaps.

12074. Was it after you came to Cashel?—It was when I was living at Maryville.

12075. Was it in the month of September?—I think it was; I think that was the month.

12076. At any rate it was either August or September?—September, I think.

12077. Did Mr. Grace tell you what the £25 was paid to Doctor Moloney for?—Yes, as a doctor.

12078. Was it arrears of salary?—Arrears of salary Mr. O'Beirne promised to pay him.

12079. Did Mr. Grace tell you that Dr. Moloney had applied to him for it?—You said something about its being in arrear?—He gave me to understand it was talked about.

12080. By whom did you understand it was talked about?—I could not say it was Dr. Moloney.

12081. Did he give you to understand it was a necessary payment to be made for Mr. O'Beirne?—He did. In fact he told me that he had written to Mr. O'Beirne to say the thing ought to be paid.

12082. And you understood the danger was that Dr. Moloney's vote would be lost unless that was paid?—It would not. You will learn that of Dr. Moloney.

12083. Is not that the natural inference you would understand from Mr. Grace's manner and language?—That he would be annoyed with Mr. O'Beirne if he did not get the money.

12084. And annoyances at election times are far more numerous than at other times. You thought his annoyance might possibly take that direction?—It might, sir.

12085. Did Mr. Grace talk to you as to the selection of a hotel?—He did; he talked about hotels, and advised Dunne's; and I advised Dunne's also.

12086. Mr. Dunne had been an opponent of Mr. O'Beirne on former occasions?—He had, in Lanigan's time.

12087. And he was, I understand, the only one of the three hotel-keepers in Cashel who had a vote?—Oh, yes. At that time Corcoran was dead, I believe.

12088. Were any of these reasons mentioned?—I couldn't tell; I don't recollect. I believe Mr. Dunne was a man very much respected here in town.

12089. Do you recollect any other payments?—The only payment, I think, was the £83 cheque between Mr. O'Beirne and me.

12090. That was subsequent to the election?—It was.

12091. And it was only settling up a balance?—Yes.

12092. Of course in those questions I asked you about payments, you would have included, if you knew of them, any cheques of Mr. O'Beirne that you had seen?—Oh, yes.

12093. And you never saw any except this cheque for £30 that you got yourself and applied in the way you have told us?—Just so.

12094. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You never lent any money to Ryan and Murnane before?—Never.

12095. The bill was a three-months' bill and passed in September?—It was, to the best of my recollection; it was a three-months' bill.

12096. It was paid some time before the election?—It was.

12097. Were you surprised at being paid before the bill was due?—I was not; I was very glad to get it.

12098. Did you know at the time, or did you hear that they had let their house to Mr. Munster's party?—No, I did not.

12099. How did the payment of the money occur?—Ryan handed me the amount of it.

12100. Did he say why he did so?—No; he asked me for his bill and I gave it to him.

12101. Where did that occur?—To the best of my recollection it was in my lodgings.

12102. Has it ever occurred to you in your experience that persons to whom you had lent money paid it before it was due?—It is not always so; it is not generally so.

12103. Have you known an instance before of persons anxious for money paying six weeks before the bill became due?—I must have met an instance; I have a good deal of experience in bills.

12104. You were his friend?—I was not.

12105. You were under the impression that they wanted the money when you gave it?—Yes.

12106. Did it excite no surprise that they should have suddenly acquired funds?—No, not at all; it is not at all surprising here where people are dealing in cattle, and one thing or another.

12107. Mr. Ryan did not deal in cattle?—He is a farmer, I believe, as well as a publican.

12108. Ryan asked his bill and said nothing more?—He asked his bill, and I gave it to him.

12109. You had not heard at the time anything about his house being taken?—No, I had not.

12110. Mr. MOLLOY.—When Mr. Close and his son were at Dunne's that evening, did you say you would get him anything for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—Not the slightest; I looked upon him as Mr. O'Beirne's supporter.

Patrick Cunningham, Michael Cahill, John Quirke, Patrick Griffin, Mrs. Mary Anne Watkins, and Patrick Kennedy, were called but did not appear.

Luke Larkin recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Luke Larkin.

12111. Look at that entry which you gave me on your direct examination, respecting the name of a man not known, to whom you gave £35 at Corcoran's hotel by Patrick Cunningham's order?—Not named.

12112. Not named; very well. Now do you see that you have there the observation "pocket?"—Yes.

12113. I asked you at the time if you knew what that meant, and you said you did not?—I don't recollect.

12114. Do you recollect that Edmond Stapleton was examined since?—Yes.

12115. Did you hear him say that you put the money into his pocket?—I put the money into his pocket!

12116. Does your recollection now enable you to say if you did put the money into a man's pocket?—There must be something or I wouldn't have remarked it.

12117. Do you see on the same entry that you have the letters E. S. T., it looks like E. K., but looking at it closely you will see it is E. St.?—Yes.

12118. Does that stand for Edmond Stapleton?—I consider it does now.

12119. You heard Stapleton swear you put the money into his pocket?—I did.

12120. You have an entry there "E. St.," and you have the word "pocket" written down?—I must have inquired about the name afterwards.

12121. Does that enable you to say that Edmond Stapleton was the man that received it? Do you think he is the man?—I think he is the man. I didn't know any man, but if a man told me ——

12122. I am afraid you have not been very accurate in this rather rude book?—Sure I told your worship in the first instance that it wasn't accurate; that I only sketched it from remarks from time to time.

12123. Mr. MOLLOY.—Could you have given any moneyto any one but to those people?—I hadn't it your worship.

12124. Could you have got money that you did not enter here?—No; I got no money but what was entered; but there was an error in the account afterwards, which there may be a correcter account than that appeared.

12125. What do you mean by that?—I mean Patrick Laffan when he comes forward perhaps will have a more correct account?—I said in the first instance I didn't consider it a correct account; that I only sketched it from hearsay. I didn't swear to it being a correct account.

TWELFTH DAY. October 16. Luke Larkin.

12126. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Looking at that page headed 17th November, do you see that in the disbursements you have brought up at the top £215?—Yes.

12127. And the tot £465?—Yes.

12128. Tot that up again?—The tot is correct leaving out that £30 to Patrick Croagh.

12129. Your tot is £30 short there?—I didn't take that into account I suppose, until the whole would be paid.

12130. What did you do with the second half notes?—I think I gave them to Cunningham.

12131. Did you count the second half notes as part of the £45 that you gave back? Do you not recollect telling me that you gave back to Cunningham £45?—I did your worship.

12132. Was any portion of that £45 made up of the half notes of the £30?—In order to make a calculation of it in one word, any error that was in this was settled by me and Cunningham and Patrick Laffan, and they have a correct account of all the money between them, which I returned to them.

12133. Did they take it down in writing?—Yes; I handed to them.

12134. Who took it down in writing?—I wrote it out for them, and all that was settled after.

12135. Where?—At Templemore after the election. I gave only a sketch. I didn't think it a correct sketch in the first instance, so my affairs are all correct.

12136. You seem to give your evidence very correctly, but what did you give back to Patrick Cunningham?—I gave back—I know the balance to Pat. Cunningham was between whatever he had on hands and whatever I gave him, was £45.

12137. What do you mean by between whatever he had on hands?—He must have some money on hands that I returned, and that he got that money to give to others. That account closes up the whole of it.

12138. Are you able to tell me now, when you were settling your accounts finally, how much actual cash, in notes and gold, you handed back—that remained in your possession the day you were settling?—I can't say that.

12139. According to that book, can you say?—This book is not correct your worship, and I said that the first day, it was not correct.

12140. Do you think it is correct to this extent, that there is nothing entered down in it which you did not pay? You understand me now fully?—I do.

12141. Looking at the right-hand side of that book do you not think you paid every one of those moneys?—I paid every one of these moneys, and I paid moneys; this appears to have £35 more than I received; and that must be £35 that I have handed to either Pat. Laffan or Pat. Cunningham, and they must have returned that back to me, and I held them accountable for it; I held the men accountable who got it, and it must be that way the £35 occurred.

12142. That is an intelligible explanation?—But the correct account they hold it—one or the other of them.

12143. Was Mr. Byrne present at the settlement at Templemore?—No, your worship, nor he knows nothing about the book or settlement, nor any money I paid, nor any transaction, nor I never talked to him about it, nor he never talked to me about it.

12144. Except that you told him what you were doing here?—I never told him what I was doing here.

12145. He says you did; that you paid at least one man here?—Of course, but I never told him the whole transaction about notes or gold, or anything about it.

12146. But you told him the work you were at here. Did you ever know or hear that there was any other man paying money in this way except yourself?—Never.

12147. There are two Tom Loobys. I think you said yourself that you would be likely to recollect the old gentleman that was here alongside you?—Really I couldn't know one of them. Even that young man that came on the table, and that got the £70 from me as he stated; I couldn't know him.

12148. Tom Looby is a more remarkable looking character than the young man is. I want to know now did you ever hear that there was anyone else paying money but yourself?—I think not, your worship.

12149. You never heard anything at all about it?—No, I had no conversation with any person.

12150. You heard old Luby say how the man was dressed that paid him the money?—It might occur.

12151. Are you quite sure that you never were dressed in that way?—I positively swear that; that coat of mine was never off at Corcoran's Hotel; I never wore trousers, but breeches and leggings. I am quite sure I never slept one night in it; nor changed my dress, nor didn't disguise myself after the manner the people have represented. I wore a small pocket-handkerchief on my neck.

12152. Up to your mouth?—Yes.

12153. You wore it higher than you do now?—Oh, yes, I did.

12154. And why did you do that? Was it in order that the people should not know you?—I rather they wouldn't. I rather I shouldn't know them.

12155. Did you not tell me you began to get ashamed of your position?—I did, and I am ashamed of it now. I wouldn't wish it for £50, nor I didn't know where I was coming.

12156. So far as you could, I think, you have made amends, by telling all that you know. You seem inclined to tell me the truth, and so far as your after conduct could make amends, you are doing it. You did then put this handkerchief about your face for the purpose of persons not being able to recognise you?—I didn't put it above my nose.

12157. But you put it over your chin?—About my chin, that way; it wouldn't disguise me anyway from them.

12158. Do you know who Michael Callaghan is at all?—I know nothing of him—nothing.

12159. That is the name in all these notes?—Michael M'Carthy.

12160. Mr. GRIFFIN.—I suppose that book of yours is correct to this extent, that when you gave the "half notes to Thomas Gleeson in trust for Croagh," you gave the half notes to Gleeson before you gave them to the "young man?"—Which young man?

12161. Look at your book now; it is on the 17th; there is some writing in pale ink at the top of the page; you got another ink bottle for the second half of it; do you see that?—I do.

12162. Do you see that there is first the entry, "Tom Gleeson in trust for Croagh," in pale ink at the top?—I do.

12163. Do you see next to that, "half-notes for £30 to a young man;" do you see it?—Yes, I do, sir.

12164. What I want to know is this: seeing those written in the order they are in that book, can you tell me was the money to that young man paid after the money to Gleeson?—I consider it is; but these half-notes were given to Gleeson, and the other half-notes, I may have given them to Cunningham afterwards, and called him the young man, and it then would not be placed to my account, for I see 'tis reserved on the top.

12165. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—It is not included in the tot?—No.

12166. You did not bring that £30 into the tot?—I didn't, your worship.

12167. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you recollect from memory how much money you paid on the polling day? Could you without referring to the book tell from memory?—I couldn't, for I don't recollect.

12168. Did you pay more than one?—I couldn't say.

12169. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Tell me, did you wear your spectacles when you were making those entries in writing?—Yes, your worship, I did; I can see very little without them.

12170. I will leave you go home to-night. You are bound to attend under a severe penalty. If I want you the secretary will write to you. You must be here if required, no matter what your business is; but I will not require you unless there is a necessity for your attendance. You will have to ask me for a certificate also; therefore I must have the pleasure of seeing you again. If I hear nothing to alter my present opinion I will give you a certificate. I do not expect anything will arise to alter my opinion?—There will not, your worship.

12171. If I give it, the secretary can send it to you. I am very sorry you were engaged in such work?—I am very sorry myself, sir. I was taken unaware; and were it not for that I would not be here, to be here working for a man for nothing such a time. I was only a week working for a gentleman at an election, and I got £25.

Patrick Griffin sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

Patrick Griffin.

12172. For whom did you vote at the last election?—For Mr. Munster, sir.

12173. You got £30?—Yes, sir.

12174. Where did you get it?—At Mr. Cunningham's, sir.

12175. Who told you to go there?—I believe it was Pat. Cunningham, sir.

12176. Was it with Pat. Cunningham you made the arrangement that it was £30 you were to get?—He brought me down there, and sent me up, and I got it.

12177. With whom did you make the arrangement that you were to get £30?—By gor, I am not sure was it Cunningham or Pat. Laffan, sir.

13178. But it was either one or the other?—It was, sir.

12179. That was for your vote?—There was ne'er a word about votes.

12180. What did you think it was for?—By gor, I don't know.

12181. Did you ever give any value for it?—Never, sir.

12182. Did you think it was for your vote?—There was ne'er a question of a vote asked of me.

12183. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What did you take the money for?—By gor, I took it, sir.

12184. For what?—By gor, I can't say, sir.

12185. Answer me?—By gor, that was the object of it, sir, I suppose, but there was ne'er a word about a vote.

12186. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get it without asking what it was for?—I don't know that, by gor.

12187. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When Pat. Laffan or Pat. Cunningham came to you, and you made the arrangement, what did they say to you?—They asked me would £30 do.

12188. What did you answer to that?—By gor, I don't know, sir; I took it at any rate.

12189. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, sir.

12190. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you recollect what day you got it at Cunningham's?—No, sir.

12191. Was it the day of the polling?—It was not, sir; I couldn't say, sir, but I don't think it was; it was not.

12192. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I was, sir; by Mr. O'Beirne in person; he came to my house, but I wasn't there.

12193. What answer did he get?—By gor, I'm not sure, sir; I wasn't there; I wasn't at home; I'm very seldom there to be at home.

Mrs. Mary Anne Watkins sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Mrs. Mary Anne Watkins.

12194. You are a daughter of Mr. Quirke?—Yes.

12195. He had a vote in 1865?—He had.

12196. He was canvassed in 1865?—He was.

12197. For whom did he vote?—I think Mr. O'Beirne.

12198. Do you know how he voted in 1859? Did he vote for Lanigan?—I was not here back in '59.

12199. You had some conversation in 1865 with your father about how he would vote?—No, not about how he would vote.

12200. Did any person propose to take your father's house in 1865?—I was never present at any arrangement between Mr. Quirke and anybody else.

12201. But did you hear of the arrangement that was proposed to be made with your father?—I did, sir.

12202. What did you hear?—I heard that Mr. Johnson offered—wanted to take hotel accommodation from Mr. Quirke. He wanted to take two sitting-rooms and a bed-room during the entire time the election would be pending.

12203. What was he to pay for that?—I think he offered fifty pounds. I think it was fifty pounds he offered Mr. Quirke, and Mr. Quirke, I think, wanted more.

12204. How much did he get?—I don't know that he got anything.

12205. Do you not know that he must have got something for deserting Mr. Lanigan?—I don't know that he deserted Mr. Lanigan.

12206. Did he not vote against him?—Mr. Lanigan didn't deserve better from him.

12207. Do you not know that your father went out to Father John Ryan, and told him that he was wanted by his daughters to take seventy or seventy-five pounds for his house?—I heard Father John Ryan swore it, but I don't know anything more than that about it.

12208. Was your father's house taken by Mr. Johnson in 1865?—It was ultimately taken by Mr. Johnson.

12209. It was taken?—It was.

12210. Was it used?—I don't think it was used afterwards, because I think it was Father John Ryan interrupted the negotiation that Mr. Quirke was making with Mr. Johnson, for the purpose of taking the place for Mr. Lanigan's use; that prevented Mr. O'Beirne from using the place until one or two Sundays, I think, intervened. I think it was very early at the time of the election that Mr. Johnson came to negotiate with Mr. Quirke to take the place for hotel accommodation; that then he didn't agree with him. I think that either Mr. Quirke didn't like what Mr. Johnson offered and he would not finally agree with him. It was pending then for some time; then Father Ryan and Mr. Lanigan both came to Mr. Quirke. I don't know what interview they had; I wasn't present, but Mr. Lanigan and Mr. Johnson, I think, had agreed with Mr. Quirke to take the house for a certain sum—how much it was I don't know—and Father John Ryan and Mr. Lanigan induced him, I think, to reset it for a higher figure.

12211. Do you know the sum?—I do not.

12212. Did you ever hear it?—I couldn't say I ever heard what it was.

12213. But you say the house was taken in 1865?—It was.

12214. By Mr. O'Beirne?—By Mr. O'Beirne.

12215. How much did he pay?—I don't know.

12216. It was never used?—I can't recollect it was used.

12217. You do not know what your father got for his vote in 1865?—I don't know; he got—he got nothing for his vote in '65.

12218. But for the house?—I don't know; he can tell you; he is in court, I believe.

12219. For whom did he vote at the last election?—I believe for Mr. Munster.

TWELFTH DAY.
October 16.

Mrs. Mary Anne Watkins.

12220. He did a considerable amount of printing for Mr. O'Beirne?—He did.

12221. How much did he get for the printing?—It was previous to the last election that Mr. O'Beirne paid him his printing bill.

12222. Do you know how much he paid him?—I think I heard something over thirty pounds; I can't really tell you.

12223. Do you know how soon it was before the election?—It was some time in October; I wasn't in Cashel at the time. I was in Dublin.

12224. Some time in October?—I think so, for I was in Dublin in October, and while I was there Mr. O'Beirne came to Cashel, and then paid the bill he had been applied to for a great many times.

12225. Was he paid for the printing at the last election?—I think he was not.

12226. Was his house taken for the last election?—No, sir, it was not.

12227. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did I not understand you to say, Mrs. Watkins, that the arrangement to take your father's house at the election of 1865 was ultimately broken off, and that your father got nothing for it—do you say that, or do you say that it was ultimately kept and taken by Mr. O'Beirne?—It was taken by Mr. O'Beirne.

12228. Ultimately?—Ultimately it was taken by Mr. O'Beirne.

12229. And paid for by him?—I expect it was. I don't know about the payment.

12230. Did you never hear what he paid?—I did.

12231. How much?—I heard Mr. Johnson, not Mr. O'Beirne, agreed to give Mr. Quirke £60. I know nothing of what the amount is but to hear it.

12232. Did you hear it was £75 not £60?—I did not.

Mathew Dwyer.

Mathew Dwyer of Friar-street sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

12233. You are not a voter, I believe?—No.

12234. You were canvassing at the last election, I believe?—No.

12235. Along with Patrick Cunningham?—No.

12236. Were you going about with Pat. Cunningham?—No; I was a messenger, sir.

12237. Where did you take the money?—Through the Commons of Cashel, sir, to all voters.

12238. Do you know Pat. Kennedy?—I do.

12239. Did you ever take a message to him?—Yes.

12240. Do you know what was in it?—No.

12241. What was it like?—I was told what was in it, but I didn't know.

12242. You did not open it I suppose?—No.

12243. What were you told was in it?—I was told forty pounds, half notes.

12244. Did you take any other messages like that?—Not to my knowledge.

12245. Did you get any letters to take to anybody else?—No.

12246. Do you know of any other message sent to anybody?—No.

12247. You say you used to be going out to the Commons with messages?—Yes, sir, all letters.

12248. Who gave you the letter that you gave to Kennedy?—A man at Mrs. Corcoran's.

12249. What room in the house was the man in?—Second landing, in the room on the left hand side.

12250. Would you know the man if you saw him again?—No.

12251. Who took you up to him?—I went myself. I was told by Pat. Cunningham to go up, sir.

12252. Did you sign a bill?—No.

12253. Do you remember what day it was, or how long before the election?—About a week or a few days before the election, sir.

12254. Do you remember what day of the week it was?—No, I do not, sir.

12255. How did he give you the notes?—In an envelope.

12256. Did he put them in an envelope?—Yes, sealed, closed.

12257. Did you see him putting the notes into the envelope?—No.

12258. Had he the envelope made up before you went in?—Yes, and he told me there was forty pounds, half notes, in that.

12259. Who told you that?—The man in Corcoran's hotel, sir.

12260. Did he tell you what to do with them?—He gave them to me and said there was forty pounds, half notes, in them. The superscription was overheaded he said to Pat. Kennedy.

12261. Did you give them to Pat. Kennedy?—I did.

12262. Did you go straight out to give them to him?—Straight.

12263. Do you not know of any message at all like that to Kennedy being given to the Commoners?—Not to my knowledge.

12264. You did not take any letters at all there?—Yes, I did, sir.

12265. To whom?—Every voter in the Commons.

12266. Do you know what was in those letters?—No; sealed letters.

12267. From whom did you get them?—I got them on the table that's in the sitting-room.

12268. Do you know if anybody got money at all at the last election?—No, only what I heard during the inquiry now, sir; that is all I know about it.

Mr. Munster.—I was desirous of asking if you would want the attendance of Miss Sterne.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I should think so.

Mr. Munster.—My term in the house I am in expires to-morrow.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What do you wish to say?

Mr. Munster.—I am desirous of saying that the term of the house I have got expires to-morrow. I believe the dean is desirous of having it as a school opened very shortly. In the absence of making provision with him, if you think you would want her I can make arrangements.

Nicholas Mansergh.

Nicholas Mansergh tenders himself, and is sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

12269. Now, Mr. Mansergh, what have you to say?—I know nothing more than I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

12270. Is that all? You need not tell me that, because I knew it before?—Am I discharged?

12271. No; not yet. Now, as you are there, I will put a few questions to you. I believe you voted in 1865?—I did.

12272. How much did you get in 1865?—Nothing.

12273. Or after it?—Never.

12274. Never at all?—Never.

12275. Dear me! You are quite sure of that?—Certain.

12276. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For O'Beirne; and for him twice—before then Hemphill.

12277. For Hemphill twice?—Hemphill twice and O'Beirne twice.

12278. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you vote twice at the same election?—No, sir; how could I do that? I voted twice for Hemphill and twice for O'Beirne.

12279. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—As you came to give evidence I expected you would give some?—I have nothing to say, sir.

12280. Then why did you come?—Feeling that you would be sending a bailiff after me.

12281. If you are so perfectly pure you ought to be above suspicion?—I am so perfectly pure that I don't much mind how you insinuate.

12282. I do not insinuate?—You may insinuate as much as you like.

12283. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You seem to insinuate that we have some grounds for summoning you?—No; but the neighbours are talking.

12284. What did the neighbours say?—They said I ought to be here, but I wasn't here.

12285. Do the neighbours say you got anything at all?—I don't know about neighbours. Now, you three wigs together, put them together. I told you out everything, and you can't get no more out of me.

12286. Do you know anything else?—No; I voted twice for Hemphill, and would again.

12287. You did not happen to sign a bill in 1865?—No, indeed; and if it is in existence bring it up.

12288. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever get anything on account of the last election?—No.

12289. From any person?—No.

12290. Before or after did you get anything?—No; nor never expected it.

12291. Whom were you acting as agent for?—For nobody; nor wouldn't condescend to be agent for you, sir.

12292. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We are sometimes obliged, very much against our inclination, to be exceedingly severe, and to require persons to recollect they are in a court of justice?—I beg your pardon, gentlemen.

12293. And giving evidence under the solemn obligation of an oath, I believe you are giving it truly; but you must always recollect the solemn obligation you are under, and preserve great decorum?—I do again submit to your judgment that I was out of bounds in the way I disrespected this gentleman. I know I was out of bounds.

12294. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get any money or cheque on account of the last election?—They sent me a £5 retainer.

12295. Now, was not that something to tell us when you came up on the table?—They sent it to me. I didn't think I should confess myself to you that way, because they sent it without being asking them to send it to me.

12296. What did you do with that cheque?—Sent it back to them after three hours.

12297. To whom?—To those who handed it to me.

12298. Who handed it to you?—Pat. Laffan.

12299. And you kept it three hours?—Three hours.

12300. Was it a cheque?—A cheque, and it was so badly written you couldn't know what there was in it.

12301. Did you keep it for three hours?—At seven o'clock in the morning they brought it; I kept it three hours, not wishing myself to be a servant to go back with it; I sent it by my man back.

12302. Did you keep it three hours to discover what the cheque was?—Not a bit; I could see that as plain as I can see the wig on you this minute.

12303. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Now, remember?—I remember everything I am saying to you.

12304. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did Pat Laffan give you this cheque into your own hands?—He did.

12305. Did you see what it was when you got it?—I did.

12306. Who signed it?—I don't know.

12307. What did he say to you?—He gave it to me near an old sentry-box inside my garden gate, and he handed it to me and said, "there's that for you." As soon as he went away I looked at it, and the writing was so bad I couldn't see more; I kept it in my pocket three or four hours, and sent it by my man to this gentleman here [points to Mr. Michael J. Laffan]; and this gentleman here wouldn't accept of it, because it wasn't for him.

12308. Why did you not call after him when he gave it to you to come and take it back?—Why, he ran away so fast from me you couldn't see no more than you would see the telegraph wire. Now, would you ask me fairly, Mr. Commissioner, why did he came to me?

12309. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That is for us to consider.

12310. Mr. MOLLOY.—Had you no communication with him previously?—Not the slightest.

12311. Had you promised Mr. O'Beirne to vote for him before?—Yes; I was, I believe, the first man who offered him—who went up to his hotel and said I would vote for him; and I will tell you why; three months or two months before I asked some persons in Cashel to see would they join me to get up—to see would they, from Mr. O'Beirne's good acts heretofore—would they pledge themselves to vote for him without expense.

12312. Before you got the cheque was it well known in Cashel that you intended to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Oh, it is well known, sir.

12313. Did any person canvass you on Mr. Munster's behalf?—Yes.

12314. What did you tell them?—That I would vote with Mr. O'Beirne.

12315. Who canvassed you for Mr. Munster?—That man first [points to Mr. Michael J. Laffan].

[Adjourned.]

TWELFTH DAY.
October 16.
Nicholas Mansergh.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1869.

THIRTEENTH DAY.
October 18.

Mr. Patrick Laffan sworn; examined by MR. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

12316. Mr. Laffan, you are a brother of Mr. Michael Laffan who was the conducting agent of Mr. Munster?—Yes.

12317. When were you in Cashel last, Mr. Laffan?—I was in Cashel last November.

12318. Have you been since then living in Dublin?—No, not entirely.

12319. What is the last time at which you have been in Dublin before the beginning of this Commission?—I left Dublin the 1st of October.

12320. The 1st of October?—The 1st of October.

12321. Were you aware, Mr. Laffan, that you were sought for as a witness to attend before this Commission?—At that time I was not aware, but I anticipated that I would be.

12322. And am I to assume then that you mean to say you went away for the purpose of not appearing?—Yes, I went away for the purpose of not being examined.

12323. When did you first become aware that you were sought for as a witness? I presume you read the reports of the proceedings here?—Well, I cannot exactly tell you that; but on reading the papers I have seen that my brother was asked about me; I got a letter from my landlady in Dublin, who said that a young man had been there looking for me.

12324. Where did you get that?—In Drogheda.

12325. Were you in Drogheda then?—Not all that time; my address there having become known I went to Liverpool.

12326. Was any of your family aware of your address?—My brother in Dublin was aware of my address in Drogheda. It was in consequence of that that I went to Liverpool.

12327. I am glad for your own sake that you have appeared at last. You understand the position that you stand in now with reference to the proceedings at the last election; and also, I presume, you read of

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 18.

Mr. Patrick Laffan

what I have said more than once from the bench here of our power of giving certificates, and the effect of those certificates?—Yes.

12328. I presume you have seen that the giving or withholding a certificate is entirely optional with us, and that we will exercise our option only on judging the candour with which the witness tells everything he knows before us. And bearing that in mind, knowing that before you have come here, I presume, to tell us everything you know with reference to the last election. And now I preface my examination of you by saying that you are not to take any question put to you, that you are not to answer it merely according to the words, but in the spirit in which the question is put, and not merely technically. Now, Mr. Laffan, we have heard that Larkin was engaged here for the distribution of money amongst the voters, and that he was supplied with money by you and Patrick Cunningham. I want to know now have you an account of all the money you received with reference to the election, and an account of its disbursement?—I have.

12329. Will you produce them, if you please?—[Witness hands in a document.] At one side you will see the names of those who received money; and on the other the amount of money which I received, and other ways in which a portion of it was spent.

12330. I think you are in error here. You have given me here only the disbursements?—Oh, yes; but I just put down the whole of the amount I received. I expected you would ask me how I received it. If you wish I will do that for you.

12331. How much did you receive altogether?—Altogether I received £1,250. That is, exclusive of some small sums I received in the beginning from my brother, and which I have spent paying car-drivers and some things of that kind.

12332. This sum of £1,250, then, you give me as the money you received and distributed for the purpose of bribing voters?—That is the sum I received, but all that has not been so distributed. There is a certain portion which is chargeable to me, and there are portions which have gone in other ways.

12333. How much did you receive from your brother besides that £1,250?—Well, I cannot exactly tell you the amount of it, but I think about £50 or £60. I have here a bill £63, and a number of small things paid from time to time.

12334. From whom did you receive the £1,250?—I received it from different—not from the same persons; I did not receive it all from the same person.

12335. I want the persons from whom you received it, and the dates, and the order in which you received it?—I can give you the dates; but I must preface that by saying that after we gave the £5 retainers, and they would take no more of them, it was proposed by some gentleman to give £10 retainers instead of £5, to induce them to become agents. Mr. Leahy urged me to give £10 retainers. I told him I did not think I would be able to make them take them, as they had seen the notice from Mr. Grace advising them not to take them; but he seemed very anxious to have it done.

12336. You have not given me an account of the moneys you have received?—I am coming to it. I had no money to give these £10 retainers, and Mr. Edmond Leahy one morning gave me £100; I think that is on the 11th October—I think that was the first.

12337. How did he give you the sum of £100—was it in cash?—He gave it to me in notes.

12338. I meant that you should make a distinction between cheques and notes. I infer that you got it in "cash," we will call it?—Just so.

12339. What was the next sum you got?—I got two sums, I think, of £50, and two sums more of £100. I cannot be——

12340. From whom did you get these?—From Mr. Leahy. At all events between the 11th and 15th I got £350 in notes that way.

12341. Does that include the first £100?—It does, putting them altogether.

12342. Then from the 11th to the 15th you received £250 in addition to the £100 you already told me?—Yes.

12343. Have you no account any where of the times at which you received this money?—There is one £100 I have not an account of. I used get them at Corcoran's hotel, and places I hadn't an opportunity of writing it down, but I have the £250. He used give me money—a bundle of notes at Corcoran's hotel, where there would be a number of people, and he never told me when giving it what sum. Afterwards when I had an opportunity I counted them, and entered it down.

12344. Where did you enter this?—In a memorandum book.

12345. Where is it?—I haven't it about me.

12346. What did you do with it?—I have it in my house, I think.

12347. You must get it?—I will get it.

12348. Perhaps your brother can procure it if you tell him where it is: are there any other documents you have not brought to court that you used on the occasion of the election?—I think the only documents are some letters of Mr. Leahy.

12349. These are certainly essential and I wish to see them also. Go and get them and be prepared to answer me when you come back that you have brought everthing you have?—Yes.

Patrick Kennedy sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Kennedy.

12350. You received a letter from Matthew Dwyer?—Yes, sir.

12351. And that letter contained some money, I believe?—It did.

12352. How much money did it contain?—Forty pounds, half notes.

12353. Was there any letter inside in the parcel?—No, sir.

12354. It contained merely the notes of the £40?—Yes, sir.

12355. Was that £40 given to you for your vote?—I was not asked that question.

12356. I ask you the question?—Well, I know.

12357. You hear me asking the question?—Well, I do, sir.

12358. Was it for your vote?—No; but Patrick Cunningham came to me the night before, about ten o'clock. He asked me would I let my house and I told him I would.

12359. What night was that?—The night before the polling, between nine and ten o'clock at night.

11360. You told him you would?—Yes, sir.

12361. Tell me all that took place between you that night?—Nothing happened between us. I told him the sum I required for my house.

12362. How much did you ask?—£40.

12363. Well?—He said he would communicate that—to whom he didn't say, nor I didn't ask him.

12364. He said he would communicate it?—Yes.

12365. You understood what asking you to let your house meant, of course?—I did, sir.

12366. You understood it meant that you were to give your vote for Mr. Munster?—Well, I suppose so.

12367. And the £40 you got the next day was in pursuance of that arrangement made with Cunningham?—Well, it was, sir. Then I couldn't be sure whether I was to get them or not.

12368. But you are sure that you did get them though?—Oh, yes.

12369. And I see it was in furtherance of an arrangement you made with Cunningham the night before?—Yes.

12370. For whom did you vote at the election?—For Mr. Munster.

12371. Were you a voter in 1865?—Yes.

12372. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. John Lanigan.

12373. Had you been canvassed at that election by anyone on behalf of Mr. O'Beirne?—No; but just—by no person unless by Mr. O'Beirne himself when he was going around to the voters.

12374. What answer did you give him. Did you say you were promised, or had not made up your mind, or would not vote for him?—No, but I told him the polling day would tell who I would vote for.

12375. Did you say anything to him about letting your house?—I didn't.

12376. Did you say anything to any of Mr. O'Beirne's friends about letting your house?—No, I did not, nor they to me either.

12377. At the time that Mr. O'Beirne asked you, and that you said the polling day would show for whom you would vote, had you your mind made up?—Yes, I had.

12378. For whom?—For Mr. Munster.

12379. Why did you not tell that to Mr. O'Beirne? Do you hear me?—I do, sir.

12380. Then answer the question: Why did you not tell that to Mr. O'Beirne?—By gor I don't know, sir; Mr. O'Beirne, when he came in, didn't remain one minute.

12381. At the time Mr. O'Beirne called on you, had you made any arrangement about your house?—No, sir.

12382. Had you a talk with anyone about your house?—No.

12383. Had you promised anyone to vote for Mr. Munster?—I had not.

12384. By whom had you been canvassed on behalf of Mr. Munster?—I wasn't canvassed by any person until the night Patsy Cunningham came to me.

12385. Until Patsy Cunningham called?—Yes; Mr. Munster went around himself. I was influenced by Captain Byrne. He called on my people-in-law in Templemore, and they influenced me to vote for Mr. Munster.

12386. That is Captain Dudley Byrne?—Yes.

12387. Did you receive letters from your people-in-law, or did they come?—No, I received a letter from them.

12388. What did they say in the letter?—That they wished I would vote for Mr. Munster.

12389. Did they say you would get any remuneration?—No.

12390. How long before the polling was it that you got the letter from your people-in-law in Templemore?—A month or so.

12391. Did anybody canvass you then on behalf of Mr. Munster for that month before the election, because we have heard here that men were canvassed ten times a day?—I believe Mr. Pat Laffan came to me once or twice.

12392. That is, after you got the letter from your people-in-law?—I couldn't say was it before or after.

12393. Did you tell Mr. Laffan that you had made up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—No, I did not.

12394. Why did you not—now tell me the truth? Bedad, I couldn't tell you, sir.

12395. Did you tell Mr. Laffan that you expected something for your vote?—Well, I didn't tell him; but I suppose he knew what was in our minds.

12396. Did you write it, or make signs to him?—I didn't.

12397. You must have said something that led him to believe it, for he would not pay you £40, I suppose, if he knew you were going to vote for Mr. Munster. What did you tell him that led him to believe you required money for your vote?—I don't know that I told him anything.

12398. Did you not tell me he understood that you wanted it; that it was in the minds of both of you. Recollect that the candour of your answering is what will entitle you to a certificate. Tell me what was it you said to Mr. Laffan that made him know you wanted money for your vote? Did you say something that led him to believe you wanted money for your vote?—Well, I gave him to understand, I suppose, that I did.

12399. Are you not able to tell me better than that? Do you not recollect anything of what you said? Did you ask if there was any money going, or did you ask what they were paying for houses, or anything of that kind?—I didn't, sir.

12400. Then all you can tell me is that you led him, by your conversation, to believe that you wanted money?—Yes, sir.

12401. Did you get any money in 1865?—No, sir.

12402. For your house, or otherwise?—No, sir.

John Quirke sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Quirke.

12403. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

12404. Now, Mr. Quirke, how much did you get in connexion with the election of 1865, or arising out of it?—I got nothing but what I got for my lodgings and house.

12405. That is exactly what I want to know?—I got £60.

12406. £60?—Yes.

12407. For your house?—For my lodgings and house.

12408. Did anyone lodge in them?—No, there didn't.

12409. And no use was made of your house?—No, there wasn't.

12410. Who was it that took them from you?—Mr. Johnson.

12411. How long before the election did he take them?—I couldn't exactly tell—some days before it. I was in the habit of letting it often at former elections and Mr. Massy had it, and Mr. Lanigan had it, and several others. It is a very large room—two large rooms in connexion with one another, a bedroom going with them; and he came to me and took them from me. They were open and vacant there for him at any time he thought proper.

12412. Of course it never occurred to you to refuse the money because they were not used?—I got the money beforehand; I had some dealings with others in the same way before that, and I found some difficulty in getting the money after. I said I wouldn't be caught in the same trap again.

12413. Who took them in 1859?—They weren't taken that year at all.

12414. In 1857 who had them?—Mr. Lanigan.

12415. What did Mr. Lanigan pay for them in 1857?—I think that is the year he stopped at my house. I am not certain, but I know he had them, and he was defeated this year that I say, and I didn't charge him. He left the thing to myself; so I didn't charge him much for the rooms, only what accommodation he got. He paid for that, such as diet.

12416. How much did you get?—I got £65. He lodged and had a lot of his friends dining there, and for cars. I charged him nothing for the committee rooms, only some three or four pounds, or something for standing in the place.

12417. Did anyone hire your rooms in 1868, the last election?—No, they didn't.

12418. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did, sir.

12419. Why did you not vote for Mr. O'Beirne, for whom you voted in 1865?—Because I saw there was good reason to encourage the generosity of Mr. Munster coming to town. He laid out a great deal of money; others promised to give something, and gave nothing. He gave £500 to the Christian Brothers that has the school, and a great many other things which entitled him to votes of many others besides me.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 18.

John Quirke.

12420. If he had not given this £500 for the Christian Brothers, and had not given money so freely, as he is reported to have done in the town, you would not have voted for him?—I suppose not; I didn't know him at all, nor anyone else, until he came there.

12421. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you see any difference between the political opinions of Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Munster?—Well, I didn't; I thought the two were equal, two of the same religion and very kind, and that the man doing the most good was the most entitled. Many a man would put his head in a window and make a grand speech, but do nothing; even some of them would promise to bring the river to Cashel.

12422. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What you set value on was the distribution of money by Mr. Munster in Cashel?—Yes; that showed he was a good man, and entitled to serve the town.

12423. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne in this last election?—He didn't speak to me about it; he called to the house, but I wasn't within.

12424. Did he never call more than once?—He might have called several times; but very seldom I'm there.

12425. Did you never see Mr. O'Beirne then, to be canvassed by him before the election?—I saw him when he come to town; he owed me a bill since the last election, I called to him several times about it.

12426. How much did he owe you?—Thirty-seven pounds.

12427. When did you go to him about it?—I called to him in the beginning, on a Saturday.

12428. Tell all the conversation that occurred?—There were only a few words. He went away from me.

12429. What were the few words?—I think he said he would make it right, or something of that kind; I couldn't tell, for I felt a little annoyed with him.

12430. At his not paying you?—Yes, and for not answering the letters I wrote to him.

12431. He said he would make it all right?—He did.

12432. Did you come again to him?—Yes, I did, up to his lodgings.

12433. What occurred then?—He gave me some printing to do, and he got some post-cars from me. There was nothing occurred at the time more than that. That was all. He sent the money to the house.

12434. What money?—The £37.

12435. When did he send it to the house?—Sometime before the election. He sent it in two instances, I understand.

12436. Now, Mr. Quirke, did anything pass between you and Mr. O'Beirne with reference to your vote at either of those meetings?—He never asked me.

12437. Not at either of those meetings?—I don't think there was any person up to this asked me for a vote—I am voting since '32—except Mr. Perrin and Mr. Wolfe called at my house, and I stood at the door; we were so glad at the time to meet them, every one stood at the door to watch and meet them, and I think I stood at the door, the same as every other voter.

12438. Now are you quite clear about your recollection, that Mr. O'Beirne never asked you if you would vote for him?—Not a word about it.

12439. Did he say anything that would make you think that he expected your vote?—We had no conversation about it, sir, at all. 'Twas all about the printing, and he was in a great hurry with it.

12440. What amount of printing had you at the last election?—£13 10*s.*, I think. As soon as I was settled with, every person that came belonging to him I gave them to understand my mind was made up to go with Mr. Munster. I said not.

12441. Before that you did not say that your mind was made up?—I didn't tell any person what I intended, because I was afraid I wouldn't get the money that was due to me; and that was what kept me from going sooner; and I told Mr. Michael Laffan the same. He called on me in the beginning, and said there was a gentleman coming, and I told him I could make no promise. I said I didn't know much about the gentleman that was coming; and, equally so, that there was a bill due by Mr. O'Beirne which I expected to be paid; and if I went beforehand, I expected never to be paid. He owes me a bill now, and I suppose I'll——

12442. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Is that the £13 10*s.*?—Yes. It would have been a great deal more, but I gave him to understand my mind was made up to go with Mr. Munster.

12443. You gave him to understand?—I gave notice to his messenger.

12444. Who was that?—I couldn't tell you now. There were so many talking about it, I couldn't recollect.

12445. Mr. O'Beirne then stopped the orders?—He didn't send to me any more.

12446. How soon after you got the £37 did you make up your mind?—Immediately, on the spot.

12447. Did anyone come to you to ask you?—They didn't. I told Mr. Laffan when my bill was settled—the way I saw Mr. Munster going in the town—"don't give me up," says I; "as soon as I'm settled with Mr. O'Beirne, I'll make you the promise."

12448. Did you go to Mr. Laffan and make him a promise then?—No, Mr. Leahy called on me and I told him, "Put me in your list."

12449. Is that all that happened between you and Mr. Leahy?—That is all. He never offered me a penny, nor I didn't ask him. "Don't speak about my vote," says I to him, that I didn't want anything from him you know, that I didn't expect anything for my vote. "You are sure of my vote," says I, "so no more about my vote," says I to Mr. Leahy.

12450. Did you know Mr. Leahy was asking people what they wanted?—No, sir. He asked me would I vote, and I told him my mind was made up to go for Mr. Munster.

12451. Why did you tell Mr. Leahy you would not expect anything for your vote? Were you afraid he would offer you money?—I will tell you why I spoke to him.

12452. Why did you tell Mr. Leahy that you were not expecting anything for your vote?—That he needn't say anything about my vote: that he was sure of it. There was no word about money between Mr. Leahy and me. I told him that I wanted—that I would go freely with him.

12453. "That you wanted," you were going to say?—That I wanted nothing, that I wanted no money. He heard there were other people about the town for money, and I said I wanted no money for my vote.

12454. What did you say to Mr. Leahy?—I couldn't tell you.

12455. Did you know he was offering money to people?—I didn't indeed.

12456. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Would you have let your rooms if Mr. Leahy had been asking them?—I would; Mr. Laffan the first day wanted to take my rooms and I wouldn't let them in consequence of Mr. O'Beirne. "We want your rooms," said he, for Mr. Laffan had it for the county members. He came to me and I told him the bill was due to me, and if I set my rooms independent I would have no chance of getting the bill from Mr. O'Beirne.

12457. Did you tell him that as soon as you settled your bill you would be ready for him?—I did.

12458. Did Mr. Laffan come to you then about the rooms when you had settled the bill?—He never spoke to me afterwards, because immediately, as soon as I met Mr. Leahy—he was often in the shop buying stationery and other things—we were often in chat, and I had a great respect for him, in consequence of being the brother of the Archbishop and so on.

12459. You were willing to set the rooms to Mr. Laffan?—I was, with the exception——

12460. But you would not do it until you secured the £37 from Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

12461. When you were willing to set the rooms to Mr. Laffan did you talk about the price?—Not a word about it.

12462. How much did you expect?—There wasn't a word about it.

12463. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you expect to set them at the last election?—I did expect it.

12464. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I suppose you did not expect that Mr. Munster would pay less than Mr. O'Beirne at the election before?—I didn't know what he would pay. If I go further than what I know, or what is in my mind, you wouldn't ask me to do that, because when I wasn't determined to set them I could make no agreement. Then he had lodgings taken at Mrs. Corcoran's.

12465. You told me you expected to set your rooms at the election?—Well, I did; I have them always; they make no other use of them, but the same purpose as that.

12466. You got sixty pounds for the election of 1865, when Mr. O'Beirne had your rooms, and you know that taking rooms in Cashel was a delicate way of conveying money to voters; and knowing all that, why did you not go to Mr. Laffan after getting the £37, and say, "now, I'm ready to set my rooms; how much will you give me"?—I wasn't determined to set them at all if he came to buy them; but I didn't want to sell them as selling my vote.

12467. Did you put in any claim for them afterwards?—Not a halfpenny.

12468. Did you receive any money in connexion with the election of 1868?—I put in a bill for printing, and horses, and cars, and posting.

12469. What was the amount of that bill?—£150.

12470. Mr. MOLLOY.—You made out a bill and sent it in for £150?—Yes; a long time after when there was a bill posted for every person to send in their claim.

12471. To whom did you give the bill?—To Mr. Leahy, I think.

12472. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Were you paid since?—I was not.

12473. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had you any conversation about not being paid with anybody?—No, except Mr. Leahy, and he was not here much since. The last time I was talking to him he was in too great a hurry, and he said another time he would talk about it.

12474. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—When was that?—I couldn't tell you. He was a couple of times here.

12475. You sent in a bill for £150?—Yes, immediately after.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

12476. Mr. Laffan, where is that account?—I have not got it, sir, and I never saw it.

John Quirke's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Quirke.

12477. Where did you give it to Mr. Leahy?—In his office, I think; in his office in John-street.

12478. Is it in Mr. Munster's house in John-street?—Yes, sir. He has no other place but John-street, and I think Abbeyview.

12479. Are you able to give me any idea of when you sent in that bill?—Immediately after; I think it was in January.

12480. Do you say January?—I think so. If you like I will go down and get a copy of it.

12481. Did you ever ask for payment since?—I did.

12482. Whom did you ask?—Mr. Leahy; nobody else.

12483. Did you know that Mr. Laffan was the conducting agent?—Well, Mr. Leahy did this part.

12484. Did you know that Mr. Laffan was conducting agent?—I did.

12485. Why did you not ask him?—I thought the other man was the same.

12486. Did you see Mr. Munster daily about the streets since?—I did.

12487. Did you ever ask him?—I didn't.

12488. You did not tell him he owed you £150 for printing and cars?—I never did.

12489. How soon after you sent him the bill in January did you ask for the amount?—Mr. Leahy went away. He was here a couple of times since. The last time he came to Cashel I didn't ask him.

12490. When did you see him last?—He came, I think, a couple of months ago.

12491. And you did not ask him then?—I didn't, because I thought it useless, as they were settling no bills. I didn't think there was any bills settled.

12492. Was it that you did not like to ask him until the Commission was over?—That was a good reason, I suppose. I know the bill was put in at any rate.

12493. You say you asked Mr. Leahy on the very day after sending it in in January. What did he say?—He said he wasn't prepared to pay them; that he wasn't paying any bill.

12494. Did he say he could not pay at present?—He said simply tantamount that he wasn't paying any bills.

12495. Did he say anything tantamount to this—that he could not pay anything until after the Commission?—No.

12496. Nothing at all like that?—No, sir; he said not, I think, until the Petition was over.

12497. Mr. Leahy said that to you?—Yes; but since the Petition was tried we had no word at all.

12498. And since the Petition you had not a word with Mr. Leahy about it?—No; I had not.

12499. How often was he in Cashel since?—I believe only once.

12500. At that time, although it was £150, you never asked him?—I did not.

12501. And you never asked Mr. Munster, or Mr. Laffan?—I never did.

12502. Now why did you not inquire of Mr. Munster about this £150?—When they were not paying any bill; when Mr. Leahy told me—Mr. Leahy when he called to the house; I told him that I got the money from Mr. O'Beirne, and that "Now," says I, "I'm at liberty; I will go to your side now," says I, "to Mr. Munster."

12503. You are going far away from the question I asked you. Answer the question. Why did you not ask Mr. Munster for the £150?—When he wasn't paying bills.

12504. That is not the reason, sir; £150 is a large sum?—I understand Mr. Munster didn't pay a halfpenny to anybody.

12505. Did you hear that he paid Michael O'Sullivan?—I heard it twice in court here; I didn't hear it before.

12506. Is it because he was not paying others that you did not ask him?—I didn't ask him; I thought he paid no bill.

12507. Would you never ask him?—I would, after a certain time, of course; I wasn't afraid but he would pay it.

12508. Mr. MOLLOY.—Whose money did you expect the £150 to be?—Mr. Munster's.

12509. Why did you not ask himself? You asked Mr. O'Beirne for the £37?—Because Mr. O'Beirne was a different man; I would ask Mr. Munster at a future time.

12510. How long would you wait?—Until the election matter was settled.

THIRTEENTH DAY.
October 18.
John Quirke.

12511. Until the Commission would be over?—Until all was settled; but I thought I had no necessity, for Mr. Leahy would pay me.

12512. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Was it Mr. Michael Laffan's name was at the bottom of the notice about sending in claims, or Mr. Richardson's?—I couldn't tell you.

12513. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you know that Mr. Richardson was the expense agent?—There were so many agents I couldn't tell who was.

12514. Did you know Mr. Richardson was the expense agent?—I heard he was an agent doing business.

12515. And the expense agent?—Yes.

12516. Why did you not send the claim to him?—The person I promised my vote to, I gave it to him.

12517. Have you the things entered in your books?—I have.

12518. All of them?—Yes.

12519. Bring me your books if you please?—The agreement I made with Mr. Leahy was—"then," says I—they complained about Mr. Munster, sometimes that I hadn't cars for him. "It would be better for Mr. Munster," says I, "or for you now—there will be a great demand for cars, and I would keep so many horses and cars for you." And them weren't entered in the book at all. They were then so much a day for so many horses, while the election was on, work or play.

12520. And these are not entered in your books?—They are not.

12521. Is there anything entered in your books?—There is.

12522. Produce your books in which you have entered anything against Mr. Munster for the last election. [Mr. Munster hands in questions.] Mr. Munster, there are four of these questions that we do not consider to affect the inquiry; the other I will put for you. Mr. Munster wishes to have you asked did you call in John-street to press for payment of your car bill, and urge on Mr. Munster the fact of your support and vote?—I called to Mr. Leahy for it.

12523. Did you urge on Mr. Munster himself?—No, I did not; I wasn't speaking to Mr. Munster at all about it.

12524. Now produce the books if you please, sir?—I recollect now the day I was talking to Mr. Leahy, when I was going out I said some words; I spoke to Mr. Leahy, and I met Mr. Munster coming out, and he said something about not to talk about voting, or something else, that he knew nothing about it.

12525. Then you did speak to Mr. Munster?—No, 'twas he spoke to me; I didn't.

12526. What did he say to you?—He said something that I wasn't friendly to him. There was something about printing; that my printer wasn't able to complete the job of all his work; and Mr. Munster didn't think I was friendly. "You can't say but I was friendly," says I, "for I voted for you." "Don't talk of your vote to me," says he.

12527. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did he say anything more to you than not to talk about your vote to him?—Nothing more, because I walked up street that minute.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

12528. Witness.—When I got money I put it down in that [hands in a book]. It is in regular order in the other book. You see the 11th there where it commences.

12529. Give me the letters and take the book in your hand. Now, Mr. Laffan, begin, if you please, and read from the book or from any other account you have, the moneys you got and the dates on which you got them. £100 on the 11th is the only thing I have taken down as yet?—Then I have marked here on the 13th October £50.

12530. From Mr. Leahy?—Yes.

12531. Was that in cash or by cheque?—All in cash.

12532. The next, if you please?—The next was on the 14th, £100.

12533. The next?—The other £100 has not been entered by me. There is no date put down for it. I didn't put it down in the book.

12534. About what date did you get it? Before the 15th?—I think they were all before the 15th; that is my impression. Possibly I got the £100 before the 11th.

12535. Proceed with the rest?—The other money I have not entered down; I will tell you from memory.

12536. Have you not entered them anywhere? Did you not enter in any book those large sums as you got them?—No, I did not expect them to be mentioned here.

12537. Were you never to render an account of them?—Yes, I did so.

12538. And from memory only?—Yes.

12539. What were the other sums that you got?—On Sunday, the 15th October, I think it was, I got £600.

12540. Was it in cash?—In gold.

12541. From Mr. Leahy?—No.

12542. From whom?—Well I will tell you. Mr. Leahy told me to go to Thurles, and I went there to the house of a gentleman.

12543. Who is the gentleman?—A Mr. M'Namara, and he gave me some money, £600 in gold, which had been left there, he said, by a young man.

12544. What is Mr. M'Namara's Christian name?—I don't know his Christian name.

12545. Does he live in Thurles?—He lives on the road between Cashel and Thurles.

12546. Does he live in the town of Thurles?—Oh, he lives in the town of Thurles, that is, on the road between Cashel and Thurles.

12547. Do you know what he is?—He is a friar.

12548. Is he attached to any community?—He is.

12549. What community?—I don't know exactly what the community is. He is a Dominican or Franciscan; I don't know which.

12550. I told you that you were to tell us candidly everything you know. You see that I have now, with a certain amount of torture, to drag out of you those answers. I beg of you to recollect yourself. Why do you not tell me out everything. You say you were directed to go to a gentleman; I have dragged that from you?—I promised him not to tell his name.

12551. You are bound to tell me everything. You must tell me. What is this Mr. M'Namara?—He is a friar, sir.

12552. Of what order?—I don't know the order; I forget it.

12553. Is there a branch of the order in Thurles?—He is the branch of his order in Thurles himself.

12554. Has he a chapel there?—He has no chapel.

12555. Has he a school?—No, he is the only one in Thurles of the order.

12556. Does he officiate as a clergyman?—Oh, yes.

12557. Where does he officiate?—I do not know.

12558. You say he has no church?—He has no church. He is an inhabitant of Thurles—lives there. I believe he officiates in the parish church.

12559. Mr. GRIFFIN.—He has a private house?—Yes.

12560. Does it belong to him?—I think the whole house belongs to him.

12561. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Can you describe more accurately where he lives, so that a person going to Thurles could find the house readily?—I am sure anybody going to Thurles, and asking for the gentleman, can find the house. There is no difficulty about that.

12562. Did you ever see this Mr. M'Namara before?—Oh, yes, I have been acquainted with him before.

12563. What do you call him? Do you call him Father M'Namara?—Father M'Namara.

12564. You do not know his Christian name?—I do not know his Christian name.

12565. Do you mean to say you do not know where he officiates?—I believe he officiates in the parish chapel.

12566. He is a friar?—Yes.

12567. Therefore he is not one of the secular clergy of the place?—No.

12568. Is his house at the right or left hand side?—At the right hand side, very near where Doctor Hanley's is, in the town of Thurles.

12569. You say Mr. Leahy directed you to go there?—Yes.

12570. Did you go there?—I went there.

12571. Whom did you see?—I saw Mr. M'Namara.

12572. What did Mr. M'Namara give you?—He brought out two little bags.

12573. And I suppose you found that those bags contained, as you say, £600 in gold?—Yes.

12574. Did he tell you where he got them?—I think he mentioned at the time that a young man had come by train, and that he left him those parcels for me.

12575. Did he know who the young man was?—No, he said he never saw him before.

12576. Mr. Leahy told you to go to Thurles to Mr. M'Namara's house?—Yes.

12577. Tell me exactly what you were to do; did he tell you how you would get the money?—On Sunday evening, about four or five o'clock, I think, I met Mr. Leahy.

12578. Where did you meet him?—I think it was up at Abbeyview, at Mr. Munster's house; and he told me to go to Thurles to this gentleman's house. I don't know whether he said exactly what—oh, yes, he informed me that a young man would leave something there for me; and that perhaps I might induce the young man to come back with me.

12579. Did he tell you who the young man was?—No.

12580. Did you ever hear from him afterwards who the young man was?—No.

12581. Had you any reason to know or suspect who he was?—No, I have not the slightest reason.

12582. Had you any conversation further than that with Mr. Leahy before going to Thurles? Did he tell you anything else?—I think, yes. I remember now that he gave me a cheque to give—I think for £5 or five guineas—to give to Mr. M'Namara.

12583. Whose cheque was that?—I think—I cannot positively say whose cheque. It might have been a cheque of Mr. Munster's; but I don't know. It may have been a cheque of Mr. Munster's.

12584. It may have been?—Yes; I can't positively state.

12585. On what bank was it do you know?—I don't know. I just took it and folded it, put it in my pocket, and did not mind.

12586. It was a cheque for £5 you say?—I think it was £5 or five guineas.

12587. What did he tell you to do with that cheque?—He said to me to give it to Mr. M'Namara.

12588. Was it payable to Mr. M'Namara?—No, it was not.

12589. To whom was it payable?—I think it was originally payable to the Archbishop, and that he didn't take it, and that he gave it to me then for Mr. M'Namara. I think it was payable to Doctor Leahy. It was sent to him, I think, and he didn't accept it, or something of that kind; and then Mr. Leahy had this cheque in his pocket; and when I was going he told me to give it to Mr. M'Namara, as a sort of compli ment I suppose.

12590. You say it may have been a cheque of Mr. Munster's. Do you mean by that to say that you believe it was?—No; but I mean by that to say that I do not remember whose cheque it was, and that it might have been his.

12591. Did anything else occur on that occasion between you and Mr. Leahy?—No, I don't think there did.

12592. Did Mr. Leahy give you at the time any account of the cheque further than you have given us, or say what it was for, or anything about it?—No, I do not think he did.

12593. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was there any person's name mentioned in the cheque as the payee of it?—I suppose it was a cheque payable to bearer. You say the Rev. Dr. Leahy's name was in it. I suppose it was payable to the Rev. Dr. Leahy, or bearer?—I could not say. I think inside it was payable to Dr. Leahy. I cannot say whether bearer was crossed.

12594. Was it endorsed, do you know, by the Archbishop?—I am not positive. In fact, I put the cheque in my pocket, and didn't think it of any consequence.

12595. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you give that cheque to the Rev. Mr. M'Namara?—I did.

12596. Did anything else pass between you and the Rev. Mr. M'Namara besides what you have told us?—No, except this: that when I went there first, and he mentioned the circumstance of this young fellow having come there, I told him to keep the custody of the money until I went down street. I think he mentioned to me how a young man had come at two or three o'clock by train that day. He thought he had gone back again.

12597. Did he say where he had come from?—Oh, no. He had it only a few hours in his custody.

12598. Where did you go from Mr. M'Namara's house?—I went down from the house to the town of Thurles, and met Captain Byrne, and Captain Byrne introduced our friend "in the moon" there.

12599. Larkin?—Yes.

12600. After speaking to Larkin did you go back?—I went with Captain Byrne to the hotel, and had tea, I think, and punch. After that I got into a covered car with Larkin; stopped at Mr. M'Namara's door, leaving Larkin in the car; got into Mr. M'Namara's house; got the money; came to the car, and went in.

12601. Did you speak to anybody else in Thurles?—No, except in the hotel, a casual observation, but not in any other way.

12602. Did you tell Captain Byrne that you had got this money?—No, I did not. My impression is I did not.

12603. Captain Byrne knew very well though what Larkin was brought there for?—I dare say he did.

12604. Did you not ask Captain Byrne to bring a man who would act in that way for you?—Yes.

12605. Continue, if you please, the sums you have received. There are £950?—£300 more, I think, to be accounted for.

12606. From whom did you get that?—I got it from Captain Byrne; or rather, strictly speaking, he left it on the table, and I took it up.

12607. Did you get it in one day, in one payment?—The £300?—yes. It was in one.

12608. What day was it?—I think it was Tuesday; it ought to be about the 17th.

12609. Tuesday before the day of polling?—Before the polling day.

12610. Where did you get that £300 from Captain Byrne?—In Corcoran's hotel.

12611. Captain Byrne did not lay this money down on the table accidentally. Was it in gold or notes?—It was in notes, sir.

12612. Begin at the beginning and tell me all about it. Pray do not require me to be putting so many questions to you?—I am most anxious to tell all.

12613. As we come to each particular matter you will recollect, that although it may be very painful to you to speak of Captain Byrne or Mr. Munster, you are under a greater obligation here. I need not tell a gentleman of your education that you are under a far greater obligation now than your desire not to speak of friends. Therefore, do not put me to the trouble of having to ask you those questions. You plainly enough show that you would rather not implicate friends if you can avoid it; but you must speak the whole truth you know. The only thing I will ask you is, that you will save me the trouble of having to put a great number of questions to you. Commence at the beginning of this interview with Captain Byrne, and tell me what took place between you and him?—Several evenings in Corcoran's hotel we used to be talking generally over the election, after dinner—Captain

THIRTEENTH DAY.

October 18.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Byrne and I talked. I mentioned to him several times that Mr. Munster would not have the slightest chance in Cashel unless that he bribed; and I mentioned to him that it was quite absurd for us to be trying to work on without having money—to have somebody come with money with that intention. We had a number of conversations of which this is the general purport. One night Captain Byrne—I think it was on the 16th, Captain Byrne mentioned something about he would make it all right to-morrow. That is the day before I got it; of course I am giving you the dates as nearly as I can. Next morning the 17th, I went in; he told me to—he was in bed in Corcoran's hotel, and he told me to get a bill—I think it was a three shilling bill stamp or four shilling bill stamp. I got it at Mrs. Dolan's, and filled a promissory note then, payable on demand to him for £300.

12614. Was he the payee of the note? Just repeat the words of the note?—"I promise to pay Captain Dudley Byrne on demand, the sum of £300; value received."

12615. You signed that with your own name?—Signed it with my own name.

12616. What occurred then?—I left that on the table. He mentioned something about its being on the dressing-table. I looked round and saw on the dressing-table a bundle of notes; they were £300.

12617. When you had the conversation about the bill stamp, you say he told you to get a four shilling bill stamp; did he tell you the amount of money the stamp was to cover, or the value of the stamp that you were to get?—The value of the stamp, three or four shillings.

12618. Did anything further take place when you brought in the stamp?—When I brought in the stamp he told me to fill it as I have stated.

12619. Did he tell you for what amount you were to fill it?—For £300.

12620. Are you quite sure that that was on the morning of the 17th?—That is the best of my recollection; of course there may be a day or so.

12621. Whether it was on the morning of the 17th or not, are you quite certain that you had a conversation the preceding evening? Whatever day it was, had you a conversation with Mr. Byrne to the effect you have told us, the evening preceding that morning?—I had the evening previous.

12622. And on that occasion he told you that he would make it all right next day?—Yes.

12623. You found the £300 on the dressing-table?—Yes.

12624. And you took the money?—Yes.

12625. Did he see you taking it?—I don't know whether he actually saw me taking it. It disappeared, at all events, when he got up.

12626. Referring to those conversations, of which you say you had several with Captain Byrne, that Mr. Munster had not the slightest chance of succeeding in Cashel unless he bribed, and that you wanted money for the purpose, did you tell Captain Byrne how much you had?—No, I did not.

12627. Did you tell him you had got any?—At the time I was talking to him about this I had not got all the money. I got that £600 on the 15th; previously to that I had talked to him.

12628. Up to the 16th you had received £950?—Yes.

12629. And on the evening of the 16th had you spent the £950?—No, I had not.

12630. But you saw that there was a necessity for more?—Oh, yes; I saw there would be scarcely enough for what I anticipated.

12631. Did you tell Mr. Byrne how much you were short?—No, I did not.

12632. Did you name any sum to him as the amount you would require?—I do not think I did.

12633. Was the sum of £300 arrived at by himself?—That is my impression.

12634. You do not think you mentioned any sum to him at all?—I do not think I did.

12635. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say that the money you had would not be enough?—No, sir, I did not; I did not mention to him I had got money at all.

12636. He must have known you had got money, as you brought this man to distribute it?—I do not know. Perhaps that was his opinion. He may have thought that I anticipated it.

12637. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That is £1,250 altogether. Is that the entire amount you received?—That is the entire amount, with the exception of what I stated before, of which you will see an account—small sums I paid for my brother before anything of this kind turned up, for cars and so on.

12638. Was any of that £65 expended by way of retainers, or in any way to influence voters?—I should like to look at the list.

12639. You told us you had conversations with Mr. Leahy about those retainers, and that Mr. Leahy wanted you to advance the amount from £5 to £10. Will you just give us the whole of that conversation, because I interrupted you in it to come at something else at the time?—I will give it to you as well as I can. I mentioned to Mr. Leahy the number of retainers I believe I had given. I did not think I would be able to give any more on account of this notice; and he said, couldn't I give £10. I told him I didn't think they would take £10—that it wouldn't be enough. He said to try it. I objected to it several times; I didn't think I could do it. I went to do it afterwards. Mr. Leahy, I believe, entertained some idea—he wanted to avoid bribing, I believe, if he could—he entertained the idea he would be able to retain all Mr. O'Beirne's supporters for Mr. Munster to destroy their votes.

12640. And he thought £10 would be a sufficiently large sum to induce the people not to vote, is that it?—Oh, no; that is not it. When it got out you know that they could not vote, and I went to them afterwards to take £5 as agent, they saw through it. We thought £10 being a larger sum, they might take the sum and run the chance of getting more afterwards.

12641. Did you mean that they would take £10, vote for Mr. Munster, and run the chance of getting more afterwards?—Oh, not at all; that they would take the £10 as a retainer; that it would be so tempting they would not refuse it. Then we were under the impression, at least I was, that they could not vote if they took it.

12642. How many of those retainers were out then?—About fourteen or fifteen. There is a list of them.

12643. Give me the list, if you please. [Witness hands in list.] Were those all five guinea retainers?—Yes.

12644. How many £10 retainers did you give?—Only three, I think.

12645. John Kingsbury, William Quinlan, and Martin Delahunt?—Yes.

12646. Give me the list of those you tried to do it with?—There are four others; I dare say there were more; I disremember it.

12647. Did they reject them?—They did; in fact I think it has been mentioned here.

12648. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did they reject them, or give them back after a time?—In fact, they would not accept them at all.

12649. Mr. WATERS.—Did any of those men offer to take a larger sum: James Kennedy of Canopy-street; William Cummins, William Maloughney, and Patrick Russell?—I think Russell intimated to me that he would much prefer I would arrange the whole of it with his wife.

12650. Did you go to his wife?—No, I did not.

12651. Mr. Leahy, I suppose, knew perfectly well that you were distributing this money?—Knew perfectly well.

12652. Of course, when he sent you for £600?—I dare say he knew pretty well what had been done with it, but he was not cognizant of individual cases.

12653. But he knew you were getting it, and what you were doing with it?—I dare say he might.

12654. Had you any conversations from time to time with Mr. Leahy about the distribution of the money?—Not about its distribution; that is, you mean in detail.

12655. No, not entirely the details; but had you general conversations with Mr. Leahy? Though you did not name the particular persons to whom you gave the money, had you conversations with him as to how you were getting on?—No; while it was going on I don't think I had.

12656. What occurred between you and Mr. Leahy? Let me know how you introduced the matter to Mr. Leahy, and how he came to give you this first sum of £350?—He came to give me that when it was proposed to give £10 retainers. I had no money to give at the time. He then gave me that money, and I used to tell him after the day how I was enabled to succeed; but still he kept giving me the money until he had given up to £350. He didn't tell me what to do with the balance after giving the retainers; but the Saturday week before the election, I think it was, I was speaking to Mr. Leahy, telling him we were losing ground day after day, it was no use to do any more, that I feared they had been bribed already at the other side, that they were beginning it, and if it was his intention to have anything done that way at our side, it would be better to have it done at once. He said, "Haven't you money enough; why don't you begin?"

12657. That is, why did you not begin to bribe?—He didn't add the word "bribe."

12658. Did you not say they had been bribing at the other side?—Yes.

12659. And did he not refer to that when he said, "Have you not money enough; why do you not begin?"—He did; I think so.

12660. Where did this conversation occur?—In Corcoran's hotel.

12661. Now, come to the day on which you were directed to go for the £600; tell me how it came about; did you tell him you were getting short?—On that day, except what I have already mentioned; I don't think there was anything else; but a week or ten days before it I explained to him how this business should be done, if it was intended to do it at all.

12662. What do you mean by "this business?"—It is, in fact, that they should be bribed.

12663. You explained how it was to be done?—I explained how it should be done. I said he ought to enter into an arrangement to get money if it was to be used. He said something about he would see about it. I was expecting every day he would say something to me about going to get it; consequently on Sunday when he told me to go to Thurles, there was a sort of mute understanding between us as to what it was about.

12664. Those conversations all preceded the Sunday on which you went to Thurles?—Yes.

12665. When you came back from Thurles on that Sunday I presume you told Mr. Leahy what you had got?—When I came back from Thurles Mr. Leahy was gone to bed. I looked for him in order to tell him, and he had gone to bed. I did not see him that night. The next day I don't think I told him how much I had got, but I said it was all right, or I had succeeded in my mission, or something of that kind.

12666. Did you never tell him the amount?—I don't think I did.

12667. Did he tell you how much you would get?—Well, I won't be positive about that—that he mentioned the sum of money.

12668. Surely he mentioned to you, or you to him, that you were to get, or that you had got, £600?—I don't think I mentioned to him the sum. He didn't seem to wish to know.

12669. We have taken it down already that you said "Mr. Leahy told me to go to the house of Mr. M'Namara at Thurles, who would give me £600?"—I am not certain; it may be so.

12670. Did you receive any other money, Mr. Laffan, besides that £1,250 and the £65 you have already spoken of that you got from your brother?—That is all the moneys, sir. The moneys from my brother were some small sums.

12671. Did you receive any other money from Mr. Munster?—I did not. There are some small sums I received from my brother may not be mentioned in this. [Peruses his account.] Yes, they are all mentioned in this.

12672. Did you receive any other money than that?—No.

12673. I find you charged here, sir, in this book with receiving £200?—Well, I didn't actually receive that money; that was money for the convent in Fethard.

12674. "November 11th, P. Laffan £200?"—That was money for the convent at Fethard.

12675. Did you get a cheque for £200?—In Abbeyview Mr. Munster came into the parlour while I was there. He brought me in a cheque which I believe was the same cheque, and he told me to indorse it to Miss Eade.

12676. Was it a cheque in your favour?—It was a cheque in my favour.

12677. Do you know what was done with it?—I saw in the papers what was done with it, but don't know.

12678. How did it happen to be in your favour?—I don't know except that I happened to be at Fethard with Mr. Munster and we saw the place. It came out that there had been £200 paid for some ground there for a school or something of that kind. Mr. Munster sent me in to the ladies to inquire about it.

12679. Who showed you over the place?—Dean Cantwell.

12680. Did that conversation about the £200 occur in Dean Cantwell's presence?—No; but we had been walking about and he showed a piece of ground recently purchased for £200 for a convent or school. Mr. Munster told me to go and ascertain from the nuns how much had been paid for it. I went in and did so. That is the only reason I think Mr. Munster drew the cheque in my favour.

12681. How long did that occur before the day you got the cheque?—The cheque appears to have been dated the 11th; well, I should say about a week before that.

12682. Then you do not know, yourself, anything further about the application of that £200 cheque?—No, I do not. [Witness is handed a cheque and identifies it as the cheque referred to.]

12683. Then it appears that it was the Rev. Mr. Cantwell that got cash for this cheque?—Yes.

12684. Were you in communication with anybody else except Mr. Leahy and Captain Byrne, with reference to this expenditure of money at the election?—No, sir.

12685. With nobody else?—No.

12686. There is another small sum of £7 that appears to have been paid to you. What was that for?—It may have been for something ordered for the house, I do not know; because sometimes I used get bills to pay for household expenses, as I would be passing down the street just to pay them.

10687. Mr. Molloy.—What bed-room was Captain Byrne in when he gave you the £300 in Corcoran's hotel?—He was in the centre bed-room on the first landing.

12688. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Was that bed-room number six?—I don't think it was; number six is a top room.

12689. You have written down here, Mr. Laffan, it appears, the names of the persons to whom you gave money. I must just go through them. When did you give William Quinlan £10?—On the 11th November.

12690. William Quinlan, I find, voted for Mr. Munster?—He did. I took back the retainer.

12691. Where do you debit yourself with that again?—Oh, but I took it back in a sense. He borrowed the money to give me back the £10. I got the £10, and I afterwards gave the £10 to the person of whom he had borrowed it.

12692. You paid Quinlan £10 originally?—Yes.

12693. Quinlan borrowed £10 to pay back the retainer?—Yes, and he gave me the £10, and I afterwards gave back the £10 to the person of whom Quinlan borrowed it.

12694. Then it was a roundabout way, I suppose, of satisfying Quinlan's conscience?—Yes.

12695. And Quinlan afterwards voted for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

12696. Did he get any promise of anything?—I think not.

12697. And why did he refuse the £10?—Refuse it! He did not refuse it at all.

12698. Why did he want to return it?—It was I got it back from him again.

12699. I suppose it was in order to enable him to swear that he had given back the retainer?—[No answer.]

12700. Mr. MOLLOY.—When you gave the retainer to Quinlan were you not of opinion that Quinlan intended to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was.

12701. When did he change his mind?—Later on towards the polling day.

12702. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you not know anything that induced him to change his mind? The £10 we know would not be enough?—I cannot positively state. When I gave him the £10, and became agent—and became associated with us.

12703. Do you think he had expected more?—I dare say he did.

12704. Did he apply for more afterwards?—No, he did not apply for it.

12705. Just state to me what occurred at the time you gave Quinlan the retainer first? Had you canvassed him before that?—Well, I can't remember.

12706. Had you got an account from any person that Quinlan was not going to vote for you?—I must have got it, or I would not have given the retainer.

12707. And he was hostile to you when you went and got him to take this retainer?—Yes.

12708. From whom do you think you got the account that he was going to vote against you?—I couldn't tell you that.

12709. You cannot tell?—No.

12710. Have you any canvassing book of the electors?—I would be a very idle fellow if I were to take down everything that was told me.

12711. Had you a canvassing list?—O yes, I had a list that I used to mark off now and again.

12712. Where is that list?—I don't know; it might be in the office.

12713. I told you to bring down all the papers that you had—you had observations on them of course?—What I merely put was a stroke or an "M" for Munster.

12714. If you had this list here now it might refresh your memory, and perhaps show you who it was that mentioned Quinlan was hostile. When you went to Quinlan what occurred?—I talked to him generally about Mr. Munster and about his becoming an agent to him, and that if he would do so I would give him as a retainer, in the first instance, a retainer for £10.

12715. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say "in the first instance?"—I do not know I actually used these words, but that I would give him a retainer for £10.

12716. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you mean that you would give him more afterwards?—I don't know that I used the words "in the first instance."

12717. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you use any words that would give him the idea that he would get more afterwards?—I may have done so.

12718. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you?—I don't recollect that I did.

12719. Was there anything further than this said, that you would give him the retainer for £10?—Nothing further.

12720. Did you tell him he could not vote if he got the retainer?—I didn't mention anything about it.

12721. Is that all that you recollect that passed between you?—There may have been more talk; but of course it was not so short as that.

12722. Did you give him the retainer then?—I did.

12723. And did he take it?—He took it.

12724. Did he say anything when he was taking it?—I don't think he did.

12725. You found afterwards that he was with you?—Yes.

12726. When you found that did you go to him or did he come to you about taking back the retainer?—I took back the retainer in Mulcahy's house, I think, the night before the polling. Quinlan had been drunk, and I was brought about one o'clock in the day to Mulcahy's house; I went up there and Mulcahy lent him the £10, and I got it from Quinlan and he went up and voted.

12727. Are you able to tell any conversation that took place between you when this occurred?—I believe I said to Quinlan, "I will take back your retainer from you and you can do what you like."

12728. Did you at the same moment that you got £10 from Mulcahy hand it back again?—Yes, I handed it back again.

12729. In Quinlan's presence?—I think Quinlan was present; whether he saw it or not.

12730. Did he know he was not to repay Mulcahy the £10?—I don't know. He was present, but whether he saw me actually hand the money is another thing.

12731. In giving these retainers I want to ask you generally, did you tell any people—when they discovered by the notice of Mr. Grace that their retainers affected their votes—that if they did not say anything about it they might vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

12732. To whom did you say that?—I think I told it to one.

12733. Who was that one?—Will you hand me the list of retainers, please? [List handed to witness]—In looking over that list it does not strike me that I did say it to any of these people.

12734. Did any man that got a retainer from you vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

12735. Who did?—A man of the name of Martin Phelan.

12736. Martin Phelan?—Yes, that is one.

12737. How much did he get?—Five guineas.

12738. He is not in this list at all?—Oh, no, sir, the five-guinea retainers are not in that list. The five-guinea retainers came from a different source.

12739. The five-guinea retainers were from your brother's money?—Yes; from a cheque-book of my brother's, I merely filled in the amount.

12740. Did you tell Phelan that he would get more after voting?—No.

12741. Did you promise him more money when he said he was going to vote for Mr. Munster?—No. When I gave him the cheque I gave him directions to canvass for Mr. Munster, and he gave an account to me of how he was getting on. I don't think I ever saw him since.

12742. I find that Martin Delahunt, who is second on your list, did not vote at all?—No.

12743. Do you know why he did not vote?—Do I know why he didn't vote.

12744. Yes. Did you tell him at the time that it would stop him from voting?—I think I did.

12745. Did he understand that if he took the £10 he could not vote?—Yes, I think so.

12746. Had you previously canvassed him for Mr. Munster?—I had.

12747. And he had refused before?—He talked in an ambiguous sort of way.

12748. Did you know when you gave him the £10 that he was going to vote for M. O'Beirne?—I don't know, but I had a doubt about him; I wanted to make sure of it.

12749. And he, knowing that £10 would stop him from voting, took it?—I think so.

12750. And you gave him the £10 with the object of preventing his voting against you. Now, are you quite clear about it, that he knew it would prevent him from voting?—Yes, I think so. In fact this notice had been placarded—the notice from Mr. Grace, had appeared in print about the town when he got the £10.

12751. Who is John Dwyer that you have next on the list?—That is the John Dwyer who got the five-guinea retainer by means of a cheque.

12752. Is that John Dwyer of Price's Lot?—Yes. There is John Dwyer also: this is John Dwyer of the Commons. There are two Johns.

12753. At the time you gave John Dwyer £5 did he know that that would prevent him from voting?—He had previously got five guineas at the time I gave him the £5, I cannot say really, but I would rather the man had it, because some time had elapsed between the five guineas by means of the cheque, and the £5 in notes.

12754. Where did you give John Dwyer the £5?—In Corcoran's.

12755. What did you give the £5 for?—Mr. Leahy mentioned to me when talking about the £10 retainers how I could give £5 more to those I had given five guineas to, for many of them had been grumbling about being taken in and their market destroyed.

12756. Did Mr. Leahy tell you they had been grumbling?—No, but I knew myself.

12757. Did you tell him that?—I conveyed it to him, I daresay.

12758. And in your canvassing he told you to give £5 more?—I can't say it was in consequence of that; but he mentioned at the time of giving the £10 retainers, how I might give £5 more to those I had already given the cheques to.

12759. What did you understand from Mr. Leahy by his object in doing that?—Was it that those men should vote for Mr. Munster on getting the £5 additional?—I didn't understand it so.

12760. What did you understand his object to be?—That they were greatly disappointed and grumbled; and it was sent as well to keep them quiet by giving them more.

12761. If the five guineas stopped them from voting, what change was to be effected by giving them £5 more unless it was to vote for Mr. Munster?— I didn't understand that.

13762. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Were they talking of returning the retainers?—Yes, some of them sent them back.

12763. Was it to prevent them returning the retainers that you would give them £5?—I don't think it was, because I think it was rather as I have explained before, to quiet them.

12764. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it you that gave the money to Edmond Bowes?—No.

12765. Did you arrange with him as to what he was to get?—No.

12766. What did you do with the money for Bowes?—I gave it to Cunningham.

12767. Have you gone over this list with Cunningham since you came to town?—No.

12768. Have you communicated with him?—I have not generally, but merely to square up about a particular point. I didn't wish to communicate with him; I communicated with him about a particular sum of money that is in the account that I was anxious to know about, and I got a reply; and I have had no other communication with him since I came to town.

12769. What about Michael Coffey's £15?—Did he vote for Mr Munster?—No, he did not.

12770. How did you give Michael Coffey £15?—I engaged his house for £35, and I gave him £15 on account.

12771. Is Coffey here still?—I heard that he has gone to America, sir.

12772. And I suppose you heard that Coffey was going to be a supporter of Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

12773. And you engaged his house as a way of engaging his vote?—Well that was my intention. In addition to that Carroll had refused to give his house at the time, and I wished to take another house, partly to show that I had an assistant.

12774. Did Coffey understand when you were engaging his house, that it was for the purpose of engaging his vote as well?—Well, I said to him, or a gentleman that was present with me at the time, Mr. Scallan of Dublin, he said to Coffey "you have promised us your vote already, so we don't want that at all. It is your house we want," because Coffey had promised his vote to me and Mr. Munster.

12775. Was it in consequence of having promised you beforehand that you went to take his house?—Yes, it was in consequence of his having promised before, and I having heard that he was now wavering.

12776. You tell us you meant that engagement of his house to be an engagement of his vote?—I did.

12777. Did Coffey understand it in that sense also?—I am nearly sure he did; he must have understood it so.

12778. How did he come afterwards to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I saw—I read it in passing a report about the petition trial.

12779. Did you not know any more about it after you had given the £15 until after the petition?—No, I did not.

12780. Why did you not give the entire amount?—I wanted to keep it as a sort of security.

12781. As a sort of check on his vote?—As a sort of check on his vote.

12782. Did anything pass between Coffey and you at the time? Did you say why you gave him only £15?—I don't think I said that at all.

12783. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say the rest would be paid after the election?—Oh, I did; I promised I think that I would pay the rest the morning after the polling.

12784. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Who paid the money to Denis Dwyer?—I think it was Larkin, sir—yes.

12785. Bring your recollection to the transaction with Carroll. Do you recollect having a conversation with Carroll previous to the polling day, and previous to the taking of his house?—I do.

12786. Do you recollect conversations with Carroll with reference to whiskey?—I do.

12787. State what they were, if you please?—I mentioned one time I was in number six in Corcoran's hotel with Cunningham, in the evening, and a knock came to the door. I asked Cunningham, "who is that?"—He said he thought it was Carroll. I said to go out and get rid of him; that I didn't want to see him. He said it would be better for me to see him myself. He let Carroll in. After bidding Carroll good evening, I instantly said I didn't approve of the idea of the whiskey; that it would bring in a third party; but let him come on Monday, or some other day, that I would see what could be done for him.

12788. Had you a conversation with him before about whiskey?—I don't know that I had, but I had with Cunningham, and Cunningham had with him.

12789. When you said it would bring in a third party, you meant it would be a bribe, and you did not think it prudent to have a third person involved in the matter?—Yes.

12790. Who paid the money to Patrick Fitzgerald?—Larkin.

12791. You took Patrick Fitzgerald up there I believe?—Yes I saw that mentioned, but I don't remember the circumstance.

12792. Who paid the money to John Dwyer?—Larkin.

12793. I find that you put down here the price of Looby's jennet?—Yes.

12794. Was the jennet bought from Looby for the purpose of being a bribe to him?—I dare say it was—yes; I dare say it was to a certain extent; Mr. Leahy told me, that Thomas Looby had been speaking to him. He had a donkey; he said to give him £14 or £15 for him.

12795. Mr. Leahy told you that Looby had been speaking to him; is that what you say?—Yes, sir.

12796. I suppose when you went to buy it from him, you found that £14 or £15 was not enough?—Yes.

12797. Did you volunteer to make it £20, or did Looby require it?—Oh, Looby required it.

12798. Now, Mr. Laffan, this man, Thomas Looby, was paid out of the secret service money; was he not?—Yes, sir.

12799. He was paid £20 for the jennet out of the secret service money. What was done with that jennet—who got it?—I believe Mr. Munster rode it afterwards—yes, he did.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

12800. Did you see Mr. Munster use it afterwards?—I did, sir.

12801. Riding it?—Yes.

12802. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did he ask from whom the jennet was bought?—No.

12803. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you ever tell him?—No, I think.

12804. Did you tell him how much you had paid for it?—No. After the election was over I sent the jennet up to Mr. Munster's, and I never mentioned to anybody about where I got him, or what I paid for him.

12805. Then you paid for him before you got him?—Yes; he had him a fortnight, I think.

12806. Was he working him or using him?—I don't know.

12807. You say that this jennet was bought as a bribe?—I wouldn't say as a bribe; because he was worth a certain amount of money.

12808. Did you not pay more than the value for him?—I did.

12809. It was not so large a bribe as £20, but it was a bribe to the extent of the extra value of the animal?—Yes.

12810. Your account is, that having purchased the animal in that way, and paid for it out of this secret service money, you sent it to Mr. Munster's place at Abbeyview, and that it was put into his stable, and you say you saw him riding it after?—Yes.

12811. Mr. MOLLOY.—You are certain the jennet was not taken from his place on the eve of the election?—No, it was not.

12812. What did you do with the receipt you got from Looby?—I left it in my brother's office; I have not seen it since.

12813. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—How was John Farrell paid—I believe by a Mr. Ferris?—Yes.

12814. Who arranged with James Phelan?—It was Cunningham arranged with him.

12815. Mr. MOLLOY.—You did not see the jennet taken away from Looby? You do not know when it was taken?—I do.

12816. Do you know of your own knowledge when it left Looby's place?—I do. I am not sure I saw it actually going up the street, but I saw it afterwards in Mr. Munster's place.

12817. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was it you that paid Patrick Croagh?—Yes. I sent to him first for sand for the carriage-road at Abbeyview.

12818. Was there any account kept of what sand was got from him?—There was not.

12819. You are aware you paid him double the amount of what was got?—I am.

12820. I suppose three times the amount?—It may be.

12821. And that sand was put on Mr. Munster's place at Abbeyview?—Yes.

12822. Do you know anything of the payment to John Reilly?—It was paid by Larkin.

12823. Did you give an order to John Reilly to go to Larkin?—If I did, I told Mrs. Reilly to send her son down to Cunningham.

11824. Is it the son that has the vote?—No; the father.

12825. Did you arrange with Mrs. Reilly as to the amount to be paid for the vote?—I did.

12826. How much was it?—£30.

12827. Do you know was Mr. Reilly himself aware of the arrangement?—I cannot tell that; she may not have told him.

12828. Do you know how Reilly had voted before?—Yes, sir.

12829. For whom did he vote before?—For Mr. Lanigan.

12830. And why did you consider it necessary, or how did you learn that it was necessary to pay him £30?—I had heard from somebody that Captain Graham was entering into some arrangement.

12831. Did you ever speak to Reilly himself?—I did, sir.

12832. What occurred between you?—I began to speak to him in Corcoran's house about Mr. Munster, and, I think, intimated something about money; but I don't think I made a specific offer to himself.

12833. Did you convey to Reilly that you had arranged with his wife?—I don't know that; I don't think I did.

12834. You intimated to him something about money?—Yes.

12835. Are you not able to say more than that what it was?—No, I am not.

12836. But you are quite certain that you intimated to him that he would get money?—Yes, I am.

12837. Did you send a man named James Connors to Larkin to get £30?—I did.

12838. That was for Patrick Ryan?—It was.

12839. Some of those having been proved already I am not going through them to prevent incumbering the notes and a most unnecessary waste of time. I will ask you now in a general way were you aware beforehand that all those people whose names you have down here were to have got this money that you have opposite their names—I mean before they were paid did you know it? In every case was not the arrangement made with you?—Not every case. Carroll's case was arranged without my being actually aware of it at the time.

12840. Did you not give the money for the purpose?—Cunningham had £50 that he gave for buying Murnane's house that he got back. He applied £35 of that to Carroll.

12841. But you were in treaty with Carroll? He came up and you said you could not get the whiskey?—Yes.

12842. You knew Pat Ryan was to get £30? Did you make that arrangement?—Yes.

12843. Did you make the arrangement with Moloney who was paid by Hackett?—I did not.

12844. Did you give his name to Hackett and tell him he was to get money from him?—Yes.

12845. And you also gave Hally's name?—Yes.

12846. Did you make the arrangement with Patrick Griffin?—I did.

12847. What was the £30 that he got for?—For his vote.

12848. Did you make any arrangement with Richard Butler?—No, I don't remember that I did; I think it was Cunningham that made the arrangement with him.

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

12849. Is that so, Cunningham—did you arrange with Butler?—Yes, sir.

12850. For £30?—Yes.

12851. And that was for his vote?—Yes.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

12852. Was it you who arranged with Jeremiah Connolly for £70 for votes?—Yes.

12853. We are told Michael Noonan has gone to America?—I heard he has.

12854. He appears to have got £40?—Yes.

12855. How does it come that he got £10 additional?—I think he gave no note; but he came down to Corcoran's on the eve of the election and was stating how he would go to vote for Mr. O'Beirne and tell the whole thing. There were a number of persons there and they prevailed on me, as he was complaining, as his son was by—they prevailed on me to give something to the son to get rid of him. So this money was given to the son.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

12856. This was the evening before the polling you say?—Yes.

12857. Did he tell you that evening that he had not passed any note?—I do not think it was he that told me; I think it was Cunningham.

12858. You say he came to Corcoran's and said he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne and tell the whole thing?—Yes. He had been several times threatening; I was greatly annoyed and I asked Cunningham if this man had given a note.

12859. Did he tell that in the presence of the persons at Corcoran's?—I don't know that they heard him. He was half drunk and they saw him speaking to me.

12860. Who advised you to give the money for his son?—I don't recollect.

12861. Was Mr. Leahy or Mr. Byrne there?—No, some of the townspeople.

12862. Then this was hush money to make him keep quiet?—To make him keep quiet.

12863. Who gave the money to William Brennan?—Larkin.

12864. Did you make an arrangement with Brennan?—I did, sir.

12865. With himself?—Yes.

12866. And was the £35 for his vote?—Yes.

12867. Was it you that made the arrangement with Robert Cashen?—No, it was not, it was Cunningham made that arrangement.

12868. Was it you that arranged with Denis Heffernan?—No.

12869. Was it you that made the arrangement with Edmond Foley?—I had been talking to Foley and offered him money, but I think it was Cunningham that made the final arrangement before he got the money.

12870. He appears to have voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, I think it was Cunningham introduced him.

Patrick Cunningham recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Patrick Cunningham

12871. Do you recollect that Cunningham?—I do, sir.

12872. And was it you that made the arrangement?—The final arrangement.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

12873. What do you mean by "cash chargeable to Cunningham" that you have down here?—That is cash he had to account for.

12874. Cash that you gave him?—Yes.

12875. And do you know for whom you gave it?—I do not; it was out of sums of money I gave him.

12876. I see here, "paid William Ryan £5"—who is that William Ryan?—He is a brother to Denis Ryan. It was after the election I paid him that £5, at Mr. Leahy's request. Mr. Leahy had him looking up information about the petition, and he asked some money from Mr. Leahy. Then I gave him that £5.

12877. "Cash some time before the election to Mrs. Rochford for feathers, £5?"—I gave her £5 on account of some feathers that were ordered for the house, and had not been paid for.

12878. Was that a portion of the £350?—It was.

12879. And they went to Mr. Munster's house?—Yes.

12880. Do you know of any other feathers having been bought from her. You say you paid that on account?—I only ordered them at the time that I gave the £5 on account.

12881. Were you told to order them?—I was.

12882. By whom?—By some of the ladies in Mr. Munster's house.

12883. Did you order them because they were wanted, or did you order them for the purpose of making them friendly to you?—I think the feathers were wanted.

12884. Do you know whether they were or were not?—I think they were wanted.

12885. Now, Mr. Laffan, Larkin was examined here, and he says in his accounts, which seem to have been very accurately kept, that he returned you an account at Templemore—where is that account?—I have it, sir.

12886. He says he gave you a correct account at Templemore—[witness hands in account]—and amongst his accounts I find that he paid, by your order, some person £35. I have not got that name from him?—I think £30.

12887. I have also £30 to a person he did not know by "Patrick Laffan's order"—who was that?—James Connors.

12888. So I apprehended. But now there is "£35 by order of Patrick Laffan" the same day—who is that person?—Have you Edmond Foley?

12889. Yes?—And Edmond Stapleton?

12890. Yes. We got Stapleton. We did not get it at first, but we found afterwards sufficient to identify it. There is "E. St." and "pocket," and Larkin swore he put that into his pocket?—Yes.

12891. But there is thirty-five unaccounted for; "by order of Patrick Laffan, £35." Is that in Larkin's handwriting?—Yes, sir.

12892. All of this?—Yes; but you see in pencil on the top, that I wrote myself.

12893. What does "D. H." stand for?—Denis Heffernan.

12894. And "J. D?"—John Duggan.

12895. And "B?"—Bowes.

12896. Here is, "Mr. L., £35?"—That was given to me, but not by my order.

12897. We have £35 given to you, and by your order £35?—The £35 that was given to me is, I think, £35 I brought up to Mr. Hackett.

12898. You gave £70 to Mr. Hackett and £40, that is £110; and you gave him something more—how much more?—I gave him £240 altogether, but I got back £117 8*s.*

12899. £117 8*s.*?—Yes, sir.

12900. That leaves Mr. Hackett to account for £122 12*s.*?—Yes, sir.

12901. Did you give him £10 for sand?—That has nothing to do with it at all; but there were twelve guineas of that account that I paid at the time of getting back the money, due to young Mr. Dolan.

12902. What was that for?—He is a veterinary surgeon.

12903. And is that a portion of the money you gave to Mr. Hackett?—Yes, sir.

12904. Do you not recollect any other person that got £35 from you besides those in the list you have given us?—There was no other person.

12905. And are you sure that no other person got money?—I am.

12906. I wish you would turn it over in your recollection, and see how it is. You have seen this little book before?—I don't know what it is yet, sir.

12907. It is a book kept by Larkin. First there is "William Brennan, £35;" next he says £35 paid to yourself, and then "notes by order of Mr. Laffan, £35?"—Has he Stapleton in addition to that £35?

12908. Yes; Stapleton is the one next before Brennan. You will see there is "E. St.," and "pocket £35," that is Stapleton. Then comes William Brennan?—I tell you how I think it must have occurred. I think that £35 for Edmond Stapleton was given twice. I think first it was given to Denis Ryan.

12909. That is quite right?—I think afterwards it was given to Stapleton himself.

12910. No doubt of that—Denis Ryan returned it to you?—To Cunningham he returned it.

12911. But Stapleton had it before he paid that £35 to your order, so that I think you forgot some person?—No, sir.

12912. We examined young Mr. Cahill here, you paid him £4, where have you that entered?—I don't think it was paid him. Yes, I have it in this small account.

12913. How did you come to pay it?—I don't know how I came to pay it; I suppose Mr. Cahill can explain that.

12914. Was not he employed in your brother's office?—No, he was not.

12915. How was he employed?—He used to be employed in Mr. Munster's house in John-street.

12916. How was he employed there?—He used to be inspecting the people employed at work.

12917. Did you make any arrangement as to what he was to be paid?—No, I think not.

12918. Was he employed by you?—No, I think it was by my brother.

12919. You canvassed very largely and extensively through the town for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

12920. Were you asked for money by any person who afterwards voted for Mr. O'Beirne, except those you have already named, or had you any conversations about money with any persons who voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

12921. Who are they?—I remember that sometime some of the Commoners came to me and they said, if Mr. Munster would give them £100 each, they would vote for him.

12922. Now, who said that?—I have been thinking. The idea occurred to me before. I have been thinking who the man must have been; I think it was one of the Kennedys, or one of the Neills.

12923. That is too indefinite?—I know a man that came in with them at the time.

12924. Who is that?—A man named Neill, he is not a voter.

12925. Is that Jeremiah Neill?—Yes.

12926. Do you think it was some Kennedy?—Some Kennedy, or other name. It was a Commons' man; I think it was one of the Kennedys.

12927. Is there more than one Kennedy there?—There are two Kennedys.

12928. Do you recollect which was it, John or Patrick Kennedy?—No; I don't recollect which of them it was.

12929. But one or the other of them, you say, said if they got £100?—£100 each, they would vote for Mr. Munster.

12930. Mr. GRIFFIN.—How many persons came on that occasion?—These men, Neill and Kennedy.

12931. Were they speaking merely for themselves?—He talked as if he represented a number of the Commoners.

12932. Do you recollect what persons they were?—My impression was that they were a portion of the Commons commonly called Attykitt.

12933. Do these Kennedys live at Attykitt?—Yes, they do.

12934. You understood him as speaking of all the Attykitt voters?—Yes.

12935. Did he mention any name?—No, he did not.

12936. How long before the polling was this?—A day or two before the polling.

12937. What relation is this Jeremiah Neill to Neill of Attykitt, who voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—A son, or nephew, or at all events a relation of his.

12938. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Turn this matter over in your recollection, and be able to answer us in the morning something further about it, and any other matter which occurs to you. You will also have the goodness to ascertain what you did with the £35 that you got from Larkin, and who was the person the £35 was paid to by your order, whose name you have not given us. We have not got any name from you of any person who has got money in addition to those we have got already. We have down on our notes from Larkin every name you have given us. I think it is plain that you must forget something. You will have the goodness to look after it. Larkin seems to have been very accurate, and he says he paid some man notes, by your order, £35. He takes credit for that out of the money he received. I think it is plain that you must now forget that. Try and recollect it in the morning, and bring the canvassing lists and any other documents that you have in connexion with the election?—I know, sir, by the balance of money, there could have been nobody else got any.

Patrick Reilly.

Patrick Reilly sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

12939. You are the son of John Reilly, of Lady's-well-street?—Yes, sir.

12940. Your father voted at the last election?—Yes, sir, for Mr. Munster.

12941. You got £30 for him?—No, sir.

12942. Did you get £30?—My father did.

12943. Where did he get the £30?—At Mrs. Corcoran's.

12944. Were you there?—I was, sir.

12945. Who gave it to him?—I don't know, sir. I wasn't there. He went in from me into the room number six. I and him were in the house together, and Patrick Cunningham came and he called my father with him. He conveyed him then up the stairs; so he remained away for about five minutes or so. I considered it was some other place that he took him to, so accordingly I went upstairs after him, and I see my father above on the lobby. He was after being in; he was just after coming out, and he says—"£30," he says, "that I am getting." There was some arrangement with my mother and Mr. Pat. Laffan heretofore, and with that then, "Well," says I, "'tis better for you to take it than to leave it." So accordingly the father went back again into the room and got the £30.

12946. What was the £30 for?—For his vote, I suppose.

12947. How did he vote in 1865?—For Mr. Lanigan.

12948. What did he get then?—Nothing at all, sir.

12949. You saw the £30 with him when he came out the second time?—I did not, sir, but he told me he got it.

Michael Cahill.

Michael Cahill sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

12950. You and Edward Looby, Thomas Connors, John Butler and James Connors, were all employed, I believe, at the last election?—Yes, sir.

12951. What were you employed to do?—To forward Mr. Munster's interests, sir, as far as we could, and to protect him otherwise through the town.

12952. Did you canvass many voters for him?—A few, sir, not many.

12953. Did you give anybody any money?—No, sir.

12954. Do you know of anybody getting any money?—No, I don't.

12955. Did anybody ask you for any money?—No, they didn't.

12956. Did none of the voters that you spoke to on Mr. Munster's behalf ask for any money?—I asked some of them who were they going to vote for, and they told me "for the man that would give the most money."

12957. Do you remember any of those that said that?—A couple of them, sir.

12958. Who were they?—One of them is William Neill, and the other, I believe, Daniel Moloney, and both of the Commons of Attykitt, I believe.

12959. Do they live in Hill's Lot?—I don't know whether 'tis Attykitt's Lot or Hill's Lot. It isn't Doctor Moloney's lot.

12960. What did you say when they said they would vote for the man that would give the most money?—They told me they would vote less for Mr. O'Beirne than for Mr. Munster.

12961. Did they say what difference they would make between the two?—They didn't. They said they heard Mr. Munster was giving plenty money, and I said I didn't know of that.

12962. How long was that before the election?—About eleven days.

12963. Did they say how much they expected?—They did not. I asked them how much would they be satisfied to take, and they told me they didn't know, but whatever would be going the way they would vote for Mr. O'Beirne less than Mr. Munster. I asked them how many would vote for Mr. Munster if they were satisfied with the settlement, and if there was a certain sum lodged in the bank would they accept of it, to get it after the election, and they said not; I asked them if they got half notes now, and the rest after the election, and they said not, they didn't want bills or bonds, that they got enough of them before.

12964. Were the two of them together when this conversation occurred?—Yes, sir, they were.

12965. Who had told you to adopt those modes of ensuring that they would keep faith with you? Was it Mr. Pat Laffan?—No, sir; he wasn't aware of it. I went to him after, myself and another.

12966. Who was the other?—John Butler, and Mr. Pat Laffan told me he wasn't empowered to give money; so after that we didn't make any allusion to money after, sir. He said it wasn't in his power to give money to anyone.

12967. Had you no other conversations of the same kind with any other men?—Unless with the same William Neill and his uncle Jer. Neill.

12968. Where was that?—The three of us met in the Main-street.

12969. Is Jer. Neill a voter?—He lives in the one yard with his nephew.

12970. Is Jer. Neill a voter?—He is, sir.

12971. Is William Neill a voter?—He is. They went down to Mr. Munster's hotel with me.

12972. What occurred there?—We went up stairs and we came on the landing of the stairs. Jer. Neill turned round and said this was no place for him to be; the nephew remained and went into the room, and what happened there I don't know.

12973. Is that the room the mysterious man was in?—No, sir; the mysterious man wasn't in being then.

12974. How long was it before the election?—About a week, I believe, sir.

12975. Who was in the room?—I can't say which of the Laffans, but I believe one of them was, and Mr. Scallan.

12976. Had you any conversation with Jer. Neill before he turned back and said that was no place for him, similar to what you had with John Neill and Daniel Moloney?—I hadn't, sir.

12977. Did he say he would vote for whoever gave most money?—He didn't, sir, but the other two parties did.

32978. Was he by at any conversation of that kind between you and William Neill?—No, sir; but I told him it was no harm to him to come and see what he could do. He said whatever he would get he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

12979. Were you conversing with the voters in the Attykitt neighbourhood?—No, sir. I was never in the Commons only the day that Mr. Munster went there.

12980. Were you not speaking to any other voters there but Attykitt voters?—No, sir. We often had conversations when I met them, but not anything serious.

12981. There was nothing similar to that conversation?—No, sir, there wasn't.

12982. Are you aware of any of the others having promised money?—No, sir.

12983. Were you not canvassing with them?—No, sir; I didn't see e'er a voter any time.

12984. Did you only canvass two voters for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir. We did several other things for him. We protected him through the town, and other things.

12985. Was it Mr. Michael Laffan that employed you?—Yes, sir.

12986. What took place when you were employed by him?—He sent for the five of us. He wanted us to do all we could for Mr. Munster. We said we would do all in our power for Mr. Munster, for his interest and protection, and every other thing; and we spoke ourselves after to Mr. Laffan, and he said he would see us settled for.

12987. When was that?—After the election, sir.

12988. Did Mr. Laffan give you any specific directions how to forward Mr. Munster's interests?—There was a line of conduct marked out for us, sir.

12989. Who put it into your head about lodging the money in bank and giving half-notes?—Only my own head, sir. I thought so when I was interested to get every man to come.

12990. Did Mr Laffan give you any directions to offer any bribe?—He didn't, sir. I went to Mr. Pat Laffan, and he told me 'twasn't in his power to give any money; so after that we didn't speak to any man about money.

12991. Did you not process Mr. Munster for £20?—Yes, sir, I did.

12992. What time did you process Mr. Munster?—On Friday, sir.

12993. To the next coming sessions?—Yes, sir.

John Quirke recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Quirke

12994. Have you brought your book?—I have, sir. (Hands in a book.)

12995. How much do you make the account altogether?—£29 10*s.*, or £30 altogether. The car account commenced in October. The man that kept the account is here; he can explain it.

John Apperson sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Apperson.

12996. I want the account. You say it was about £29?—I think that, sir. [Witness shows the account, and explains the items, which include copies of two ballads "neither worth keeping," placards against bribery, &c.]

12997. How much was the car account?—The entries in the book are there; it commences in October. Some of them are not brought out.

12998. Do I understand that you have entered the cars supplied to Mr. Munster, but that you have not brought out the items in some of them?—Yes, sir.

12999. Did you calculate how much they would come to?—No, sir. Mr. Quirke put the charges to it, as he always does in the accounts. He puts the prices of all cars and orders.

13000. How many cars were there supplied?—I couldn't tell you, for they were out night and day.

13001. Did you make out a list of the entries that are here?—I did, sir.

13002. About how many are they?—I couldn't tell you sir, they are so numerous.

THIRTEENTH DAY.
October 18.

John Quirke.

John Quirke recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13003. Mr. Quirke, have you a copy of the bill? You said you had a copy of the bill?—I have not, sir.

Mr. Edward H. Biggin.

Mr. Edward H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13004. Mr. Biggin, have you the bill?—I have not, sir.

John Quirke.

John Quirke's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13005. Witness.—There was a lot of cars, and we came to the understanding then, as I wasn't able to supply Mr. Munster cars. "'Tis better for you," says I to Mr. Leahy, "to call in a certain number of horses, such as I used at former elections, and," says I, "we'll have them in the stable always ready for a call." Then them were to be ready for Mr. Munster, and them were not entered in the book at all. There was a certain date, from the date in the book until the bill went to Mr. Munster.

13006. Have for me in the morning, if you have materials for doing it, a copy of the account you sent in. You are not to invent it?—I'll give you the amount of the bill, and I'll go as near as I can to it.

13007. You have told us already it was nearly £150?—Yes.

John Apperson.

John Apperson's examination resumed by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13008. You were not present when those cars were ordered?—No, sir.

13009. Whose writing is this?—I can't say, sir. [Quirke.—They were done by the woman in the shop.] All the cars got before the day of the polling were made out on a separate account; and any car got after that you see "post" to it. I posted them in a separate account.

13010. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Where is the account you got of all the cars?—They are not posted in the ledger. After the election they are all posted; before the election they are not posted, but they are entered there.

John Quirke.

John Quirke's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13011. What was the date of your arrangement with Mr. Leahy?—I couldn't tell you, sir; but it stops there until about a fortnight after the election, when I billed Mr. Leahy. The account stops at so many horses a day until it commences in the bill again. Mr. Munster paid it regularly weekly, or according as he would get the account, from that since.

13012. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Are all the cars supplied for Mr. Munster's use entered in this book?—They are, and the cars he is paying for now.

13013. Are all the cars he ever got from you entered in this book?—With the exception of the time I settled with Mr. Leahy. When I settled with Mr. Leahy, I arranged with him to keep so many cars in the stable.

John Apperson.

John Apperson recalled at the desire of Mr. Munster.

13014. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster wishes to know what was the date of the bills for the reward of £500 for the discovery of bribery?—They were done twice, sir; November 6th and December 2nd.

13015. Five hundred pounds?—Yes, sir; I think so; and some smaller sum for private information.

(Adjourned).

FOURTEENTH DAY!
October 19.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1869.

John Apperson

John Apperson recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13016. You have a list charged from the day of polling down to the 3rd of December?—Yes.

13017. Did I understand Mr. Quirke to say, yesterday, that he sent in his bill, and was paid regularly by Mr. Munster his bill for cars after the polling?—You did, sir. Your direction to me was to give you a list of cars. I followed it.

13018. Yes. Mr. Quirke was paid for all the cars supplied after the polling?—He was, sir. If you look at the ledger it will throw some light on it. There is no entry there until after the polling, in the ledger; but there is in the day book. I extracted from them both.

13019. Did not Mr. Quirke say these were all paid?—He said they were all paid up to the 20th, I think, sir.

13020. You keep the account?—I keep the account, but I can't say whether paid or not.

13021. Do you keep the accounts also of all the stationery and other things supplied from the establishment?—No, sir; I keep the car account.

13022. Does that ledger contain any account for stationery or other things supplied from the shop?—No, sir; nothing but cars.

13023. The printing account amounts to about £29?—Yes, sir. Perhaps I should explain to your worship that in case of an agreement with Mr. Quirke—now in the case of the Marquis of Hastings when he stood a candidate for Waterford, Mr. Quirke got £98 for his cars for two days, and there was no entry made, it being entirely in a bulk sum—I understand he agreed for a bulk sum with Mr. Munster's people at the polling day, consequently I didn't enter it.

Denis Dwyer, of Friar-street, sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. Denis Dwyer.

13024. Mr. Dwyer, you received a sum of £30 at the election?—I did, sir.

13025. What was it for?—I suppose for my vote.

13026. With whom did you arrange the sum of £30?—Three nights before the election, about the hour of ten o'clock at night, I was sent for to my house. We had our clothes off to go to bed, when a rap came to the door to say I was wanted at the hotel. When I went to the door I could see no person. I went down straight to the hotel, and went upstairs, up as high as the second flight of stairs. I saw two people there on the lobby. It was dark a little. They pointed me that way to the door. I went and opened the door, and I closed it after me again. I saw a man sitting down by the side of a table, with his face covered with a large shawl. I could see nothing but a part of his cheek and his nose. He had a hat on him. He asked me was I Denis Dwyer. I told him I was. He pulled out from other papers part of a sheet of paper to me, and laid a pen and ink near me. I wrote my name, and laid down the pen then, and the money was laid on a piece of paper just to my hand. I took the money and counted it, and laid it on the paper again. I then took up the paper and folded it, and I walked out. I didn't say one word to him, nor he to me, ever after.

13027. Had you no arrangement before that with anyone?—Not a word.

13028. For whom did you vote?—Mr. Munster, sir.

13029. Did you vote in 1865 for anyone?—I never had a vote before that time.

13030. Is that your handwriting [is handed bill, and identifies his signature]?—It is my writing.

John Quirke recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. John Quirke.

13031. At what time was it you said you made the arrangement with Mr. Leahy for the cars for Mr. Munster for the election?—After this, sir [hands in a bill]. I sent that bill to Mr. Laffan, and it wasn't paid. They weren't paying any accounts then. After that I met Mr. Leahy, and it was then he came to terms with me. He desired me go down; that I would be paid that bill any time I liked, because I said I thought it was fair to get money on account. I said I was satisfied, and didn't want any money, and I could get it altogether. Then from that the arrangement went on. I always got once and a half or twice as much for cars as I got there; but for being in the town I reduced.

13032. Whose writing is that at the bottom there?—A while ago I wrote it, sir, to put me in mind of some things to tell you about former elections.

13033. What do you wish to say about them?—Here is something more explaining it [hands in another document]. I wrote it afterwards, to show you the way former elections went on.

13034. Do you say that after the date of this bill, which is the 2nd November, you made an arrangement with Mr. Leahy for a bulk sum?—For a pound a horse for so many horses. When the election was over—and then I settled with him when the election was over—when I put in the bill, he said it was unfair to charge so much. "Well," I said, "give me half horses from that out," and for any other horses Mr. Munster wanted, I was to charge sixpence a mile, which Mr. Munster paid me.

13035. How many horses were you to supply?—Six horses.

13036. For how many days?—Until the election was over, I suppose—about eleven days.

13037. From the 2nd November until the election was over?—Until I agreed with him, I was some time without giving any horses; from the time the bill was drawn until I met Mr. Leahy.

13038. What day did you meet Mr. Leahy?—About eleven days before the election.

13039. And then you were to get £6 a day for those eleven days?—Yes, sir.

13040. That is £66, is that what you say?—Yes, and then there was ——.

13041. You say you did not enter that arrangement in any book?—No, I didn't, only what some of the boys for their own memory had to get; some of them entered in the books, but I told them not.

13042. What do you mean by that?—Why, their own fees, because drivers always get their own fees, exclusive of what I had to get.

13043. Then how does it come to pass that I find in this account given in by your book-keeper—"November 10th, car to Fethard with Mr. Munster; 12th, ditto to Abbeyview; ditto, up and down; 15th, ditto up and down town all day;" 18th, 19th, 20th, and so on. If you had this arrangement to be paid £6 a day for cars with Mr. Leahy, why do I find these entries?—You will find them bills, I mean are not in that book at all, and I desired the boys not to enter them.

13044. Why are these entered here?—Because the boys did it from themselves, as I tell you to jog their memory for the purpose of getting their own fees, because, I understand every Saturday night the boys were paid.

13045. Did you supply anything else to Mr. Munster besides the printing and the cars?—Nothing else; there was some trifling share of stationery.

13046. To what amount?—I only charged 10*s.* for it. There was £29 10*s.* for printing.

13047. I put it down at £29, but it does not amount to so much?—£29 10*s.* is down in the book, and 10*s.* for pens, and paper, and ink.

13048. The whole of that makes £96. I want to know how your claim of £150 was made out?—There was £30 after, until the bill was given, it is for so much a day for the horses; 10*s.* a day for six days for ten days after.

13049. They are every one of them charged here, sir?—I never look over the book at all. It is kept in the office, in the shop, by the young woman.

13050. They are charged down to the 31st December, and you told us you were paid for the cars supplied after the election up to the end of the year?—Not immediately after the election, sir. After my bill was given in I was paid. I was paid after Mr. Munster called in the bills. I was paid regularly after that, but until the bill was given in I was to get 10*s.* a day for each horse.

13051. That is whether the horses were used or not?—Whether used or not. I kept them regularly for them. When Mr. Leahy came to see the bill he said, "Well, now it is unfair to charge so much as the election is over." "Well," says I to him, "are you satisfied to pay half price for them, for all the horses and everything else I was getting." "I am," says he, "that was sixty horses, that made £30."

13052. Had you any conversation with Mr. Leahy about how you were going to vote?—I never had. I gave him to understand, of course, that I was his friend; that where I was employed it was fair I should do every assistance I could in that way.

13053. Have you a son-in-law named Watkins?—Yes, sir.

13054. Had you any conversation with Mr. Watkins about how you would vote?—I hadn't; we never spoke about things of the kind.

13055. Never?—Never.

13056. Did Mr. Watkins tell you that he had any conversation with Mr. Leahy?—No, he never did; but Mr. Watkins was present when Mr. Leahy and I agreed about the horses.

13057. Had you promised Mr. Leahy before you agreed about the horses to vote for Mr. Munster?—Not a word.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

John Quirke.

13058. Was it after you were employed by Mr. Leahy in this way, at £1 a horse for six horses a day, that you said you would vote for Mr. Munster?—I didn't tell him at all. I gave him to understand that I would be a friend from that out. You could be friendly to a person if you had no vote; many a way you might have of introducing Mr. Munster's name to persons you would be talking to. Of course it was my business to assist my friend if I could.

13059. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you ever tell Mr. O'Beirne you would not vote unless you were paid?—I never told him a word at all about it; but Mr. O'Beirne never asked me for my vote.

13060. You might tell him—I didn't tell him.

13061. Or that where you were employed you would vote?—I didn't; he never asked me for my vote, nor neither did Mr. Laffan never ask me about it when he was talking to me.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13062. You gave us yesterday an account of the moneys that you received?—Yes.

13063. And you told us that up to the 15th you received from Mr. Leahy £350; is that so?—I have been thinking over it since, and it occurs to me I must have received some of the £350 after the 15th. I have been thinking over it in connexion with other circumstances.

13064. Have you any means of ascertaining when you did receive it—it is material?—Well, I don't know how I can ascertain it exactly.

13065. I understood you to say yesterday that the £600 was the last money you got from Mr. Leahy?—Yes; but that £600 I got on the 15th; but I have been thinking last night of some circumstances that turned up between Sunday and the day of examination, and it occurred to me that I must have got £50 or £100 from Mr. Leahy after the 15th.

13066. Are you sure that you did not receive more than £1,250?—Quite positive.

13067. I think you are mistaken. Look at that memorandum in the margin, and you will see that on the 1st of November you received £50.

Mr. Munster—I think the witness is speaking of November instead of October all along.

13068. Witness.—November it should have been. That was a mistake. It is marked in this book November.

13069. I think it is obvious that it must be November. Then that observation of mine has no force, for that £50 may have formed a portion of the £350?—Yes; there is £100 I have no date for.

13070. How did that come? You gave all these dates; you said you received on the 11th October £100?—Yes.

13071. Now take that page into your hand?—This was merely after the election. The other night I was copying out some figures. It was not done at the time of the election at all.

13072. How much did you charge yourself with?—Here I have repeated some things twice. There are thirteen hundred and seven pounds marked here.

13073. Well, now, what have you repeated twice?—Well, I can't say exactly without thinking over the account.

13074. Is this the account you made out with Larkin?—Larkin gave me that, sir.

13075. These are your figures at the end, and do you see that you bring out £1,275?—I see I do.

13076. Does that not lead you to believe that you got more than £1,250?—It does not, sir.

13077. How did you make out £1,275?—I counted something twice.

13078. Show me what you counted twice?—I can't recollect.

13079. Do you recollect that you paid Larkin £802?—It was not paid directly by me.

13080. Larkin has an account for £802?—He has.

13081. Tot up the left-hand side of that column, and you will see that you left £35 out of it. You left out Stapleton's money, which is at the bottom?—Yes; it is written in pencil, sir.

13082. I know. Add Stapleton's money, which you know he got, and you will find that you have left £35 out of the tot. You see that Stapleton's money is not in the tot at all?—No.

13083. The tot ought to be £35 more; you make it £1,275, even excluding Stapleton's money. Does that lead you to believe that you got more than £1,250?—No, it does not; it was the way it was put down—some given by Mr. Hackett, some given by this person and that person, some given to Ferris, and so on.

13084. We have it proved that those persons all got the moneys entered opposite their names. Here is "Patrick Laffan, £35," that was paid to you?—Yes, that was £35 I gave to Hackett.

13085. Every one of those Larkin has down here in this book. Here is Stapleton's money, £35, not carried into the tot; add that £35 and you make it just £1,300, and here you have £1,307 12*s.* Now £240 was given to Hackett; two thirties were given to Duggan and Heffernan?—Yes.

13086. Who got the £80?—That was the £80 given to Cunningham one time that I gave him notes. I put it down there as money given to him. That money may have been given as a portion of the £802. Cunningham may have given £30 out of that to the man.

13087. There is £78 12*s.* mentioned here; what is the meaning of that?—That would be a number of small items, the retainers, and the £5 and £7 you see there.

13088. We have that in a separate account; and it is not £78 at all?—It is not, because there are other items which I was paid for, that £78 included retainers and a number of items, some of which were paid on account of my brother. Those items he afterwards paid me and other items.

13089. Did you make up this tot of £1,275 at the time you were engaged with Larkin?—It was about that time, but I don't think it was that day.

13090. And you say that very recently you made up this tot, £1,272 12*s.* In one case it is £1,275 12*s.*, and in the other £1,272 12*s.*, and you have not down the £3 you gave Larkin, which would make this £1,275 12*s.* correspond with the other. I think you will have to search your memory again?—Mr. Leahy never told me the amount he was giving me.

13091. It is quite natural that you might omit a sum of money. Those things were taken hastily and you do not appear to have kept a very accurate account, as you would have done in an ordinary business transaction. Try and bring your recollection over it again?—About that £35 that was given twice; that was originally given to Denis Ryan, he gave it back to Cunningham; Cunningham gave it to Larkin; Larkin then gave it back to Stapleton and he puts it down twice.

13092. Perfectly right; because he charges himself twice with it?—But then you see that he acknowledges having received £35. Now I think that is the £35 he got back from Cunningham. He received it twice and gave it twice.

Denis Ryan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13093. Who ordered Denis Ryan the £35; was it Cunningham or Mr. Laffan?—Cunningham, your worship.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13094. He has down here, "a man unknown, by the order of Mr. Laffan, £35," that cannnot be Denis Ryan, for it was Cunningham that ordered Larkin to pay Denis Ryan £35. Stapleton's was paid on the 18th and this £35 was paid on the 19th?—Wasn't it on the 19th Stapleton was paid?

13095. No, it was on the 19th according to the book?—I think Denis Ryan could tell you.

13096. They both concur; November 18th, Stapleton, and the next date is November 19th, "a man by the order of Mr. Laffan £35"?——There is no other man got £35 to my knowledge, sir. I have gone over the list carefully.

13097. Mr. GRIFFIN.—When were the pencil figures made?—They were made after the election.

13098. These are not entries you made yourself lately?—No, sir.

13099. Mr. MOLLOY.—Is the entry of £50 on the 1st of November correct in this pass book?—Well, I cannot say. I didn't observe that before. There is £100 that I have no date for.

13100. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—On the 1st November there is £50. Read those entries there?—"Received £50 from Mr. L."

13101. Is that Mr. Leahy?—Yes.

13102. What is the next entry to that?—November 4th, received from Mr. L. five shillings.

13103. What is the next entry there?—Borrowed from Captain Byrne £1 10*s*. That was for some car hire, it was afterwards repaid.

13104. You said you got £50 from Mr. Leahy on the 1st of November?—Yes.

13105. If you add that to the £1,250 you acknowledge, it makes £1,300?—I bring in every sum into the figures that are here.

13106. You debit yourself with £1,307?—Yes, but there was an error in making that calculation.

13107. You admitted this morning that you did not recollect that £50 before. That added to the £1,250 you acknowledged yesterday makes £1,300. I have no reason to doubt that you are now determined, as far as you can, to make amends for what you have done. It is quite natural you might fall into those mistakes?—If you permit me to take that book, I will see how I could do it.

13108. I will give you all the books, and you can go over them again.

13109. Mr. GRIFFIN.—I see items there making £78 10*s*., what are those items?—There is Quinlan, the retainer, for £10, and telegraph money £3.

13110. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You have that charged to another account altogether?—I have given you an account of them. I have copied them out.

13111. There is another mistake I want to call your attention to. I asked you yesterday how much money you gave Hackett, and you told me £240?—Yes.

13112. And that you got back £117 8*s*.?—Yes.

13113. That left £122 12*s*.?—Yes.

13114. He acknowledged to have paid £110?—Yes.

13115. That leaves £12 12*s*. balance. You told me that was paid to Mr. Dolan, a veterinary surgeon?—Yes.

13116. That is an error on your part, because you took credit for that out of this £66 also?—Afterwards I made out a bill of some sums that I went and had paid out of this money for other than election purposes. I gave the bill to my brother, and he gave me back that sum.

13117. You debit yourself with £1,250, and with £66 3*s*. You discharge yourself of portion of that £1,250 by saying, "I paid £240 to Hackett?"—No, I don't say that; it is only in this book that is mentioned, sir.

13118. The £12 12*s*. remained in his hands to pay Mr. Dolan?—Yes.

13119. There is the £12 12*s*. again charged?—I paid him the twelve guineas, and there is £7 mentioned in Larkin's bill also that I afterwards charged my brother with, and he paid me; and I held myself chargeable with that money at the end of the list, the same as if I had not paid those twelve guineas or this £7 at all.

13120. Mr. GRIFFIN—Is this the bill as furnished by you to your brother of expenses incurred by you?—That is only a copy of it.

13121. These are a number of legitimate expenses?—They are a number of legitimate expenses, and these have been abstracted—the greater part of them—from this book.

13122. Yes, I can understand that very well.

13123. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You are certain of the £1,250 and of the £63 6*s*. 1*d*.?—Yes; I think I didn't actually receive the £63 6*s*. 1*d*. at all.

13124. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You said you were paid it by your brother?—Yes.

13125. And your brother takes credit for paying you £66 6*s*. 1*d*.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13126. Do you not, Mr. Laffan?—I do, sir.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13127. You got £1,250 and £66 6*s*. 1*d*.?—But out of that £1,250 the greater portion of the £63 was spent, and afterwards got back, just the same as if I hadn't spent it all.

13128. Who is Michael Callaghan that is made the payee of those notes?—I don't know, sir.

13129. Are not those notes written by you [is handed the promissory notes]. One will do as well as all?—No, sir; they are not.

13130. Whose writing is that?—I think it is young Mr. Richardson's.

13131. Who is young Mr. Richardson?—The son of Mr. Richardson, Mr. Munster's expense agent.

13132. The son of Mr. Richardson, Mr. Munster's expense agent?—Yes.

13133. They are all in the same handwriting?—So I see, sir.

13134. Somebody said they were in your writing?—That is a mistake, sir.

13135. Then those notes, given for bribing those men, are all in young Mr. Richardson's handwriting?—Young Mr. Richardson was at the hotel, and wanted a number of notes written. I gave him one, and told him to copy a number of them out. He was a young gentleman over here with Mr. Munster at the time. He took no part in the election, but was merely looking on.

13136. What age is he?—I should think about seventeen or eighteen; he may be more.

13137. Was it you that put in Michael Callaghan's name?—No; I think it must have been done by Larkin.

13138. It is plainly not Larkin?—I saw by the paper M'Carthy was in some.

13139. Mr. GRIFFIN.—That is a mistake; the witness stated he thought M'Carthy, but these are all to Michael Callaghan.

13140. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Michael is written in a different handwriting, as if the surname was known, and the Christian name not. You will see at once that you are not correct in saying it was Larkin wrote the names. There is Larkin's writing underneath the man's mark and the amount of money; therefore Michael Callaghan's name must have been supplied. You see in the first note "Callaghan" and "Michael" are in very different handwriting?—I do, sir.

13141. You do not know, then, who Michael Callaghan is?—I do not, sir.

13142. Although you tell us that you are the person that got them written?—Yes; that is my impression, that I told Richardson to write them.

13143. You drew the first note?—I certainly was under the impression I put in Michael Callaghan, and drew one of them.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

13144. You charged yourself with a balance of £107 18*s.* 7*d.*; how was that money spent?—It has not been spent for election purposes.

13145. How was it spent?—It is chargeable to myself.

13146. The entire amount?—Yes.

13147. The entire amount is chargeable to you?—Yes.

13148. And was not spent in election matters at all?—No.

13149. Did you pay any of it to any person?—No.

13150. Look at this first letter. You say you received that letter from Mr. Leahy?—Yes, sir.

13151. Just read it if you please?—Thurles, November 4th, 1868.

13152. It is written from the palace. Mr. Leahy is brother of the Archbishop?—Yes.

"The Palace, Thurles,
"November 4th, 1868.

"MY DEAR MR. PATRICK,—You will, I doubt not, excuse the familiarity of my address, and yet I have no reason for what I say, except your generous character may afford me an excuse. If you have not enough means at command, I shall take care to supply them when and where you like; only say where and when. In the meantime I know you wish to prosecute your medical studies, and you might find help in Paris. If you went there to-morrow or after, you might return by Dieppe or Havre to Newhaven near Brighton, and perhaps you could call and stay for a time at Sillwood Lodge in Brighton.

"Ever yours,
"E. LEAHY.

"Reply at once to me. M., at Gresham to-day."

13153. At the time you got this letter of the 4th November had you any intention of going to prosecute your studies at Paris?—No, I had not, sir.

13154. Therefore when Mr. Leahy wrote that it had some hidden meaning, which is not the meaning the words would ordinarily bear. What does it allude to?—Mr. Leahy said to me before I went to Dublin, about a week before that letter, he asked me would I like to go to Paris, and I said I would.

13155. Before you went up or went away?—Before I went up.

13156. Surely you did not go to Dublin until a very long time after this. You were here fully engaged on the 4th November, and had not gone to Dublin?—That letter I received in Dublin, sir.

13157. This letter?—Yes, sir, a week after the election.

13158. Dated 4th November?—Yes, sir.

13159. Your recollection must clearly be wrong?—Oh, it is not, it is in Dublin I received it. See might it be December.

13160. I do not think it looks like it at all. "If you have not means at command, I shall take care to supply them; only say where and when." What means did that refer to? Is it not your opinion that it referred to money for the election?—Yes, sir.

13161. Therefore it must have been written about the time it bears date?—It is December, sir. It is December there, because I left Dublin for Paris on the 6th December, and I got it a day or two before.

13162. "If you went there to-morrow or after you might return by Dieppe or Havre to Newhaven, near Brighton, and perhaps could call and stay for a time at Sillwood Lodge, in Brighton." Were you at Sillwood Lodge?—No, sir.

13163. What is the meaning of that passage?—To call at Sillwood Lodge.

13164. What was the meaning of pretending you were going over to prosecute your medical studies, and that you would call at Sillwood Lodge, and stay for a time there? Was it that you might stay out of the way there, lying perdu?—I don't think he had that meaning, because as I was going to Paris I could stay there without going to Sillwood Lodge. I don't know he had any particular meaning. I believe Sillwood Lodge is a residence of Mr. Munster, and I might call there for some time.

13165. Is Sillwood Lodge a residence of Mr. Munster?—I believe it is. I left Dublin on the 6th December; I got that on Saturday, the 5th.

13166. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Tell me what is the meaning of this—"If you have not enough means at command I shall take care to supply them when and where you like; only say where and when." It could not refer to your going to Paris from what follows: "in the meantime I know you wish to promote your medical studies, and you might find help in Paris." Did that refer to the election?—No, sir, not at all, because the election was over at this time. It referred to the expense of going to Paris. It was after the election was over in December.

13167. Why did your generous character afford an excuse for offering you money to go to Paris?—I think it is about the familiarity of his address that he talks with regard to generous character.

13168. Why did he date that 4th November if he was not writing it then?—I don't know, sir; perhaps it is written indistinctly there. It is like November, but I certainly received on the 5th December, for I went the day after.

13169. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—At the top there is, "Reply at once to me. M., at Gresham to-day?"—Yes, sir; that alludes to Mr. Munster's being seen at the Gresham hotel.

13170. I have to ask you now, Mr. Laffan, where you went when you went from Dublin. You went to Paris on the 5th December, you say?—I left Dublin on the 6th.

13171. Did you go for the purpose of being out of the way, so as not to be served with a subpœna for the petition?—I did, sir.

13172. With whom were you in communication when you were in Paris?—With Mr. Leahy.

13173. Anybody else?—Yes, I communicated with my brother; that is, not with my brother here, but my brother the doctor in Dublin.

13174. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know William Cullen, a voter, of Boherclough?—I do.

13175. You sent for him one night to go up to you?—I did.

13176. What did you want him for?—To offer him a £10 retainer.

13177. What took place when he went to you at Corcoran's?—We had a conversation, the particulars of which I do not remember; but, at all events, I offered him a £10 retainer, and he refused it.

13178. Did you offer him £15?—I may have advanced from ten to fifteen, but I do not remember the circumstance, but that I offered him a retainer and he refused, is the only point I remember.

13179. Had you known he was pledged to Mr. O'Beirne at the time?—I had not.

13180. What did he say when you offered him the retainer?—He declined it.

13181. Did he give any reason?—I do not think he did.

13182. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Who is H. Hunt, whose name I see here?—He is a reporter.

13183. Who is Hourigan?—He was leading the mob.

13184. And Donnell?—Donnell is a voter.

13185. What was Donnell paid £2 for. There are telegraph men, £2; boys, £5; Donnell, £2?—That alludes to a man that was engaged at Abbeyview about some men there; he is not a voter.

13186. There is another, R. O'Donnell, £2 4*s.*?—That is the same; he was paid for paying men.

13187. There was a man named Donnell examined here, who told us that you gave him some money?—Yes; Thomas O'Donnell. He is down in the other account—the narrow slip.

13188. It is from that I am reading it. There is no Thomas—there is Richard O'Donnell, R. O'Donnell, and Donnell without any Christian name? [No answer.]

13189. Have you got the canvassing lists?—I found only one canvassing list, and there is one of the sheets out of it.

13190. Have you looked over it?—Yes, I have looked at it, sir. I see that Mr. Munster's supporters were marked on it.

13191. Have you found any papers that would enable you to give us any information as to any demands of money made on you, or requests of money from you from any voters during the election?—All the papers I could find are on the file; they are merely a few receipts.

13192. Have you, amongst them, found anything to refresh your memory, and enable you to say you were asked for money by any voter during the election?—No.

13193. What were those men doing under O'Donnell?—There was scarcely a week he had not employed people at Abbeyview, minding the gates, attending to the avenue, and things of that kind—they were labouring men.

13194. You have no marks on this list that would assist you in what I have been asking you?—No, sir.

13195. I give you all these documents back, the two accounts you furnished, and the account you settled with Larkin, and you have your own book.

13196. Mr. Munster.—If you would ask Mr. Laffan—there was a bazaar for the North William-street Orphanage in Dublin very early in December. He went with a large party up by early train from Thurles?—Witness—I remember it perfectly, and it was after that that I got the letter from Mr. Leahy.

13197. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Then you knew Mr. Munster was in Dublin before you got that letter?—I knew he was in Dublin.

13198. What was the meaning of Mr. Leahy writing to you that Mr. Munster would be in Dublin? When did you go to Dublin?—I do not know the date.

13199. How long did you stay in Dublin?—I staid in Dublin a week.

13200. Was Mr. Munster in Dublin the whole of that time?—No; he was not; he staid only two or three days, and then went down to Cashel.

13201. Did he come back again before you went away?—He came back again according to that letter before I went away.

13202. It is only by that letter you remember it?—Oh, yes; the day I got the letter I saw Mr. Munster in Dublin. I was not speaking to him, but I saw him in the street.

13203. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—At the time you got that £600 did Mr. Leahy know how you were going to apply it?—Did he know how I was going to apply it?

13204. Yes?—Well, do you mean in details, or a general way?

13205. In a general way?—Well, I think he did.

13206. Had you not at this time given up the contrivance about the retainers, and abandoned it as worthless?—Yes.

13207. Did you not tell Mr. Leahy that the plan was worthless?—Yes, I did.

13208. And I think you told Mr. Leahy also that they were bribing at the other side?—Yes.

13209. And that he said, "why don't you begin?"—Yes.

13210. Have you a clear recollection that that occurred?—I have. I think Cunningham was present at the time, sir.

13211. Read that letter to yourself, you need not read it out [witness is handed a letter]. That letter is of course plainly written for a purpose. It does not disclose the writer's real state of mind at the time he wrote it. Is that so?—Well, Mr. Leahy did tell me one morning not to do so, after he had given me the money.

13212. He first supplied you with the money to do it, and then he told you not to do it! Do you think he was serious when he said that to you; or do you think he said it to have the opportunity of saying that he told you not to do it—I am only asking you what was your impression at the time?—I forget exactly what was my impression at the time, but I believe it was for the purpose of saying he told me.

13213. Now I want to know is this Richard Donnell a voter?—No, sir.

13214. Is he connected with a voter?—He is son-in-law to a voter.

13215. Son-in-law of James Carroll?—Yes.

13216. He voted for Mr. Munster?—He did.

13217. How much money did you give Donnel altogether?—I cannot say, but the money I gave him was not for himself; it was to pay men; he used to pay the men; there were several labouring men engaged about Abbeyview, and he used pay them, and used come to me and I paid him.

13218. Did you make any arrangement with him in consideration of his father-in-law's vote?—No.

13219. Did you make any arrangement with his father-in-law?—No.

13220. Although you paid no more money than you have down in this list, did you promise money to anyone that has not been paid?—Yes.

13221. To whom did you promise any money?—Well, I think that after the election, that John Looby of the Green was up with me, and he was asking me about money, and I intimated to him that I thought he could get it after the—after some time.

13222. That is hardly distinct enough. He was asking you for money?—After the election he came to me to know was I going to settle.

13223. Had you any arrangement with him before the election?—No, sir.

13224. Did anything pass between you to lead him to believe that you would give him money?—I do not think there did.

13225. You say that after the election he came to you to ask if you would give him money?—Yes.

13226. That was for having voted, was it?—I believe so.

13227. And you led him to believe he would get it afterwards?—I led him to believe that he would get it some time.

13228. Is there any other case of a similar nature, Mr. Laffan?—Well, I dare say there are others to whom I did intimate something of the kind, but I do not remember.

13229. Well, you know it is very necessary for us to know it. So far as this inquiry is concerned, it is quite the same whether the money was paid or not; so do not imagine you are only to try to recollect those to whom you paid the money?—I remember telling a similar thing to a man named Tom Connors after the election. Both these occurred after the election.

13230. Did Thomas Connors come to you to ask it?—Yes, he came up to the house, but there was no understanding of any kind before passed.

13231. But after the election he came to you to ask it?—Yes.

13232. Is that Thomas Connors of Canopy-street?—Yes.

13233. Did anybody else?—No, I do not think there was anybody else.

13234. As your attention was not directed to this before, you will have the goodness, if you please, to think of it, and see if any men did come to you. You will tell me afterwards, if you recollect, if any other men came in the same way?—Yes; I recollect other men, but they had got the money—Denis Heffernan

13235. We have that case proved already. You will tell me, if you please, again, any other person that came to ask you for money, or with whom any arrangement was made that was not carried out. There was some controversy between Larkin and Thomas Looby, from whom you bought the jennet; that leads me to ask you was there any other man engaged in paying money but Larkin?—No.

13236. No one else?—No one else.

13237. Do you know Thomas Looby, of Hughes's Lot?—Yes.

13238. Had you any arrangement with him about voting at the election?—No; I don't think I had. I don't remember speaking to that man at all.

13239. Had you any sort of arrangement or talk with Edmund Long?—No.

13240. Do you know what influenced him to vote for you?—Do you mean my belief?

13241. Yes?—It is very hard for me to form an opinion.

13242. You have no reason to believe one way or the other?—No; I have not.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

13243. I do not want you to guess at all. Mr. Molloy wishes to call your attention to Cunningham's evidence: "I heard that Edmund Long was not paid. I think Mr. Laffan once said that Edmund Long was promised money, but he didn't say how much." Have you any recollection of that?

Patrick Cunningham.

Patrick Cunningham recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13244. Do you recollect saying that, Cunningham?—I do, sir. I thought so at the time.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13245. Witness.—That he was promised money by the other side?

13246. No; but by your side?—I don't remember.

13247. You will endeavour to recollect if any other men were promised, although not paid, or if they came to ask you?—I will.

13248. You can take up the register and go through it?—Yes.

13249. Mr. Michael J. Laffan applies for the letters to peruse them.

13250. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I would rather not show them at present. Mr. Patrick Laffan will please not say anything about those letters to any one.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

The Rev. James M'Namara sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13251. Mr. M'Namara, you know Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Well, I do I believe. I do—I ought to know him.

13252. You are a Roman Catholic clergyman?—Yes.

13253. Are you a secular or regular?—Regular.

13254. Of what order?—The Order of Saint Francis.

13255. I believe you reside in Thurles?—I do.

13256. And you officiate in a church of your order, I suppose?—I officiate daily in my own house in a little capella of my own; in the Cathedral, and at other churches of the diocese during the year. On Sundays, when I am asked, I go to the Cathedral; and then I go collecting alms to country churches and chapels.

13257. Do you recollect getting two bags of money in the month of November last?—I do, my lord, but I don't know what were in them; I was not told what were in the bags.

13258. But you got two bags?—They were left in my house.

13259. Had you them in your hand?—Well, I had my hand on them, perhaps.

13260. And lifted them?—Yes.

13261. And you found they were weighty?—Yes.

13262. You were quite sure it was not pebbles were in them?—It might be brass, but there was something in them.

13263. But you know it was money?—Well, it was; but I couldn't swear to that, because I didn't see it.

13264. Who left those two bags with you?—Really I don't know who was the first person that brought them. I left them on the chimney-piece there.

13265. Who gave them to you?—I couldn't know him—I couldn't know him.

13266. On what day did you get them?—Oh, I don't know.

13267. You must try to recollect. Do you recollect the day you gave them?—I suppose it was the next day some one called for them.

13268. Do you recollect the day you gave them to Mr. Laffan?—I do not.

13269. Do you see Mr. Laffan in court?—I do. He will tell himself. I thought there would be no more about it, because I had no interest in the case.

13270. Do you recollect giving them to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes; I believe I do; he called in, at all events.

13271. Now, is your memory so very bad that you do not recollect giving them?—Yes.

13272. You do not often in your life, I suppose, get two bags of gold; it is a thing that would leave an impression on any one's recollection. Do you recollect giving them to Mr. Patrick Laffan on a Sunday?—No, I do not.

13273. Do you recollect the fact of giving them to Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes, I do recollect.

13274. You told me they were brought the day before?—Yes, I believe so.

13275. Did you see the person who brought them?—I didn't know him.

13276. That is not an answer to my question, sir?—Whether I was inside or outside.

13277. Did you see the person who brought them was my question?—I saw some person that brought them, I should think.

13278. It is not likely that it is a message that would be given to a servant; it is most probable it was given to yourself. I therefore ask you did you see the person who brought them?—I couldn't say that—whether I was inside at the reception of it.

13279. Inside or outside is perfectly immaterial. I ask you again, did you see the person who brought the money?—Well, I couldn't say, but I know it was left there; it was brought there.

13280. Was there any letter left with it?—I should think not. I didn't find it.

13281. Really you must give me better evidence?—Sure I thought I wouldn't be called on this trial about it at all.

13282. Did you know what you were to do with them?—I left it on the chimney-piece until he called for it the next morning.

13283. Pray again recollect you are giving your evidence?—I am.

13284. And that at least you ought to give your evidence, for I cannot say that you are. I asked you did you know what you were to do with them, and your answer was, "I left them on the chimney-piece until he would call for them." Surely you know that that is no answer. Do you know what you were to do with those two bags of money?—I suppose to protect them until he would call for them.

13285. Were you told a person would call for them?—I was.

13286. Were you told who would call for them?—I don't know.

13287. Would you have given them to any person that called for them?—I would not.

13288. If I called would you have given them to me?—I would not.

13289. Did the person that left those two bags tell you to whom they were to be given?—Yes, he did. He said it was to Mr. Laffan they would be given.

13290. He said it was to Mr. Laffan they were to be given?—Yes.

13291. Did he tell you where he came from?—He did not.

13292. Before he came there did you know that the money would be left there?—No.

13293. Did you know such a message would be left there?—Before the first arrival?

13294. Yes?—I did not.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

13295. Do you know Mr. Leahy?—Which Mr. Leahy?

13296. The brother of the archbishop?—I do know him.

13297. Have you ever had any conversation with Mr. Leahy with reference to those two bags?—Never.

13298. Have you ever had any conversation with any person except the person who brought them and Mr. Laffan?—Never.

[The short-hand writer reads question and answer No. 13264.]

13299. You repeated to me twice, Mr. M'Namara, an answer which requires some explanation. You repeated to me twice, "I really don't know who was the first person who gave them to me." You repeated that twice?—Well, I don't know.

13300. Or when they were first brought?—I didn't know him—at first.

13301. I want to know why you said, "I don't know who first brought them." Were they taken away and brought again?—They were not; they were only brought in once, and taken away the next.

13302. Will you have the goodness to tell me all the person who brought this money said to you when he brought it into your place?—I forget; but I think he said nothing but to leave them there until they would be called for.

13303. He surely said more than that, Mr. M'Namara. He surely said more than "leave them here until they will be called for?"—Well, I don't recollect what he said.

13304. Have you no recollection whatever of what he said?—Not the least, unless he left them there to be called for. In short, I didn't take much notice of them at all.

13305. Did you suspect it was money?—I couldn't say which.

13306. Did you suspect it was money?—I suppose it must have been something like it.

13307. And do you mean to say you took charge of two bags of money from a person you did not know, receiving no more instruction than "they are to be left here until they are called for?"—I told all I know about it.

13308. Mr. Laffan, when under examination here yesterday, was very unwilling to mention your name. He was bound under the compulsion of his oath, and under our power here to mention your name. With great reluctance he mentioned your name, and he gave, as a reason for his reluctance, to mention your name this—that you bound him never to mention your name in connexion with it?—I never said any such thing.

Mr. Patrick Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

13309. Mr. Laffan, stand up, if you please. Did you say that yesterday?—Yes, I did, sir.

13310. Did the Rev. Mr. M'Namara bind you to secrecy in connexion with that transaction?—The way it occurred was this:—When I was going away and bidding him good-by, he put up his hand [witness makes a descriptive gesture], and said "not a word, not a word."

The Rev. James M'Namara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

13311. Did you wish Mr. Laffan not to speak about it?—Oh, I didn't tell him to speak about it.

13312. You told me a minute ago that you never mentioned this matter to any one. If it was a perfectly innocent transaction, would you not have gossipped about it with your acquaintances and friends? I want to know why you did not mention it—you who say you did not know it was money?—I didn't know it was.

13313. And you say you never mentioned it to a human being?—No.

13314. When you got it where did you put it?—I left it on the chimney-piece.

13315. Did you leave it there all night?—I did.

13316. Was it sealed?—It was sealed.

13317. Were they canvas bags or leather bags?—I don't know which. It was well sealed, at all events. I left it so.

13318. Did you ask the person that came with it to sit down or to stay for a while, or anything?—I don't think I did.

13319. Did he stay any time at all in your place?—A very short time, I should think. He only came in and walked away, I should think.

13320. Was it a man or a woman: do you recollect that much?—It was a man.

13321. Was he an old man or a young man?—Rather young—a young man. I didn't ask him for his name.

13322. You did not ask his name?—No.

13323. Why did you not ask his name?—Because, whatever it was, he was sure it would be safe for him.

13324. At the time you got it did you suspect it was money?—I couldn't swear to that.

13325. Now, I did not ask you that. Pray have the goodness to answer my question?—Yes.

13326. Well, answer it?—Well, I suppose it may be.

13327. That is not an answer to my question?—Well, I couldn't say it was money, because I didn't see it.

13328. That is not an answer to my question. I am very sorry to have to repeat it so often. I ask you again, at the time that you got it did you suspect it was money?—Well, I suspected there was something in it.

13329. That is not an answer to my question. Mr. M'Namara, I am exceedingly sorry to be obliged to say to a person in your position—a person of your sacred profession, who ought to set an example of the greatest candour to persons in the humbler paths of life, and who are to be instructed by your example as well as your word—I have to tell you that I sent a man to prison the other day for what you have just done, four times refusing to answer my question. I have to ask you again, at the time you got those bags did you suspect it was money was in them?—Well, I suppose I did. I couldn't be sure of it.

13330. Do you mean to say then that, without knowing anything beforehand, without knowing the name of the person who brought it, or without asking any question, you took the money, and never inquired where it came from, or for what purpose it was left?—I never inquired for what or where, never.

13331. Did you suspect where the money came from?—I did not.

13332. You did not?—No.

13333. Have you ever heard since; I do not ask you if you know; have you ever heard since where it came from?—I cannot say. I don't know.

13334. I ask you, sir, have you ever heard where it came from?—Unless Mr. Laffan can tell.

13335. Now, sir, I ask you again, if you please, have you ever heard where it came from?—Perhaps it came from Cashel—it might come from Cashel.

13336. It might come from London, or it might come from St. Petersburg. Answer my question—have you ever heard where it came from?—Yes. As far as I could understand, I should think it came from, perhaps, Mr. Munster.

13337. How did you understand that?—Oh, Mr. Laffan called for it.

13338. You must tell me, if you please, now, sir,

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

how you came to suspect that it came from Mr. Munster. I must know all about it. Have the goodness to tell me?—Oh, sure I am telling you as far as I can.

13339. I want to know why you suspected it came from Mr. Munster?—As the election was going on here.

13340. Have you never heard anything as to where it came from?—No, unless what I tell you.

13341. Did you hear from anyone that it came from Mr. Munster?—I should think not.

13342. What?—I think I did not. I only suspect it.

13343. Did you ever receive any communication, verbal or written, from anyone with reference to that transaction since it occurred?—Never.

13344. There was no communication of any kind made to you with reference to it since it occurred, by anyone?—No.

13345. Have you never had any conversation at all with anyone in which that subject was alluded to, directly or indirectly?—Never, so far as that money.

13346. As what?—So far as the two bags of money.

13347. Now, what do you mean by that exception? I ask you had you any conversation with anyone in which that subject of leaving or taking the money, or where it came from, was ever alluded to, directly or indirectly?—I should think not.

13348. That is very unsatisfactory, Mr. M'Namara. On my word, I am ashamed and pained?—I never spoke to anyone about it.

13349. On your solemn oath, sir, are you not able to give any sort of information whatever about that transaction?—No, sir, so far as that.

13350. So far as what?—As the two bags—the two bags.

13351. Well, with reference to any others bags, I ask you again, sir, on your solemn oath, are you able to give me any explanation or information?—[No answer.]

13352. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You say, sir, you are not able to give any information with reference to that transaction as regards the two bags. What part of the transaction are you able to give an explanation about?—Which transaction?

13353. The answer you gave was, that you were not able to give an explanation in connexion with the two bags. What part of the transaction are you able to give an explanation about?—I mean to say that one time I got a few pounds.

13354. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I have not asked you about that yet. I am asking you about the first transaction. I am not at all satisfied?—Oh, I have no reminiscence of it—if I had I would tell. I thought I wouldn't have anything to do with this business.

13355. You received a cheque that day?—That day?

13356. Yes, from Mr. Laffan—did you receive a cheque from Mr. Laffan?—I don't think I did.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13357. Mr. Laffan, stand up. Did you tell me yesterday that you gave this gentleman a cheque that day?—I did, sir.

13358. Did you give him a cheque that day?—I did, sir.

The Rev. ames M'Namara.

The Rev. James M'Namara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13359. Did you get a cheque on the bank from Mr. Laffan?—No. [Mr. Patrick Laffan.—Mr. M'Namara, I think, does not know me very intimately—he may forget that he got the cheque from me].

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

Mr. Patrick Laffan again examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13360. Did you get a cheque from Mr. Leahy?—I did.

13361. Did you hand that cheque to the Rev. Mr. M'Namara the day you got the money from him?—I did.

13362. What was the amount of the cheque?—£5, I think.

13363. Did you tell Mr. M'Namara where it came from?—I think I mentioned Mr. Leahy—that is my impression.

13364. But you are not quite certain of that?—No.

13365. Have you the slightest doubt in the world that you gave him that cheque for £5?—No, sir.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

The Rev. James M'Namara's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13366. Now, did you get the cheque, Mr. M'Namara?—I got a cheque, but I don't know who it came from.

13367. Did you tell me a moment ago that you got no cheque?—Oh, I did not—I was going to answer.

13368. Now you say you did get a cheque from Mr. Laffan?—Oh, I acknowedge I got a cheque for £5.

13369. Mr. M'Namara, I will not examine you any further at present. I will adjourn your examination. You had better search your recollection; search it very carefully, and come back here prepared to tell me what you recollect?—Oh, I took no date.

13370. You will be back here to-morrow morning, and bring anything you have with regard to that cheque. Try and search your recollection so as to answer me a little more satisfactorily to-morrow.

Patrick Ryan was called but did not appear.

John Darmody

John Darmody sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13371. For whom did you vote at the last election?—I had no vote, your worship.

13372. You are not a voter?—No, sir, I am not.

13373. Have you a brother?—I have, sir.

13374. What is his name?—Pat. Darmody and William Darmody. I have ne'er a brother in Ireland.

13375. Were you here during the last election?—I was here after the election, sir.

13376. Were you here during the election?—Not at all, sir.

13377. Do you know Cunningham's house?—I do, sir.

13378. Were you ever in Cunningham's house during the last election time?—No, sir, until before the election, about a month or five weeks, or about that, I think.

13379. Are you sure you were not here while the election was going on?—Not at all, sir.

13380. Do you know Mr. Leahy?—I do, well, sir.

13381. Were you in Mr. Leahy's employment?—I was in his brother's employment. I held a farm convenient to his brother's farm near Thurles. I was superintending a farm for years for him, selling and buying, and looking after the farm as steward to him.

13382. Did you see Mr. Leahy during the election time?—I saw him before the election.

13383. Where did you see him?—I saw him in Thurles at our county meeting for the county election.

13384. I am speaking of the Cashel election in November last?—I came one day with corn and sold three loads of corn below to Cunningham. A man there said Mr. Leahy was in town. I said I would like to see him, and I came to see him. That was before the election—no, it was after the election, sir, not before the election; it was after the election, about five or six weeks.

13385. Did Mr. Leahy ever give you any commands with reference to the Cashel election?—Yes, we had a conversation after the election being over, sir, about it.

13386. What about it?—That he wanted to know had I any influence over any voter after the election being over a long time.

13387. What else did he say?—That I had no influence, but a friend of my own lived in the Commons.

13388. Where had you this conversation with Mr. Leahy?—Above at Mr. Munster's—Mr. Laffan's—that is the day I was with him after the election being over; a month or five weeks.

13389. And you say he was talking with you after the election was over, and asking if you had any influence with voters in Cashel?—He was, sir.

13390. What is your friend's name on the Commons?—A cousin of mine that is married, Tom Cooney, sir; I understand he didn't vote for either party.

13391. Were you stopping at any time in Cunningham's house—did you sleep at night there?—Not the time I came with the corn, but ten or twelve days or a fortnight after that a car came to my house late at night, about nine or ten o'clock, and they told me Mr. Leahy sent down both of them with the car to have me go up that night to Cashel to him. That night blew so hard and cold my family wouldn't let me out, but I would go in the morning. Then they took a cup of tea, the night was so hard, and they warmed themselves before they went away, and I came in the morning and put up at Cunningham's house, and Mr. Leahy was gone in the morning. I waited at Cunningham's house, expecting that he would come back, and I slept at Cunningham's house the day following, expecting him, and didn't see him since, but I saw him about a month ago driving through the town with Mr. Munster, and I had a salute.

13392. Did they mention what he wanted you for?—I couldn't say. I suppose it was about the election.

13393. Did the men tell you?—No, they did not.

13394. Who were the men?—Mat. Murrin; he stopped at Cunningham's house.

13395. Where did you see him?—I see him at Cunningham's house. That is the first time I ever knew him, the time I came with the three loads of oats and sold them at Cunningham's, and that is the man that went with the driver for me to the house. I was surprised when I see my name on the paper, and I got wild to see I would be concerned in bribes, that never got a shilling from either party, to say that I would be put on the paper publicly.

13396. Are you telling me the truth, that that is all you know about it?—It is, indeed, your worship; you can't bring a shilling against me. I didn't see a shilling of Mr. Munster's money no more than the man unborn. I am at a loss to be losing my time coming here.

13397. Is that all you know about it?—That is all, sir.

13398. You are quite sure of that?—I am, sir, quite sure. Somebody had some games with me, sir. I didn't want any games of that class.

13399. If Mr. Cunningham said Mr. Leahy sent you to the house, and you were stopping there, would it be true?—He didn't. Mr. Murrin stopped at the house when I came there. I was a day before there with three loads of oats, and sold it, and put my horse up in the stable; and he was the man that went for me.

13400. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know Luke Larkin?—Oh, well, sir, this twenty-five year.

13401. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you see him there at all?—I took no account of him; not a sight, sir.

13402. Are you quite sure that you are not mistaken in saying that this was after the election? Why would Mr. Leahy ask had you any influence over voters if the election was over?—I don't know, sir; I didn't see him that day I came.

13403. Are you sure it was after the election?—Oh, it was, sir, five or six weeks. I wasn't here at the election, sir.

13404. How long was it before Christmas? Was it after or before Christmas?—I cannot recollect, sir, but I know it was it after the election.

13405. Was it a month before Christmas?—Sure Mr. Cunningham has it in his book the day I sold the oats; and another day a car went for me to the house.

13406. How soon after that did the car go?—Ten or twelve days. I couldn't well recollect, more or less, sir.

13407. Who bought the oats from you?—Tom Cunningham.

13408. Was it the father or the son?—It was the father bought it, sir. They went for me with the car, sir.

13409. Well, Mr. Darmody, I have no reason to believe you do not tell me the truth. Do you tell me candidly and honestly that you know nothing about the election?—Not a ha'p'orth, sir.

13410. Mrs. Cunningham told us you stopped in the house?—I stopped that night, sir.

13411. But during the election?—Is it me, sir?

13412. Yes?—She said afterwards she was wrong, sir; she cannot prove it. I stopped one night in the house, that is all that I slept there.

13413. If old Tom Cunningham said he saw you going into the room where Luke Larkin was, would he be mistaken?—He is mistaken, sir, or any man that would say it. Sure Luke Larkin knows me this seventeen or eighteen years.

13414. You were not there at all?—I was not, sir. Sure I was surprised myself to see it on the paper, sir. That's what vexed me. I think as much of my character as any man in the land.

13415. Do you really believe now that it is wrong to bribe?—I couldn't say, sir; I don't know; perhaps I would take it myself if I got it. By gor I would take it, sir, perhaps as soon as another.

Richard Butler sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C. Richard Butler.

13416. Are you a voter?—Yes, sir.

13417. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Munster, sir.

13418. You got £30?—I did, sir.

13419. From Mr. Larkin. You did not know who he was then?—I didn't, sir.

13420. Where was it that he gave it to you?—Below at Mr. Cunningham's.

13421. And you signed a note, I believe?—I did, sir, I marked my name to it.

13422. Do you not write yourself?—No, sir.

13423. You only put your mark to it?—That was all, sir.

13424. Was that £30 for your vote?—I suppose it was, sir.

13425. With whom did you make the arrangement

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Richard Butler.

before that?—No one, sir; I never went to anyone about it. On the second night before the election I was called to Mrs. Corcoran's, and Pat. Cunningham was the man I met. He asked me was I going home. I told him I was, and he gave me a bit of a note. "Go down with this to the house," says he. I went down. I met his father inside. I gave the note to whoever was inside. He asked me my name, and I said, "Richard Butler," and he gave me £30, sir.

13426. Did you ever vote before, Mr. Butler?—I did, sir.

13427. When?—Not the last time—not in '65; but before that, for Mr. Lanigan.

13428. Did you get anything for voting then?—I never got a farthing during my life before, sir.

Edmund Long.

Edmund Long sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13429. You voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

13430. Who canvassed you?—It was Mr. Laffan I gave my vote to.

13431. Which of them?—Mr. Pat. Laffan.

13432. How long before the election?—About two or three days, sir.

13433. What was the arrangement?—No arrangement, sir, only to give my vote.

13434. How much were you to get?—How much was I to get?

13435. Yes?—I don't know.

13436. But you were to get something?—He didn't promise me nothing, sir.

13437. But did you expect anything?—I expected it hereafter, when the election would be over; if I got it I would take it.

13438. And you expected it?—Well, I did expect it.

13439. How much did you expect?—By gor I couldn't say, sir.

13440. How did you vote in 1865?—I had no vote then, sir.

13441. Was the last the first election at which you voted?—It was, sir.

13442. Did you tell Mr. Laffan or any person that you expected money?—No, I didn't tell Mr. Laffan, but he asked me would I take it, and I said not, sir.

13443. When did Mr. Laffan ask you would you take it?—Before the election, sir.

13444. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Pat. Laffan.

13445. What did you say to him?—I said I wouldn't take money, sir, for I wasn't very well then, sir.

13446. Did you expect to die before the election?—Begor I didn't know but I would, sir.

13447. You said you expected to get money?—If I got it I would take it, sir.

13448. Why did you refuse when he asked you?—I said I wouldn't, sir, nor I wouldn't take it until after the election.

13449. You would think it was bribery if you got it before the election?—I know it is bribery every time it is got.

13450. Did you apply ever to anyone after the election?—Never, sir; never.

13451. When did you expect to get it?—Oh, how do I know, sir; whenever I get it I will take it.

13452. Tell me why you would not take the money before the election?—I wouldn't sir; I was in dread of the thing; for fear I would be put to e'er an oath. It was the first election I had a vote, and I said I would wait until after the election was all over.

13453. Was it the first time Mr. Laffan canvassed you that he asked you would you take money?—Oh, no, sir; I offered my vote before that, sir.

John Cassidy.

John Cassidy sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13454. Are you uncle to Jerry Connolly?—Yes, sir.

13455. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir, with great pleasure.

13456. Who canvassed you for Mr. O'Beirne?—A friend of Mr. O'Beirne, Captain Graham.

13457. Were you canvassed on Mr. Munster's side?—Well, in a sort of a way, your worship.

13458. By whom?—By Mr. Laffan, here.

13459. Michael or Pat?—The elder of the two; this gentleman here. [Points out Mr. Michael J. Laffan.]

13460. Did your nephew speak to you at all about it?—He did, your worship.

13461. What did he say?—He told me he intended to seek employment at the election. "And I think," says he, "by having four votes it would be effected; and will I mention you," says he, "with some others?" "Well, you may," says I; "but mind, I am not pledged by anything you say." "Oh, no," says he, "of course."

13462. Did you hear afterwards he had been employed?—Well, your worship, the next time I saw him after this discourse, he told me he saw Mr. Laffan, and that he would say nothing; but Mr. Leahy was talking about opening a boot store to employ men, and he asked him, "Are you capable of conducting business?" He said "Yes." "Do you think yourself engaged now?" "Yes," he says; "but I don't know my terms." "No, nor you won't, but we keep our word."

13463. Did you hear afterwards that he got £70?—Never, until it appeared here in court. When he came to me again he said, "I hear you are pledged to Mr. O'Beirne—is it true?" "Yes," says I, "it is true." "Then," says he, "I have no more talking about you." "No," says I to him.

13464. Did you get money for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, your worship; it would be a mean man would want money for voting for Mr. O'Beirne.

13465. Did you get money before for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I thought it a great honour to have it to give to the gentleman.

13466. Did you get any promise or intimation of any kind?—Not the slightest. I thought it was the greatest gift I could bestow, especially through Captain Graham, an old acquaintance of mine.

13467. Then why did you tell your nephew that he might mention you to the other side?—I was quite at liberty. I thought my vote my own. I could vote as I liked, but once I was pledged ——

13468. If you had been pledged before your nephew was employed, would you have voted for Mr. Munster?—I may have my weak points.

13469. You would accept the temptation, you mean?—I might, your worship, and I would repent it as long as I live. I might have my weak points as well as another. I consider that a voter for Mr. Munster would not vote for him only for getting money.

13470. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get a retainer from Mr. Laffan?—I did, sir.

13471. Why did you take it?—When I found the money was laid out to cheat me, I thought I had as good a right to return the compliment.

13472. Did you think he was cheating you?—I knew well he was, on account of the discourse that happened between him and me before.

13473. Did he not give you five guineas?—He gave me a bill cheque. He must have been very stupid if he didn't know I was very much in favour of Mr. O'Beirne before that.

13474. Did he not speak to you about the retainer before you took it?—He did.

John Cassidy.

13475. Did you not go away?—I did, your worship.

13476. Did you not come back to him the next day?—No, your worship: the first time that I made my appearance to Mr. Laffan.

13477. When did he speak to you about the retainer?—When I was in his presence of course; when he sent a special messenger for me.

13478. Go on?—I should tell your worship the conversation that happened between him and me before that.

13479. Tell the conversation about the retainer?—He sent for me and I came to him. "Well," he says, "what I could do for you would be to give you an agency." "Well," says I, "I may be employed otherwise; I am engaged from six o'clock in the morning to six o'clock in the evening; whatever hours are fit for working I could do nothing in the way of agency." "Oh," says he then, "I would want you only by night; an hour of an evening, or a Sunday would do me." "Well," says I, "I will think over it, so I will come and let you know this evening." So in the evening he first came to my house, and my wife when she heard Mr. Laffan inquiring for me, she asked me what he was wanting me for; "he wanted to engage me as an agent to Mr. Munster."

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You must not be telling us the confidence between yourself and your wife!

13480. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What did you do in the evening?—I went up to tell Mr. Laffan I would have nothing to do with him. There was a lot of rowdies on the lobby. "This is no place for me," says I, so I went away. I was coming up street in a few days after and met him. I told him I called to the hotel to tell him I would have nothing to do with him. "Just turn into Corcoran's here," says he. We turned in. "Couldn't you come," says he, "of an evening or a Sunday; your brother-in-law and brother are with us, and wouldn't you speak to them," says he, "and all that?" "Oh, I could do that," says I; "sure I never got a £5 note for such small work before," and I took it, to my misfortune, nearly.

13481. Why did you not keep it?—No, when I found it would affect my vote.

13482. You published a letter about it?—I did, your worship.

13483. Was it you that composed the letter?—No, sir.

13484. Who composed the letter?—A young man; I think he was Mr. O'Beirne's valet.

13485. What was his name?—Henry.

13486. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you cash the cheque?—I did not.

13487. How long did you keep it?—About three hours.

13488. To whom did you take it?—I took it back to Mr. Laffan's; he wouldn't take it; so I left it on the table.

13489. Where did you go with it when you got it?—I went to my house and locked it up. "Why did you take that?" says my wife. "Well," says I, "sure I can give it back to him."

13490. From whom did you learn that it would affect your vote?—From a gentleman.

13491. Did you go to him?—No, but he came to me.

13492. Who was he?—Captain Graham.

13493. He came and asked you had you got it?—He asked me "Have you been at Corcoran's with Mr. Laffan?" "Yes, sir," says I, "he sent for me to give me a retainer." "Why did you do such a thing as that?" says he; "do you know you are ruining your vote?" "No," says I. "You have actually by taking that," says he, "ruined your vote." "Well," then," says I, "I'll go give it back."

13494. At the time you took the cheque for five guineas, did you intend to vote for Mr. Munster?—Oh, yes, I did.

13495. For Mr. Munster?—Oh, no, sir; sure I hadn't the slightest idea of that. You ought to allow me to tell you how Mr. Laffan came about me to "coogle me up;" that Mr. Munster was picking up all the Protestant girls in England, to make Catholics of them; and instead of that he is leaving them go church.

13496. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, I had not, your worship; 'tis as well for me I hadn't.

Denis Considine sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Denis Considine.

13497. Witness.—Gentlemen, will you allow me to say a few words?

13498. What do you wish to say?—I voted for Mr. Lanigan in 1859, here, and for Mr. Lanigan in 1865, and I wouldn't have voted in '59, because I was promised to Mr. Scully at the time, but Mr. Scully went to Cork, and then I voted for Mr. Lanigan, and then I voted for Mr. Lanigan in '65, and for Mr. Munster in '68. I wasn't canvassed by anyone, only by Mr. Scully in '68. I told Mr. Scully if he could show me he had the slightest chance that I would vote for him then. Mr. Munster, Mr. Laffan, or any single soul connected with him never asked me would I vote for him. I never for the last thirty years in Cashel—never got a penny at any election from a member, or agent, or any single soul connected with them, in any single shape or form. I never took a glass of whiskey or a tumbler of beer in any election. Now, any question you ask me I'll answer.

13499. What family have you?—I have eight in family.

13500. What are the names of your sons?—My son Michael, and my nephew John.

13501. Were they employed at the election?—Yes. My son Michael was employed by Mr. Laffan; some time before the election he had him writing; and I believe my nephew was home at college at the time.

13502. How long was your son employed before the election?—I couldn't say.

13503. What was he doing?—Writing circulars.

13504. How much money did he get?—He got £3.

13505. Who gave him the £3?—Mr. Laffan will tell you; I don't know.

13506. Did you hear from Michael?—Mr. Laffan, he said, gave it; Captain Dudly Byrne, I believe, was in the room: I heard that. There was no one in Cashel ever got less at an election than I did, for I never got anything at all.

13507. Have you sent in any claim on Mr. Munster?—Well, I think Mr. Laffan, at the time the claims were payable, desired him to send in his claim.

13508. How much?—He desired him to send in for £40.

13509. Were you by at the conversation?—No; Mr. Laffan told me to have the son sometime before the petition send it in.

13510. Sometime before the petition he came and asked you to have a claim sent in by you for your son?—Yes, sir.

13511. And you sent in the claim?—He did, sir; Mr. Laffan mentioned the sum.

13512. Did your son send in a claim?—He did, sir.

13513. Who wrote the claim?—My son himself, sir.

13514. Did he apply for payment after the petition?—No, sir, he never did. There was no word about payment until Mr. Laffan introduced it. I wasn't sorry I voted for Mr. Munster, for he is a kind, charitable man. We had a good many here since Mr. Perrin, and none of them ever went to a poor man's house and gave him blankets.

13515. How old is your son?—Twenty-two years last February.

13516. Did you not think £40 rather too much?—It was Mr. Laffan; I never introduced anything about the money.

13517. Do you not think it an exorbitant sum?—I think it was, but he didn't expect anything, I believe, at the same time.

13518. He did not expect anything?—I think he did not.

13519. You did not think the £40 for your son

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Denis Considine.

had any thing to do with your vote?—Oh, no, it could not, for I never had anything to do with anyone.

13520. How long was your son employed?—I couldn't say.

13521. Was he perfectly satisfied when he got the £3?—I think he was, because there was more money entered to him, and he refused it, he told me.

13522. Was he not anxious that you should vote for Mr. Munster?—He never interfered with me.

13523. Was he not anxious?—I don't think he was, sir.

13524. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You say your son was offered some more money by somebody else?—The time he got the £3 he told me he was asked would he take any more, and he refused it.

13525. Have the goodness to send your son up here?—I will, sir.

Michael Considine.

Michael Considine sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13526. Are you the son of the last witness?—Yes, sir.

13527. Your father told us you got £3. From whom did you get it?—From Mr. Michael Laffan.

13528. And he says you told him that you were offered more?—Yes.

13529. How much more were you offered?—I could not say.

13530. By whom were you offered more?—When he sent a message for me about the close of September he happened to be at Mrs. Corcoran's in company with Captain Dudly Byrne. I went to him and he said, "I want to engage your services during the forthcoming election." "Very well," says I. In the evening at Mr. Munster's house I was engaged. This was a good while previous to the election. Said he, "There will be an exposition of Mr. Munster's principles in a few days at least; his address will be issued; you will be kind enough to say to persons that ask who he is, that he is a gentleman from England; he is of pure Liberal principles, and has recommendations from some leading clergymen." "Very well," says I. "I'll give £3," says he. I took it. "I'll tell you what your services are; say nothing until I give you instructions." I went away. He sent for me two or three days afterwards. I went to his office. No one was there but himself. He was about giving me instructions; he reserved it. He was about giving me more money. "I'll not have it," says I. I never spoke to Mr. Laffan afterwards about the election.

13531. I want to know why you refused the money?—I didn't want the money at the time. I was very much inclined to return his £3, and to remain free.

13532. Why were you inclined to return the three pounds?—I didn't want to be connected with the election in any way.

13533. What do you mean by remaining "free?" you had not a vote?—That is, to remain myself without being trammelled by duty or services under any person.

13534. We must all trammel ourselves with work of some kind or other. I suppose you would not have any objection to get honest work and to be paid for it?—I would not.

13535. I want to know why you refused the additional money?—I had no particular reason. I said to Mr. Laffan that I didn't want it. He didn't name any sum, but said, "There's money here for you," making a move to give me some money, but I said I wouldn't have it.

13536. Was there any conversation between you as to how your father was going to vote?—There was not.

13537. At any time?—No.

13538. Did you and your father often debate the respective politics of the candidates?—Very often we spoke about them.

13539. When was your father's mind inclined towards supporting Mr. Munster?—I couldn't really say, but I thought he would lean towards the successful candidate, whoever he might be.

13540. What is your father's occupation?—He is a plumber.

13541. And do you assist him?—No.

13542. How are you occupied?—I am a clerk.

13543. Do you know if your father worked for Mr. Munster?—Yes, he did.

13544. Did he do much work for him?—Well, I think not—some few small jobs in his trade.

13545. Do you know how he was paid?—I can't say; I don't know anything about it.

13546. You put in a claim for £40?—Yes.

13547. Are you in employment at present?—Yes, I am, sir.

13548. Where?—In the baking establishment of Going and Smith, as book-keeper.

13549. May I ask what is your salary there?—£40 a year—15*s.* a week—that is, I think, £39 a year.

13550. And that is for the entire year?—Oh, it is weekly I'm paid.

13551. But 15*s.* a week is just £39 a year?—Yes.

13552. How long were you engaged for Mr. Laffan;—How long was I engaged?

13553. Yes?—I can't say exactly the date, but my term of service dates from sometime near the close of September, '68.

13554. Were you in your present employment at the time?—I was not.

13555. But you were in some other employment?—I was.

13556. What was your salary at the employment in which you then were?—About £30 a year.

13557. Did you remain in it during the election?—Yes, I was.

13558. Therefore, the only time you could give Mr. Laffan was in the evenings?—Yes; my employment at that time took me from eleven to three o'clock.

13559. After that you might assist Mr. Laffan?—Yes.

13560. From the end of September to the 20th November—two months—but you were not with Mr. Laffan all that time?—I was not.

13561. Were you a month?—I was not.

13562. Were you a fortnight?—No, I was not.

13563. Were you a week?—I was not.

13564. Were you at all?—I was, as writing clerk.

13565. How long—how many nights?—About three times, I think.

13566. And for those three times you put in a claim of £40?—I put in a claim.

13567. Did you?—Yes; it was at the suggestion of Mr. Laffan the claim was put in.

13568. Explain how you earned the money from Mr. Laffan, and afterwards put in a claim for £40?—I can't explain it any more; I refused the money at the time; the reason I put in the claim afterwards was that Mr. Laffan suggested I should put in a claim for the sum mentioned, and he suggested the figure.

13569. What did he say to you?—Not to me, but to my father, and it came through my father to me.

13570. What did your father say when giving you the message?—He says to me, "I and Mr. Laffan were speaking about the election, and he says it would be well for you to put in a bill; and Laffan," he says, "is most cautious about these things." He used the word "cautious;" "but still," he says, "I would be most anxious to put in a bill for your services to receive remuneration in some form." "Very well," says I. I then drafted a draft of the bill.

13571. Did your father tell you the amount?—Yes, he did; the amount he conveyed from Mr. Laffan to me.

13572. And he said £40?—Yes, he did.

13573. Did you say to your father, "I did not earn £40?" Did you express no astonishment? You had got £3 for the three evenings?—Yes.

13574. And did you say to your father, "What does he want me to put in a claim for £40 for; I am well paid already?"—I didn't say I was well paid.

Michael Considine.

13575. Did you consider you were well paid?—Yes.

13576. And you were putting in a claim for £40?—Yes.

13577. For what?—As I stated in my bill, "for services rendered."

13578. Why you admitted that you were well paid already. Do you think you have any further explanation to offer?—I don't think I have.

13579. I will give you the fullest opportunity. Accordingly, let me ask why you put in a bill for £40 for services, when you admit you were well paid already?—My only explanation is that the amount of £40 would act as an incentive to my procuring a position through the influence and patronage of Mr. Munster.

13580. Therefore, you were taking £40 from Mr. Munster to enable Mr. Munster to serve you afterwards?—No, but in the event of procuring a position through his influence I would abandon—I was to abandon—my claim.

13581. Did it ever occur to you at all that that was remuneration for your father's vote, and not for your services?—Never, at that time.

13582. Did it ever since?—Well, I can't say what my impressions were, but I was so conscious of my father's integrity, that I was sure he would refuse a bribe from any man.

John Considine.

John Considine sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13583. You were a poll clerk at the election?—Yes, sir; a tally clerk.

13584. Did you put in a claim?—For £1, sir.

13585. Did you put in a claim for any more?—There was no mention of any sum in the claim I put in. I only said "for services rendered."

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13586. Witness.—I think I put in £1 for the day.

13587. Mr. Michael Laffan, is this one of those cases you mentioned before?—It stands on very nearly the same footing. I will explain it when I come to be examined. I employed young Considine for a legitimate purpose at the election.

13588. But £40 is not a legitimate sum to pay?—No, I didn't intend that he should get £40.

13589. Did you hear what his father swore?—The father asked me what he would put down. "Oh, anything you like," said I. "You may put down £40;" but it did not follow that he was going to get it.

Mary Walsh.

Mary Walsh sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13590. You are sister of James Walsh?—Yes, sir.

13591. He voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—He did, sir, for Mr. Munster.

13592. Were you spoken to at all about his vote?—Never, sir.

13593. Did Mr. Laffan speak to you about it?—Never, sir; neither of the Mr. Laffans.

13594. Did Pat. Cunningham?—Never, sir? not a single word ever.

13595. Did Michael O'Sullivan—he is a relative of yours—speak to you about it?—Never, sir.

13596. Michael O'Sullivan was a great supporter of Mr. Munster's?—I believe he was, sir.

13597. Did he never say anything to you about voting for him?—He never did, sir.

13598. Did anyone ever speak to you about it?—No; none of the Laffans, nor Tom Cunningham, nor Patsy Cunningham, nor Mr. O'Sullivan.

13599. Did anybody tell you that it would be a good thing for him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Never, sir.

13600. Had he a vote in 1865?—Never, but now, sir; never before, sir.

13601. Did you hear of his getting anything for his vote?—No, sir, nor he wasn't promised it that I know anything about.

James Darmody was called but did not appear.

Michael Darmody.

Michael Darmody sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13602. Are you a son of James Darmody?—Yes, sir.

13603. Your father voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—My father is dead this day fourteen years, sir.

13604. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Were you not asked, this moment, "are you the son of James Darmody?"—I am brother of James Darmody.

13605. Why, you said you are his son?—I forgot myself.—Do not be angry with us then if we made a mistake about your father being alive.

13606. Mr. MOLLOY.—Your brother voted for Mr. Munster?—He did, sir.

13607. He got £30?—He did, sir.

13608. Did he tell you that he got the £30?—He never told me, but I hear he got it.

13609. Were you employed at the election?—No, sir.

13610. In any way?—In any way.

13611. Were you paid any money?—There was a brother of mine drew some sand for Mr. Munster and he got paid for it.

13612. How much sand did he draw?—Two loads, sir—a load each day.

13613. How much did he get for the two loads of sand?—30*s.*

13614. Did he get any other money?—I didn't get any other money.

13615. Did your brother get any other money?—It is I that got the 30*s.*, sir, for drawing the sand.

13616. Who paid you the 30*s*,.?—I got 10*s.* sir, before the election, and I got a pound after.

13617. Who paid you?—Pat. Cunningham, sir.

13618. He paid you the 30*s.*?—Ten shillings of it, sir. He gave it to James Hanley, and James Hanley gave it to me.

13619. Who gave you the pound?—Mat Dwyer, sir.

13620. And you did nothing except to supply those two loads of sand?—It is not I drew them at all, but my brother; it is I got paid for it.

13621. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—How much would you send me two loads of sand to-day for?—I have no sand.

13622. How much could your brother draw them for—how much a load?—I suppose 8*s.*, sir, would be enough.

13623. Do you consider he was very well paid in getting 30*s.*?—He was too well paid, sir.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

John Rielly was called, but did not appear.

Mr. Martin Delahunt.

Mr. Martin Delahunt sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13624. Had you a vote before the last election?—No.

13625. You did not vote at the last election?—No.

13626. You took a retainer on one side?—Yes.

13627. Were you canvassed by both sides?—No.

13628. Who canvassed you?—I was not canvassed at all; I was spoken to by Mr. Pat. Laffan.

13629. What did he say?—He asked me who was I going to vote for, and I said I wouldn't vote at all, and he gave me a retainer.

13630. What was the retainer for?—To give me something to do, he said.

13631. Did he tell you what you were to do?—No; he said he would give me something to do.

13632. Did he tell you the retainer would prevent you from voting?—No; I thought myself it would, but I had made up my mind not to vote at either side.

13633. When you would not vote, I suppose you were not inclined to take any part in the election at all?—That was my determination.

13634. Mr. Laffan was examined here yesterday, and told us that at the time he gave you the £10, he told you this would prevent you from voting?—I don't think he stated any such thing. I knew myself I could not vote. I thought it would be illegal to vote after taking it; but I made up my mind not to vote at all before I got the retainer.

13635. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you ask for the retainer, or was it offered to you?—I didn't ask for it at all.

13636. And you told Mr. Laffan, before he gave it to you, that you had made up your mind not to vote?—Decidedly.

13637. Then can you form any idea as to what Mr. Laffan's object was in giving it?—Well, I suppose he thought he might serve me by giving it, to give me something to do, perhaps, to serve me.

13638. Do you think it was to interfere with your vote?—I don't think he had any idea of that. I think it was to serve me. He knew I would not vote. I have to explain that I am a teacher of languages, and he was formerly a pupil of mine, and perhaps he thought he might serve me by giving me that.

John Rielly was called, but did not appear.

William Brennan.

William Brennan sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13639. For whom did you vote at the last election?—Mr. Munster, sir.

13640. Who canvassed you?—Mr. Laffan, sir.

13641. Was it Mr. Patrick or Mr. Michael?—Mr. Michael, sir, and Mr. Pat.

13642. You got £35?—I did, sir.

13643. Where did you get it?—At Corcoran's room.

13644. Who told you to go there?—Mr. Pat Laffan told me to go there.

13645. Was it with Mr. Pat Laffan you made the arrangement about the £35?—It was, sir.

13646. That was for your vote?—It was, sir, I believe, that.

13647. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, sir.

13648. Do you know of any other money given or promised at the election?—I heard every person got money, sir. Were it not for that I wouldn't go look for it myself.

13649. Only for that you would not have looked for it?—I would not, sir.

13650. It was hearing that money was going that put it into your head to seek for money?—Yes, sir; I said if every one voted independent I would; but no one did, except very little anyhow.

13651. Do you know of anyone having been promised money that has not been mentioned as yet?—No, sir.

13652. Do you know of any case that has not come out yet?—That was promised money?

13653. Yes?—No, I don't, sir. I don't mean any person but myself.

13654. Did you sign that bill [is handed a bill]?—I did, sir.

Edmond Bowes was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea.

Mortimer Shea recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13655. What do you know of Bowes?—He is in the infirmary this length of time, under the care of Dr. Russell, your worship.

Patrick Ryan was called, but did not appear.

Mortimer Shea.

Mortimer Shea recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

13656. Witness.—I was up at his house, and I heard him talking up stairs, and the wife told me he was in bed, and not able to get up. She said it was after drink after the night.

13657. When did you go there?—I went since the court was adjourned.

13658. How long is it since you went there first?—It is Thursday last.

Captain Dudly Byrne was called, but did not appear.

Mr. James Lyster O'Beirne was called, but did not appear.

Thomas Looby, of Hughes's Lot, was called, but did not appear.

Mr. John Davis White handed in a letter which he said had reference to Mrs. Watkins, who had been examined.

John Rielly sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY. John Rielly.

13659. You voted at the last election for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

13660. You got £30?—Yes, sir.

13661. What was the £30 for?—Well, as far as I could judge it was in order to get my vote.

13662. Where did you get the £30?—At Corcoran's hotel.

13663. From the man in the room there?—Yes, sir.

13664. Who made the arrangement with you that you were to get £30?—Mr. Pat Laffan.

13665. How long before the election?—Well, I couldn't exactly tell; it wasn't very long at all.

13666. Were you canvassed by any person else on Mr. Munster's behalf?—I was.

13667. Who canvassed you?—Oh, no, I wasn't on Mr. Munster's side.

13668. Who canvassed you on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Captain Graham.

13669. What did you tell him when he canvassed you?—I told him that I didn't well know what I would do.

13670. Were you offered any money, or promised any money, if you would vote on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Oh, I believe, certainly, that I would get some money if it was a thing I done it, but I didn't do it.

13671. How do you know that you would get it?—According to the conversation between us.

13672. The conversation between whom?—Between Captain Graham.

13673. What did Captain Graham say to you?—He asked me to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

13674. What else?—He considered that I ought to do it for him as soon as for any man; he was my landlord.

13675. Captain Graham was?—Yes, in charge of my holding.

13676. What more did he say?—He proffered me no money.

13677. Did he speak to you about money?—He expected that I would give my vote to Mr. O'Beirne.

13678. That is, as he was your landlord?—Yes, and he said to influence me.

13679. But he said nothing about money?—No.

13680. Did you vote in 1865?—I did, for Mr. Lanigan.

13681. Was any inducement held out to you in 1865 to vote for Mr. Lanigan?—Not a penny, sir; not a pound nor a shilling; I gave my vote for Lanigan at the time, and I never gave a vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

13682. Were you canvassed in 1865 on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Well, I couldn't well say; I don't think I was; they found me too determined for Mr. Lanigan.

13683. Did you ever vote for Mr. Lanigan in 1859?—Every time he come I voted for him.

13684. And received no promise?—No money nor anything in the world, but to vote independent, nor never during my life, while I am giving votes thirty years.

13685. If you had not made an arrangement for money this time—for £30—whom would you have voted for?—Well I certainly think I would vote for Mr. Munster, because I don't like Mr. O'Beirne.

13686. You have an old grudge against him for putting out the man you voted for in 1865?—That is it, just now; you clinched it. I had, and I hold it up.

13687. Did you ask for any money, or suggest that you should get money?—I never asked a penny of Captain Graham.

13688. No, but when you were canvassed by Mr. Pat Laffan?—No, I asked no money, but I was directed to go to Corcoran's, and I got £30.

13689. Just tell me what occurred when the arrangement was made. Who told you to go to Corcoran's?—To call at Corcoran's and I would be directed.

13690. Did Mr. Patrick Laffan send for you? When had you this conversation?—I had it in many places, and in my own house.

13691. Did you expect when the general election was coming round that you would get money for voting?—I did not.

13692. When did you first hear that money was going?—When they named it to me.

13693. Who named it to you first?—Mr. Laffan did.

13694. Was it a few days before the election took place?—I couldn't know how many days.

13695. Tell us how it took place?—He told me that he would ——

13696. Well, sir, why do you not speak?—I consider that he considered there was bribery going round, and that he said to me, "will you give your vote."

13697. What did you say to that?—I said I would.

13698. To Mr. Munster?—To Mr. Munster.

13699. Then how did he come to speak about your getting money?—He stated that.

13700. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you know that you were doing wrong?—At the time?

13701. Yes?—Why at the time, the first time, I couldn't very well say whether it was wrong or right.

13702. You did not know that it was wrong to receive a bribe. Are you aware that you have rendered yourself liable to a penalty of £100 for taking it?—I wasn't a judge of that, your worship.

13703. Is this your handwriting?—It is my writing. [Identifies his signature to a bill.]

13704. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you understand from Captain Graham's conversation that you might expect money?—I might be letting him the house.

13705. What did he say about the letting of your house?—That he would pay me for it—for letting my house to him.

13706. Did he say how much?—No, he never named the sum.

13707. Did he ask you to let the house?—He did.

13708. What did you say to that?—I said, "it is rather late now;" I said I would not—that I was promised, and that I would give my vote as I settled, to Mr. Munster.

13709. Was Captain Graham with you after you had the conversation with Mr. Patrick Laffan?—I don't know whether it was either the evening before the polling, or the morning; I can't exactly say which.

13710. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had you got the £30 at that time?—No, I had not.

13711. Captain Graham asked you whether you would let your house?—He did.

13712. And you said it was rather late as you had promised the other side?—Yes.

13713. What did Captain Graham say to that?—He said nothing but went away.

13714. He considered it was a final answer?—That's it.

William Quinlan sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN. William Quinlan.

13715. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, sir,

13716. And you got a £10 retainer from Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes, sir.

13717. Where did he give you that?—In Corcoran's hotel, sir.

13718. How long before the election?—About ten or eleven days, sir.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

William Quinlan.

13719. What did he say?—He asked me would I take a retainer and I said, "yes."

13720. At the time you took this retainer was the notice about the five-guinea retainers published by Mr. Grace, given?—I think it was, sir.

13721. Then you knew that taking the retainer made it illegal for you to vote?—Yes, sir.

13722. How did you come to vote afterwards?—It seems the night before the election; I was drunk all that night and in the morning—I stopped that night in a neighbour's house.

13723. What was the name of the neighbour?—Michael Meara, a cooper, sir—Daniel Meara—they brought me home.

13724. Who brought you home?—Michael Meara and some more of the boys, sir.

13725. Who were the other boys?—I couldn't really say, sir.

13726. They brought you home from Meara's?—They did, sir.

13727. That was the morning of the polling?—Yes, the morning of the polling; I came down street then.

13728. Who brought you to the poll?—Richard Donnell brought me to the poll, sir.

13729. You don't remember what occurred between you and Mr. Laffan the night before the polling?—I didn't see him at all since I got the retainer.

13730. He said he saw you?—No; but the morning of the polling he saw me at James Mulcahy's.

13731. What occurred then?—He said to take up the retainer, sir.

13732. Where did he bring you to?—To Mulcahy's.

13733. What occurred then?—He asked me for the retainer and I gave it to him.

13734. Where did you get the money to give him?—I sent to the house for it.

13735. Are you sure you did not get it from James Mulcahy?—When?

13736. Then?—I didn't at that present moment.

13737. Did you not borrow it from Mulcahy?—No, sir, I sent to the house and £5 came; I sent again, and there was another £5 came up; and in the evening I found my mistake; it was a £10 note of my own money came, and I missed a £5 note in the evening.

13738. Then you gave back the £10 and a £5 note?—Yes, sir, through mistake.

13739. You got back the £5?—I got it back, sir.

13740. You got back the £10 and the £5?—Yes, sir.

13741. From whom?—From Thomas Mulcahy. When I missed the £10 note I had I sent about it.

13742. When you took the retainer originally were you aware that it would prevent you from voting?—Yes, sir.

13743. Had you a vote in '65?—No, sir, never before.

13744. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were they the same notes that you got back again?—I couldn't tell you, sir. I know I had a £10 note, and it went through mistake for a £5 note.

13745. Did you get that £10 note back again?—Yes, sir.

13746. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you intend to give up the £10 when you gave back the retainer?—Yes, sir. I only meant to give up the £10.

13747. When Mr. Laffan told you to give back the retainer, that was that you might vote?—He didn't say which, sir. He said he would dispense without me any longer.

13748. Did you expect to get the £10 again?—It is likely I did, sir; but I wouldn't look for it if I never got it.

13749. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is it likely that when you got £10 for your services that you would give it back upon being asked for it?—I may, sir.

13750. Are you a likely fellow to do that?—Begor I don't know, sir.

13751. Did you expect to get more?—No, sir, nor never applied, nor never troubled him.

13752. But you did get it back and kept it since?—Yes, sir.

13753. You never gave any work?—No, sir.

13754. Nothing except your vote?—Yes, sir.

13755. And do you think it was your vote they wanted?—I think it was, sir; or, rather, to break it, perhaps.

13756. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you not think that when you gave your services you ought to get more than £10?—Begor I don't know, sir.

13757. Did you not hear that others got more?—It is only lately I heard that, sir.

13758. Do you not think yourself very badly used?—Begor there is no help for it now, sir.

Thomas Looby.

Thomas Looby, of Hughes's Lot, sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13759. You live in Hughes's Lot?—Yes, sir.

13760. And voted at the last election for Mr Munster?—I did, sir.

13761. How did you vote in 1865?—I don't recollect it, but I voted for Mr. Lanigan. I voted before that for Mr. Hemphill.

13762. Have you a family?—I have, sir; one son and a daughter.

13763. What is the son's name?—Maurice.

13764. Who canvassed you on Mr. Munster's behalf?—Pat Laffan came to me, and I was in the garden working. He came to me, he told me, Mr. Munster was in the way, on the road coming up. The road was bad, and he couldn't come up, and he wanted me down to Mr. Munster. I told him that I wouldn't; that I was going to vote for no one, to the best of my opinion, on this election.

13765. Did he go away then, or had you any further conversation?—No further conversation, only conveyed him out of my own yard.

13766. Did he come back again?—No.

13767. Did any other person canvass you on behalf of Mr. Munster?—Well, they did—Mr. Michael Laffan and Mr. Leahy.

13768. When Mr. Leahy canvassed you what passed between you?—They came to me and they met me in the yard, and I told them that I wasn't going at this election, or that I wouldn't vote for anyone; and then there was my agent, he wanted the vote, and I said I wouldn't vote for anyone—that it was too troublesome.

13769. What did Mr. Leahy say to that?—We parted then. I went down the yard and we parted.

13770. Were you canvassed after that?—No, only I was canvassed after that—Mr O'Beirne came to me.

13771. What did you tell Mr. O'Beirne?—I told him I wouldn't vote for anyone.

13772. When did you change your mind?—Oh, well, you know I kept my mind to myself, ever until the last day, and could give my vote then to who I would like.

13773. When did you make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—The very day I came here.

13774. Why did you not make up your mind before?—Because a long time before that I see a great many poor people going along by my place. I see them badly clad a long time, and I see them afterwards with good clothes. Where did you get them? We got them from Mr. Munster.

13775. Is that what induced you to depart from your neutrality and vote for Mr. Munster?—No, but I considered he being a good man.

13776. How much were you to get for your vote?—Nothing.

13777. Did you hear there was money going?—I heard there was lots of money, sir.

13778. Was Maurice employed?—No, I don't think he came to Cashel two days.

13779. What did he get?—Nothing. No.

13780. Was he promised anything?—No.

13781. Did he send in a claim?—No, sir; nor neither did I.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. MOLLOY. Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

13782. Have you got the claim?—He is already on the list of those five persons I passed in to you.

Thomas Looby's examination resumed by Mr. MOLLOY. Thomas Looby.

13783. Do you know anything about your son sending in a claim for £35?—I'm sure he didn't without my knowledge.

13784. Did he ever speak to you about it?—No, nor he daren't without my consent; and whoever put it in let them answer for it. I never gave permission to put in any claim.

13785. Is that the first you heard of your son's being about to get money?—I didn't hear it at all till last week, because I never went to Mr. Laffan about it, nor neither did he.

13786. When you heard about this, did you speak to your son?—I knew well my son didn't do it.

13787. When you heard last week that there was a claim by your son, did you speak to him about it?—Sure I did.

13788. What did he say?—Sure he didn't do it no more than me. He wouldn't do it—he wouldn't do it without my consent—he dare not.

13789. You would not allow him to take money for services he did not perform?—He wasn't in the business at all. I don't think during the election he gave two days in Cashel, nor one day.

13790. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Are you surprised to hear that there is a claim for him for £35?—I am not surprised at anything.

13791. Would you take the money?—Begor, any man would take the money. I would take it if I got it.

13792. If you were offered the £35 last month for having voted for Mr. Munster would you take it?—I would, if I was offered it.

13793. And if you were offered it to-morrow?—Yes.

13794. Mr. MOLLOY.—When you were going up that day to vote for Mr. Munster, did you expect after the election that your son would get any money?—I never did; I never did; I never did.

John Hanley sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN. John Hanley.

13795. Where do you live?—Hughes' Lot, sir.

13796. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did, sir.

13797. Have you any son named James Hanley?—No, sir.

13798. Have you any relation of the name of James Hanley?—No, sir, not living.

13799. Had you any relation named James Hanley living at the time of the election?—I hadn't, sir.

13800. Who canvassed you for Mr. Munster?—Mr. Laffan.

13801. Mr. Patrick Laffan?—Yes, sir.

13802. Did he make you any promise for voting for him?—He made me no promise, sir.

13803. Did he tell you you would not be worse off for voting for Mr. Munster?—He told me Mr. Munster was a good man, and the best man for the town.

13804. Did he say anything about his being a good man for yourself?—No, sir, he did not.

13805. Did he give you to understand, in any way, that you would get anything after the election?—I don't know, sir, if my memory recollects; he might say he wouldn't forget it, or something that way.

13806. That who would not forget it? That Mr. Munster would not forget you?—Yes, sir.

13807. You heard that there was a good deal of money going at the election?—I did, sir, from the reports.

13808. How much did you expect to get?—I didn't expect to get anything, unless their kindness would be good enough to give it to me after the thing would be all over.

13809. How much did you expect their kindness ought to be?—I didn't know that, sir.

13810. Had you any conversation with any person since the election, about what their kindness ought to be?—No, with no person.

13811. Now, from what Mr. Laffan told you, you expected to get something after the election?—I did, sir, I expected if the thing was going on that I wouldn't be forgotten, but I never asked them yet.

13812. You expect not to be forgotten?—Yes, sir.

13813. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I was, sir.

13814. Who canvassed you on Mr. O'Beirne's side?—I forget now, sir, who came the way.

13815. Did Captain Graham come to you?—No, he didn't; himself sent some agents—Mr. O'Beirne—to know would I vote for him, and I said not.

13816. Were you promised to Mr. Munster at that time?—I was, and I continued my promise.

13817. Did you vote in 1865?—I did, sir.

13818. For whom?—Lanigan.

13819. Did you get anything at that time for voting?—No.

13820. Or were you promised anything?—No.

13821. Did you ever get anything at any other election?—Well, sir, from Mr. Lanigan I got, about twelve months after the election that he was thrown out; Archdeacon Laffan interfered and he sent me £10; that was twelve months more, I believe, after the election.

13822. Was it after Mr. Lanigan was thrown out?—Yes, sir, he was thrown out at this time, and it was twelve months after that he sent me the £10.

13823. You did not hear of his sending money to any other voters?—I didn't, sir, any more than bills that I heard he paid about the town.

13824. What kind of bills?—Money for damages done in these houses.

13825. What bills did he pay, did you hear?—For cars and jingles, and all this, I heard.

13826. On what ground did Archdeacon Laffan interfere for you?—Because he was the best friend of mine. He said I was at some loss.

13827. What loss?—A loss of pigs and some things that way, and he interfered with Mr. Lanigan, and Mr. Lanigan sent me £10. That's all the money I ever got about elections.

13828. Mr MOLLOY.—At the election of 1865 was there any understanding amongst the Commoners to vote if they got a certain sum from Mr. Lanigan?—I couldn't tell you that.

13829. Are you not one of them?—No, sir.

13830. Are you anything to Edmond Hanley of Clonmel-road?—No, sir, I'm not.

13831. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Laffan wishes to ask you were you processed by your landlord at the time you got this £10?—Oh, he desired us to vote for Mr. Lanigan.

13832. You say you got £10?—I did, from Mr. Lanigan, twelve months after the election he was thrown out.

13833. Were you hard up at the time?—I was, sir.

13834. In what way?—For the loss of pigs and some damages that way.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Edmond Hanley.

Edmond Hanley sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13835. You voted for Mr. Munster?—Decidedly.

13836. When were you canvassed?—A day or two previous to the election, if I don't mistake.

13837. Was that the first time you were canvassed for Mr. Munster?—It was, sir.

13838. Who canvassed you?—Himself in person.

13839. What did you tell him when he canvassed you?—I plumped for him.

13840. Had you been canvassed at the other side?—By no means.

13841. No person at the last election, except Mr. Munster himself, canvassed you?—No, sir.

13842. You told him you would give him your vote?—I did.

13843. How did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. Munster.

13844. And in 1859?—For Lanigan.

13845. Are you a farmer?—Yes, sir.

13846. James is your son?—Yes, sir.

13847. How was he engaged at the election, or was he engaged?—He was more attending to his own business at home than electioneering affairs; but on certain occurrences I was invited, or, at least, called on, to attend the committee, that I had reason to be protected, and I brought him with me for protection.

13848. How many of those committee meetings did you attend?—I suppose about three.

13849. What did James get for protecting you?—I don't understand that.

13850. How much did he send in a claim for?—He didn't send in a claim; it is myself done that.

13851. How much is it for?—I suppose about £50 for the whole thing.

13852. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—£55?—If I don't mistake, I suppose it is that.

13853. £55 for protecting you for going to committee meetings?—Yes; and I was as sure of getting it as of getting one shilling or one pound; either one or the other.

13854. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you get a pound?—No.

13855. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What was the ground of your certainty of getting it?—I had no surety for it at all.

13856. You told me you were sure of getting it?—As sure as I was of getting a single shilling; but I had no surety for it, and wouldn't get it, and that is the reason my bill was so high, that I was as sure of getting a single pound as that, every bit.

13857. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Is that your writing [witness is handed a claim]?—It is.

13858. Mr. MOLLOY.—Read it out?—I read it before [hands it in].

13859. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—"Cashel, December, 28th, 1869, Mr. Henry Munster to James Hanley, debtor: To amount of services rendered during the election, £55." Is this your bill [hands the document to witness]?—Yes, that is correct.

13860. Mr. MOLLOY.—How many loads of gravel did you give?—I gave two days' work; he got two days' work; not I, but himself and the horse gave two days' work.

13861. You were paid £1 for that?—I don't know what he was paid. We billed for fifty shillings, and he gave me to understand he got thirty shillings, and he pocketed his winners.

13862. When you went to the committee-rooms you got refreshments?—As usual.

13863. And James got refreshments also?—I am not aware of that.

13864. But was he not protecting you?—He didn't go in. As soon as he'd see me secured in, he kept himself quite clear outside.

13865. You got refreshments always?—It is natural to suppose.

13866. Did James come to town with the expectation of getting some refreshments?—He is always in town.

13867. Did you pay for the refreshments?—I'd like that, indeed. What a fool you think I am.

13868. Did all the voters get refreshments?—I'm not aware.

13869. Were you not there with them?—In some instances I was; but not in general.

13870. At the three meetings that you attended, did the other voters get refreshments?—It is natural to suppose they did.

13871. Did you see them having refreshments?—To be candid, I didn't.

13872. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What is usually paid for a horse and car here?—In the spring season there would be a higher price.

13873. What would you charge in November if I wanted to get a horse?—If you came in a hurried season.

13874. I am asking you about November, sir, and apply yourself to it. What would I get a horse and man in November to work for by the day in Cashel?—You would get a horse for 5*s.*—at least you would get a horse.

13875. This is your son's bill—"Henry Munster, esquire, to James Hanley, debtor; to amount of horse work drawing gravel, £1 10*s.*;" and he is paid that amount, that is 15*s.* a day?—So he told me that he was paid it; it was nothing in my pocket.

13876. About the proper value of that would be 10*s.*?—That would be it, then.

13877. And he was paid three times the value?—That may be, too.

13878. Mr. MOLLOY.—Was it from Darmody's they were drawing the sand?—I don't know where the quarry was; some place out in the Commons, I believe; but he gave two days at the work. He billed as he told me; he billed for 50*s.* and he got 30*s.*

Mr. Michael J. Laffan

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

13879. Had you any conversation with the last witness?—I spoke to him as well as Feehan—the two were together.

13880. Did you tell him to put in a claim?—Yes.

Mrs. Anne Hanley.

Mrs. Anne Hanley sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

13881. Where do you live?—In John-street, at present, sir.

13882. Did you send in a bill for the last election?—Yes, sir, for horse work.

13883. What was the amount of the bill?—Something over £8, sir. The bill may be more, but that was what I received—something over £8.

13884. When were you paid?—A short time after the election, sir.

13885. Do you remember by whom it was paid?—I don't know the young man that gave me £5 at first. I got £5 first, and the balance by Mr. Close's son.

13886. What was it for?—For cars and horse work.

13887. Have you any relations voters?—Well, I don't think I have, sir; but I have friends, and well-wishers, but no relations.

13888. There are three or four Hanleys—Michael, John, Edmond, Matthew. Are any of them relations of yours?—Not as I know. There may be one, but I don't know.

13889. Have you supplied cars to that amount?—Yes, sir.

13890. Mr. MOLLOY.—You were paid the full amount?—I believe I billed for more than I got.

13891. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You are sure that you were paid £8?—I was paid £5 first, and £3 after then.

Thomas Connor was called but did not appear.

Mr. Edward H. Biggin recalled by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Biggin, I received a note from you last night. I am very sorry that I cannot comply with your request by examining you to-day.

Miss Catherine O'Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Miss Catherine O'Dwyer.

13892. Miss O'Dwyer, there was a dinner at your hotel before the election?—There was, sir.

13893. How long before the election was it?—It was the night before the polling.

13894. How many persons dined?—I really couldn't say, sir.

13895. Can you tell me about how many?—The dinner was ordered for forty or fifty by the persons that ordered it, and there was a great rush came into the house—a regular mob. I am sure there were over a hundred in the house.

13896. Who ordered dinner for forty or fifty?—There were two or three persons ordered it. They came early in the week and asked me could I give them a dinner. I think it was on Monday or Tuesday. They asked me if I could give them a dinner that day. It was then late in the day, and I said I could not. They then went away rather dissatisfied, and came back again and asked me to oblige them. I said I could not. They asked me would I name a day. I said Wednesday or Thursday; so I decided to give them a dinner on Thursday.

13897. How much a head was the dinner?—5s.

13898. How many dinners were you paid for?—I had a list of the persons that paid me at the time of the petition, and it was kept from me. I had a memorandum; I should think about twenty-five, sir.

13899. That was about half the number?—About half the number.

13900. And some man paid for several?—Yes; he took the money from several persons in my presence, and he brought it to me. I think he gave me £3, and he told me there were two others paid him; that is not included in the £3. He owes that to me yet, and for his own dinner also; and several others.

13901. And you are still to be paid for about twenty-five?—I am, sir.

13902. Was there a breakfast ordered?—Yes, sir.

13903. By whom?—Mr. O'Connor of Laffana, and he has not paid for it yet.

13904. A good many stopped in the hotel that night?—A great many of them, sir.

13905. Mr. O'Beirne was there?—He was at the dinner, and remained for some time after.

13906. Were refreshments supplied to any voters in your house?—No, sir.

13907. There was a lunch there on the day of the declaration?—Yes, the day of the declaration there was a lunch given by Mr. O'Beirne.

13908. Did you supply any other refreshment to any persons and charge it Mr. O'Beirne?—No, sir; I don't remember that I did.

13909. Does Mr. O'Beirne owe you an account?—He does, sir; he owes me an account for the lunch.

13910. And who owes you the account for the breakfast?—Mr. O'Connor of Laffana. It is only something over £1.

13911. Who owes you for the twenty-five dinners?—Those twenty-five persons.

13912. Do you know who they are?—I know some of them; but I don't know them all. It occurred—I never intended that it should have been as it was.

13913. Who is Mr. Geary that you had an account with?—Denis Geary.

13914. What was his account for?—He got some spirits the night of the dinner; but he has a long account with me without that at all.

Mr. Pierce Grace recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Mr. Pierce Grace.

13915. You were the conducting agent of Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—Yes.

13916. You were, I believe, concerned for him at the previous election?—I was concerned, but not his conducting agent.

13917. Were you concerned for him in the election of '65?—I was.

13918. Were you long engaged for him at the election of '68 before the election took place?—Yes, several months.

13919. Did you canvass for him, Mr. Grace?—I should mention to you that about the latter end of September I got ill, and I might distinguish two periods—before my illness and after it.

13920. What was the date of your recovery, or the time you were able to be out again?—I cannot give the exact dates, but about the latter end of September I got ill. I was not able to be out until the beginning of November. I had fever during that time.

13921. Were you able to see persons who called to your house?—No; I was confined to my bed; I had fever.

13922. We may take the period from the end of September to the beginning of November as an entire blank as concerned with the election?—Quite so.

13923. Up to September had you been canvassing?—Up to September I had been merely feeling my way by ascertaining the feeling of the people. I may have asked one or two persons; I don't think I did.

13924. How did you find the feeling of the people at the time?—I found that, generally speaking, everybody told me they approved highly of the parliamentary conduct of Mr. O'Beirne, and there seemed to be a friendly feeling towards him. There were some, of course, who entertained quite a different feeling. That was the general feeling, I think.

13925. At that time did you apprehend a contest?—Before I got ill I did; not very long before it.

13926. Was there any other candidate named except those you have already heard?—Mr. Scully, Mr. Munster, Mr. O'Beirne; that is all, I think. There was a Mr. Petrie, who published an address and sent circulars to the people of the town, but I believe he was not a real candidate—he never appeared.

13927. Did you canvass after November largely for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did not.

13928. You did not?—I did not. In fact, after when I was able to be out, I was not able much to go about at all; I was after a very heavy fit of fever, and you can imagine the state I was in.

13929. Did you happen to be in court during the examination of Captain Graham?—No, I was not.

13930. Was Mr. O'Beirne in the town at all up to the period of your illness?—He was not.

13931. Captain Graham said that you wrote to him before Mr. O'Beirne's arrival to say that it was necessary to take a hotel?—I cannot say whether I wrote to him; I do not think I wrote to him.

13932. He told us that you said that you wrote to Mr. O'Beirne that it was necessary to take a hotel, and that the matter being pressing you came to Captain Graham?—Quite correct.

13933. You got, I believe, a cheque then from Captain Graham for £50?—I got £50 in notes.

13934. Was that for the purpose of taking a hotel?—Yes.

13935. Was the hotel only for the purpose of lodging Mr. O'Beirne while he was here?—Well, the hotel on such occasions is used for more than that. It is generally taken up with people going in and out—constantly in and out—with the candidate.

13936. Has it to your knowledge been always customary to take a hotel during elections?—Yes.

13937. Invariably the rule?—During my experience; at '65 I knew two of the hotels to be taken; and at a

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Mr. Pierce Grace.

previous election I really do not know whether there was or was not. I know Mr. O'Beirne was stopping at a hotel at the election previous to '65, but whether he was there as an ordinary guest, or had the hotel taken, I cannot say.

13938. Mr. O'Beirne took Dunne's hotel, I believe?—Yes.

13939. Did you take it for him?—I took it for him.

13940. Mr. Munster, we have heard, had Corcoran's hotel?—Yes.

13941. Do you know that Mr. Vincent Scully took a hotel?—I think not; I don't think he ever really intended to contest the borough at all.

13942. Mr. Dunne, whose house you took, had a vote, I believe?—He had; he is dead since.

13943. Had you any conversation with Mr. Dunne before taking his house as to how he would vote?—I had conversations with Mr. Dunne repeatedly, not exactly as to how he would vote; I met him almost every day. I will tell you the reason I took his hotel. Mr. Dunne told me there was a brother of his living in London; that Mr. O'Beirne had acted very kindly towards him; that Mr. O'Beirne had got a situation for a son of his five or six months before the election. I felt perfectly satisfied from his conversation that he would vote for and support Mr. O'Beirne without asking him, or he telling me. That was one of the reasons I took his hotel. Another was, there was merely to cross the street between his house and my own, and it was the most convenient for myself to visit Mr. O'Beirne, and I could be sent for in a moment.

13944. Is it in as central a situation as the other hotel?—Central?

13945. Yes?—Well, I don't think either of them very central. Corcoran's is in the extreme end of the town; I think of the two Corcoran's is at a more extreme end. Perhaps there is very little difference between them.

13946. We have heard of the method of engaging votes by taking houses. You will answer me candidly at once, had your taking of Dunne's hotel anything to do with his vote?—It was quite an exception to such cases.

13947. Had you such intention?—No intention.

13948. No intention whatever?—None whatever. I felt perfectly satisfied at the time I took his hotel that he was a friend of Mr. O'Beirne. He was a friend of my own. I was inclined to put the money in his way, and I took his hotel also at a previous county election.

13949. You got £50 from Captain Graham; besides that you got a sum of £25?—I got £25, £19, and £15.

13950. The £25 Captain Graham tells us was given for Dr. Moloney?—Yes.

13951. Explain the circumstances under which you got it?—After the election of '65 there was a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed or felt about the manner in which Mr. O'Beirne had left town without paying money he owed, and I think about a year after that election. I thought that his having done so would make him unpopular. I wrote to him then urging him to pay all these claims. The thing then died out to some extent. Perhaps some of them were satisfied, but I didn't hear much about it until about a year before the last election, and I again informed him what was going on. Later it was said that Mr. O'Beirne was in fact a pauper; that he was unable to pay his debts; that he never would come to contest Cashel; and these two sums that were owing to Mrs. Hanley and Dr. Moloney were freely spoken of as proofs of his pauperism; and I thought that was acting injuriously to him, and wrote to him urging him to have the money paid, and not having received money from him, I spoke to Captain Graham, and Captain Graham said, "Why don't you pay the money yourself?" I declined to advance money of my own for election purposes. I cannot be quite sure whether I asked Captain Graham to advance it, or whether he volunteered it; but he gave me the money at all events. I paid Mrs. Hanley £19; I knew it was due to her. I went to Dr. Moloney; I wanted to ascertain whether the money was due to him, and he produced letters that satisfied me that it was due. I then paid it. I made no secret of the matter. On the contrary, I paid it with a view of making it public that Mr. O'Beirne's debts were paid. I did so publicly, and it was with that view and that view only, to get rid of the argument that was made use of in the streets, that his debts were not paid, that I paid that money.

13952. Tell me upon what grounds Mr. O'Beirne owed the debt to Dr. Moloney?—After the election of '65, Mr. O'Beirne directed Dr. Moloney, and agreed to pay him, I think, £25 for his attending the people generally who resided on the Commons. After the expiration of the year, I saw from the letters Dr. Moloney produced to me, Dr. Moloney asked Mr. O'Beirne to discontinue that engagement, and Mr. O'Beirne wrote to him to keep it on for another year or two further. He produced those letters to me, and of course I was perfectly satisfied on reading them that Mr. O'Beirne having directed Dr. Moloney to continue his services, that he had a right to be paid.

13953. Did Dr. Moloney complain to you that he had not been paid?—He mentioned several times he had not been paid.

13954. Did he express dissatisfaction with Mr. O'Beirne?—He generally spoke of it in rather a joking way.

13955. Then why, if he spoke in a jesting way, did you pay him?—He had spoken of it jokingly to other people, and they gave it as an argument in favour of the opinion they entertained of Mr. O'Beirne's pauperism. It was not to satisfy Dr. Moloney I paid the money.

13956. Did Dr. Moloney ever intimate that unless he was paid he would not support Mr. O'Beirne?—Certainly the contrary always—always the contrary.

13957. Did you believe, from the conversations you had with Dr. Moloney, that he would have voted for Mr. O'Beirne even if he had not been paid?—I have no doubt whatever—I have not a particle of doubt of it.

13958. What year's salary was it—was it the salary for 1868?—I think it was up to March, '68. It was then understood at the time he was paid up to that time, and the thing was to discontinue for the future; he was to have no further claim.

13959. Had he been paid the previous years?—I presume so. That was all he told me was then due.

13960. He told us he only got payment for two years?—I really don't know he was paid anything beyond what he said was due.

13961. Who is Mrs. Hanley?—A car proprietor and shopkeeper in town. I knew she had given a very large number of cars in '65, and that she had been constantly asking for payment.

13962. Is she connected with any voters?—There was a son of hers a voter.

13963. Was he then living with her?—No, nor had not been living with her for a long time before that.

13964. Is he alive still?—No; he died since.

13965. Was he alive and a voter at the election in '68?—He was.

13966. And voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

13967. Did you hear that Hanley was displeased at his mother's account not being paid?—Oh, he was grumbling about it.

13968. I suppose you will not say of him as you say of Dr. Moloney, that you were perfectly sure he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne if the account had not been paid?—I was perfectly sure of that.

13969. Were you as sure of it as you were of Dr. Moloney?—I felt more convinced of Dr. Moloney, but still I think Hanley would have voted whether it was paid or not.

13970. Do you recollect any specific conversation or observations of Hanley, showing it was doubtful he would vote for Mr. O'Beirne unless he was paid?—I cannot call to mind.

13971. Did the general tone of his conversation leave a doubt on your mind?—No; I always thought he would vote. He felt often angry at not being paid, but I did not think that would have affected his vote; and I may add, I paid these sums of money at the time perfectly unconditionally, not having said a word in any way about the votes. There was another £15; I ascertained before I paid the money to Keeffe that he had got a cheque from Mr. O'Beirne for the amount. I returned that £15 to Captain Graham.

13972. Is Keeffe a voter?—He is not a voter.

13973. But I suppose he is considerably useful in making a row at election times?—Just so.

13974. No more good than that, I suppose?—I do not think he made any rows, but rather kept his party in order.

13975. Making a noise I mean when I say rows?—Yes.

13976. Now, Mr. Grace, do you know what Mr. O'Beirne's election of 1865 cost?—I do not.

13977. Do you know anything of the cost of the election of 1868?—I do not.

13978. Did you expend any money yourself except what you have told?—I got £4 from Mr. O'Beirne's man after the election to pay two clerks and that is the entire amount of my expenditure. I handed it to the agent for expenses.

13979. Have you been directly or indirectly concerned in any other payments?—No; £50 for the hotel, £4 handed me for two clerks, a cheque for £25 for the sheriff, which I handed over to him in the same manner; that is all I know about.

13980. £50 for the hotel, £25 for the sheriff, and £4 for two clerks?—That is all.

13981. Although you did not yourself pay did you see any other money paid?—I did not.

13982. Did you see any cheques of Mr. O'Beirne's?—I did not.

13983. Do you know anything of any payments having been made to anyone?—I do not indeed.

13984. Do you know a man of the name of Foley. Did you ever hear of his bill having been taken up by Mr. O'Beirne?—I heard it lately. I heard it here.

13985. Did you not hear it until this Commission?—I cannot remember that I did. It might have been mentioned at the time of the petition, but I do not recollect.

13986. Foley was examined, but he did not mention it at the petition?—I do not remember I ever heard it until I heard it here.

13987. In the course of your canvass you must have had communication with electors?—Not a great many indeed; I did not go into the house of any elector at all except I met them casually.

13988. Have you had applications made to you for money? When I say that I do not mean a direct demand for money. We know the insidious ways in which men would suggest it. I want to know during your canvass if in any manner you understood that a man expected money for his vote?—The only way I could understand that would be if a man was asked how he would vote and hesitate and say he had not his mind made up; but there was nothing said to me that would lead me to believe such. There was a good deal said in joking. Persons that I knew would not vote for Mr. Munster held out their hands to me asking how much would I give; but beyond that I do not remember that there was anything said that would lead me so to infer.

13989. Do you not recollect young Connolly coming to you?—Yes; Connolly came to me before my illness and asked me either to employ him or get him employment at the election.

13990. What did you tell him?—I told him at the time that I was not employing anybody and would not until Mr. O'Beirne's arrival. I quite forgot the matter until he called to me again after I had recovered. I saw him in my own office and he asked me again to get him employment. I said that I would speak to Mr. O'Beirne, but did not know what arrangements he had made. I knew Connolly from his childhood and all his family, and knew them to be decent and strictly honest. Whether he had or had not a vote I would have done him any service I could. However I asked him, "what remuneration will you expect for your services?" He declined to name a sum and pressed me to say what I thought. At length I said, "If you get £15 or £20 it is a very good thing for your services." He held his head down for a moment and then looked up at me and said, "Would you think £100 too much?" "£100," said I, "for your services! It is as much as the conducting agent at either side will get." He hesitated again and said he had five votes, I think; that he either could bring five votes or that he could influence them, and I said "Oh, that looks very like purchasing votes, and with that I will have nothing whatever to do." We parted and that is the whole conversation I had with him.

13991. Would not £20 be a large sum to give a lad of that kind?—Such sums were paid frequently.

13992. Do you think the services of a lad of that kind were worth £20?—Ordinary services during the same periods when elections would not be going on would not be worth £20; but everybody is better paid during elections than at other times.

13993. Twenty pounds seems a large sum to have a lad paid for about a month?—I believed him to be strictly honest; that money might be placed in his hands for payment of mobs, and things of that kind. In fact, I considered he could save £20 during the time; and I may say this, that people are always paid more liberally during an election than at any other time. Even at county elections I have known men to be paid £30 at the county election that during the same period would not be able to earn £5 at any other business.

13994. Do you mean that in that conversation with Connolly you had no intention of influencing a vote?—Most decidedly; not at the moment. When he mentioned votes I broke off the conversation and had no more to say to him. I went into the election fully determined to have nothing to do with any corrupt practice, and it was very well known through the town that I had nothing to do with such matters.

13995. Can you recollect any other instance of any person coming to you from whose conversation you learned that he was looking for money for himself, or a relative, or a friend?—I can't remember.

13996. You do not recollect anyone at all?—No, I do not. There were a great many conversations carried on about the election that I cannot remember, I dare say, but I don't remember anything of that kind.

13997. Did you get any claim after the election?—Yes, I did.

13998. Have you made a list of them?—I have got all the claims in my pocket. [Witness hands in documents.] There are some other papers got mixed up with them; I had them at the petition, and other papers got mixed up with them.

13999. Will these be paid still do you think?—I rather think not.

14000. The only one I have met with is the Clonmel Chronicle?—Oh, there are others there; I should think there are others.

14001. No, there are not?—I had them in a bundle. I must have made a mistake; I brought the wrong papers.

14002. As I find these cheques here, did you hear anything about them?—Yes, I did.

14003. Some persons came, I believe, and gave you these cheques?—Yes.

14004. How many came?—I think three or four.

14005. These were cheques that were given to them by Mr. Laffan. I believe I have four here. Were they given by Mr. Laffan as retainers?—Yes.

14006. Do you know were these persons supporters of Mr. O'Beirne?—At the time?

14007. Yes?—I recollect they said so, but I do not know positively. I cannot very well tell at the time who were supporters at all of Mr. O'Beirne, for I had been very little with him.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

October 19.

Mr. Pierce Grace.

14008. We have it already that you published a notice as to what the effect of the retainers was?—Yes.

14009. I have only one claim here?—I will furnish the other claims. I thought I put them in my pocket, but I put the wrong papers. I got two claims from the Clonmel Chronicle, and I suppose I put one of them there.

14010. Did you appoint an expense agent?—Yes. Mr. O'Beirne rather appointed him, Mr. Pat Connor.

14011. But I believe he did not do very much?—I believe he paid only four pounds that I gave him.

Dr. Daniel Moloney.

Dr. Daniel Moloney here tenders himself.

14012. Witness.—I got two cheques of £12 10*s.* each for '65 and '66. The 2nd December, '66, I got the last £12 10*s.*; nothing more until I got this £25 from Mr. Grace in '68.

Mr. Pierce Grace.

Mr. Pierce Grace's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14013. I asked you if you saw any payments made, and you said you did not?—I did not.

14014. Do you know that Mr. O'Beirne was paying expenses?—I believe so.

14015. Do you know he was making payments by his own hand?—I really don't know, but I think he was.

14016. Mr. Munster wants to know did you advise Mr. O'Beirne that that was illegal?—The election expense agent was not appointed until the day of the nomination.

14017. Did you ever advise Mr. O'Beirne that that course was illegal?—It was not an illegal one.

14018. Therefore you did not advise him?—I did not advise him.

14019. Mr. Munster wishes to know are persons paid more liberally when they happen to be connected with voters. I can answer the question for Mr. Munster so far as my experience goes. [Mr. Munster.—I am afraid you are not aware of ——] What do you say, Mr. Grace?—I was never concerned in an election except the previous one, and was only nominally then.

14020. You did not do as much as Mr. Johnson?—No, I did not.

[Mr. Munster hands in a slip of paper.]

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster, if I feel it my duty I shall put any question, however painful, that I think tends to the purpose for which we are here; but on any point outside that I am not disposed to inquire.

Mr. Munster.—To save the time of the Court, I should like to know if principal questions may be put to the credit of a witness.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Not to any person in court.

Mr. Munster.—No, but to the witness himself.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—If we believe a witness is not telling us the truth we will test as far as we can, but that is a matter that must be left to our discretion. I will receive questions from anyone tending to elicit information; but questions referring to any former charge against a witness, and ordinary charges affecting character, I will not ask.

14021. Witness.—If it refers to me, there never was a charge against me.

14022. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—It does not concern you, Mr. Grace. It is only right to say that the suggestion was relating to what occurred the other day with regard to Mr. Phelan. I will not pursue it any further, and I will not put this question. Mr. Munster wants to know what efforts had been made to serve Mr. Leahy as a witness for the election petition. On the election petition you said, "I gave directions that every effort should be made to serve both these gentlemen," that is, Mr. Leahy and Captain Dudley Byrne. Mr. Munster wants to know what efforts had been made. Did you give a summons to be served on Mr. Leahy?—I did.

14023. Did you do the same with that as with every other subpœna?—Yes, I gave a subpœna to be served on Mr. Leahy. I saw him in town here on a Saturday. I told the man to have watchers on him, and that if he was leaving before twelve o'clock to follow him to Goold's Cross and serve him there. He made his escape some way and was not served.

14024. With regard to Captain Dudley Byrne, what did you do?—I merely gave a subpœna to the man and told him to serve him. I thought he was in town at the time.

14025. Mr. Munster.—Will you ask Mr. Grace if he ever gave directions to have a summons served on Captain Byrne at his house?—Witness.—I don't think I did.

14026. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you give his address to the process-server?—The process-server knew his residence as well as I did, but I did not tell him to go there.

14027. You gave a subpœna to him?—I did, with the bona fide intention of having it served, as we were most anxious to produce him.

14028. You will send in the claims?—I will bring them up in the morning.

Dr. Michael Phelan Cormack.

Doctor Michael Phelan Cormack tenders himself.

14029. Witness.—I feel seriously aggrieved by the statement of Phelan that he had me arrested in January last for debt. I beg leave to allow me to contradict it.

14030. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I will hear any statement you desire to make?—I beg leave to contradict the statement of Phelan that he had me arrested in January last under a warrant. Neither he nor any other man had me arrested under a decree for debt. The sheriff's deputy here is ill, and not able to attend, otherwise I would have him here to corroborate my statement. He is so ill that Mr. Ffrench had to see him in bed to-day to take his declaration. My friends and myself feel seriously aggrieved by the statement of Phelan.

14031. You do not wish to add anything more?—Nothing more except a direct contradiction to what he has stated.

14032. It is a collateral matter into which my brothers and I do not feel bound to enter?—He has also stated that I sent Cunningham to purchase cattle, which I deny; I never gave any authority to Cunningham to purchase cattle for Mr. Munster.

14033. It is right to tell you that Cunningham himself says you did go to him?—I was walking after some cattle by Cunningham's house, and Cunningham asked me, "Are you going to buy those cattle, Doctor?" I said, "I am not; Phelan is every day tormenting me about some stock, do you know the value?" I know nothing at all; that is the only conversation, but I never asked Cunningham to go to Phelan to purchase stock, and I deny his statement with regard to his having me arrested. Neither he nor any other man had. I think it too bad that my character and position should be assailed.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Wednesday, October 20, 1869.

Mr. Pierce Grace recalled; examined by Mr. Waters, Q.C.

14034. Do you produce the several claims that you say were furnished to you as Mr. O'Beirne's conducting agent?—Yes, sir.

14035. Do you know if any of them have been paid?—I do not know. I heard—sombody told me that there was a bill of Miss Ryan's paid, but I did not hear of any other.

14036. The Clonmel Chronicle, £116?—Has not been paid.

14037. The Nenagh Guardian, £34?—Has not been paid.

14038. The Tipperary Free Press, £100 0*s.* 4*d.*?—Has not been paid.

14039. The Waterford Chronicle, £8?—Not paid.

14040. Mrs. Cecilia Dunne; is that Mrs. Dunne of the hotel?—No, it is another Mrs. Dunne, £14 10*s.*; not the proprietor of the hotel. This is all for cars employed about the election. I think the bill has been paid. I think Mr. O'Beirne himself stated at the time of the petition that he would pay the bill.

14041. Quirke's bill for printing, £13 12*s.* 6*d.*, we are told has not been paid?—No.

14042. James Dunne, amount of hotel bill, £106 2*s.* 6*d.*; does that include the £50?—I think not; exclusive of that, I think.

14043. Do you know has it been paid?—I think not.

14044. Edmund Canavan, services during the election, £10. Is that the man who was examined here, and who was what is called the mobsman?—Yes.

14045. James Ryan of Cashel; do you know who that is?—He is one of the same class of men.

14046. "Honorable sir, I was employed during the election here. I believe I got two-and-sixpence a day, but in my fighting and arguments I often lost the most part of my hire. Now, as the election is favourable to you, and Attorney Grace"—that is you, I suppose—"knows my exertions, I hope you will consider me. I will leave the matter in your hands; James Ryan." Is he a voter?—He is not.

14047. I suppose the "arguments" he refers to were those commonly used by mobsmen in the street at different times. Mary Ryan; is that Miss Mary Ryan of the hotel?—Yes.

14048. "Squires, for reporting;" what reporting is that, do you know?—He was a sort of a watcher, and used to make reports to Mr. O'Beirne of what he saw going on at the opposite side.

14049. Who is he?—He is the son of Mr. Squires, who is an elector.

14050. He appears to have been paid £1 of this?—I didn't pay him anything.

14051. James Cullen; is that the man who was examined here?—I was not here when he was examined.

14052. "Amount due to me as agent at the recent election of Cashel, £5?"—I think I heard he was examined.

14053. "James Lyster O'Beirne, M.P., debtor to Thomas Murphy; £25 for the use of part of his house at Lower Gate-street, during the late election?—He was examined.

14054. He was not paid the £25?—No, he was not.

14055. Do you know who is Mary Glasgow who "ruled forty women during the election"?—I don't know.

14056. She asked only £3 for it; that is very small for the performance of such a task. "Sir, Mary Glasgow ruled forty women during the election, speeched and advocated day and night during six weeks in the interest of Mr. O'Beirne, shook hands with that honorable gentleman, and kept loyal and true during the whole time. The exertion of the contest has made her rather backward in health, and she begs to submit to you her claim of three pounds. Hoping you will long enjoy good health, I remain, sir, your humble servant, Mary Glasgow." Who is David Ryan, do you know?—I do; he is not an elector.

14057. Is he son of an elector?—No.

14058. He claims £10 for canvassing?—Yes; he told me he was employed by Mr. O'Beirne. I didn't employ him.

14059. Patrick Dwyer, ten pounds for canvassing?—That is the same class of man; he is no elector, nor son of an elector.

14060. "James L. O'Beirne, esq., to James Gleeson to amount of labour £2. Honored sir, you may remember when in Cashel you took my name in your book for the above. I then told that I followed you from Goold's Cross to Cashel. You got three votes through me. In return I hope you will keep your promise to me in Mrs. Dunne's room, and remain your obedient servant, James Gleeson, Friar-street." Who is he, do you know?—That is a poor man of the town here.

14061. Is he connected with any voter?—Not one.

14062. He is not, you say?—Oh, not at all.

14063. Mr. Griffin.—Do you know anything about Pat Foley, son of Edmund Foley, being employed?—No.

14064. Or Francis Ryan, son of Joseph Ryan?—I believe he was employed, but I didn't employ him.

14065. Michael Hackett, son of William Hackett?—I don't know the young man was at all at our side.

14066. Or Pat Hackett, son of John Hackett?—He was not employed.

14067. William Cashen?—I think he was employed.

14068. James Cashen, son of Patrick Cashen?—I am not aware of that. There is one portion of my evidence yesterday I wish to allude to. You asked me my knowledge of payments made by Mr. O'Beirne. There was a sum of £60 Mr. O'Beirne told me he paid Ryan for the use of his house. I was not aware of it at the time of the payment, but he told me afterwards he paid it.

14069. That is Ryan and Murnane's?—Yes, it is only yesterday evening I remembered the fact.

14070. Do you know anything of Daniel Moloney of Hughes's Lot?—I know there are such persons.

14071. Did they ever come to you about the election?—I don't remember they did. As to the payments made by myself, there was a small sum of £3 I recollect having paid the court-keeper here, for the erection of a platform, or something of that kind. I didn't remember it yesterday when giving evidence.

14072. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Do you recollect since yesterday of any persons coming to you and leading you to believe that they expected money?—No, I do not recollect anybody since. If anything of the kind should occur to me before the Commission closes, I will mention it.

14073. Mr. Griffin.—Did you say anything about those cheques to Ryan and Hogan?—I don't know anything about them.

14074. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Do you know where those men Ryan and Hogan are?—They left the town.

14075. I am unable to find anything about them?—I don't know where they are. Hogan was, until recently, about the town in some place, but I heard he went away to some place looking for a situation. I don't think he is about now.

14076. Do you know are any of his family living in the town?—Oh, not in the town; he didn't belong to the town at all.

14077. Do you know where he came from?—Oh, yes; I think a place called Coolkip, it is within about six miles of Cashel. I think Coolkip is the name of the place.

[Mortimer Shea.—Your worship, he was seven days previous to the Commission, in the town here; but I was told he left the country since.]

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

The Rev. James M'Namara.

The Rev. James M'Namara recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14078. You have already been sworn on this inquiry, and you consider yourself under the same obligation?—Yes.

14079. I hope, Mr. M'Namara, you have endeavoured to think of this transaction since?—I have, my lord, as well as I could, and I apologise for not being very well on yesterday; I was a little uneasy.

14080. You recollect now that you got £5?—I do, my lord.

14081. And you recollect that it was by cheque?—It was, my lord.

14082. Do you know on what bank the cheque was?—Well, I do not, my lord.

14083. Do you recollect where you got that cheque?—I got it cashed in Thurles, my lord.

14084. By whom?—In the National bank, by myself.

14085. Do you recollect getting it cashed the next day, or how soon after you got it did you get it cashed?—Well, perhaps the next day, my lord.

14086. Do you recollect whose name was in the cheque when you got it?—The Archbishop's.

14087. Can you say if the cheque was payable to order, or payable to bearer—you understand the distinction?—Of course, my lord. The Archbishop put his signature to it.

14088. Was the Archbishop's signature to it when you got it, or did you take it to him?—I took it to him, my lord.

14089. Had you any conversation with him with reference to the cheque?—I went myself, my lord, with it to him, and he said—I thought it was for himself, my lord—but he said, "This is for your use," that is, for my use.

14090. And do you recollect any further conversation with reference to it. Did you tell him how you got it?—Well, as far as I can, my lord, I think it was my name was on it; I think I went with it to the Archbishop; then, when he opened it, he put his signature to it.

14091. Do you recollect if you told the Archbishop from whom you got the cheque, or that you got it from Mr. Pat Laffan? Did you tell the Archbishop from whom you got it?—Yes, I did, my lord.

14092. Do you recollect whose name was signed to the cheque, that is, the person who drew the cheque?—Well, I do not, my lord.

14093. You do not know who drew it at all?—No, my lord, I do not.

14094. When you told the Archbishop from whom you got the cheque, did you tell the circumstance of those two bags being left with you?—No, he did not ask me, my lord.

14095. Did you say anything to him about it?—I might before tell him that they were there.

14096. When you say you might, do you believe you did tell him?—I do, my lord.

14097. You say that was before you took the cheque to get his indorsement upon it?—No, I believe after, my lord; I hadn't it long—more than a day.

14098. Did you tell him that, before the money was taken away, or after it was taken away?—After the money was taken.

14099. Did you tell the Archbishop who sent the bags to you, or how they came to you?—I did, I think, my lord.

14100. Who did you tell him sent them to you?—Of course, Mr. Laffan.

14101. Did you tell him who sent the two bags to you?—I did not, my lord; I couldn't know it.

14102. You did not? Do I understand you to say you told the Archbishop that Mr. Pat Laffan took them away?—I did, my lord.

14103. Now, Mr. M'Namara, will you tell me, if you please, as well as you recollect, all the conversation between you and the Archbishop with reference to these two bags?—Oh, very little, my lord, I suppose only five words.

14104. Did he tell you that he knew anything about them or where they came from?—He did not, my lord.

14105. Did he seem surprised at hearing of those two bags of money being left with you?—Well, I suppose he did, my lord.

14106. Now, you know, Mr. M'Namara, that Mr. Leahy, the Archbishop's brother, was concerned in the sending of that money there?—Yes; I didn't know it.

14107. Do you know it now?—I do, my lord.

14108. Do you know now by whom they were left?—I do not, my lord.

14109. Did you never know that Mr. Leahy was concerned in the transaction until you learned it from these proceedings? Had you never a conversation with Mr. Edmund Leahy about it?—Never, my lord.

14110. Did he intimate to you that they came by his agency?—Never, my lord.

14111. Have you seen him since that time?—Oh, I have seen him since, but not a word about the election or anything that way, my lord.

14112. Now you are quite sure that you never heard that Mr. Leahy was concerned in sending those bags to you before the proceedings here?—I am quite sure of it, my lord.

14113. Do you recollect, now, having ever seen the young man that brought the money before or since?—I have not a recollection of him; I would tell it if I knew him, as well as every other matter.

14114. And you never heard his name from anyone?—Never, my lord.

14115. Or where he came from?—Never.

14116. Do you know if he came by train or drove there?—I believe there was a car—that they came by car.

14117. Do you know if it was a private car or a hackney car?—I think it was a hackney car.

14118. Do you know if the car belonged to Thurles?—I do not know to whom it belonged, my lord; I only saw it outside; there is a high wall at my house.

14119. Do you know Mr. Edmund Leahy's family?—Do I know them, my lord?

14120. Yes, by sight, I mean?—Well, I would; I only met them once.

14121. Do you know if Mr. Leahy has a son as old as the person who brought this money to you?—I don't know, my lord; I know he has a son at all events; I met him only once.

14122. Was this young man Mr. Leahy's son?—No.

14123. He was not—you are sure of that?—I am sure of it.

14124. You used the expression to me just this moment, "they came by car?"—Yes, my lord.

14125. Did you mean by that that there was anyone with the young man who brought the money?—I think Mr. Laffan was with him.

14126. There was some person?—Yes, my lord.

14127. Did that person come into your house?—Not the second; only the young man that brought the money.

14128. Then the second person remained outside?—Remained outside.

14129. Was that a second person besides the driver?—I think so, my lord.

14130. When you cashed the cheque did you keep the entire amount yourself?—I did, my lord, only I might have given some in charity.

14131. I mean did you use it all yourself?—Well, I did, my lord.

14132. What I mean is that you did not give half, or any portion of it, away to any person?—No.

14133. You said you thought the cheque was for the use of the Archbishop?—It was his name was in it.

14134. I understand that your name was not in it at all when it was given to you?—Only the Archbishop's name. My name was not in it.

14135. And you took the cheque to the Archbishop, thinking it was for him?—Yes, my lord.

14136. Did he tell you at once that it was not for him, but for you?—He did, my lord.

14137. Did he say that he had ever seen the cheque before, or knew anything about it?—Never. All he did is, put his signature to it.

14138. I believe there is a second bank in Thurles?—There is, my lord.

14139. The Provincial Bank, or the Bank of Ireland?—The Bank of Ireland.

14140. Are you quite sure it was at the National Bank you got it cashed?—It was at the National Bank.

14141. And you are unable to say if it was a cheque on any Thurles bank?—I could not say.

14142. Would you recollect if it was a cheque on an Irish bank?—I could not tell, my lord, because I did not mind much, but brought it to him.

14143. Do you recollect what the colour of the cheque was?—Well, I think it was a blue; somewhat like that colour [pointing to a cheque on the National Bank.]

14144. Do you think that was the colour?—Really, I could not say; but I think it was rather blueish [witness is shown a cheque on the National Bank, and one on the Bank of Ireland]. No, it was not that [the Bank of Ireland].

14145. And you think it was rather this [National Bank]?—Yes.

14146. Now, it strikes us as a very strange thing, that a person comes to you, a total stranger to you, and without any previous intimation, leaves two bags of money with you. Perhaps now you will try to recollect if you received any previous intimation in any way that this money was to be left?—Never, my lord.

14147. By message or otherwise, in any way?—Never, my lord.

14148. Or that any message would be left?—Never.

14149. And your evidence is that, until the young man came with two bags of money, you never heard anything was going to be left with you for any person?—Never, my lord.

14150. Describe the young man as well as you recollect him?—I don't know.

14151. Do you recollect the colour of his hair?—I think he was fair-faced.

14152. The colour of his hair?—It must be fair likewise.

14153. Did he wear whiskers or moustache?—I don't think he did; I did not mind him much.

14154. Did he wear whiskers, or moustache, or beard?—I believe hardly either.

14155. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Can you remember any more of what occurred between you and the young man when he came in? Describe as well as you can recollect what occurred?—He came in.

14156. Who opened the door?—An old housekeeper.

14157. Did he come in?—He walked in; the door was open.

14158. What did he say?—He said to leave those two bags here to my care until they would be called for.

14159. Did he give no reason for selecting you for the charge of them?—No reason.

14160. Did he say he was told by anyone to leave them there?—He was not, my lord; I suppose he left it as a confidential locality.

14161. How long did he remain?—Not five minutes, but went back to his car, nor I didn't go after him out.

14162. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you know any gentleman named Moore?—Where, my lord?

14163. Anywhere?—There are so many Moores: I don't know any of them in Thurles.

14164. Do you know if this young man's name was Moore?—No, my lord.

14165. Mr. Munster.—Mr. George Moore was staying with me, and went with me to Killarney; I can fix the time of his departure. I do not know what time this was.—Witness.—The 15th November.

14166. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What Moore do you speak of?—Mr. Munster.—The son of Mr. George Henry Moore—his eldest son. My impression is it was long before that.

Captain Dudly Byrne was called, but did not appear.

Mr. Michael Joseph Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14167. Mr. Macsheehy.—You acknowledge yourself already sworn?—Yes.

14168. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You were the conducting agent of Mr. Munster at the last election?—I was.

14169. When were you retained by Mr. Munster?—I was retained by Captain Byrne in September—I think about the 14th September, about a week before the Cashel races, which were, I think, on the 22nd or 23rd September.

14170. By Captain Dudly Byrne?—By Captain Byrne.

[Mr. Munster.—Would you ask Mr. Laffan if I did not ask to have the names of the payees of the cheques entered in my book.]

14171. Is that so, Mr. Laffan?—I believe so.

14172. Is that retainer in writing, or did it take place by verbal communication?—Verbal communication and handing me a £5 note, or £5, I cannot say which.

14173. Did he tell you at the time on whose behalf you were retained?—Certainly, before I took the retainer he told me about Mr. Munster; he gave me a description of him and his political views, and all that, which met with my approval.

14174. Did you then put yourself in communication with Mr. Munster?—No; I had a letter or two from Mr. Munster, but I do not think I put myself in communication, because that communication was carried on between Mr. Byrne and myself, or Mr. Leahy and myself, or Mr. Richardson; we had the three of those here before Mr. Munster came.

14175. Do you recollect when Mr. Leahy came here?—Mr. Leahy came here, I am sure, within a week of the time I got the retainer from Captain Byrne.

14176. That would be somewhere about the 21st September?—Yes.

14177. Did he remain here until the end of the election?—Oh, he was coming and going.

14178. Well, with casual absences?—I think in the first instance he was away, but at all events he was coming and going from that until the election.

14179. And you received instruction from Mr. Leahy as an agent of Mr. Munster?—Yes.

14180. And in the same way from Mr. Byrne?—From Mr. Byrne; the instructions I received from Mr. Byrne.

14181. You consulted with them, and they acted in concert with you?—Yes; or rather I consulted them about things—some little things that I did and can explain by-and-by.

14182. I mean to apply generally over the election proceedings. Mr. Leahy and Mr. Byrne acted with you, in concert with you, in behalf of Mr. Munster?—After the election business commenced I don't think I had much communication with Captain Byrne; I had with Mr. Leahy.

14183. I suppose you had almost constantly communication with Mr. Leahy about it?—Not constantly.

14184. When he was here?—When he was here I met him, I suppose, every day.

14185. You said you had letters from Mr. Munster himself?—I have.

14186. Have you kept those letters?—I have. The principal letters I got from Mr. Munster are two. I got some from his secretary announcing about telegrams and one thing or another; they were of no consequence; the principal letters are two—one in reference to the Christian Brothers' school; and the other, I think, sending me a hundred guineas. This is the letter about the Christian Brothers. If you like I shall read it.

14187. I have a copy of that letter; Mr. Munster gave it to me. Is that letter dated 9th September, '68?—The 19th September.

14188. It is the 9th in this copy?—It could not be the 9th, for I was not retained at all on the 9th.

14189. Give me the original letter.—[Witness hands it in.]—Is this the first letter you got from Mr. Munster?—I declare I don't know.

14190. It does not seem to be the first?—No, this one of September 23rd, enclosing the cheque for a hundred guineas. [Mr. Munster, I believe I have copies of all my letters. Mr. Leahy took presses of them, I think. I believe the press book is here.]

14191. Now, Mr. Laffan, looking at this letter of the 19th of September, does it not appear that you must have been in communication with Mr. Munster before?—No, it does not follow, and I will tell you why I had communication with Mr. Leahy or Mr. Biggin or some of them. I have a bundle of letters from all imaginable people; on looking at them I do not think them useful for this inquiry; there are really only two letters that it occurred to me might be brought into evidence, and accordingly I brought them.

14192. I will read this letter. This is a letter you say you got from Mr. Munster, and you think it is the first?—This letter, I must tell you, is not in reply to a letter from me to Mr. Munster.

14193. It is not?—It is not. I think the letter I wrote about the Christian Brothers was written to Captain Byrne or Mr. Leahy.

14194. Have you got a copy of that letter?—I am sure I have.

14195. It will be very necessary; it will be impossible to go on without it now. I will read this letter:—

"Sheffield, September 19th, 1868.

"MY DEAR MR. LAFFAN,—I am quite shocked that in your kind caution for me you should have thought it necessary to secure a sort of quid pro quo in any case for me in quasi return for anything I may like to do for the excellent Christian Brothers in your town.

"'———Longè mea discrepat istis
Et vox et ratio.'

Such has never been my manner, and, please God, never will be. Even in dealing with laymen I always prefer to suppose that there is honour on both sides; but in a matter concerning men serving God in religion procul absit, God forbid that I should offer them, not a bargain, but even the semblance of one. 'Tis 'Cæsar's wife,' you know. When you know me better you will comprehend the almost ludicrous aspect it bears in comparison with my notions of what is proper. As for yourself, my dear sir, something of the same feeling exists. If I am rightly informed, you wish, in case your work should be too light, to stipulate for a fee of £105. If so, it seems quite a reasonable thing to me, and I should prefer, if that is so, and you will say so to me, to send you my cheque, at once, for that amount. Of late I have (for reasons you will hear) been prepaying everybody, nor have I the least fear but that in the hands of a gentleman like yourself, to whom my friend Mr. L. has thought fit to confide my interests, I shall find no diminution of zeal.

"I am, yours truly,
"H. MUNSTER.

"P.S.—My views about the Christian Brothers' schools are so large that they will require a special ambassador. I think I shall have a bargain to propose, but, I trust, not a corrupt one. "H. M."

John Arthur.

John Arthur sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

14196. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—About since '57.

14197. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I did, sir.

14198. For whom did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. Lanigan, sir, the election immediately before that.

14199. Who canvassed you on behalf of Mr. Munster at the last election?—Well, at the time I let Mr. Munster the house—immediately after letting it, I think it was Mr. Michael Laffan or Mr. Richardson, either one or the other, asked me would I vote for Mr. Munster, and I said I would hold myself aloof—that I did not know whether I would vote for anyone at the time.

14200. Have you been canvassed on Mr. O'Beirne's behalf?—I have been spoken to on Mr. O'Beirne's behalf.

14201. Who spoke to you?—He spoke to me himself; I was one day passing Mr. Dunne's hotel, and a man was at the door; he said Mr. O'Beirne wanted to speak to me; I said he could have nothing to say to me; he said, "Come in;" I went upstairs and spoke to him; we hadn't much—only just spoken about the election; we had not many words.

14202. Did he ask you whether you would support him at the election?—He didn't exactly ask my support, but something to that intent; I don't recollect exactly.

14203. What reply did you make?—I told him I wouldn't promise or bind myself to anyone.

14204. When did you let the house to Mr. Munster?—I don't exactly recollect the date, but I have a document which will show if you wish to look at it, sir.

14205. Have you it there?—I have [hands in an agreement to let a house, dated the 14th October, 1868].

14206. What rent do you pay for that house yourself?—£16 a year, sir.

14207. And you get a profit rent of £10 a year?—Yes, sir.

14208. And the first year's rent was paid in advance?—It was, sir.

14209. Was there any inducement held out to you to support Mr. Munster?—Not a bit, sir; there was no inducement in the world; I let my house regularly—the same as what I got from any other tenant, and what I had from a former one, and there was no inducement in the world to hold out; I said I would keep my hand clear of it.

14210. What did you get for the use of your house by the police during the election?—I think about—I think either £2 or £3; I don't exactly recollect the sum; it wasn't as much as I expected—it wasn't anything like what I had expected.

14211. How much did you get from the police for the borough election?—I think in all, between the two elections, about £3, as well as I recollect.

14212. When was the year's rent paid in advance?—Immediately on its being passed, I got a cheque in the course of one or two days.

14213. Did you stipulate for a year's rent being paid in advance?—Certainly, sir, I did, because the former tenant had went off in arrears to me and I didn't get it.

14214. Mr. Munster had been some time in Cashel before this agreement was made?—I didn't see him at all before.

14215. Were you afraid he would go away?—I was not afraid; but not knowing the gentleman—all I knew was Mr. Laffan, and him I knew very well, but I didn't know the other gentleman as well as I do now.

14216. Had you any further dealings with Mr. Munster besides letting him this house?—I had, sir, a little; I have another document which I can show; here is an order that he gave me for spirits for Christmas for the poor, and here are the names of those that Mr. Laffan gave me, to whom it was delivered—Presents at Christmas for the poor. [Hands in a document.]

14217. Amounting to £6 13*s.*?—Yes, sir.

14218. Are those all the persons he gave the spirits to?—Yes, sir, these are the names; Mr. Laffan furnished me with the names of the parties to whom I was to give it.

14219. Do you live next door to the telegraph office?—I don't, sir; I live in the other part of the town, down; that is, a house that I took and repaired—built it, rather.

14220. Did you live in that house before you set it to Mr. Munster?—No, sir; but I kept a bakery in it for some time.

14221. Did you give up the bakery?—Yes; and another trader had it between the time I spent in it.

14222. What rent did the former tenant pay you?—Twenty-six pounds he was to pay me.

14223. For the whole house?—For the whole house.

14224. And you have the under part set now for £26?—No; I have the front house set for £26 a year, not the whole, but the front house.

14225. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Had the former tenant the front and the back house?—He had, sir.

14226. What was in the back house?—It is merely a bakery.

14227. What did you get for it?—I got nothing at all.

14228. Did you make any use of it?—No, sir; Mr. Munster had it during the winter for a soup kitchen for the poor; it was out of repair, and he ordered me to get it repaired, and I gave it to him as long as he wished.

14229. Does he pay you anything for it?—Nothing at all, sir; I repaired it, and I gave it to him as long as he wishes for the same purpose.

John Dwyer sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

John Dwyer.

14230. You live in the Main-street?—Yes, sir.

14231. You got £30 for the last election?—Well, I don't deny it, sir.

14232. Where did you get it?—Below at Mrs. Corcoran's hotel, sir.

14233. How long before the election did you get it?—Either two or three days, sir.

14234. Who told you to go there for it?—We had an understanding about it, sir.

14235. With whom had you the understanding—was it with Mr. Pat. Laffan?—No, sir.

14236. With whom?—Mr. Cunningham.

14237. The understanding was that you were to get £30 for your vote?—No, sir.

14238. What were you to get the £30 for?—There was a part of my house taken.

14239. Where is your house?—In the Main-street, sir.

14240. How much of your house was taken?—The front room, sir.

14241. The whole house is valued at £5 10*s.*?—Yes, sir.

14242. Was it used?—Well, there was two or three men came in there and took dinner.

14243. Who were those men?—Well, there was some men of the Carews, of the Commons, that came in and took dinner there.

14244. And paid for it?—Yes, sir, called for dinner, and paid for it out of their pockets.

14245. What is your business—are you a publican?—Well, I deal in the grocery department, and I'm a wool-buyer and a skinner by trade, sir.

14246. You have a grocery?—Yes, sir, and an eating-house.

14247. Was that the only use that was made of your house?—That was all, sir.

14248. If those men had come to your house without its being taken by Mr. Munster, would you have given them a dinner?—Begor, I would give every man dinner that would pay me for it, why not, sir? It is not for nothing I would get it myself.

14249. Were you canvassed at Mr. O'Beirne's side?—Yes, he did himself canvass me.

14250. How long before the election?—I did not keep a regular account, and could not tell you how long it was.

14251. I suppose when your house was taken by Mr. Munster you would not consider yourself at liberty to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Not at all, sir. You are quite astray, sir. That is not the way of the case. I beg your pardon for saying it. It was two or three days before the election my house was taken. Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me a fortnight before that.

14252. Yes, but after your house was taken by Mr. Munster would you consider it fair to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—I ——

14253. After getting the £30 from Mr. Munster's side, would you have considered it fair to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Sure I refused Mr. O'Beirne before that.

14254. Will you answer my question, sir?—I don't understand it properly, sir.

14255. Would you have considered it fair to vote for Mr. O'Beirne after taking £30 from Mr. Munster for your house?—Well, I would not, sir. I would not consider it fair, sir, because I wasn't inclined to vote for him.

14256. It was in Corcoran's hotel you were paid?—It was, sir.

14257. Was it in the room at the top of the house?—The middle room. I went up one flight of stairs, and there I got it.

14258. Describe how you got it?—I was sent into the room there, and the money was on the table, and there was some man that handed me a paper. He asked me my name, and I said John Dwyer. I signed my hand to the paper, and took the money that was on the table.

14259. Is that the note you signed [is handed a note]?—By gor, I couldn't tell you sir, but I could tell that that is my name, sir.

14260. Is that your signature?—Well, it is, sir.

14261. Did you vote in the election of '65?—No, I had no vote then, sir.

14262. Was your house taken at that election?—No, sir. Mr. Munster never asked a vote from me, and I gave it to him independent.

14263. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you put in a claim for any money against Mr. Munster?—No, sir, but there was some flannel bought from me, sir.

14264. How much flannel was bought from you?—I believe the whole amount of what Mr. Munster bought from me was something over £8. I don't know really now, sir.

14265. When was that bought—was it before the election?—Well, it was, sir. He bought it from me in the public streets before the whole town, the same way as I sell to every other person.

14266. Was it for the poor?—For the poor he bought it, sir. He extended his charity in that way, sir.

14267. Do you know anything about a claim for £40?—I know no more than what I tell you. I have no knowledge of anything—never interfered in any way in the world but what I tell you.

[Mr. Munster.—Will you ask him, sir, if that flannel was two rolls that I bought at his door, and paid for, in cash, at the time?]

14268. Was that two rolls of flannel bought by Mr. Munster, and cash paid for it at the time?—No, sir. I went up and put in a bill to Miss Stearne, I understood, and she gave me a cheque on the bank.

14269. Mr. Munster.—It had to be measured, I think?—Yes, sir. She gave me a cheque on the bank.

14270. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you sell it at the ordinary price?—The same price, sir, that I was getting on the market for it. The same price, sir.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Patrick Ryan, of Lady's Well-street, was called, but did not appear.

James K. Fahie sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

James K. Fahie.

14271. How long have you been an elector of Cashel, Mr. Fahie?—Since the year 1865.

14272. Had you no vote before '65?—No, not for the borough.

14273. Were you in occupation of the same premises in '59 that you were in '65?—Fifty-nine? Well, I think I was, but I had no vote in '59.

14274. For whom did you vote in '65?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

14275. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

14276. Were you canvassed by Mr. Lanigan?—I don't recollect.

14277. Did you ever promise Mr. Lanigan to vote for him?—No.

14278. Was ever a promise made on your behalf to vote for Mr. Lanigan?—I am not aware.

14279. Not to your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge.

14280. Did you promise Mr. O'Beirne when he canvassed you?—Yes.

14281. Were you under any obligations to Mr. Lanigan?—Well, my daughter got an appointment, I believe, through Mr. Lanigan.

14282. Why did you prefer Mr. O'Beirne to Mr. Lanigan?—I considered that Mr. O'Beirne stood in a high position, and was an able man, and I thought he would be the best candidate for Cashel, or representative for Cashel.

14283. Did not Mr. Lanigan obtain an appointment for your daughter?—Yes, I admit that.

14284. When was the appointment made?—Well, I should say, perhaps, about the year '59.

14285. Fifty-nine?—I think so.

14286. Were you acquainted with Mr. O'Beirne before the election of '65?—No, not acquainted; but I heard that he stood in a very high position in London as a commercial man.

14287. Did you receive any inducement for voting for Mr. O'Beirne in '65?—Receive any inducement?

14288. Yes?—I received no inducement.

14289. Did any member of your family?—No, not to my knowledge. I am quite sure they did not.

14290. Were not Mr. Lanigan and Mr. O'Beirne of the same political principles?—Well, I believe they were.

14291. Was not Mr. Lanigan a man very generally liked in the county Tipperary?—I have no doubt.

14292. And Mr. O'Beirne was a stranger?—He was, but I did not think Mr. Lanigan as active.

14293. And Mr. Lanigan had served your family?—Yes.

14294. And you voted against him?—I did.

14295. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Tell the reason you had?—The only way that I became acquainted with Mr. O'Beirne—there was a son of mine got a promise of an appointment in Dublin. He went to Dublin, and when he arrived there he was disappointed. Then he would not come to Cashel, and, consequently, he went on to London; and I believe he called on Mr. O'Beirne, and Mr. O'Beirne had him put into the Millwall works, I believe, as clerk.

14296. How long was that before the election of '65?—Well, I think it occurred in the year '64. I think about twelve months previously. It happened just in a casual way. I was not aware he went on to London at all until after some time.

14297. And you say it was on account of your gratitude to Mr. O'Beirne for your son that you voted for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—That, coupled with hearing of Mr. O'Beirne's position in London, brought me to the conclusion that he would be the best man.

14298. Did you receive any promise of money?—No promise.

14299. Did you receive any favour?—There was another son of mine that I prepared for the telegraph engineering department and it was necessary that he should become acquainted with practical parts, and we had an arrangement for him to proceed on to Dublin to get that information, but the other son being in London we thought it better to have the two go together, and this son got a letter of recommendation to the central telegraph companies' offices in London.

14300. From whom did he get it?—Well, he got it from Mr. O'Beirne.

14301. In what year was it?—Well, I believe it was in the same year, '64; some time in '64.

14302. Mr. MOLLOY.—Do you know, Mr. Johnson, that was Mr. O'Beirne's conducting agent?—Yes, I knew he was Mr. O'Beirne's conducting agent.

14303. If he said you got money for the election of 1865 would it be true?—He would say an untruth.

14304. Was your house let in 1865?—No.

14305. Any part of it?—No part in the world.

14306. If Mr. Johnson said that money was given to some person for your vote, would it be true?—No, I think not.

14307. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Why do you say you think not?—Because I am satisfied it would come to my knowledge if he gave money to any member of my family.

14308. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were you canvassed at the last election?—Yes.

14309. By whom?—By Mr. O'Beirne.

14310. Were you canvassed by anyone else?—Well, in fact there was no occasion to canvass me at all. I felt bound, particularly by Mr. O'Beirne's career. I thought, in fact, no man equal to him.

14311. What fault did you find in Mr. Lanigan's political career?—To be candid with you, I thought him rather a country gentleman to seek some parliamentary honours.

14312. What fault had you with Mr. Lanigan?—I had no fault, but there were complaints, that he did not follow up his professions.

14313. Can you specify any?—He pledged himself to be an Independent Oppositionist, and after that he went with the Government.

14314. Can you specify any other occasion on which he went with the Government?—I believe he went with them in mostly every case.

14315. With what Government?—With the Government of the day. I believe it was a Liberal Government he went with.

[Witness applied for expenses, but did not get any.]

Patrick Ryan of Lady's Well, sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

Patrick Ryan.

14316. Do you know James Connors?—I do, sir.

14317. Did you get money from him at the last election?—I did sir, £30.

14318. Why did you get it?—Gor, I could not tell you why he gave it. I know I got it at all events.

14319. Do you remember was it in a letter, or in sovereigns, or how?—I could not tell you that, sir.

14320. How long before the election did you get it?—I didn't get it before the election.

14321. With whom had you arranged about getting it?—No one, sir.

14322. Had you not spoken to Pat. Cunningham about it?—No.

14323. Had you not spoken to anyone?—No, I was never promised anything for my vote.

14324. Were you very much surprised when you got the £30 after the election?—I was not surprised one bit at all about it. I did not care whether I got it or not.

Patrick Ryan.

14325. You did not care for £30?—No, sir. If I never got £30 I would vote for the man I voted with.

14326. Mr. MOLLOY.—What was the £30 for?—I suppose for my vote, sir—the same as every one got.

14327. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Then you expected to get it?—I did not, sir. I never expected it until the night before that I came to vote for Mr. Munster.

14328. You did not expect it until the night before?—Never asked it, sir.

14329. What occurred the night before the election to make you expect it?—I heard people were getting money and I said it was as good for me to have it as anyone else.

14330. To whom did you say that?—To James Connors.

14331. That was the man who afterwards gave the money to you?—Yes, sir.

14332. And after that expectation, you voted for Mr. Munster the next day?—Yes, but I would vote for Mr. Munster had I never got it.

14333. Had you a vote in 1865?—No, sir.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14334. What is the letter which you now produce?—A letter in answer to a letter from Captain Byrne. I will hand you the letter. There is not very much in it that is material to read.

14335. You say you sent this letter to Mr. Byrne?—Yes.

14336. On the 15th September, 1868?—Yes.

The Chief Commissioner reads the letter as follows:—

"Cashel, 15th day of September, 1868.

"MY DEAR SIR,—Since you left I have gone through a good many of the electors, and Mr. Munster's candidature has been favourably received. You should have address issued immediately and let him be prepared to come here the day after the races. Take care to see the address before sending it to anyone for publication. I have been talking to some of the Commissioners and telling them that Mr. Munster if elected would desire to confer some substantial benefit on the town; and one of them suggested that as they are about getting up Christian Brothers' schools, and as Mr. M. is so wealthy, the best thing he could do to gain a good character at the outset, would be to agree to give if returned £400 or £500 to establish these, the money to be given back to him by the trustees if not elected. There is no doubt this would be a judicious investment, that is, if he do not mind the expensive nature of it. Mention it to him and see how far he would be inclined to go, that I might be able to state something of the kind. I wish particularly you would come up again, say on Friday morning, in reference to John Lanigan. It would be of advantage to arrange that one of his sons should come up with Mr. Munster. It will be of considerable service to have Mr. M. identified with Tipperary people, and the Lanigans should not hesitate to pay off O'Beirne.

"Fathfully yours,

"MICHAEL J. LAFFAN.

"To Captain Byrne, Sorrel-hill.

"Take care to see that any letters I write you are sealed with D.L., and the seal unbroken, M.J.L."

14337. Now, Mr. Laffan, before writing that letter had you any communication from Mr. Munster, or anyone on his behalf in reference to his desire to contribute to a fund for bringing the Christian Brothers here?—No, I had no conversation with reference to a desire to bring the Christian Brothers. It was Mr. Leahy or Mr. Byrne, who came here, and either one or the other of them stated what is set out there, that Mr. Munster would be glad to do something, and so on, for the town. That is set out as something that had been previously told on the part of Mr. Munster.

14338. You were told of Mr. Munster's desire, as you expressed it, to confer some substantial benefit on the town?—It was so put.

14339. By whom?—By Mr. Byrne, I think, for I don't think I saw Mr. Leahy at the time, but I may have done so.

14340. Then, as far as you are able to tell me, and as far as your knowledge goes, the first mention of the Christian Brothers came from this letter to you?—Just so.

14341. You are quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of that.

14342. With which of the Commissioners had you the conversation that you have detailed in these letters?—With Mr. William Corby.

14343. You named more than one. Had you a conversation with more than one?—I think it was with him the conversation occurred.

14344. Was he the only person with whom it occurred?—Yes; I think the first person that mentioned it to me was Mr. Savage. Mr. Savage said he had been talking to Mr. Corby, and they thought it a very good thing. I turned into Mr. Corby's shop, and we discussed the matter.

14345. Then, Mr. Savage and Mr. Corby both mentioned it?—I think they were both present.

14346. After writing that letter to Mr. Byrne, what was the next you heard as to the scheme of subsidizing the Christian Brothers' charity?—I think the next thing I heard was that letter from Mr. Munster. I believe—I don't know whether I heard it or not—that my letter was forwarded to Mr. Leahy.

14347. To Mr. Leahy?—I think so—that my letter had reached Mr. Munster, or something that way; and his letter in reply would lead you to suppose that it might have, because it deals with the condition that I was putting in.

14348. After that did you hold any further communication with the Commissioners, or the persons whom you call trustees, with reference to the Christian Brothers' schools?—Oh, I did not deal with them in that way as a body or Commissioners, or treat with them. It was not in the way of negotiation. I simply mentioned the matter.

14349. I want to know what further occurred?—After I got the letter from Mr. Munster, stating that whatever he would do he would do without any conditions. I stated it publicly. I have not the slightest doubt I mentioned it to Mr. Corby; but I mentioned it to some person at all events. There does not appear to be any letter there to Mr. Munster up to the 19th, I think.

14350. How soon after that did Mr. Munster come to town?—About the 16th October.

14351. After this letter of the 19th September from Mr. Munster what steps did you take with reference to this matter of the Christian Brothers?—I don't know; I talked to persons about it, and I mentioned the fact that he would not give it conditionally, but would give it unconditionally, or something of that kind, and they thought it a very liberal and generous thing on his part. I thought it also a liberal offer, and mentioned it in that way, and I believe nothing happened then until after Mr. Munster came here. I mentioned the matter again to Mr. Munster.

14352. When he came?—Yes.

14353. There was no further letter about it?—There was no further letter. I treated it as an understood thing that he would see those parties interested about the Christian Brothers' schools, and accordingly he did one day at Abbeyview see five or six gentlemen, amongst whom were Mr. Corby, I think Mr. Mullins the Chairman of the Town Commissioners, Mr. Patrick Phelan, Mr. Cahill, and I don't know if Mr. Matt O'Ryan may have been there.

14354. Was Mr. Savage?—No; I don't think Mr. Savage was there. He had nothing to say to it beyond the conversation I had with him in the first instance.

14355. Tell us, if you please, what took place?—I introduced them to Mr. Munster, I believe, and Mr. Munster was discussing the matter, and asked their views, or something else as to what they proposed to do, and the thing was gone into. I know Mr. Corby

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

mentioned that they would want a sum of about £500, that that sum would be necessary, or would be required to enable them to start the Christian Brothers here. I know that Mr. Munster wrote a cheque for that amount. It was laid down in the first instance, that it should not be looked upon as in any way relating to the election; that he was not to be considered as dealing on account of votes.

14356. Who said that?—Mr. Munster. And those parties who came in there, said it was perfectly understood that it was in no way to influence them to vote for Mr. Munster, and some of them. Mr. Corby did not give his vote for Mr. Munster, though he was the principal person.

14357. But in your letter of the 15th September you plainly dealt with it as a useful thing in an electioneering point of view, and no other way?—I did, and Mr. Munster did not approve of it, and accordingly it was put aside.

14358. Mr. Munster's letter speaks for itself?—At this interview it was the same thing. Those who came there came with the full understanding that it was not to influence them.

14359. Are you quite sure with reference to this meeting? Mr. Munster in his letter says that he was quite shocked that you should have thought it necessary to insure a sort of quid pro quo for anything he should do. Did you understand that that was referring to the return of the £500, if not elected?—Just so; yes.

14360. Did Mr. Munster at this interview, or on any occasion that you speak of remonstrate, I will use the word, against anything at all about this return of the money?—No, there was nothing else. There was a condition that the Christian Brothers should be established within six or nine months—nine months, I think. He asked what time would they have them there, and they said six months. "Very well," said he, "we will make it three months more," and there was a letter written with the cheque; they made an agreement within nine months, and Mr. Leahy became satisfied they could be established within nine months.

14361. Now, Mr. Laffan, Mr. Munster says something was said as to a suitable locality?—Yes; there was.

14362. These are matters of mere detail?—The letter that was written with the cheque was that Mr. Leahy might be satisfied, or that those parties should satisfy Mr. Leahy that there was a suitable place to be had, that there was a probability—and though it was not put as a condition that it should be opened—that there was a probability of its being opened within nine months; and on his being satisfied as to the probability of its being done in the time fixed, he should then hand over this cheque to the parish priest of Cashel.

14363. I believe the cheque was handed over?—Mr. Leahy was satisfied, and the cheque was handed over.

14364. You put this proposition forward, I apprehend from your letter, believing it would influence votes at the election?—Well, I don't think that is a fair way to put it.

14365. You admitted to me that it was as an electioneering scheme?—My view of it is simply this; I thought that when Mr. Munster—when I was told that Mr. Munster was willing to do something for the benefit of the town, and all that kind of thing, I thought it would be a very good and proper thing to announce it—that it would not render him unpopular with the electors and non-electors; but I did not apprehend that it would have a direct influence, or induce a man to vote.

14366. If you did not think it would bring him votes, would you have proposed it?—If I did not think it would render his position better with the constituency.

14367. Does not that mean bringing him votes?—Of course it would indirectly affect the result.

14368. You expected it would indirectly affect his candidature and help him to get votes?—Yes.

14369. And in that light you proposed it in your letter?—And in that light I proposed it.

14370. You said that Mr. Corby was one of those gentlemen who mentioned this matter to you, and who did not vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes.

14371. He voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

14372. Is there more than one Mr. Corby?—There are two—father and son.

14373. There is only one a voter—William Corby. I find he is the last gentleman who recorded his vote at the election?—I believe so.

14374. And at that time the contest was over?—It was.

14375. You were beaten at that time?—Yes.

14376. I was asking a question with reference to Mr. Leahy's being acting for Mr. Munster. I will read this letter, as it shows that Mr. Munster wished him to have a part in the management of the election.

"September 23rd, 1868.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I am just in receipt of your letter of the 21st instant. Quocunque titulo debeatur, and mistakes will occur, second-hand especially and at a distance, I cannot do wrong in enclosing you my cheque for a hundred guineas, for which you will be so good as to send me your receipt. I have no doubt of your zeal and prudence; but as I believe, Mr. Leahy is an older man, and of much experience, I hope you will take his counsel on all matters.

"Yours truly,

"H. MUNSTER."

14377. Did you consult afterwards with Mr. Leahy about this matter of the Christian Brothers?—No, I do not think I did.

14378. Did you at all?—I am not sure. The only persons I mentioned, I mentioned in that letter to Mr. Byrne, and when I got the answer back the matter was completed for the time.

14379. Do you recollect any conversation with Mr. Leahy about it?—I do not recollect any conversation with him on the subject.

14380. You were present in court when Patrick Halloran was examined?—Yes; I was not present when he said this.

14381. Halloran said that you showed a cheque for £5,000?—Yes.

14382. Had you such a document?—Not a cheque.

14383. A credit receipt?—A credit receipt.

14384. You had?—I had.

14385. Did you show it?—I do not recollect the fact of showing it to Halloran, but I showed it to three or four parties. I have no doubt when he says I showed it to him that I did so.

14386. Do you mean to say that you showed it to many parties through the town?—No.

14387. Did you take it out with you to show it?—When I got it, I believe I put it in my pocket-book, and it remained there a considerable time.

14388. Was this a deposit receipt of Mr. Munster's previous lodgment in the bank?—Yes.

14389. It was not for election purposes only?—No; in fact I can't say he lodged it.

14390. How did it come into your hands?—Mr. Leahy gave it to me.

14391. For what purpose did Mr. Leahy give it to you?—My recollection about the receipt is this—After Mr. Munster was first announced as a candidate, a long time, I think some ten or twelve or perhaps more days elapsed between that and the publication of his address, and all kinds of rumours were afloat—that there was no such man in existence at all, and that in fact his name was only put forward to represent somebody else who would by-and-by appear. All these rumours were industriously circulated. As I recollect this receipt was given to show that there was such a man, and that was the most substantial proof that he was there.

14392. Did you show the receipt out at the Commons?—I am sure I did, for he says it was at the Commons I showed it to him.

14393. Do you recollect the fact of carrying it to the Commons?—I do not recollect the fact, but I had it in my pocket a considerable time.

14394. Then, it was given to you by Mr. Leahy for the purpose of showing it?—Yes: yes.

14395. You say you were not here when Halloran was examined. I have it that you said to him, that if he would vote for Mr. Munster he would be remunerated. Do you recollect saying that?—I do not. My recollection is different.

14396. Will you say you did not state it?—I will say that I went to Halloran. He was one of those parties I wanted to employ as an agent. I was advised that I ought to secure him and some others I will name. I have a list of the parties.

14397. Why did you want to employ Halloran as an agent?—I was told Halloran and James Dwyer of the Commons were two of the most important of Mr. O'Beirne's supporters in the election of '65.

14398. And without telling them that this would affect their votes?—I wanted to make him a bonâ fide agent, and pay him well for it; but he wanted to know the terms—the amount of money, and I declined to specify any sum. I showed him the receipt to convince him that there was quite money enough to pay him well if he worked with us.

14399. You said that you would pay him well. What amount was present to your mind at the time that would pay him well?—I should say £40 or £50, for I had agreed to give a man previously £50.

14400. You had agreed to give him that, knowing he would not vote for you, but to prevent his voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—No, because I thought he would be a useful agent in the Commons to work for us.

14401. Did you not tell me he was the man to whom you wanted to give five guineas retainer?—No, I wanted to retain him as an agent, not a five guinea agent.

14402. You knew at the time that by retaining him he could not vote for you? You knew no agent could vote?—Yes. I did not give it to him at that time to retain him, for the purpose of preventing his voting, or tying him up any way; but I went for the bona fide purpose of making him an agent.

14403. Having in view that he would not vote for you, and that retaining him as agent would prevent his voting against you?—No; it was with that view I went. No doubt if I went into the thing closely, and ranged over the whole of it, that was a necessary consequence of retaining him as an agent; but it does not follow that that was the particular object I had in view.

14404. But you thought he was hostile to you, and you went to him, because he was one of Mr. O'Beirne's most useful supporters? Did you think he would, from the magic of your voice, become an ardent supporter of yours?—I did not; I mentioned that I wanted to employ him as agent.

14405. Was it not to stop him from voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—No; I expected he would do us good service in the Commons. I heard he did so in '65, and that he appeared to be more the leader in the Commons.

14406. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you say you thought he could not be got to vote for Mr. Munster?—No; I do not think I put it in that way.

14407. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You employed Denis Ryan as agent?—Yes.

14408. And gave him two guineas?—I gave him two guineas.

14409. Was it you or your brother?—It was I employed him.

14410. Was it you paid him the two guineas?—It was.

14411. Did you tell him he was to get more?—Certainly. I made a special agreement with him that he was to get £50.

14412. Was that before or after, or at the same time that you went to Patrick Halloran?—It was before. Denis Ryan was the first, and I am not quite sure but that it was he suggested it to me.

14413. Did you know that Ryan had been an active supportor of Mr. O'Beirne before?—I did.

14414. Do you know that he voted afterwards for you?—I did.

14415. Did you know that he was going to vote for you?—My recollection is, that I did not; and I recollect that I met him in John-street on the day of the polling, and I asked him how things were going, and he dropped a very injudicious hint: "That Ned Stapleton," said he, "that we thought would not vote, is after voting, and I ran up and voted against him."

14416. You have not paid him the £50?—No.

14417. Why has he not been paid?—After he had voted I thought that, perhaps, it would present a difficulty, and then he sent in a claim in the name of his son.

14418. If the arrangement was, as you say, a specific arrangement with himself for £50, I want to know why you had a claim on his son's name?—In consequence of his having afterwards voted.

14419. Did you tell him to put in the claim in his son's name?—Well, I dare say I did. I do not recollect the fact of doing so.

14420. And his claim was not returned to Mr. Richardson as one of the legitimate expenses of the election?—His name was returned in my opinion.

14421. To Mr. Richardson?—Yes.

14422. Give me the list?—I sent copies of those accounts which have been produced here—all accounts between me and Mr. Munster—to Mr. Richardson in the month of December. I think in the list that I sent him a copy of the other day in that list his name is returned.

14423. I do not find that there appears here in the expense agent's account any return either of the two guineas paid to him, or of the £50 additional claimed by him?—Well, sir, I only know that this is a copy of the account I sent in. It is included in that £91 18*s.* 8*d.*

14424. To whom did you send that in?—To Mr. Richardson I sent in all my accounts, with a balance-sheet and everything else, showing what moneys I received and what I paid. That is a portion of the account [handing in a document].

14425. It is neither in the list of claims nor in the list of payments, nor is the son's name in the list of claims. Do you know John Dwyer, the man who got the five guineas retainer?—I do.

14426. Where is his place?—It is somewhere in the Commons.

14427. Do you recollect giving him a retainer? Do you know if he was an ardent supporter of Mr. O'Beirne?—I think he was. I think I saw him about before.

14428. Did you believe you could get him to vote for Mr. Munster?—I didn't believe I could get him to vote unless he was paid for it.

14429. Then you knew that some of those men required payment?—I did, unquestionably.

14430. He says that he came to you to complain about having given him a retainer and broken his vote?—I am not sure it was I gave it to him at all. Either my brother or myself gave it to him.

14431. He says it was you; he got £5 from your brother as well. He got a five guinea cheque from you and £5 from your brother, and he says he came to you to complain of having played what he called a trick on him and having broken his vote, as he calls it, by giving him a retainer; and he says you told him that if he kept the matter private he could vote?—I do not recollect that taking place. Something of the kind may have occurred that he has construed in that way.

14432. But you have no recollection of it?—I have no recollection of it.

14433. When did it become known to you that many persons required money to vote?—I should think it became known to me before Mr. Munster was announced as a candidate at all.

14434. Did you tell that to Mr. Leahy?—I did.

14435. And to Mr. Byrne?—And to Mr. Byrne.

14436. Did you tell it to Mr. Munster?—I did.

14437. When did you tell Mr. Munster that money

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

would be required, and that many persons would not vote unless they got money?—After he came here.

14438. I find here what was proved before, that Michael Coffey was paid £20. He recovered that, I believe, by process against Mr. Munster?—He got a decree for it.

14439. At the time that he got that did you know of his having got £15 from your brother?—I did. It was a matter publicly talked of.

14440. At what sessions did he get the decree?—At the Cashel Sessions of January, '69.

14441. Do you recollect that those sessions were over before the end of January?—They are always held on the 2nd or 3rd of January.

14442. I suppose they were over in a week?—Three days generally.

14443. Did you defend the process for Mr. Munster?—No. I got no instructions. I was rather surprised at that.

14444. Was there no defence entered?—No defence.

14445. I suppose £20 was the full amount of his process?—The full amount of his process.

14446. Had you any conversation with Mr. Munster about the process?—I believe not.

14447. Did you tell Mr. Munster he had been paid those £15 by your brother?—I don't think I had any conversation with Mr. Munster at all about it.

14448. You have known I suppose that taking houses in this town was an ordinary way of cloaking bribes for voting?—It had become established—so established now.

14449. Did you know that before this election?—I knew houses to be taken for that purpose. I thought then, and think now that houses that are wanted may be taken, even though the taking of them would to some extent influence voters afterwards.

14450. But were you aware of houses being taken and money paid for them although no use was made or intended to be made of them?—I cannot say I heard of it, but I don't think until the last election it was done.

14451. We have it here as occurring in 1865?—Yes, I might have heard of it.

14452. How many houses were taken altogether for Mr. Munster at the last election?—I shall go through them as far as I had to do with them.

14453. Go through first those you had to do with, and afterwards those you know?—After I was engaged I told Mr. Byrne that we should have a committee room. I think it is referred to in one of his letters afterwards. The first house I proposed to take for the purpose, was Mr. James Dunne's hotel. I went to him and saw him, and had some conversation. It dropped, and we did not go into it, in consequence of something that happened to be said at the time not relating to the present election in any way. When it failed I did nothing for a day or two, and the next thing I heard was, whilst I had in contemplation still to renew the negotiation with Mr. Dunne, that it was taken for Mr. O'Beirne; Captain Byrne came up, and we opened a negotiation to get Ryan and Murnane's.

14454. With which of them did you open the negotiation—with Ryan or Murnane?—I think Ryan.

14455. Captain Byrne was present?—He was talking after dinner I think in Corcoran's hotel. We sent for Ryan or Murnane, whichever of them it was. He mentioned £100, which we would not listen to, and I think we went as far as £60, which he did not think sufficient, and we did not go beyond that.

14456. At the time he asked £100 you understood perfectly well that meant the vote?—He did not say; he intimated it was an advantage to take that house, or something that way.

14457. And you knew that there were two votes in that house?—I did. I think the next person I spoke to was Mr. Quirke. Mr. Quirke correctly described the result I think yesterday here, or the day before, when he said he told me he could not entertain any proposition about his rooms, or anything else. At all events, that there was some old thing to be settled with Mr. O'Beirne.

14458. And that until he received it he could not enter into any negotiation?—Exactly; something that way.

14459. Was there any sum named at all between you and Mr. Quirke?—No, no sum whatever.

14460. I know that on occasions of that kind persons will not speak of votes. Was there anything to lead you to understand that he conceived you were engaging his vote?—I do not think there was. We only just touched upon it, and I found how he was placed, and it stopped there. Quirke's, and Ryan's, and Murnane's, I may tell you, were taken for committee rooms on former occasions. Quirke's was also both for the borough and county elections. After Quirke's came Mackey's, and I looked at Mackey's one day.

14461. Is that Patrick Mackey, whose house was subsequently taken for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, and whose house we had in '65. I recollect Mackey wanted £50.

14462. He subsequently took £40, I think?—I read so, but I was not present when he gave his evidence. I read that he said I offered him £25. I have no recollection of making him an offer at all, and my belief is that I did not; but I said here the other day, and I can only repeat it, that when he said £50, I may have said, "Would not £25 be enough to ask;" but I don't recollect I went so far as to make an offer of anything. He may have, of course, construed it so far.

14463. What was the next?—The next was Dwyer's, next door.

14464. What Dwyer was that?—Michael Dwyer of Canopy-street. I went to Michael Dwyer's; I went up to see his room. I looked at it, and I forget whether he named £50. I think he did, or something. I said I would see after it again or look in again, and the matter ended there. I don't think I went near either Mackey or Dwyer after that; I heard that Mackey complained that I didn't.

14465. Did you hear anything about Dwyer having made any other arrangement?—No.

14466. Why did you not go to him?—I cannot tell now, but I think when Mr. Richardson came it was agreed we should stop at Corcoran's.

14467. You went to Dwyer with the bona fide intention of looking at and taking his room?—Yes; I went up to see the room, to see whether it would suit.

14468. What was next after Dwyer's?—So far they stood for some time. It became necessary to get a private house for Mr. Munster, and that also was a matter that I had to look after; and there were four private houses that I went to see about. The first was Dr. Cormack's, then Mr. Boyton's, and it was for a considerable time a question under consideration which of the two should be taken. There was another house which I thought would be very suitable—a private gentleman's house—and I went to him, and he was rather offended that I should have thought he would, for anyone or any consideration, set his house. If you like I will give his name, but I do not think it is necessary.

14469. Unless it is a question connected with the election in any way there is no use?—No.

14470. Was he a voter?—He is a voter.

14471. And all the persons whose houses you went to take were voters?—Yes. If I were going to do a legitimate thing, and that by doing it with one person I could get a vote, and by doing it with another I could not, I would give it to the person from whom I would get the vote, and would consider it perfectly fair to do so; and I went to Mr. Kite's to see after his house.

14472. I know myself that he sets a very high value on his house?—Yes; at that time it was full.

14473. What did he ask you?—He did not name any sum. He had some friends staying at the time, and could not name any sum. Then, some time after, when I was canvassing a voter a Mr. Flynn had promised me, I said to him I thought I would use his house. I never made any bargain with him, or took the house, or did anything beyond that. Subsequently, as he tells you, I told him I had taken Walshe's, or mentioned Walshe's.

14474. Before you pass Flynn's case, tell me what occurred with reference to his claim?—Mr. Flynn never put in a claim.

14475. Well, his wife did?—His wife did not.

14476. The claim is in, though?—It is in—put in by me. The original thing was William Flynn; the letters of William were abbreviated, it seems; it has been copied into "Mrs.;" it was William Flynn originally. I thought he might as well have his claim as if I had taken it. I put something in his way before at the county election, and I may have the pleasure of doing something for him again.

14477. At that time you had Corcoran's hotel?—I should think so. I never contemplated using Flynn's house as a committee room. It was not suitable.

14478. For what reason did you speak to Flynn, was it to put a good thing in his way?—To put a good thing in his way.

14479. And he so understood it?—He did. He promised me at the time, and I had not the least doubt he would keep his promise.

14480. What is the next?—The next is Walshe's. I was going home one night from Corcoran's and happened to see him at the door, and just on the moment it occurred to me to say to him, "I think this would be a good place for a tally-room. I suppose we can have it." "To be sure," said he to me, or something of that kind, and there it stopped.

14481. You never made any use of Walshe's house?—I don't know. It was to have been used as a tally-room.

14482. What is his claim put down for?—He sent us in a claim for £50.

14483. Do you recollect his saying that you told him it could not be paid until after the petition?—After the election when those claims were received and they could not be paid I gave the best excuse I could.

14484. Did you say after the petition?—It is very likely I did.

14485. Had you any discussion with Ryan as to his claim, or have you any recollection as to what claim he was to keep back and what to put in?—I don't know that I had any discussion.

14486. There is hardly one-fifth furnished to the Sheriff of the claims that were put in. I want to know did you make a selection with Mr. Richardson?—I am sure Mr. Richardson sent me the draft account. I have not the last account. I wrote back to him telling him, "I don't think you are bound to return those at all." I think I said that to him, pointing them out.

14487. Is it your impression that you got a draft account with those that are here?—Yes; and with more than are here.

14488. And that you referred to some, advising him not to return them?—Yes.

14489. Do you recollect saying to Denis Ryan that his claim of £50 could not be paid until after the petition and commission?—I don't recollect I ever used the words that it could not.

14490. Or that it would not?—I suppose I said something of the kind. Numbers of people came to me, and I said there is the petition or commission. Of course I should give them some excuse.

14491. Those excuses would not be necessary if you considered them legitimate expenses?—There are some that I thought legitimate expenses, and they were not paid.

14492. You do not consider Denis Ryan's perfectly legitimate?—After he voted I did not. I thought then that it became open to question.

14493. Or Flynn's?—I do not think Flynn has a claim in at all.

14494. I find it here?—I know it is there. I don't regard it as a claim so much as a thing for consideration whether he will have to get something or not.

14495. And Walshe's?—Walshe's is a claim. Of course he will have to be paid something.

14496. You do not say that you did not tell him that it could not be paid until after the Commission?—I won't undertake to say that I didn't tell him so.

14497. What is the next?—The purchase of a house from Dr. Butler, and the taking of the telegraph office.

14498. I see Richard O'Donnell entered here as paid £10; who is he?—A man who lives in Lady's Well, and he was employed paying up at Abbeyview. He was steward, or principal man there.

14499. He is paid £10 on account of the election?—Yes.

14500. Is he connected with a voter?—He is son-in-law of a voter.

14501. What is the father-in-law's name?—James Carroll.

14502. For whom did he vote?—He voted for Mr. Munster.

14503. Do you say that that is all about the houses?—That is all.

14504. You have not mentioned Coffey's house?—No; those are houses with which I myself had to do.

14505. Now come to those you had nothing to do with. Who is Alice O'Donnell?—She is a publican.

14506. Is she anything to Richard O'Donnell?—Nothing at all.

14507. Who is Thomas O'Donnell?—That is the man who is Mr. Munster's tenant.

14508. Is Mrs. O'Donnell connected with a voter?—She is a daughter of Walsh, that man whose house was dealt with. She lives separate. She does not live with him though. Before I leave this subject I should note here that William Maloughney, whose evidence I read, has said that the Laffans—he put it double—that they came to him and said something about his houses. I merely wish to say I have no recollection of ever saying anything to William Maloughney about his house. I never contemplated taking it at all.

14509. Now about the houses you are not practically concerned in taking, but that you heard of?—James Phelan's house—that half note case—some time between the election and petition I heard of it.

14510. Not before?—Not before.

14511. Any other?—Yes; Ryan and Murnane's house was taken by us some days before the election.

14512. The money was paid?—The money was paid.

14513. By Patrick Cunningham?—Exactly.

14514. Was it done with your knowledge at the time?—No.

14515. Were you consulted about it?—I don't think I was consulted about the taking, but I must after the taking, and that I approved of it, except in one respect, that I didn't approve of the manner in which the bargain was made. Why I approved of Ryan and Murnane's house was this—at that time we were reduced to one room in Corcoran's hotel; it was necessary to have some place to ourselves, and some place else for a committee room, for they are two distinct things.

14516. And I suppose you approved also of that on the ground that their two votes would be then sure to you?—Of course I contemplated that.

14517. You already very frankly told me that in this interview which you and Captain Byrne had with Ryan and Murnane, when they asked £100, you understood their votes should be bought?—So I understood, for I recollect Captain Byrne stating we had nothing to do with the votes.

14518. But negatives of that kind are understood in election times to be what we call in logic, negatives pregnant?—No; I think he was sincere in it.

14519. I hear that such things are done sometimes?—I didn't watch it so closely as that. I believe he was perfectly sincere in saying to Ryan—"You are best not introduce anything about the votes, for we do not want to say anything about them." After Ryan and Murnane returned the money, Carroll's house was taken to supply Ryan and Murnane's.

14520. Is Carroll's the house at the end of the street here?—Yes.

14521. A very low house?—There are two storeys.

14522. A ground floor, and one storey over that?—Yes.

14523. And the rooms upstairs are apparently very small?—I did not see them.

14524. Did you hear that there were three beds in the room?—I heard it at the trial, or petition here.

14525. The £35 was to be paid for the use of a room with three beds in it?—So I have heard. That is the evidence sworn.

14526. Have you any reason to disbelieve it?—I have no reason to disbelieve it; I know there was contrary swearing.

14527. Have you any reason to disbelieve that the beds were in the room?—No, I have no reason to disbelieve it; nobody ever told me what was inside in his house.

14528. I presume you were not consulted about taking Carroll's house?—My recollection is that I was not—that I was away, and that it was that evening I was told about it; and I was told in the same breath that he had taken up the money and given it to Mr. Grace, and said it was a bribe. They gave me a very fair account of the whole transaction—that when Ryan and Murnane gave up the house, that it was taken in succession to it to supply the want that we thought existed.

14529. After Carroll's what is the next house?—The only other name I know was Coffey's. I think he came to me a day or two before the polling. I think my brother came to me and Mr. Scallon to know would they take it. I said I would not be responsible for taking it. Ultimately they said they would do it to put the Commons voters in the night before, or something of that kind. Ultimately they took it, and I directed that the purpose for which they took it should be carried out.

14530. With regard to the engagement of those five men, what do you wish to say?—I never contemplated, when employing those men, that they were to be used for purposes of bribing. I heard here that they were. The first time I heard it was after it was sworn on the table.

14531. And you did not know anything at all about it before?—I knew nothing about Duggan's dealing with those people before.

14532. You knew something about those things?—I knew something before.

14533. All those things do not come upon you by surprise, for you would look upon us as wizards I suppose if they did?—I knew things had been done, but the details of them I did not know.

14534. I think you have given evidence already with regard to Rawlins?—I have.

14535. Have you anything to add to that?—I have nothing to add to it.

14536. You had some dealings with Michael Carew—you gave him five guineas as a retainer, I believe?—Yes; I believe so.

14537. He says you told him he could get as much as any other man. Is that so?—I believe I told him, when giving him the retainer, and he wanted to know how much he would get, that he would get as much as anyone else.

14538. Was that when you paid him the five guineas?—I think so.

14539. Did you tell him at the time of his getting the five guineas that he could not vote?—I cannot say; but my belief is, that any of those I gave the five guineas retainer that I told them they could not vote. At any rate I told it to Kennedy, Rawlings, Carew, and Quirke. I am quite sure I told it to Kennedy and Quirke.

14540. Did Carew make a claim?—Michael Carew? I never heard that he put in a claim for services, but he applied to me after the election.

14541. Did he come to you personally and make a claim on you to vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes, he did come to me.

14542. Do you recollect what he asked?—I don't think he asked for any particular sum.

14543. Were you here when Carew was examined?—I think I was.

14544. Do you recollect Carew saying that on the morning of the election you said to him you would have him to vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes, I heard him swear that.

14545. Do you say it is true?—Something of that kind occurred.

14546. He afterwards asked you for money, not naming a sum?—Not naming a sum, I always understood. I thought Carew's retainer had been cancelled, or had fallen to the ground.

14547. Do you know that he never cashed it?—I do. I am sure I must have known it.

14548. What did you say to him when he asked the money?—I do not know.

14549. Did you only put him off?—I think I referred him and Billy Ryan to Mr. Leahy. I know Billy Ryan and himself applied to me.

14550. Mr. Griffin.—Is that little Billy?—Yes; little Billy he is called. I know they applied to me and I referred them to Mr. Leahy.

14551. Do you know John Maher? You put in a claim for him, I believe?—Yes.

14552. John Maher is son of Patrick Maher, I believe?—Yes.

14553. Is his claim £36?—Yes. I should first perhaps deal with the agents as they stand.

14554. You may as well now turn to that subject. Refer to the conversation you had with Michael Carew, and his allegation that when you gave him five guineas you told him he would get as much as any other person. Does that mean beyond the five guineas?—Yes, of course. It could have no other meaning.

14555. And after that you did say to him that you would have him vote for Mr. Munster?—Yes, some words of that sort.

14556. Then he made a demand for money on you afterwards?—He did.

14557. Go on now?—Very soon after I was retained I recommended the engagement of certain persons as agents. In all those matters I consulted Captain Byrne or Mr. Leahy; and the first person I recommended we ought to engage was Mr. James Heany, who is a solicitor, living in this town. Captain Byrne and I waited on Mr. Heany, but did not see him then. We saw him, I think, the next day at the Cashel races, and he stated he had made a promise to a gentleman in Cashel which precluded him from taking our retainer. The next was Mr. William Phelan, who was a barrister by profession, and I offered him a retainer, which he, for private reasons, refused. I then thought it would be very well to have the support of the Cashel Gazette, and entered into a ——

14558. That is an influential local journal, I believe?—It is a local journal; and I entered into an arrangement, which you have already heard, with Mr. White. I then discussed with Mr. Leahy the advisability of getting some one in the Commons.

14559. Before you pass from that—after your engagement with Mr. White did he act?—Mr. White never acted as agent.

14560. But assisting through his columns?—Oh, certainly. He allowed us to insert some articles or one thing or another—letters, or whatever they were. With Mr. Leahy's concurrence Denis Ryan was engaged.

14561. Was Mr. Leahy cognizant of the arrangement with Ryan—the two guineas paid and the £50 to be paid?—I do not know. He was aware of the two guineas.

14562. But of the £50 to be paid?—It was before I agreed to give that sum I consulted Mr. Leahy, and he sanctioned it. I then engaged young Cunningham—Pat. Cunningham, who had been, I knew, engaged at previous elections, both borough and county.

14563. I presume you knew also that his father had voted at the former election for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes; but his father's vote was not what influenced me. I was anxious to get him: though I knew his father or somebody had a vote, and that I estimated it as a probable result that I would get that vote; I do not put it that I went with the express purpose of getting the vote, which makes a great deal of difference.

14564. I quite understand you?—Then I discussed with either Mr. Munster or Mr. Leahy that we ought to get some parties about the town who would help to create support and put forward Mr. Munster's merits, and be of use afterwards as occasion might require; by the support of those four persons, Hubert Cahill, John B. Meara, a clerk in my office formerly, William Connors, and Michael Considine.

14565. Was Michael Considine the man who was examined yesterday?—Yes, I employed him. I recollect Captain Byrne was present when I employed Considine.

14566. He sent in a claim for £40?—Yes, sir.

14567. You engaged those four persons?—Yes. The next person I find on my list that I proposed to engage was Mr. Keeffe.

14568. He was to be in the fighting department?—Precisely. I was directed to engage him; that it was better to have him than to have him against us, and I made very liberal offers to him with that view, which he did not seem ready to accept.

14569. What did you offer him?—£20.

14570. Was it on the ground that it was beneath his value, that he refused the £20?—Well, I don't know. I think he was anxious to get that £15 due by Mr. O'Beirne, and that that made matters right; pending my offer, I believe it came, and that that put it square.

14571. And in addition to that I suppose he had a lively gratitude for expected favours?—Well, I should say, naturally. There were two or three parties from time to time I asked to become agents; Mr. Cody, who declined; Mr. James Hackett, of the Green—the negotiation failed there; Richard Grace, James Dwyer, and Pat Halloran of the Commons.

14572. Did you want those men altogether?—No; I went to them one after another. When one failed I spoke to another. I was anxious to get Hackett, I must confess.

14573. I find their fathers nearly all voted against you?—Hackett is a voter himself.

14574. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Cody is a voter, too?—Cody is a voter, too.

14575. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you know that those gentlemen had been supporters of Mr. O'Beirne before?—I knew that Cody had.

14576. And Mr. Hackett?—Yes.

14577. James Hackett, of the Green?—Yes.

14578. What sums did you offer them?—I did not offer Cody anything, I simply asked him would he come with us.

14579. What did he say?—He refused. He gave me some reasons which did not affect the election at the time. He stated something. I offered Richard Grace five guineas retainer when those retainers came out.

14580. Did you go to him before?—No, I had no interview with him before.

14581. Did he return the retainer?—He said, I think, that he would consider it, and he did not come near me. That notice of Mr. Grace came out while he was considering it, which, of course, put an end to his taking it.

14582. In any of those interviews with persons whom you wished to employ, and particularly with reference to those who had votes themselves, did anything occur between you and them about their asking the amount you would pay?—Nothing whatever with Cody in that way.

14583. Or with Hackett?—That is what we split upon. That is what we failed in.

14584. Tell me about it?—I was agreeing with Hackett and giving him a retainer of five guineas. He wanted that I should make the retainer twenty-five guineas, I think. I said I thought we would do that, but I consulted Mr. Munster, and Mr. Munster would not allow it.

14585. For what reason?—I don't know. It would be breaking the rule. That is my recollection of it.

14586. Is that the only case in which you consulted Mr. Munster?—I don't know. It may have been Mr. Richardson or Mr. Leahy I consulted in that case—that I didn't consult Mr. Munster about it.

14587. Was the £25 only a retainer?—If he got the £25 I should think it would have been more than a retainer for his services.

14588. Would he then have voted for Mr. Munster?—He was not to vote at all. His father, and brother, and brother-in-law had votes, and I thought it would be important, of course, to secure him as agent.

14589. You thought the votes would follow. I thought he was looked upon as the head of the family.

14590. You say he asked £25?—I think so. That is it.

14591. Was there any conversation between you and him as to how his relatives would vote?—I don't think there was anything said about it.

14592. None at all?—I think not.

14593. Did he make any observation with reference to it?—I think not. He understood, of course, that I was anxious to secure the votes.

14594. And I suppose it was tacitly understood between you?—Well, I should think it was. I know that I had it in my mind when going to him to employ him.

14595. Anything else?—That Richard O'Donnell got employment at Abbeyview—those men that were there, keeping guard, keeping off boys, and that kind of thing. Andrew Mulcahy who was employed in my office; I had him employed at the county election three or four days. I think it is from that he got to the borough election.

14596. He is son of James Mulcahy?—Yes.

14597. He has a claim in for £30?—Yes.

14598. And Thomas Mulcahy £10?—Yes.

14599. That is £40 for that family?—Yes.

14600. Were those claims put in with your knowledge?—Yes.

14601. The £30 would be over and above everything else?—People are very liberally paid at elections.

14602. You do not pay so liberally at county as at borough elections, sons of voters?—No, we don't.

14603. They have no votes at the county?—No, but we pay them liberally.

14604. But not so liberally as at borough elections where their fathers have votes?—No.

14605. Now, as to the persons you recommended to put in claims?—Some of them I did. I do not say I recommended them all. The others did it themselves.

14606. You said, that in consequence of having voted independently, you thought they should not be worse off than those who made corrupt bargains?—Something of the kind was passing in my mind. It was intimated to me in the case of a man named Ryan, by Cunningham, that he expected some compliment would be paid.

14607. What Ryan is that?—John Ryan of the Green.

14608. For his son Thomas, I think?—For his nephew, or something that way. It was intimated to me, in like manner by Mr. Cahill about a man named Tierney. When this intimation was conveyed to me I thought it well to have them send in those claims, and they could be dealt with afterwards.

14609. That is by Patrick Cunningham, a young man with reference to John Ryan, and Tierney's case by Cahill?—Yes; James C. Cahill.

14610. Who is next?—Then there is James Hanly.

14611. Is that the son of Edmond Hanly?—Yes.

14612. Who intimated to you anything about Edmond Hanly?—I don't recollect the circumstances connected with it. I know the claim came into me.

14613. What is the next?—John Maher.

14614. That is son of Patrick Maher?—Yes. I don't think I got any intimation in any shape or form. The next is John Rochford.

14615. Is that the man who said to you, when talking about telegraph work, "it is my vote you want, and not my labour"?—Something in that way. I don't know those were the exact words he said. I know he promised me his vote at the very outset.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

14616. You mentioned Patrick Feehan?—Yes.

14617. What is the voter's Christian name in that case?—John.

14618. What is the next case?—George Looby.

14619. Is George the voter's Christian name?—John.

14620. And George is his son?—Yes.

14621. Who is Maurice's son?—Thomas.

14622. Is that Thomas Looby of Hughes's Lot?—Yes. I have given you Ryan and Teirney. The next is Fogarty.

14623. What is the voter's Christian name?—Rody. There are three more, but I——

14624. You gave us John Looby?—No, I did not.

14625. Flynn?—William Flynn. That was the house case that I mentioned.

14626. And Walshe?—There was no Walshe. Walshe sent me in a claim. He made a demand for £50.

14627. Andrew Mulcahy?—Mulcahy did a good deal, I think, about the election. So far as I know he was about every place—some of those Mulcahys.

14628. Anything further on that subject?—No.

14629. You were going to mention something?—I was going to mention that I employed Considine Connolly, and Mulcahy.

14630. They did no work?—Connolly did some.

14631. Did Considine do any?—I don't know, I could not watch.

14632. Mr. MOLLOY.—Who is James Looby?—He is a butcher, or jobber, in Friar-street.

14633. Why did he refuse the £5?—I have not the slightest idea. I think he was a great fool. Probably he thought it too small.

14634. Was he employed at the election?—Oh, he was. I think his relative said one day, "Here is one that can do something for you." "Very well," said I, "let him do it, he will be paid accordingly." I don't know what he did, I'm sure.

14635. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You engaged Mr. Jerome Scully at the election?—Yes, I did at the nomination.

14636. And Mr. Scully, as he told us, is not a professional man?—No, but he was conducting agent at an election in Cork.

14637. But you were conducting the election here?—Yes.

14638. And you were to pay him £25?—I did not pay him, but it was understood he would be paid.

14639. I want to know what he was to be paid the £25 for?—Simply because he stipulated it.

14640. Why did you do it?—I wanted to secure those who were supporting Mr. Scully.

14641. Were there any more than Mr. Jerome Scully?—There were three or four more. I thought they would give their support, and it was with that view I had him.

14642. You say he stipulated?—He mentioned he would lose £25 by joining us—that in consequence of the arrangement between himself and Mr. Vincent Scully he would lose it by turning over his support to us. I said, "I'm sure you won't be allowed to be at a loss."

14643. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you employ him as an agent?—Well, that is the employment.

14644. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You say turning over his support for you?—That is his support, and do what he could with those supporting Mr. Vincent Scully.

14645. Was that distinctly spoken of?—I don't know, but that is what I had in view.

14646. Had he that in view in the conversation between you? Did he express that in the conversation between you, or had he it in view from what you heard him say?—I can't tell you.

14647. Did he say anything of five or six men?—I don't think he did.

14648. Now, Mr. Laffan, I have already asked you about the £500 we commenced with. Are you aware that Mr. Munster expended a very large amount in charities in this town and neighbourhood before the election?—He expended some. I don't know.

14649. Apply yourself only to the time before the election?—He expended some—I don't know to what amount. I know he expended a lot of money to the convent and bazaar.

14650. Did you not hear evidence given here of his charities?—I knew that he was giving charity about the town. I heard Mr. Quirk, I think, talk of it.

14651. Did you know anything of it?—I know he gave a good deal of charity to the poor people here.

14652. Did you get any of that to distribute for him?—I'm not sure. When he came first I got some shillings, or was present when somebody got it, to distribute to poor objects

14653. Was that much?—Perhaps £2 or £3 to some poor women.

14654. Do you know if this distribution of charity occurred during Mr. Munster's canvass?—I saw it. I think it is going on still.

14655. I asked you to apply yourself only to the time of the election?—Yes, but of course the whole thing would be taken together.

14656. But you know that what is very innocent at one time is not so at another time. For instance, you may take a dozen houses at £50 each, but, taking them at an election, a bad construction may be put upon your acts. Have you paid any bills to persons for goods purchased with the object of distribution in charity in the town?—I have not paid.

14657. You have heard it come out from time to time, but do you know anything about it?—I do not.

14658. You were not professionally concerned in them?—I don't think I was; I have no recollection.

14659. Had you any conversation with Mr. Leahy or Mr. Byrne about it?—No; it was Mr. Munster's own act, I believe. He pursued the same course before he came here at all.

14660. I have to ask you what money you got yourself?—I have a balance sheet here, a copy of which I sent to Mr. Richardson.

14661. How much did you receive altogether?—Up to the 7th, I think during the election, I will say £813 15*s.* 7*d.*

14662. I make it a little more than that?—Because there is a balance due to me on foot of the account.

14663. Even with the exception of that £10 7*s.* 2*d.*?—I don't know how that is.

14664. I will tell you what it is for?—I think Mr. Richardson and I agreed the other day as to his account, £513 15*s.* 7*d.*

14665. Did you get a cheque from Miss Stearne on the 23rd October?—That is not in here at all.

14666. Did you get one?—I can't tell. If I got a cheque from her it is for something that I had paid, and that she merely refunded to me, but it did not form part of the account. I know I paid for a load of coal one time and got a cheque for £1 6*s.*

14667. Do you recollect paying £10 7*s.* 2*d.* for earthenware?—No.

14668. How did you dispose of the £813 15*s.* 7*d.*—read out the account for me?—There is a balance due of £93 14*s.* 7*d.*, due to me on foot of the account, which makes the money £907 9*s.* 8*d.* The first item is "Cash to Cunningham, sundries, various purposes—see his accoount—£177." The next is "To P. M. Laffan, sundries, see his account, £63 6*s.* 1*d.*"

14669. I understand none of these has been put into the account of the agent for election expenses?—Oh, they have.

14670. Well, go on?—"Cash to agents, as retainers and on account, see account, £91 18*s.* 8*d.*" "Cash to Hourigan, and so forth, for mob, and to butchers, £120 17*s.* 6*d.*" Paid in connexion with Abbeyview and John-street——

14671. Is this in connexion with the election?—It is not belonging really to the election.

14672. How much is it?—£13 0*s.* 6*d.* There were a number of other things thrown over on me to pay.

14673. That £13 0*s.* 6*d.* is not connected with the election?—I do not think it is. Then there is, "Paid drivers and so forth, on account, for cars, £19 9*s*." And there is, "Paid in connexion with telegraph office, £34 8*s*. Sundries, including £20 subscribed to the Corrigan fund, £37 9*s*. 9*d*.; and £350 to Mr. Leahy," and that makes £907 9*s*. 8*d*. That is simply the balance sheet.

14674. Give us now the dates of the payments to Mr. Leahy—what are they?—November 11th, £100; 13th, £50; 14th, £100; and 19th, £100.

14675. How did you pay that money to Mr. Leahy, was it by cheque?—No, by cash; handed him cash.

14676. How did Mr. Leahy come to ask you for it—did he tell you what it was for?—No; of course I knew it was for election purposes. After the five-guinea cheques failed, as well as I recollect, Mr. Leahy proposed I should give ten pounds. I disapproved of that and declined to give it, and told him to get somebody else to do it; and he said "very well, can you give me the money for the purpose?" I said I had no money available (there was at the time some £20, or a small balance in my favour); "but," said I, "get Mr. Munster to advance the money, and then I will hand it over to you."

14677. Did he then get Mr. Munster to advance the money?—Mr. Munster advanced £300 to me. The moment I got it I handed Mr. Leahy £100 of it, and the rest subsequently.

14678. Did you get the £300 in cash?—No, but a cheque transferred from Mr. Munster's account to mine.

14679. Did you know that Mr. Munster was aware that it was to be paid over to Mr. Leahy for £10 retainers?—I believe he did not know it from what subsequently took place.

14680. You were not present when Mr. Leahy got you the £300?—It took place at Abbeyview. In justice to Mr. Leahy, or Mr. Munster at all events, I must tell you that that advance was in order that I should not be out of money.

14681. Who mentioned that?—I went to Mr. Munster, and he said to me, "Why should not I be in advance to you instead of you being in advance to me?" Mr. Richardson was not there at the time. "I think," said he, "I had better place £200 or £300 to your credit." He gave me the cheque then. That was the result of the conversation between Mr. Leahy and Mr. Munster.

14682. What day was that?—I think on the 10th, judging from the fact that I paid him £100 on the 11th, for the next day I got the cheque from Mr. Munster and transferred it.

14683. You were aware that this £300 was to be applied in a way you disapproved of?—I did not perhaps disapprove of the £10 cheques, but I did not myself wish to have anything to do with it.

14684. Did you refuse to have anything to do with it?—Yes.

14685. Was that on the ground that you disapproved of the proceedings?—Yes, I thought it perfectly useless.

14686. Is that the reason?—Yes; parties were, in fact, only irritated by the five guineas. They thought they were tricked.

14687. You gave Mr. Leahy £100 of that £300, on the 11th November?—Yes.

14688. On the 13th November how did he ask you for £50?—I don't recollect the subsequent giving of the money, except on one occasion when he came and asked me could I give him more money, and I told him I could give £50, the £50 of a cheque I was after getting from Mr. Richardson. I gave him £50 in cash, and I presented Mr. Richardson's cheque.

14689. Did you pay over those four several sums, making £350, as the conducting agent of Mr. Munster, without asking Mr. Leahy what he wanted to do with the money?—Certainly, I regarded Mr. Leahy as having sufficient good sense and prudence to spend the money without my interference.

14690. You have heard since that that money was paid for bribing?—I heard after the election that some of it, at all events, went in bribery.

14691. Have you heard that £1,150 was spent so?—Yes, but I gave £250 of this before.

14692. Are you quite sure of those dates?—I am quite sure of them.

14693. You are able to fix with certainty the 11th November?—I am.

14694. That shows your brother was mistaken, and it may probably help his recollection with reference to another thing. What is your next account?—Sundries, including the Corrigan fund, £37 9*s*. 9*d*. I sent a cheque for £20 to the Corrigan fund in Dublin. I sent it by Mr. Munster's directions. The next account is paid in connexion with the telegraph office. I paid £34 8*s*. for fitting up the place.

14695. This telegraph was made by Mr. Munster?—Yes.

14696. You have only produced us one letter to Mr. Munster, dated 19th September, 1868. It appears from your letter of the 21st you must have got two letters, for you say, "I duly received your two letters"?—I am sure I got two letters from Mr. Munster. I think I handed in two letters of his.

14697. You have one of the 23rd inclosing a cheque for one hundred guineas, but in your letter of the 21st you say, "I duly received your two letters," so that you must have received two before the 21st?—Is that a copy of my letter to Mr. Munster? I did not send it. I found a letter of the 4th October from Mr. Munster, and have it [hands in a letter].

14698. It is not material. In this letter of the 21st you say, "I duly received your two letters. I will take care to get the rest of the papers mentioned. The great drawback at present is, that we have not your address. Mr. L."—that is Mr. Leahy, I presume?—Yes.

14699. "Mr. L. will be here, and will write you fully as to the Christian Brothers. Your ideas are certainly far in advance of what could be expected." Did you write again with reference to that?—I don't think I did.

14700. You never did?—I don't think I did. I have no recollection.

14701. Did you receive letters from Mr. Leahy with reference to the election?—I did.

14702. Have you got them?—I have.

14703. Did you go through them lately?—Yes; about a fortnight ago I ran through what I had. I recollect he was most particular about some bad English in the address, and some things of that kind. I don't think I have anything else. I don't think I have any things that are really important.

14704. Have you any letters from Mr. Leahy with reference to the Christian Brothers?—No; I don't think I ever got a letter from him in reference to it.

14705. Did you ever hear from Mr. Byrne that he had contributed this £300 your brother said he got from him?—I never heard a word of it until my brother swore it on the table. I purposely avoided asking my brother anything until he gave his evidence.

14706. Mr. MOLLOY.—On the 9th November, in Mr. Richardson's accounts, there is an entry of £50 paid to you, Mr. Laffan, for charities. What were they?—I think not.

14707. Well, it is here?—I'm not responsible for what is there.

14708. What is the £50 you got on the 9th November for?—I don't know. I got several sums from Mr. Richardson amounting to £915; but, certainly, I never got £50 for charities.

14709. You said the other day that you knew there were some corrupt practises and mysterious movements that you observed. What were they?—I saw people going about—I could hardly describe to you.

14710. What was the mystery?—People going in and out and inquiring for Patrick Cunningham and Patrick Laffan, and dropping hints that I did not at all want to hear or get at.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

14711. In the list of thirty-six agents entered here there are some men you have not spoken of. There is James J. Hickie; he is down for £15?—It does not follow because he sent in a claim he was entitled to it.

14712. Was he an agent?—He appeared to be friendly; I thought he ought to get paid for it.

14713. James Kirby, £10?—He was employed in person, and got, I think, more than he was worth. He got £4 from me. It was suggested at the time that he was very popular in the Commons.

14714. Did he send in a claim himself for £10?—He sent it in himself.

14715. There is David Neill, £50?—David Neill got a retainer of five guineas, and afterwards £2 from me, and he processed Mr. Munster at the Tipperary sessions for £40, and the Chairman thought he had been sufficiently remunerated; but I believe he got a decree for £5.

14716. For what?—For services, I think, Mr. Rollestone said.

14717. Was he a voter?—No. I think he got a decree for £5. I think one of them got a decree for £5, and two of them were dismissed.

14718. There is William Neill down for £30. Who is he?—He is another of them, out on the Commons.

14719. Is he a voter?—No; his father has a vote.

14720. How did his name come to be entered for £30?—Because he sent in a claim for it. He processed for it, and his case was dismissed. I don't think he appeared. It was dismissed without prejudice.

14721. For whom did his father vote?—Mr. O'Beirne.

14722. There are Michael and James Foley, £30?—Some one of those Foleys came to me, and said he could do a great deal out in the Commons. I told him go and do it. I promised him nothing beyond that if he did anything good for us he would be paid. He afterwards came and applied for £50. I did not see that he had done very much to entitle him to it.

14723. Who is Thomas Ryan?—I have mentioned him. There is another man named Flavan; he has a claim there. I heard nothing about him until I got his claim. I don't know very well what he did, but he sent in a claim for £15, because he canvassed thirty electors in the street, from one house to another.

14724. Did you apprise Mr. Munster of the suspicion excited in your mind by these mysterious movements?—No, certainly not.

Mr. Munster.—I should like to ask a few questions; I should like to ask Mr. Laffan generally the same questions I asked Patrick Cunningham and intend to ask Mr. Patrick Laffan.

14725. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Mr. Munster desires you to say if the taking of Ryan's or Carroll's house was legitimate?—I believe Mr. Munster regarded it as perfectly legitimate, but my recollection of it is that Mr. Munster was not aware of the taking of Carroll's house.

14726. And you were not aware of it?—Until it was taken.

14727. Nor of Ryan's?—Ryan's I became aware of at the moment. My recollection differs somewhat from Mr. Munster's on that point, because of something that happened at the trial in Dublin. Mr. Munster believes he was aware of it, and the precise object for which it was taken before the taking of it, but my recollection is different.

Mr. Munster.—My impression is that I discussed the price with him, and the grounds on which the price might be promised or claimed.

14728. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Do you recollect that?—I don't recollect discussing it with Mr. Munster.

14729. Was not the price of Ryan's house discussed?—We may have had a discussion some time before it was taken, but I have no recollection of it at present.

Mr. Munster.—I don't know if it was before it was taken, but it was before I knew of it. I should like Mr. Laffan to see the questions on the petition 7,216, and the following ones. I think it was on the trial of the petition that the matter arose.

[Witness peruses the report.]

14730. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You have read that answer?—I have, sir. It does not alter my recollection that it was after Carroll's house was taken that you were aware of it. Perhaps you were aware of it before I was. At all events, my recollection is this—that it was after it was taken I became aware of it, and that it was I and Captain Byrne that discussed the matter with you.

14731. Mr. Munster.—I wish to ask Mr. Laffan does he recollect discussing the price of £50 for Ryan's house before I thought it was taken?—I don't recollect, but it is a thing very likely he did.

14732. Was it not your brother, Mr. Patrick Laffan, that gave the £50 for the house?—It was. I think before the taking of it I was consulted about it. I had something to do about it, but I think at that time I had not.

14733. Referring to another question of mine, number 7,234 in the election petition, I would wish to ask Mr. Laffan if he recollects the words to which I deposed there?—Oh, yes, I have a perfect recollection. Mr. Munster did make use of those words, and they are—I said, "Mr. Laffan, I will forgive any result that may happen except winning the election and being unseated for bribery."

14734. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You say you recollect perfectly Mr. Munster saying, "I will forgive any result that may happen except winning the election and being unseated for bribery"?—I recollect he said that amongst other things.

14735. If you recollect any other observations of the same kind—or, I would rather call them, instructions given to you by Mr. Munster of the same character—Mr. Munster wishes you to state them?—On the occasion of giving the five-guinea retainers—when it was discussed, and Mr. Munster expressed—proposed it—Mr. Munster expresed himself decidedly opposed to bribery.

14736. But he approved of the giving of the retainers?—It was Mr. Munster that thought of it.

14737. Was the whole subject of those retainers discussed by you and Mr. Munster openly and fully?—Yes; and I think Mr. Leahy was present, and there may have been more; but I think the three of us were there.

14738. Were you satisfied just now that it was Mr. Munster suggested it?—Yes. [Mr. Munster.—Oh, yes, it was.]

14739. Referring to the letter of the 19th September, 1868, Mr. Munster wishes to know did you ever show that letter to the Archdeacon, or to anybody?—I don't know. I am sure I showed it to some people. It is a matter I would not have kept private. I either showed it or I told the substance of it. I don't recollect that I ever showed it to Archdeacon Quirke. It was his letter about giving the £500 unconditionally. In fact, I think it was after Mr. Munster came that he was brought into the matter by the understanding that that cheque should be given to him.

14740. These are of the same character as one you were asked before. Did Mr. Munster urge the necessity of reserving money to be spent in defeating bribery, and fighting the petition, and did he say to you that the change of the law on the trial of petitions made a great deal of difference?—Oh, yes, of course he did.

14741. What is the meaning of that? I do not understand it?—I don't recollect exactly the terms used on every occasion by Mr. Munster. I could only give you the general impression that he was desirous to have nothing illegal done.

14742. Did Mr. Munster ever tell you what his particular views were concerning bribery, and what unusual restrictions he conceived himself to be under?—Yes; I think Mr. Munster mentioned the fact that he would not feel justified that bribery was ever justified, if it was justified at all, unless it was first used as a weapon of defence—unless the opposite party went into it, and then he might fight them with their own weapons, and that he was under particular obligations in coming here not to bribe, but that he should fight it purely.

14743. Am I to understand you as representing Mr. Munster's views to be that if he discovered the other side were bribing he might then bribe?—That is only part of the conversations, or some of the discussions that took place between us—that he was not willing to bribe, and that he did not look on it as at all justifiable; but that was the only event in which it would be warranted.

14744. But you did not understand him to say it would be justifiable?—Perhaps justifiable is not the word to use at all, but that that is the only instance in which it would be allowable, or tolerable, or ought be had recourse to.

14745. I am afraid those words are not much better.

14746. Mr. Munster.—Did I ever express this view, that although in general many persons would regard bribery in defence as tolerable in my case, there were particular restrictions which cut me out from that view?—I think that is about it. Perhaps that is more correct than the other. I don't undertake—I would much prefer Mr. Munster would give his own recollection of those things. All that happened at the election I certainly cannot undertake to tell you.

Mr. Munster.—Oh, certainly. I dare say we discussed them fifty times.

14747. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did Mr. Munster mention what those restrictions were?—I don't recollect that he did.

14748. Did Mr. Munster send you a caution twice—once in a letter written by Mr. Biggin, and once subsequently by Miss Stearne, to destroy no papers?—He did. I have got the letters.

14749. And you have not destroyed any, I suppose?—No, certainly. None, except a lot of them that we flung into the fire after the election was over; and there were none since.

14750. We think it right to say that we have not seen the least evidence in the world that would lead us to the conclusion that any paper was destroyed or suppressed.

Mr. Munster.—I am very happy to hear you say so, but such was my confusion, or inability to keep mastery over them, that I wished myself not to be responsible. One of my questions has reference to a conversation about the change of the law. Perhaps Mr. Laffan would recollect it in this way, that I once mentioned to him that the first thing would be, that both he and I would be examined here on oath.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—That a more ready tribunal was provided.

14751. Witness.—Yes, I recollect that having taken place.

Captain Dudly Byrne was called but did not appear; Edmond Bowes was called but did not appear.

John Butler sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

John Butler.

14752. Were you employed with Connors and other men at the late election?—Yes, your worship.

14753. For what were you employed?—For the protection of Mr. Munster, and to protect him at the election.

14754. What protection did he want?—Why, it appears he did, sir, for there was a large number of people at the other side, sir.

14755. Who employed you?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

14756. What were you to get for protecting him?—I did not make any special agreement at all, sir.

14757. Was Connors employed in the same way as you?—Yes, five of us, your worship.

14758. He was canvassing men for their votes?—I suppose so.

14759. And offering money for them?—He might promise money; but I don't think he was authorized to give any.

14760. Did you canvass any persons for their votes?—One or two, sir, I think.

14761. Whom did you canvass?—William Gorman.

14762. What did he say when you went to canvass him?—He said he couldn't give me a decided answer presently, sir; that he would see about another time what he would do.

14763. Did you promise him anything?—I did, sir.

14764. How much did you promise him?—I made no figure at all, sir.

14765. What did you promise him?—I said we might give him some money, as much as he would get at the other side, if not more.

14766. Who is the second man that you canvassed?—I think William Neill, out at the Commons.

14767. What did he say when you went to him?—We understood he would take money if he got it.

14768. Did you tell him you had money to give?—Yes, I did, sir.

14769. What did you say to him?—Much the same as I told William Gorman; that we could give him money, and more money than he could get at Mr. O'Beirne's side.

14770. Was he pleased to hear that?—Well he did, it appears, sir.

14771. Did he say he would go with you?—Yes, sir, by our bringing out the money to him.

14772. Did you bring out the money to him?—No, sir.

14773. Did you look for it?—Yes, sir, I made application for it.

14774. To whom did you apply?—To Mr. Patrick Laffan.

14775. What did he say when you applied to him for it?—He made the remark that he could give no money.

14776. Did you canvass any other person?—I believe I did, sir, Danny Whelan. I believe I was with some men that same morning;—it is Danny Molony, sir.

14777. That is Daniel Molony, of Hughes's Lot?—That's him, sir, I think.

14778. What did he say to you?—I don't think the man made me any answer at all, because he was with William Neill, sir.

14779. Was he listening?—He was; that is, presently, sir.

14780. Did you apply for any money for Gorman?—No, I did not, your worship.

14781. Did you tell any person what Gorman told you?—I did not, sir. Thomas Connors and Michael Cahill were with me at the time I was speaking to Gorman.

14782. Did you see Gorman a second time?—No, sir, I never spoke to him since about it.

14783. Did you ever speak to him afterwards?—Never after, from that day to this.

14784. Who else were about in this canvass?—Michael Cahill and Thomas Connors, the dealer.

14785. Where does he live?—At Bohermoor, sir.

14786. Is he a voter?—No, he is not, sir.

14787. Who else did you canvass?—I did not try anyone else.

14788. Was there anyone else present at these conversations?—Michael Cahill was, sir.

14789. Was there anyone else besides Michael Cahill?—No one else, sir, I think.

14790. What did Michael Cahill say?—Begad, he only said the same, your worship, as I'm saying now.

14791. Did he expect money?—Yes.

14792. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did you say that Cahill was with you when you were talking to Neill and Moloney?—Yes, your worship.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

John Butler.

14793. Cahill is not a voter?—He is not, your worship.

14794. Mr. MOLLOY.—Were there any other voters besides Gorman and Neill?—No, there was not. No, sir.

14795. Had you any other conversation with voters except those?—No, I don't think we had, your worship.

14796. Mr. GRIFFIN.—What did William Neill say to you. Did you understand from him that he would take money?—I understood from him he would take money. I don't know was it I or Cahill asked him, but I believe it was myself. I asked him is it in the bank we would lodge it to their credit, or how would they like to have it.

14797. What did he say?—I undestood he would take money.

14798. Did you understand that from him?—I did, your worship.

14799. What did he say to lead you to understand that?—He said he would go with us, if we gave him money. Then we made him reply how we would give it to him if we got the money to give.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan.

Mr. Michael J. Laffan presents himself for further examination.

14800. Witness.—In Rawlin's case, it occurs to me, you have not any evidence from me on the point.

14801. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—We will hear you if you wish to say anything?—I simply want to say that I differ in my recollection of the transaction both with Mr. O'Meara and Mr. Thomas Rawlins. My recollection is, that late in the day, and when the election was virtually over, I met Rawlins in John-street, and he began to abuse me, saying how I deprived him of his right to vote, and could he not go and vote then. "It makes very little difference," I said, "whether you vote or not now. Give me back five guineas and vote." He said he could not as his wife had got the money and gone away, and I told him go to O'Meara and get the money in the Main street, and he did. Mr. O'Meara gave it to him on my security. I turned into the shop before Rawlins got the money. When I came into court I saw him on the table. I never got the money from him.

14802. You brought him to O'Meara's for the five guineas to pay you?—Yes, and he got the five guineas and added them to those he had before, and kept them all, and two or three times I applied or sent to him to pay back the money. "Oh," said he, "sure I took that on account."

14803. That substantially supports Rawlins's account?—No. Rawlins says I paid him five guineas additional to go and vote, and that I deny. He admitted in his evidence that he was afterwards applied to by me to pay back the five guineas. I was not aware at the time he got the five pounds from my brother. "What good was it," said he to me, "to give back that five guineas when I got five pounds before?" I want to set it right that I did not give him the five guineas to go and vote.

Robert Cashen.

Robert Cashen, of Hughes's Lot, sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

14804. You got £30 at the last election?—I did, sir, at the time of the election.

14805. Where did you get it?—I got it in Cunningham's house.

14806. Who told you to go there?—Pat Cunningham said so, sir.

14807. Was it Pat Cunningham arranged with you that you were to get £30?—It was, sir.

14808. That was for your vote?—I don't know what it was for, sir.

14809. Did you give anything else for it?—No, sir, I didn't.

14810. When did Patrick Cunningham tell you that you would get this £30?—I was sent for that day, sir, out about three-quarters of a mile from town where I live, and he told me to come in, that I was wanting in—the boy that went for me.

14811. Wanting where?—Into Mr. Munster's room at Mrs. Corcoran's.

14812. Did you go to Corcoran's hotel?—I did, sir.

14813. What did you see there?—I see a good deal of people there, sir.

14814. Did you see Mr. Pat Laffan?—I did not, sir.

14815. Was it there that you were told to go to Cunningham's for £30?—It was, sir.

14816. Did you get any token?—No, sir.

14817. Did you get any envelope, or anything of that sort?—No, sir.

14818. Did you vote in '65?—I did, sir.

14819. For whom did you vote then?—For Mr. Lanigan, sir.

14820. Did you get anything for your vote at that election?—No, sir.

14821. Did you get any money at all about the election?—No, sir.

14822. Or was there any promise made to you?—No, sir.

14823. Or any inducement held out to you, or any promise of anything?—No talks, sir. No, sir.

Edmond Foley was called but did not appear.

James Angelo Fahie.

James Angelo Fahie sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14824. Are you son of Mr. James Fahie?—Yes, sir.

14825. Were you here during the election of '68?—I was, sir.

14826. Your father voted then for Mr. O'Beirne, I believe?—Yes, sir.

14827. Were you spoken to about his vote by anyone?—Certainly not.

14828. Never at all?—Never.

14829. Do you mean to say that during the whole election nobody asked you to take part with either side?—Well, they might casually ask me.

14830. Can you recollect who did?—No, I cannot recollect anybody that did, particularly.

14831. Did anyone canvass you for your father's vote on behalf of Mr. Munster?—No, not for my father's vote.

14832. For any other vote?—For my own vote they did.

14833. Have you a vote?—Yes.

14834. You voted for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

14835. Who canvassed you for Mr. O'Beirne?—Captain Dudly Byrne and Mr. Munster himself.

14836. I do not think you heard my question?—I beg your pardon, nobody canvassed me for Mr. O'Beirne.

14837. Did you go of your own accord?—Yes, I knew Mr. O'Beirne intimately.

James Angelo Fahie.

14838. Are you the young gentleman whom your father said received some favour from him?—Yes.

14839. Captain Dudly Byrne and Mr. Munster himself canvassed you for your vote?—Yes.

14840. What answer did you give them?—I said I could not vote with them; that I should support Mr. O'Beirne, because I was a friend of his.

14841. Except the gratitude for what Mr. O'Beirne had done for you—which was a perfectly legitimate feeling to influence you—had you any other reason for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—None at all.

14842. No sort of inducement was held out to you?—No inducement whatever.

14843. How long before the election was it that you received those favours from Mr. O'Beirne?—In July, '64, I got this appointment from Mr. O'Beirne in London.

14844. When did you return to Cashel?—About two years ago I returned to Cashel.

Mr. John Mullins was called but did not appear; Edmond Foley was called but did not appear.

John Looby recalled; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Looby.

14845. Do you recollect meeting with Mr. Pat Laffan at any time about the election?—I do, sir.

14846. Had you any talk with him about the election?—No, sir.

14847. Never at all?—I had one day, sir, before the election. He came to my place, and I was not there. I was coming from my farm, and I met him on the way. He was talking to me. He said he would get a situation for one of my little boys, and I said that would do. Then I told at home how the thing was, and my eldest son would not take the situation. He said he would be runner in the telegraph office, and I would not leave him go there. I went to his brother, and told his brother I wouldn't accept of it, but I would vote for Mr. Munster.

14848. Did you say anything about money?—Never, sir; sure he is here if I did, sir.

14849. That was all before the election?—It was, sir.

14850. And you swear you never asked him for money?—I never asked a penny—never.

14851. Did you ask for money after the election?—No, sir; I never spoke of money.

14852. You never spoke of money at all?—Never, sir.

14853. Are you John Looby of the Green?—I am, sir.

14854. And you voted for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

14855. And do you say that you got no inducement, and never expected anything?—Never.

Mr. Patrick Laffan interposes.

Mr. Patrick Laffan.

14856. Witness.—I must explain the circumstance under which this voter was talking to me. He is quite correct. It was before the election I called to him, and said I would get the situation. We had no conversation until after the election. Neddy Duggan, or Looby, and John Duggan came to me. I happened to be at Abbeyview, Mr. Munster's residence; it was about eight o'clock in the evening. Duggan spoke to me, and said those people were talking to him, that they were under the impression he had money for them, that they were not going away, and that they wished to be arranged with. I told them then that it was impossible to have the thing done, and some other time we would see about it.

14857. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Did this man speak to you?—He did not; but he was there, one of the party, and he is quite correct in saying he didn't ask it.

John Looby's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

John Looby.

14858. What do you say to that?—I was behind the others, sir.

14859. But you went up there?—I did, with a good many. I was walking down street and they called me.

14860. And Duggan or Looby was the talker for you?—Not for me, sir, but for himself.

14861. Not for himself, for he had no vote?—These were the body-men, sir; they were looking for their money.

14862. Has Duggan a vote?—No, sir.

14863. Do you swear that you did not go there to know if Duggan got money to give you?—I didn't go up for money to him, sir.

14864. That is not my question. Do you swear you did not go up there to find if Duggan got any money to give you?—If Duggan got money he could bring it to me. I didn't go up for money. I never went up for money, nor never looked after money for the like.

14865. What brought you there at all?—I always takes a walk around the town occasionally. I met these men, and they asked me up.

14866. What did they say they were going about?—To walk up to see Mr. Laffan.

14867. What men did you see there?—Denis Heffernan, Maurice Looby, I heard; I think John Duggan, and Neddy Duggan, or Looby. I was speaking to Neddy Duggan this morning, and he will give you an account of it.

Edward Looby (or Duggan) recalled; confronted with John Looby, and examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Edward Duggan.

14868. You were sworn before?—Yes, sir.

14869. And you know you are under the same obligation now?—Yes, sir.

14870. Did this man go up with you to Abbeyview?—He did.

14871. Was he talking to you about money?—I never spoke a word to him about anything, but I spoke to Mr. Laffan some days before that; but I heard the money was giving out, and I said the parties that voted for our party have as good a right. We met this man. I said—"Come up to Abbeyview." I rapped at the door, and met Mr. Patrick Laffan. This man kept at one side. I said—"You have a right to settle with these parties that went independent."

FIFTEENTH DAY.
October 20.

Edward Duggan.

14872. Did not this man know what you were going with him for?—He didn't, nor I never spoke to him, sir; he might understand it in his own mind; but I didn't tell him, nor speak to him about it, nor I didn't let him into the knowledge of what I was asking Mr. Laffan at all about, sir.

14873. Are you any relation of this man?—Not the least, sir, only being of the name.

14874. Mr. Munster wishes to ask you if you got £30 after the election?—I didn't get it; but I was asked to deliver two letters, and I delivered them.

14875. Was that money in a closed envelope?—Yes, sir.

14876. Did you break the seal of any envelope?—I couldn't help it; it was broken in my pocket; I had it all day; I was selling meat all day, and I put it for security into my coat pocket; I took it out of this pocket; it was like one of Her Majesty's envelopes; I put down my hand and drew up a single note.

John Looby.

John Looby's examination resumed by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14877. George Looby is your son?—He is, sir.

14878. How was he employed at the election?—I didn't know he was employed at all, sir.

14879. Do you know that there is a claim for £35 for him?—I never knew it till I was here, sir.

James Darmody.

James Darmody sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

14880. Are you a voter of the borough of Cashel?—Yes, sir.

14881. You voted at the last election, I believe, for Mr. Munster?—Yes, sir.

14882. Had you a vote at any time before the last election?—No, sir.

14883. How much were you paid for your vote?—£30, sir.

14884. Where were you paid that?—In Corcoran's hotel.

14885. With whom did you make the arrangement for £30?—Patsy Cunningham.

14886. Was it he that took you to Corcoran's hotel?—Yes.

14887. And were you shown into a room where a man was?—Yes.

14888. Did you sign a note for him?—No, I refused to do that.

Edward Savage.

Edward Savage sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

14889. You voted at the last election?—I did, sir.

14890. Had you a vote at any previous election?—No, sir.

14891. Who canvassed you?—Captain Byrne canvassed me first; Mr. O'Beirne canvassed me.

14892. How long before the election did Captain Byrne canvass you?—Well, I couldn't say; a fortnight, I suppose.

14893. What answer did you give him?—I told him I wouldn't promise anyone; Mr. Munster was with him at the time.

14894. Was that before Mr. O'Beirne canvassed you?—It was before it.

14895. When Mr. O'Beirne came what did you say?—I told him I wouldn't promise anyone.

14896. Were you canvassed again?—I was.

14897. By whom?—By Mr. Michael Laffan.

14898. How soon after Captain Byrne had been with you?—He canvassed me a great many times, I couldn't say how often.

14899. How often did he canvass you?—It might be ten times.

14900. What answer did you give him first?—I told him I didn't think I would vote at all; that there were two parties quarrelling and I wouldn't interfere.

14901. What answer did you give on the other occasions?—I gave the same answer all through; I was more or less under a compliment to Mr. Michael Laffan; he did some little business for me. In fact only for him I wouldn't have voted at all.

14902. Were you canvassed by any person else?—No, I don't think I was.

14903. Did you receive any inducement for your vote?—No, I never got a shilling direct or indirect for my vote.

14904. Have you a family?—I have.

14905. Did any member of your family get anything?—No, none whatever.

14906. Or was any promise made to them?—No, not the slightest.

14907. Did you see any cheques?—As I came from the races of Cashel I seen a deposit receipt for £5,000 in Mr. Laffan's hand.

14908. How did you come to see that?—I was standing at the hotel door; Mr. Laffan, Mr. Scallan, and two or three others; I believe Mr. Laffan met Mr. Scallan at the door and was in the act of showing it to Mr. Scallan, and I happened to be there.

14909. Did he say anything when he was showing it?—No, I don't recollect what he said.

14910. Had you been in conversation with him?—No; I just happened to be standing at the door after coming from the races when he took it out of his pocket and I think he showed it to Mr. Scallan. In fact he was talking to him and showed it, and I happened to see the figures.

James Hanley

James Hanley sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

14911. Are you the son of Edmond Hanley?—Yes, sir.

14912. Were you employed at the last election?—No, sir.

14913. Do you know that a claim was sent in for you for £55?—I haven't the least knowledge of it.

14914. Did your father tell you that he sent it in?—Never until it was reported the other day.

14915. Did you never hear of it until yesterday?—The other day, sir, when it was reported in court.

14916. Had you many conversations with your father about it?—Never, sir.

14917. Never since?—He told me there was a claim, and that he put it in.

14918. When did he tell you that?—He told me this morning, and he told me when it was reported in court.

Timothy Hogan sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

Timothy Hogan.

14919. How long are you a voter in Cashel?—About twenty-five years, sir.

14920. For whom did you vote in the election of 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

14921. For whom did you vote in 1859?—For Mr. Lanigan, and I believe in '57, I think.

14922. Did you vote in 1857 for Mr. Lanigan?—I did.

14923. Did you ever get anything for voting for Mr. Lanigan?—I never did a penny.

14924. Did you ever get anything for voting in connexion with the election of 1865?—I did.

14925. What did you get?—I wouldn't have voted for Mr. O'Beirne in '65, but I went to see Mr. Lanigan. A friend in Cashel wanted an appointment for his son. I met Mr. Lanigan in Thurles, and he seemed not to notice me; he spoke very sharply to me; I never would have voted for Mr. O'Beirne only I thought he insulted me very much.

14926. The question I asked you was if you got anything in connexion with the election of 1865?—Yes, I did.

14927 How much?—I set my house to Mr. Johnson for £40?—I got £20 of it.

14928. Who paid you the £20?—Mr. Johnson.

14929. Was any use made of your house at all in 1865?—No, there wasn't much, though I prepared it for him.

14930. Was there any use made of it at all?—Nothing, but only a few men that slept in it the night of the election.

14931. What became of the other £20?—At the time that Mr. O'Beirne came for the last election in 1868 he paid me the other £20; I suppose I never would be paid it only for the election.

14932. When did he pay it to you?—In '68, after coming here.

14933. Did you not think you would be very well paid with £20 for having a few men sleep one night in your house?—I think I would and too well paid, because they didn't trouble me.

14934. Then I suppose you considered the £40 was for something more than the house—it was for your vote as well as for your house?—There is no doubt of that.

14935. How many days before the election were you paid the £20 by Mr. O'Beirne?—I suppose it was nearly a fortnight or so.

14936. At the time he paid it had you made up your mind how to vote?—I had; I never expected that £20.

14937. Would you have voted for Mr. O'Beirne whether you got it or not?—I would. My feeling was entirely for Mr. O'Beirne; I never expected that money.

14938. Did you ask for it?—I went to ask for it and he gave it to me honorably.

14939. Would you let your house to Mr. Munster for £40?—No. My wife was called on about it and she said it would be the cause of her death if I interfered that way.

14940. If you got £40 from Mr. Munster it would be the cause of her death? You went to Mr. O'Beirne to ask for the £20?—I did.

14941. And you thought you had a likelihood of getting it on account of having a vote to give at the last election?—I don't think I would get it were it not for that; that was my opinion.

14942. And that was the reason you asked for it?—Yes.

14943. What did he say when you asked for it?—He said he thought Mr. Johnson paid it.

14944. Did you ask for more than £20?—Indeed I didn't.

14945. Did you get a promise of any more?—Not a single halfpenny.

14946. How were you paid it—was it by cheque or notes?—He gave me a cheque himself.

14947. Was the cheque on the bank here?—On the bank; I got the money myself.

14948. Tell me honestly, if Mr. O'Beirne refused to pay you that £20 that day would you have said to him that you would not vote?—I didn't expect I would vote against Mr. O'Beirne, because the people were delighted with him at the time for his conduct in Parliament.

14949. If Mr. O'Beirne said, "Get out of my room, do you want to rob me? You got £20 for nothing in 1865," would you have voted for him?—Sure if he insulted me I wouldn't vote at all for him.

14950. I was too strong. If he said "Surely it is not in my power to pay you £20, for I consider you have not the least claim upon me," what would you say then?—Well, I didn't expect it.

14951. Well, that is not an answer to my question. Would you walk out and say, "Mr. O'Beirne, I will not vote for you?" Tell me the truth, would you not do that?—Well, now I was sworn on the petition and I swore whether I got the money or no I would vote for Mr. O'Beirne; I am swearing the same now.

14952. And is it only because you swore it at the petition that you swear it now?—Yes.

14953. What?—Yes, I would; I didn't care whether I got it or no. It didn't trouble me much; I wasn't too badly in the want of it.

14954. Mr. GRIFFIN.—You put it down as a bad debt, I suppose?—I didn't; I didn't think I would ever get it.

James Hackett sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

James Hackett.

14955. How long have you been a voter of Cashel?—About seventeen years, your worship.

14956. How did you vote in 1859?—For Mr. Lanigan.

14957. How did you vote in 1865?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

14958. And at the last election?—For Mr. O'Beirne.

14959. Were you canvassed at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne came to my place and I wasn't at home. Mr. Laffan came to me, and Mr. Munster himself came to the loan office to me.

14960. When Mr. Laffan went to you what did you tell him?—I told him I wasn't decided and wouldn't give him any decided answer.

14961. What did you tell Mr. O'Beirne when he called?—I wasn't at home.

14962. Had you ever seen him?—Yes.

14963. And spoken to him?—Yes, he sent for me.

14964. When you went to him what did you tell him?—He promised a situation to me some time afterwards since '57. He renewed it after the election of '65. He didn't fulfil his promise, and he was excusing himself to me, and he said inasmuch as he didn't fulfil his word he had no claim to ask me for my vote.

14965. When Mr. Laffan asked you, and you told him you had not made up your mind, did he offer you a retainer?—Not at all.

14966. But on a subsequent occasion?—On a subsequent occasion he did.

14967. How much was the retainer?—Five guineas.

14968. What did you tell him?—I had some hesitation in the beginning, and I was under the impression it was employing me as a kind of agent; I took the retainer, and the day after I believe I gave it to him.

14969. Did you demand any sum from him?—I did. I considered five guineas rather small. I said I wouldn't take a retainer if he didn't make it twenty-five or thirty pounds.

14970. What did he say?—He said in the first that he would; that he would consult some parties, and that he would make it so much.

14971. How long did you keep the money?—Wed-

FIFTEENTH DAY.

October 20.

James Hackett.

nesday, about one o'clock, I got it, and the Thursday or Friday following, I'm not sure which, I gave it to him below at the hotel.

14972. You have some relatives voters?—I have.

14973. Did you receive any money at the last election from any person?—I never got a penny for my vote in anyway.

14974. Did you receive any money?—I did.

14975. How much?—I got £75.

14976. Who gave you the £75?—I got the money from Mr. O'Beirne's valet.

14977. How much of the £75 was for yourself?—Nothing.

14978. None?—None.

14979. For whom was the £75?—It was for my father, my brother, and my brother-in-law.

14980. What is your brother's name?—William Hackett.

14981. And your brother-in-law?—Morris Looby.

14982. And your father's name?—John Hackett.

14983. What did you do with the £75?—When I got it I was in dread to give it to them, and I kept it until the petition would be over.

14984. What did you do with it after the petition?—I kept it.

14985. You kept it?—I kept it. I did this myself unknown to the other parties. I took this £75 for my brother, my father, and my brother-in-law, unknown to them. I would have given it to them but I got in dread, and I kept it until the thing would be over; but I lent my brother from time to time some money, but I never told him it was some of that money.

14986. Have you the £75 still?—Of course I have.

14987. How came you to get the £75 from the valet?—It was an agreement between me and Captain Graham.

14988. Captain who?—Captain Graham.

14989. Where did you make the agreement?—I think the final agreement was made in my own house. He came up one evening, I brought him to my own room, and I think it was there it was concluded.

14990. How much did you ask at first?—He said how much did I think, and I said about £25 each for the three. I told him distinctly before that that I would take no money for my own vote, that I wouldn't take it. Then he agreed to—what he said was to let them handle the money, but this was on account. He said to get their votes passed to him, and to indorse the note to him, and he would give me £75.

14991. Did you get the notes?—I got their notes passed to me, and then I indorsed the note to Captain Graham, and kept the £75.

14992. Were there three notes?—It was all one note—a joint note.

14993. When you were getting the note what did you say?—I told them distinctly it had nothing to do with their votes.

14994. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—But they knew it had?—It was my intention to convey to them it should not.

14995. Did they not know it was to get money for their votes?—I don't think some of them did.

14996. Which of them was so stupid?—I think my father knew nothing at all about it, nor my brother-in-law either. If any knew it it was my brother.

14997. What did you ask them when you were getting the bill signed?—I told them I wanted to use that money.

14998. You have given your evidence here in a very questionable manner?—I intend to give it the same way.

14999. I ask you now to tell me do you not believe that they knew before the election—before they voted—that an arrangement had been made?—No.

15000. And do you tell me now that they did not believe it?—I believe my brother had some knowledge of it, but the others had not.

15001. Do you believe they did not expect any money?—No, I don't think my father knew anything at all about it.

15002. Did you know they would vote whatever way you told them?—No, I didn't.

15003. Did you ever tell your father he ought to vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—No. I told him nothing at all about voting, the day—the morning he was coming to vote.

15004. At any time?—I had no conversation at all with him, for I knew there was no use.

15005. Did you bring your father to vote?—Yes, he came with me.

15006. And he heard you vote for Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes.

15007. And he followed your example?—Yes.

15008. You say you gave that note to Captain Graham. Where did you give it to him?—I gave it to him in the loan office, where I hold a situation.

15009. Was that in pursuance of the conversation with Captain Graham, wherein you told him that it should be £25 each, but that you would take nothing for yourself?—Yes, distinctly.

15010. Do you know of any other money having been paid?—No.

15011. You never heard anything of the kind?—No, I'm not cognizant of anything else.

15012. Do you know anything of the election of 1865?—I do, that I voted and got nothing for it; nor '59 nor '57 I got nothing for my vote.

15013. Do you know did your father ever get anything for his vote?—No, he never got a penny for his vote unless the last.

15014. Do you know the date of the note?—I do not, sir; some time previous to the election.

15015. Do you know how long previous to the election?—I suppose about ten days; something of that kind.

William Hackett was called but did not appear.

Adjourned.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Mr. John Mullins.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1869.

Mr. John Mullins sworn; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

15016. You are Chairman of the Town Commissioners of Cashel, I believe?—I am.

15017. Were you chairman in 1868?—Yes.

15018. During the election?—Yes.

15019. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—Since '53; either '52 or '53.

15020. Did you vote in 1865?—I did.

15021. For whom did you then vote?—For Mr. Lanigan.

15022. And in 1859 for whom did you vote?—For Mr. Lanigan, and in '57 for Mr. Lanigan.

15023. Do you know of any money having been expended in bribery in 1865?—I do not, more than I have heard by public report.

15024. You have heard those reports that were current about the town in 1865?—I have.

15025. Do you not know yourself of any votes having been given for corrupt purposes in 1865?—I do not know it of my own knowledge, nor did not then. I did take an active part in favour of Mr. Lanigan in '65, and I know as far as my knowledge went that there was not a shilling spent corruptly on his part.

15026. Do you believe that there was money spent corruptly on the part of Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—I heard it so reported.

15027. And do you know what the majority was by which Mr. O'Beirne defeated Mr. Lanigan in 1865?—I do not recollect the number, but I should say thirty, or thereabouts; I should say it was more, but I am not positive.

15028. You voted in 1868 for Mr. Munster, I believe?—I voted for Mr. Munster in '68.

15029. Did you take an active part in the election?—None whatever, more than the recording of my vote.

15030. Did you not canvass any persons at all?—No.

15031. But of course you had many conversations about the town with persons as to the way they would vote?—Well, I don't say: no, I had not; I had no particular conversation, nor did I ask any person what way he would vote or who he would vote for. I may have conversations in general amongst people, but I had no particular conversation with any person.

15032. Did you, during the election, believe that money was spent in corrupt practices?—I heard that it was being spent.

15033. Now, how did you hear it?—Well, indeed, from public report. If you were to ask me who did I hear saying it, I could not name any person in particular, but it was publicly rumoured.

15034. I suppose you are engaged in trade?—I am.

15035. What trade, may I ask?—I am in general business; hardware and ironmongery business, and timber and other matters.

15036. I think your name was mentioned by Mr. Laffan yesterday, as being one of the number with whom he spoke about the £500 for the Christian Brothers?—Yes.

15037. Do you recollect the occasion on which that was first proposed?—I do.

15038. By whom was it proposed do you know?—I heard Mr. Laffan saying something about it some few days before Mr. Munster's arrival in town; that Mr. Munster intended doing something that way. I believe a day or two after Mr. Munster came to town Mr. Laffan called to my office and said, "Mr. Munster is after coming to town, and with reference to the subject I was talking to you about, I think, as Chairman of the Town Commissioners, you ought to wait on him." I said I didn't think the Chairman of the Town Commissioners had anything to do, as such, with anything of the kind, and I refused to go. Mr. Laffan then said that "If it is not worth taking it is not worth asking." I said, "I am not going to have anything to do with it." He said, "If the public suffer on your account it will be a very disagreeable thing;" and immediately after I said, "I will consent to wait on Mr. Munster on two conditions;" and he said, "What conditions are they?" and I said, "First, that my waiting on him must be entirely independent of the result of the future or the coming election or of pledges altogether, and before I go I will require you to wait on Mr. Munster and state so to him; and the second condition is that you will get at least five or six of my neighbours to accompany me. As it is a public question I must decline to go as a private individual."

15039. Have the goodness to explain to me what you mean by saying that your going was not to be considered as having anything to do with the election. Was it that you were not to support Mr. Munster?—Precisely so; that I was to go without subjecting myself to any particular line of conduct as to the future, and I insisted on putting these conditions to Mr. Munster before I would go.

15040. Before you went to Mr. Munster did you know of this arrangement, if I may call it so, that was proposed by Mr. Laffan, that the money was to be returned to Mr. Munster in the event of his not being elected?—No, I did not.

15041. Did you never hear of it?—I heard it afterwards; at Mr. Munster's house I heard it spoken of, but I didn't know it was arranged.

15042. Did you ever hear that Mr. Laffan proposed it with that condition?—I did not; it was Mr. Munster I heard state that in his own house first; Mr. Munster stating that that condition was proposed to him, but that he wouldn't entertain it.

15043. Now, Mr. Laffan told us yesterday that he made this proposal as a good and advisable election move on the part of Mr. Munster?—I couldn't tell you what he thought.

15044. Did you receive it in that way when Mr. Laffan spoke to you?—I took it for granted that if Mr. Munster was not a kind person he would not think of making such a proposal at all.

15045. Do I understand you to say that you had not your mind made up then how to vote?—Certainly not; I had my mind made up that I would not vote for one person then, and that is Mr. O'Beirne.

15046. But you had not made up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—Decidedly not.

15047. What afterwards induced you to make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—I voted more against Mr. O'Beirne than for Mr. Munster for this reason. I believe the constituency of Cashel to have been as pure as any in the United Kingdom until Mr. O'Beirne first, and his agent afterwards came to town; and it is under this feeling that I voted against him. In point of fact I may as well say I would have voted for any man professing Liberal opinions against Mr. O'Beirne.

15048. Were you not here in 1857?—I was.

15049. Did you happen to be in court when Mr. Coman gave evidence with regard to 1857?—No, I was not.

15050. Did you hear of an election petition against Sir Timothy O'Brien?—I did.

15051. Now, do you think that Cashel was so very pure in 1857 as you say?—Mr. O'Beirne was in town in '57, and any corruption that was in '57, in my opinion, was forced on by Mr. O'Beirne and his agent, Mr. Johnson.

15052. He did not go to the poll?—Yes, but he was proposed, and on the hustings I heard him declare that he would poll to the last man; and to my knowledge afterwards he came up to Mr. Lanigan and said, "I will resign in your favour now, provided you will pay my expenses."

15053. Were you here in 1852?—I was.

15054. Did you hear of Mr. M'Garrell as a candidate then?—Yes, Hughen was first brought by Johnson.

15055. Was there any corruption in 1852?—I believe there was not; he failed in that; he subsequently brought M'Garrell, and failed in corrupting, except a few, if he had even a few. Mr. Johnson commenced the work in '52; it was only carried out in '65. So the public must know what the electors were when it took fifteen years to corrupt them.

15056. How was it you were in doubt when you went to Mr. Munster as to whether you would vote for him?—Simply because I knew nothing of him.

15057. Did he not profess Liberal principles?—I didn't know anything of him more than what I heard from Mr. Laffan; I don't know if I had read his address at the time.

15058. State what occurred about this money?—Mr. Laffan came back and said Mr. Munster would not receive the deputation on any other conditions than those I proposed. Five or six other gentlemen and myself went to Mr. Munster's house, and Mr. Munster introduced this subject, and in doing so he said it was proposed to him—by whom I don't know—that he should only give the subscription on condition of being returned; but that he would not listen to such a thing, and that he was giving it unconditioned, for the establishment of Christian Brothers' schools in Cashel, adding that he would look on it as the proudest act of his life to have his name connected with it.

15059. Were you long desirous of establishing a Christian Brothers' school in Cashel?—Some five or six years, or more.

15060. Did you know that the Archbishop was de-

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Mr. John Mullins.

sirous of it, or aiding you in it, or had any communication with you about it?—The Archbishop was parish priest here some years ago before he was appointed Archbishop.

15061. How long ago?—About ten years, I believe; it is eight or nine years ago, at any rate. I was one of the parishioners who waited upon him with others about it at the time, and ever since we have had it in the consideration of the parishioners.

15062. In pursuance of that offer of £500, you got a cheque, I believe, that day?—It was proposed when Mr. Munster said he asked the amount likely to be required, and I believe one of the gentlemen said there was a calculation made before, and £500 would be required to fit up a house and place for them; and he said "You must not want the money longer, if that is all." He then put the question—"Who will I fill the cheque for?" and some of the gentlemen said, "Fill it in favour of Mr. Mullins;" and I said, "No, but let it be filled in the name of the incoming parish priest." He was then appointed, but I believe not living in Cashel.

15063. Who is that?—Archdeacon Quirke; and then and there Mr. Munster filled it in his favour, and enclosed it in an envelope; I believe it was enclosed to Mr. Leahy, with instructions as to how he was to give it; that is, if the schools were to be opened within a certain time, and that within all human probability the school would be opened before the 27th July, 1869; I believe that was the time; that he was to hand the cheque to the Archdeacon. Mr. Munster read the letter.

15064. That was Mr. Edmond Leahy?—I believe his name was Edmond.

15065. The brother of the Archbishop?—The brother of the Archbishop.

15066. He is a gentleman that was acting for Mr. Munster?—At the interview I speak of Mr. Leahy was not then present.

15067. I presume although you may not have gone to speak to persons, or canvassed persons, that owing to your position as Chairman of the Town Commissioners of this town, a great many electors spoke to you during the election. I want to know did any of them come to you to know if you knew of money being given?—Not one.

15068. You had not the question openly put to you?—I never had.

15069. Or anything signifying it, although not put distinctly?—Nothing at all, for I made up my mind from the commencement not to interfere either one way or the other with either of the parties, and I believe either of the parties had not known up to the time I recorded my vote which I would vote for; at least I did not give them so to understand.

15070. Now, do you think, Mr. Mullins, did this gift of £500 for the Christian Brothers' schools operate on the constituency of Cashel in favour of Mr. Munster?—Well, I wouldn't venture to give an opinion as to that; parties were very much divided about it.

15071. Did you not hear any opinion expressed?—I heard parties say it was a very charitable act of his, and I heard others who were opposed to Mr. Munster repudiate the act.

15072. What do you mean by repudiating the act?—Saying it was given for a corrupt motive, or with a view of forwarding his chance in the election.

15073. Have you heard the people of Cashel speak of it generally?—Well, not to a great extent; but I have heard a diversity of opinion between the supporters of Mr. Munster and Mr. O'Beirne.

15074. Is that your own opinion at all?—Decidedly not.

15075. You told us you did not come to a determination at first to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did not.

15076. And you stipulated that day you should be considered as going there perfectly free and unpledged?—Precisely so.

15077. Were you not influenced, then, by any consideration except your dislike to Mr. O'Beirne and your desire that he should not be again returned?—I swear it.

15078. You are not able to give us any further information regarding the election?—I am not.

[Mr. Munster hands in questions.]

15079. Before you waited on Mr. Munster at Abbeyview, was it mentioned that the Fever Hospital would be suitable, and would be let for the purpose at a shilling a year?—We stated that after the 25th March—it was October, I think—we would then have it. We said that the Poor Law Guardians are in possession of the hospital, and we cannot interfere until the 25th March, and the Commissioners of the town will have it then at their disposal, and the will converted for that purpose.

15080. Was Mr. Leahy to ascertain if it was fit for a school?—He was to examine the house, and he did so.

15081. Mr. Munster.—I have to ask whether it was on expressing his opinion that it was fit in a week he was to hand the cheque over to the Archdeacon?—Mr. Munster wrote a letter and read it for us, and he read them exact words from the letter; but I did not read the letter myself; I heard the letter read in about a fortnight after at a meeting in the Town Hall, at which Mr. Leahy attended.

15082. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—Was the report of Mr. Munster's gift that appeared in the Cashel Gazette correct, do you recollect?—Well, I don't recollect the report of it, but the giving of the gift, and everything connected with it, so far as I know, is exactly what I have stated to you; I don't know anything else connected with it than what I have mentioned to you.

15083. Mr. Munster.—There is one thing on which my recollection differs from Mr. Mullins'. I should like to ask, if it was not proposed that two persons should be associated as payees of the cheque, and whether the Archdeacon was not my own selection?—At the time, Mr. Munster put the question to the gentlemen present. He said, "In whose favour shall I draw this cheque?" I think it is Mr. Cahill or Mr. O'Sullivan said, "Let it be drawn in favour of the Chairman of the Town Commissioners;" and I said, "No, I will have nothing to do with it;" and I suggested that it should be filled in Archdeacon Quirke's name. Mr. Munster then said something as to whether it would not be more prudent to have two, and it was finally decided in favour of the Archdeacon.

15084. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I think you said the Archdeacon was not at the time actually in Cashel?—I know he was appointed, but he was not in Cashel that day.

15085. Had he taken charge of the parish?—I think he took charge of the parish the Sunday previous to that day, but he had not settled down

15086. Mr. Munster.—Would you ask Mr. Mullins if some other person, not myself, suggested the prudence of having two names?—I am not able to answer that question; but I know it was suggested. I will not swear you did or did not, but I know the second name was suggested.

15087. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I have to ask you, at the request of Mr. Munster, was it not said that Mr. Munster was not a Liberal, but a Conservative, and that he was a wolf in sheep's clothing?—I have heard many such statements. I don't recollect any election at which something was not said.

15088. Were you present at a meeting in Abbeyview the Sunday before the election?—I was not; I was never there but on one occasion.

15089. Were you invited to attend?—I was.

15090. But you did not go?—I refused to go.

15091. Were you still undecided?—At that time I was undecided whether I would vote for Mr. Munster or not.

15092. At what period did you hear that money was being improperly spent?—I heard it so remarked from the very commencement of the election.

15093. As to both sides?—Oh, I didn't hear the spending of money attributed; I heard it attributed to both parties.

15094. To both parties?—To both parties.

15095. From the first?—From the very first.

15096. Is Mr. Munster's name associated with the introduction of the Christian Brothers?—It is to the extent that I have mentioned to you.

15097. I just wish to ask, for my own information, who was the parish priest that preceded Archdeacon Quirke?—Archdeacon Laffan.

15098. Did he die?—He died, I believe, in August, 1868; in July or August 1868; yes, in July or August, 1868.

William Hackett sworn; examined by Mr. Molloy.

William Hackett.

15099. What relation are you to James Hackett?—A brother, sir.

15100. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—I believe since 1857, sir.

15101. How did you vote at the election of 1857?—For Lanigan, sir.

15102. And in 1859?—Yes, sir.

15103. And in 1865?—I voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

15104. And at the last election for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

15105. Who canvassed you in 1865?—In '65, well Mr. O'Beirne did, sir.

15106. Did you get any inducement to vote for him in 1865?—In '65, I did, sir; I got £20 from Mr. Johnson.

15107. Who gave you that £20?—Mr. Johnson.

15108. Was it before or after the election?—Well, it was before the election, sir.

15109. That was for your vote?—Well, I am under the impression it was, but when he was giving me the money he told me it was his own money he was lending me.

15110. Did you pass a note?—I did, sir; I am under the impression it was a note; I signed it, but I did not read it, nor he for me.

15111. You were never asked to pay it?—No, sir.

15112. He spoke to you often about this £20?—He didn't, sir.

15113. Now, we have heard about your signing a bill for £75?—Yes, I did, sir.

15114. Your brother brought it to you?—The bill? I went to the house. My brother sent for me, sir, and for my sister's husband, and he told me that he wanted a favour of me and of my sister's husband. "What is that," says I. "I want to borrow some money," says he; "and you will show me a favour by signing to this." We signed to the note then, sir; and he says after we signed the note, "This has nothing to do with your vote; both you and Looby are at liberty to vote as you like.

15115. The note was for £75?—It was, sir.

15116. To whom was the note payable?—I couldn't tell that, sir.

15117. Did he tell you who was giving the money?—He put me into no knowledge but what I explained to-day.

15118. Did you think it was about the election?—I did, sir; I had a suspicion of it.

15119. Had he spoken to you before that?—No, sir; but I see Mr. Laffan come to us after—to him and to me—and his brother came to me, but he knew whatever way he went we would go. I couldn't know what shouldering he had about the election; but we always went together, and did for Lanigan twice, without receiving a shilling for our vote, nor never looked for it.

15120. You say Mr. Laffan came to you before the election?—He did; Mr. Laffan never came to me but once, and his brother another time.

15121. What occurred between you?—Mr. Michael Laffan came to me, and introduced what a good man Mr. Munster was. "Look," says he, "he has eighteen or nineteen hundred pounds given out already." "Oh Lord!" says I, "is it in eight or nine days?" "He has," says he; "he gave five hundred for the Christian Brothers, and he's the only man that ought to be returned for Cashel." "Begor, and sure if he is such a good man he is," says I. "I'm not asking your vote," says he, "but if you make up your mind and vote for Mr. Munster." "I couldn't do it," says I; "I'm under a compliment to Mr. O'Beirne; I passed a note in '65; I don't intend to go against him." "Well now," says he, "if you and your brother," says he, "and your father come to the consideration to vote for Mr. Munster, we'll come to another consideration with ye." "Well, I'll consult them about it," says I. Well, then, the evening or two before the nomination—no, but before the polling day, it was in or about the 16th November, I well recollect it—this man, Mr. Pat Laffan, came to me and called me out of my house, and he introduced to me about my vote, and he introduced about the note. I didn't deny the note. "Well," he says to me, "if I was," he says, "to secure you," he says, "in that note, how much money," says he, "do you want for your vote?"

15122. What night was that?—The night I went to Mr. O'Beirne. "If in case," says he, "we secure you in that note you passed to Mr. O'Beirne, how much do you want for your vote?"—"Thirty pounds," says I. "Come down," says he, "at six o'clock to Corcoran's hotel." "Well," says I, "if in case I take the thirty pounds, couldn't I be put to my oath?" "You could," says he; and says I, "wouldn't that be great hazard either to you or to me?" "No fear," says he, "come down, at any rate." I came in to my family. The three little girls I have said they wouldn't stop in the house, and my son said he would go and 'list if I took any of Munster's bribery. "I will not," says I; "but I will pass him as civil as I could." He came about seven o'clock and tapped at the door. I went out and said, "my family wouldn't agree, and I'll have no further to do with it." That is what passed between us. Look at the inducement held out to voters that don't know what they are doing; to leave people be coming dogging them about day and night! Look at this sort of work! blaming poor people for taking money, and these men going round that way! 'Tis the whole instigation of bribery in Cashel!

15123. Mr. Waters, Q.C.—Did you tell Mr. Laffan about the note?—I did, sir.

15124. Did you tell Mr. Laffan about the note you passed for £75?—Oh, no, sir, I didn't; that note wasn't passed at all at the time.

15125. Did you not tell any of your children?—Not a single word, nor I was never put in possession by my brother what he ever arranged to do for that note.

15126. Although your brother did not tell you about that note, tell me, like an honest man, did you not believe that that note was passed for something in connexion with the election?—I did, sir.

15127. I thought you would tell me the truth?—I did, sir.

15128. You knew that it had reference to your vote?—Well, I knew that my vote was intended, but having no knowledge of it.

15129. You had no knowledge, but you believed it?—Yes, sir.

15130. And you were under the impression when he said he wanted you to do him a favour, that it was only a story?—I believe that it was only some hidden agreement that I was not made aware of.

15131. And that you were not to be made aware of?—And that I was not to be made aware of, or put into possession of.

15132. Does your father live in the house with you, or with the other son?—With James, sir, my brother.

15133. Is that the young man that was examined yesterday?—Yes, sir.

15134. Was your father able to talk about the election?—He was, sir; but then he's a stupid old man.

SIXTEENTH DAY.
October 21.
William Hackett.

15135. And he would do I suppose whatever he was bid?—Whatever he was bid to do he would do; he has no forecast only just what he would hear my brother say; he's silly, sir.

Mr. Munster.—I would like to ask whether Margaret Hackett, whom I am accused of wishing to bribe with ten pounds, is not sister-in-law to this man, and wife of James Hackett.

Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—I think you will have an opportunity of hearing that from herself.

Edmond Foley.

Edmond Foley, of Boherclough, sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

15136. Whom did you vote for at the last election?—Mr. O'Beirne, your honour.

15137. Did you vote at the election of 1865?—I didn't; I had no vote, sir.

15138. Did you get any money at the last election?—Not a shilling, sir.

15139. Did you not get £35 from anybody?—I did, from Mr. Munster but not from Mr. O'Beirne; I got it from Pat Cunningham at Corcoran's hotel; it isn't he gave it to me, but a man I never knew.

15140. Who had spoken to you about your vote before?—Mr. O'Beirne came twice to my house, and I wasn't there either time, for my vote; I happened to be there when Mr. Munster, and Mr. Leahy, and Mr. Laffan came to my house for my vote.

15141. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Laffan came out of the carriage and introduced me in; I went in. "I come for your vote, Mr. Foley," says Mr. Munster. "You are welcome, sir," says I, "but I'm not going to give it to you. I never pledged nor promised, nor will I to any man in Cashel in any way, until coming on the last day, and whoever I think the best man for the credit of my country, I will give him my vote," in the presence of all that was around me near his carriage.

15142. When did Mr. Patrick Cunningham tell you to go for the £35?—I'll tell you, sir; Pat. Cunningham never offered me a pound or a shilling for my vote. I was passing the house over one day, and the father called me over and bid me good morrow, so he called me in and asked for whom would I vote? "I can't say," says I. "If you vote for Mr. Munster," says he, I think you'll get £40." He didn't say "I'll give it to you." "I don't know how that may be," says I. Very well, that passed on until the night at Corcoran's hotel came around. They sent for me to attend the meeting.

15143. How long before the polling day was that?—Oh, it was, I believe, eight or ten days; I couldn't tell you, for I'm not a scholar, and I don't keep a retention of it, sir. So I attended the meeting that night, and there all the multitude was around about it, and there was speeching and talking, and they had Mr. Munster returned among the whole of them there. So, says some of them, "See what a splendid town we'll have now, when we have Mr. Munster returned for the borough; sure we'll have him entered in the week after, and next year, and the year after." "If you go to return him next week, and the week after, and next year, and the year after," says I, "you may stop there;" getting up from my seat and going away. "Lock the door," says Mr. Laffan. So the door was locked, and he got pen, ink, and paper, and pledged every man to vote for him. When it came to my turn I was asked would I sign to that paper, and I said not; Pat Sullivan, of Boherclough, was with me and he said not; Con. Carroll said not; and Pat Maher said not. The four of us stood up, the door was unlocked, and we went out.

15144. What Pat Maher is that?—The Main-street publican. After that they sent a man of the name of Dudley Burke to my house.

15145. Dudley Burke?—Dudley Burke; he's a labouring man, to have me come down to Corcoran's hotel, that they wanted me. "I'll not," says I; "Do so," says he; "I'll not," says I. I was pitting potatoes in my haggard at the same time when I refused coming, and didn't come. In the evening, Dwyer, the weaver, from the Green, came to me. "They expected you last night," says he. "Didn't I tell the messenger I wouldn't go?" says I. "Will you come to-night?" says he. "I'll not," says I. "If you come to-night," says he, "they're paying from forty to fifty pounds for votes, and you'll get it." "If they are," says I, "get fifty pounds, and keep five for yourself, and bring me the rest." There's the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, before my God. He went off then, and he didn't call near me. Next morning, I was coming up the street for some bran; who should I spy coming out from Corcoran's place, only Dwyer, the weaver, that was with me the evening before. He ran across the street to me; this was the very evening of the nomination. "We expected you last night," says he, "will you come over now, Pat Cunningham is beyond?" "What does he want of me?" says I. "I don't know," says he. "No," says I, "I have engaged my yard to put timber into it for the telegraph poles, and he didn't put it in, and it was only to seduce me for my vote." "Come over," says he; I went over, and Pat. Cunningham was within before me. He bid me good-morrow, and I saluted him. "Well," says he, "what we were saying the other day, are you satisfied?" "I am," says I. He gave me writing to enter a room there to a man that his mouth, and nose, and all were closed up with a handkerchief, and I didn't know him if I was to be hanged for it. He gave me writing to the man; I went in to him. He drew up a bill, and, not being a clerk, I knew nothing about his bill. He asked me, "Will you write?" "No," says I. "Well," says he, "will you put your hand to this." "I won't," says I, and so I walked out. Patsy Cunningham was outside the door. "What did you want to bring me here?" says I. "Don't be angry," says he, turning to the window and writing a few lines on another bit of paper. I knocked at the door. The door was unlocked again. I handed him that paper, and he paid me then £35 in money. I went and gave my vote to Mr. O'Beirne, and there's "the truth, and the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

15146. You knew the £35 was for your vote?—No, for my yard.

15147. Did you not tell me Pat Cunningham was taking your yard to put poles in, and that he did not do it, and that what he wanted was to seduce you for your vote—did you say that?—I did, sir.

15148. Then did you not know it was for your vote you were getting the £35?—Didn't he give £35 to Carroll for his yard? He told me that he would pay me any money he owed me.

15149. Did not you say that you knew that he offered to take your yard and did not put in the poles; that he wanted to seduce you for your vote?—Yes, I judged that, sir.

15150. When you took the £35 afterwards did you not know that you were selling your vote?—Sure I wasn't selling my vote, for I wouldn't sell my vote for here, because Mr. Laffan—he offered me thirty pounds, and paid twelve shillings horse-hire before that. For my vote! I wouldn't take it.

15151. Did you get anything for voting for Mr. O'Beirne?—I did, sir.

15152. What did you get?—Not a penny.

15153. Did your son Pat?—No, sir; I never got a shilling; I didn't understand it, sir.

15154. Have you got a son—is that boy your son?—Yes, he is. My son is here, sir.

15155. Was he employed?—He was, sir.

15156. By whom?—Mr. O'Beirne.

15157. How was he employed?—I couldn't tell you, sir.

15158. What did he get?—Nothing at all.

15159. Was he promised anything?—I couldn't tell you.

15160. Do you know anything about it?—I do; that he was employed about the street from morning till night with him; there's all.

15161. You never got anything?—I never got a shilling in my house or family from Mr. O'Beirne, or even an agent belonging to him, nor did Mr. O'Beirne offer a shilling for my vote, no more than you, that wasn't there at all.

15162. Were you talking to Captain Graham at all?—No, sir, I wasn't.

15163. Or to Simon Tracey?—No, sir.

15164. Were you promised anything?—No, sir, not a shilling.

15165. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you vote in 1865?—I didn't, nor I hadn't e'er a vote.

15166. Why did you not vote for Mr. Munster this time?—Because he didn't please me. Of course Mr. O'Beirne being a better man, that there was a trial of him.

15167. Did your son get anything for his employment at the election?—He didn't, sir.

15168. Was he not very badly treated?—He couldn't help it.

15169. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Did you ever see Mr. O'Beirne's valet?—I didn't, sir.

[Mr. Munster hands in questions.]

15170. Will you swear that Mr. Munster asked you for your vote?—Sure I'm after telling you what he told me when he came to the door.

15171. Did he himself speak to you?—Himself in person, in his carriage, spoke to me and asked my vote.

15172. Who was by?—Mr. Laffan, and I think Mr. Leahy.

15173. Which Mr. Laffan?—I couldn't exactly tell which of the two, sir; his honour knows it himself. He came out of the carriage and ordered me into it.

15174. Mr. MOLLOY.—Did you intend to keep the £35?—I didn't. If every man gives it up I'll give it up.

15175. Why do you not set them the example and begin yourself first?—How? and where were they giving it to me?

15176. Did you get money from any person else?—Not a shilling, only twelve shillings horse-hire I got from Mr. Laffan when my horse was drawing sand to Mr. Munster's road that he commenced after coming; and it was I billed him for twelve shillings, and he paid me.

15177. Did any of your family get money?—Not a shilling.

15178. Were they promised it?—They were not promised it. I am on my oath now, and I stand before my God, and if I knew it was for my vote he was giving me the money I wouldn't take a shilling of it.

15179. Did you ask any person what was going?—No. How could I ask? Sure they wouldn't tell it to me.

15180. Do you know Mr. John Davis White?—I do.

15181. Did you ever ask him what money was going?—No, nor he never told me what was going.

Mr. John Davis White recalled; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

15182. Do you know this man?—I think he was one of the persons that came to me one night.

Edmond Foley's examination resumed by Mr. MOLLOY.

15183. Do you know that gentleman [i.e., Mr. J. D. White]?—I do these twenty years.

15184. He says you were one of those that came to him one night and asked what money was going?—I don't recollect it, sir.

15185. Do you forget it?—I do, teetotally.

Patrick Foley sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

15186. You were employed at the last election?—Yes, sir.

15187. By Mr. O'Beirne?—Yes, sir.

15188. What were you promised?—Nothing.

15189. What do you expect to get?—I billed him for £5.

15190. Who employed you?—Mr. O'Beirne himself.

15191. What were you employed at?—Going up and down the town, and looking about; I didn't do a great deal.

15192. How many days were you employed at this work?—About eleven or twelve days.

15193. You sent in a bill for £5?—Yes, sir.

15194. Have you been paid it?—No, sir.

15195. To whom did you send the bill?—Mr. Grace, sir.

15196. Do you know did any of your family get anything from Mr. O'Beirne, or any of his friends, at the last election?—Not a penny, sir.

15197. Were they promised anything?—No. sir.

Margaret Hackett sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

15198. You are the wife of James Hackett?—I am, sir.

15199. He was examined yesterday?—Yes sir.

15200. Do you know that money was going at the last election?—I heard so, sir.

15201. Did you go to any person to ask what money was given for votes?—I did not.

15202. You did not go to Mrs. Rochford?—No, indeed, sir.

15203. Did you go and tell Mrs. Rochford if her husband went along with your relatives that she would get money?—No, indeed, sir, I never mentioned nor asked it.

15204. You went to Mr. Munster's, at Abbeyview?—I did, sir.

15205. You got money from him?—Yes, sir.

15206. You brought him a letter?—I did, sir.

15207. Asking him for money?—Ten pounds. The lend of £10.

15208. You went with the letter yourself?—I did, sir

15209. What occurred when you went with the letter?—When I went to the hall I met a young gentleman. I left him the letter. He asked who did I want to see? I said Mr. Munster. He asked me was it anything I wanted for myself, and I said it was. He took the letter from me to Mr. Munster, and I remained in the hall all through.

15210. Did you go in?—Yes, after a while. A couple of persons passed me from the hall to the room where the young man took the letter from me went. I was called afterwards to Mr. Munster's presence.

15211. What did Mr. Munster say?—He had the letter open in his hand, and he said I had no right to write him such a letter about votes; for I said I would try and use my influence with my father, my husband, and my brother-in-law.

15212. You stated that in the letter?—I did, sir, and he said I had no right to write him such a letter.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Margaret Hackett.

15213. What was said after that?—Miss Ade, I think, was in the room when I went in, but I couldn't swear whether it was after or before me she came in, but she was there when I was speaking, and she asked Mr. Munster could she not lend me the money herself, and Mr. Munster said no.

15214. Was there a gentleman in the room?—There was a gentleman standing near the fireplace.

15215. Did Mr. Munster give any reason why Miss Ade could not lend the money?—He didn't, sir; I think he said to the gentleman he could not do so, and the gentleman said, "What do you think if this lady writes to Mademoiselle de mon Cour?" and Mr. Munster said "All we do in this way we do for charity." I was afraid, and still he held the letter; he said all the things they do in this way they do for charitable purposes or charity, I don't know which.

15216. When he said "All these things were done for charity," did you want to have no more to do with it?—I wished to have no more to do with it, sir; I wished he would give me back the letter, but I didn't know whether 'twas better ask it, or not, I was so confused.

15217. Did he keep the letter?—He did, sir.

15218. Did you ask him for it?—I don't think I asked him for it, but I wished to have it.

15219. Did Mr. Munster then leave the room?—He said to me then "You might write to this young lady," turning to Miss Ade, turning to her, "and whatever you want state it," says he. I brought afterwards then another letter to the lady telling her what I wanted, but nothing about votes.

15220. Why did you not speak in the second letter about votes?—Because Mr Munster said he couldn't do anything for me on account of offering to influence votes.

15221. But he advised you to write to Miss Ade?—Yes, sir; he said "Write to this young lady." I thought at the time she was a daughter of Mr. Munster, and he said "Write to this young lady, and tell her what you want." He didn't name Miss Ade, or any other during the time.

15222. Did you go away then?—I did; I brought a letter next evening to Miss Ade, and I addressed her as Madamoiselle Munster; for I didn't know who she was. I sent the letter in to her. She came out in the hall and reached me an envelope with the direction of Madamoiselle de Moncourt on it, and told me to write to that address, and whatever I wanted I would get.

15223. Did you write?—I did, sir.

15224. Did you post the letter yourself?—I did, sir.

15225. Did you get an answer?—I did, sir; I believe it was four days when I got an answer from London. What was in it was, "Dear Madam, on account of being unwell." I think it was—the writing was a little cramped; she said she was not very well, and on account of that didn't answer me sooner, but now she enclosed a cheque for the amount I wanted, and that she required nothing for the cheque but that I would remember her in my prayers; no return for the money, or something to that effect.

15226. What was in the cheque?—It was in the Bank, payable to Mrs. Margaret Hackett, I took it to Abbeyview, and Miss Ade checked it for me.

15227. Why did you not take it to the Bank?—Miss Ade said she would check it for me. I said I didn't wish to have it made public to take it to the Bank or the Post Office, and I am sure that is the reason the lady in London made it payable to me, to Miss Ade, that she would keep it secret better than any person.

15228. You brought the cheque to Miss Ade and she paid you?—She did, sir.

15229. Had you any conversation with Mrs. Rochford before the election?—I used to speak to her whenever I would meet her; I never asked her husband to vote for Mr. O'Beirne, nor never thought of it.

15230. Did she say anything to you about voting?—She said she heard several persons say Mr. O'Beirne was a poor man, that he had nothing, and that her husband would support Mr. Munster.

15231. Do you know that your husband got £75?—I heard it yesterday, sir.

15232. Did you ever hear it before?—No, indeed, sir.

15233. Nothing about it?—Nothing at all about it until yesterday.

15234. Listen to this:—Mrs. Rochford said "Mrs. Hackett came to me and told me would John go with her husband James, I said I was afraid he would not, that he had pledged himself to Mr. Michael Laffan, and was a man not in the habit of going to do anything but what is just," and that you replied "If he comes with James, Mr. O'Beirne is a very clever man, and he will bring him out of any difficulty he may get into." Do you remember saying that?—I never said it, nor couldn't, I hadn't the slightest idea of asking her husband to vote for Mr. O'Beirne.

15235. Mr. GRIFFIN.—Do you remember having some porter with her the night before the election?—I remember taking a bottle of porter with her at Mrs. Dolan's the evening before the election.

15236. Did you tell her about your husband having arranged with Mr. Munster then?—I didn't, sir, for I didn't know it.

15237. You know it now?—I heard it yesterday.

15238. Did you never hear a word of it before?—Never, indeed.

15239. Did you hear that he had engaged with Captain Graham?—Never, indeed, sir. I never heard he had any arrangement with Captain Graham until I heard it here yesterday sworn by himself that he had; when he had it made he kept it secret from me.

15240. Did you ever pay back that ten pounds?—Never, sir.

[Mr. Munster hands in questions.]

15241. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—What time of the day did you come to Abbeyview?—Late in the evening; it was dusk, sir.

15242. What reason did you give for coming there?—That I wanted the lend of ten pounds.

15243. What reason did you give when you were asked at the time why you came there so late?—I wasn't asked what reason I came so late, sir.

15244. When you were asked there, did you give any reason to any person that spoke to you about coming up to Abbeyview?—I told Miss Ade that I came so late that no one might know me, nor know the purport of my coming, that they may not see me coming towards the house at all.

15245. Mr. Munster wishes to know for what purpose did you write the letter?—Why did I write the letter, sir, to him?

15246. Yes?—For to get the money, sir, if I could.

15247. Did you ever hear that Miss Ade, in Mr. Munster's household, was to receive all applications for charity?—I never heard it, sir; I heard it since. I heard herself swear it at the petition, but before that I didn't hear at all, sir.

15248. How did you get paid the money?—She gave me a five-pound Bank of England note and five sovereigns. I went to the teller at the bank, and he gave me a three-pound note and two single notes for the money, and he made me put my name on the back of the Bank of England note.

15249. How did you apply that money?—As I told Mr. Munster in the letter, I paid it to those that I owed it to.

15250. To whom?—I paid some at Mr. Ryan's and some at Mr. Meara's.

15251. You say you expended it all in paying debts?—All to a very little, sir.

15252. Is this the letter that you wrote to Mr. Munster—

"The Green, Cashel, 28th October, 1868.

"DEAR SIR,—I hope you will forgive my intrusion, which I never would have done were not I and those to whom I belong some of your most influential supporters. I introduce myself to you as the wife of James Hackett, whose father and himself possess a vote, each of which are at the perfect disposal of the former, as also that of his brother William, now, as on all former occasions, will go with the other two. I will only ask you in return of the influence which I will successfully use in your behalf, a lend of ten pounds, and the reason I am obliged to have recourse to your generosity I shall quickly let you know. A few years ago, when I got married, my father promised myself privately twenty pounds, of which my husband knew nothing about, on strength of which promise I foolishly went in debt the sum which I now ask of you to lend me. Should you doubt me, I beg you to refer to Mr. Laffan, and I am confident he will give you a most respectable character of me; or to his Grace the Archbishop, who knew me well at the time I was educating in the Ursuline Convent, Thurles, which he is the patron of. I could refer to several others, but as I wish to keep it a perfect secret, as it would expose me to the ridicule of several were they to know it, but I am confiding in a gentleman, and my trust is, I am sure, in safe keeping.

"I remain, &c.,
"MARGARET HACKETT, Cashel.

"Henry Munster, esq., Green,
"Abbeyview, Cashel."

Is that your letter?—Yes, sir.

15253. Mr. Munster wishes to know was it true that you were in debt ever since your marriage unknown to your husband?—Not ever since, sir. It was later than my marriage I got some of the things, but it was since my marriage I did incur the debt, sir.

15254. Did you write a letter to Miss Ade at Christmas, to thank her for her goodness in getting you this money?—I did, sir, Christmas Eve, asking her in what way would she advise me to give it back, for I was told before the petition that Mr. Munster could take hold of me for asking money at all. I heard Pat Cunningham was reporting it about the street. I wanted to have no more about it. I wrote her the letter on Christmas Eve.

15255. Did you ever see your husband, or William Hackett or their father signing any bills?—Never, sir.

15256. Was there any other lady in the room with Mr. Munster that evening except Miss Ade?—There was, sir, another lady, but she went out before the conversation.

15257. How many ladies were in the room?—There were two, sir, but one went out.

15258. Only two at any time?—I didn't see, sir, only two.

15259. Did you see Miss Sterne?—Yes, Miss Sterne was present when Miss Ade checked the money for me.

15260. Was she present the first evening?—I don't think it was Miss Sterne was present, but another small lady; but I know, sir, Miss Sterne was present when she was paying the money, for Miss Ade had only a five-pound note in her pocket, and it was Miss Sterne gave her the gold.

15261. Was she present when you were talking with Mr. Munster?—I couldn't swear was she present during the conversation, but I'm sure she was present when I went into the room. I couldn't swear was she there during the whole conversation.

15262. Or during any part of it?—I couldn't swear, sir, and I think, to my belief, she went out. I remarked there was a small little dog standing by her side, the other young lady beside Miss Ade.

15263. Mr. Munster.—I should like to ask if she recognises the young lady?—[witness looks at the ladies in the gallery]. I do not see her there, sir; I know them all, sir; I think I know the whole of them, but I don't think I remark that young lady, sir.

William Hackett recalled at the request of Mr. Munster; examined by Mr. WATERS, Q.C.

William Hackett.

15264. Who was present when the bill for £75 was signed?—There was James when I signed the note—bill, or note, or whatever it was—there was himself and me and Looby.

15265. Is that Maurice Looby?—Yes, sir.

15266. No one else?—No, sir.

15267. In whose house was it signed?—In James' house, sir.

15268. And you say there was none besides?—No one but the three.

15269. Was it a three months' bill, or what date was it?—I couldn't tell, sir; I didn't read it, nor he didn't read it for me.

James Cody sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

James Cody.

15270. You voted for Mr. O'Beirne at the last election?—I did, sir.

15271. How did you vote at the election of '65?—For Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

15272. For whom did you vote in '59?—Fifty-nine? I believe Mr. Hemphill was up at the time; I voted twice for Mr. Hemphill, once for Mr. O'Beirne, and twice for Mr. O'Beirne.

15273. You were a very active supporter of Mr. O'Beirne, I believe?—Well, I canvassed for him.

15274. Do you know Pat Brien of William-street?—I do.

15275. Did you canvass him?—I did.

15276. Did anybody else canvass him for Mr. O'Beirne?—I don't know, sir.

15277. Did Captain Graham canvass him?—I don't know; I wasn't present.

15278. Did he get any consideration for his vote?—I couldn't tell you; I don't know anyone that got a consideration.

15279. You did not hear he was promised?—I heard a great many rumours, but did not see it or know it.

15280. Did you hear there was any promise with reference to that particular man?—I do not, sir.

15281. Do you know James Kennedy, a voter?—I do, sir.

15282. You canvassed him, too?—Well, I spoke to him on an occasion.

15283. Do you know whether he was promised anything?—I don't know, sir.

15284. Or whether he got anything?—I don't think he did; at least he told me he didn't.

15285. Do you know anything about Patrick Maher, Main-street?—I do, sir.

15286. Do you know whether he got anything?—I don't think he did, sir.

15287. Or that he was promised anything?—I don't know.

15288. Were you engaged as agent for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was in '65.

15289. But not this time?—No.

15290. Did you receive any consideration or promise for your vote?—No.

15291. What did you get for your vote in '65?—Twenty pounds from Mr. Johnson before he went away.

15292. Was that all you got in '65?—It was, sir.

15293. When were you paid it?—I got it from Mr. Johnson before he went away; I never made any agreement with him; he sent me that and I kept it.

15294. Were you promised more than the £20?—I didn't make any agreement with him at all.

15295. Was there a balance due to you?—No; I didn't make any agreement at all.

15296. Did you know of any money being paid in '65?—No, sir, I didn't, because I never went near them. I cannot swear on my oath that I knew of any man to get a shilling.

15297. Did you know of any promises being made?—I didn't; I didn't meddle; Mr. Johnson had all the arrangements.

SIXTEENTH DAY.
October 21.
James Cody.

15298. What did you do for the £20?—I was canvassing about the Commons everywhere.

15299. Did you make any promise for the purpose of influencing any voter?—No, sir.

15300. Were you asked to become an agent for Mr. Munster in '68?—I was spoken to by Mr. Laffan, the attorney. He met me and told me there was a certain gentleman coming to town; I told him I wouldn't vote for any person besides Mr. O'Beirne, because I liked him in the House of Commons at the time he was there.

15301. Did the negotiation go on further than that?—No.

15302. Were you confined to your room at the time of the election?—I was at one time, sir, for a while.

15303. Were you ill when you were canvassed?—Well, I don't think I was, sir.

15304. Do you remember any persons coming to canvass you when you were in bed?—I think I do, sir.

15305. Do you remember who they were?—I forget now; I couldn't tell you; I believe I was very ill at the time.

15306. Do you swear that you were offered no inducement of any kind for your vote?—Positively.

15307. At this election?—Positively.

15308. Or any of your family?—Or any of my family.

Mr. John White.

Mr. John White of John-street, sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

15309. How long have you been an elector of Cashel?—I have had a house since '36.

15310. I presume you had a vote at every election since?—Well, I presume I had.

15311. How did you vote at the election of 1859?—Was Mr. Carden up that year? for if he was I voted for him.

15312. That was in 1859?—Well, I don't know who was then.

15313. For whom did you vote in 1857?—I don't think I voted at all unless Mr. Carden was.

15314. He was a candidate only once?—Was it M'Garrell?

15315. That was in 1852?—Well, I don't think I voted in '57.

15316. Did you vote for M'Garrell when he was a candidate?—I did.

15317. For whom did you vote in 1865?—I didn't vote at all in '65.

15318. Did you not vote for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865?—No, I never voted for Mr. O'Beirne.

15319. Were you canvassed at the last election?—I was, sir.

14320. Did Mr. O'Beirne canvass you?—He sent me his address.

15321. Are you certain that you did not vote at the election of 1865?—As well as I recollect I did not. Who were the members, and I can tell you?

15322. Mr. O'Beirne and Mr. Lanigan?—Well, I did not; I did not vote then.

15323. Who canvassed you on Mr. O'Beirne's behalf in 1868, the last election?—I merely got a circular which announced his intention.

15324. No person called on you?—No person called for me that I recollect.

15325. When were you canvassed on Mr. Munster's behalf?—I was canvassed in '68.

15326. What time before the election were you first canvassed?—Well, I should say it was—oh, immediately on his coming here, I think. As well as I recollect Mr. Munster called in his carriage on my house.

15327. What reply did you give?—I was not in, and gave him no reply.

15328. Then you were not canvassed?—I was not in.

15329. When were you first canvassed by any person on Mr. Munster's behalf?—He sent me but one circular that I saw or recollect; I was not canvassed by anyone save getting that circular.

15330. Did not any of Mr. Munster's agents call on you?—No.

15331. Or write to you anything about the approaching election?—Never wrote to me.

15332. Had you any conversation with people about the election?—Oh, in a passing way I had.

15333. Did you say that nothing would induce you to vote for Mr. Munster?—I might have said so, I dare say it is, probable I did.

15334. To whom did you say it?—I merely said that as I dissented in politics with all those who canvassed—that I did not think it was likely I would vote at all; that nothing would induce me unless I changed my mind.

15335. I take it that you expressed that opinion more than once?—Probably I might have done it ten times.

15336. Had you any conversation with Dr. Russell about the election?—Oh, in a passing way only. He might have said to me, "White, who do you purpose voting for?" but merely in a passing way.

15337. And nothing further?—Nothing further whatever.

15338. How long before the election was the last of those conversations when you said that nothing would induce you to vote for Mr. Munster?—I couldn't say.

15339. About how long?—I couldn't say.

15340. What induced you to change your mind?—I was induced by things I heard; that he was possessed of a great deal of wealth, a very enterprising gentleman, and being connected with England I thought he might be the means of establishing manufactories in Cashel which would greatly benefit the town, and employ the youth.

15341. But from the earliest part of Mr. Munster's candidature his wealth was spoken of and all these charities?—It was merely spoken of in a passing way; but I wasn't so well satisfied as to his being a wealthy man as I was after.

15342. How were you satisfied that he was a wealthy man after?—Having heard it from different persons.

15343. Did you not hear that at first?—I heard of his agents giving £500 to the Christian Brothers, and I heard of his munificent acts of charity to great numbers of the poor.

15344. Had the gift of £500 to the Christian Brothers a great effect in changing you?—None whatever, but it established the fact in my mind that he was a very wealthy man.

15345. Did you not hear before he came to the town that there had been £5,000 lodged to his credit in the bank for the election?—I did.

15346. Was not that a substantial proof of his wealth?—Well it was. I didn't hear it before he came to town; I dare say I might have heard it subsequently.

15347. At what period before the election did you make up your mind to vote for Mr. Munster?—Well, I should think ten days or a fortnight before.

15348. Now, Mr. White, did you ever receive any money for having voted at any election in Cashel?—Never.

15349. Never?—Never.

15350. Or were you promised money in any way?—None was promised in any way whatever.

15351. Did Mr. Munster announce his intention of establishing manufactures in Cashel?—Never, to my knowledge; but I thought it was likely from his connexion with England that he would do so from his being a wealthy man; it was merely a supposition of my own.

15352. Had you heard that he had any connexion with any manufactures?—I heard of his being connected extensively with some shoemaking establishment in England where there were several hundred persons employed, and that he derived some very considerable income from it.

Mr. Munster.—These things go through the press to the whole world. I should like to give the most emphatic contradiction to everything said by Mr. White. It is wholly opposed to fact—about the shoemaking and revenue, and all the rest of it.

Thomas Connors of Canopy-street sworn; examined by Mr. GRIFFIN.

Thomas Connors.

15353. You voted for Mr. Munster at the last election?—Yes, sir.

15354. Who canvassed you?—Mr. Laffan, sir.

15355. Which Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Michael Laffan, sir.

15356. How long before the election was it?—It was about a week or a fortnight, sir.

15357. Did you promise him to vote for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

15358. Had you ever any conversation with Mr. Pat Laffan about the election?—No.

15359. Or with Patrick Cunningham?—No, sir, not the least.

15360. Do you remember going to Mr. Patrick Laffan to his house after the election was over?—I do, sir.

15361. What did you say to him?—I said nothing at all to him, sir, only I went up there, and there was people going in and out; I said nothing at all to him about money or any thing, only he said he would bear me in mind, sir.

15362. Did you ask him to bear you in mind?—I didn't sir.

15363. What took you up there?—I went up there, sir.

15364. Did you hear there was anything going?—I did, sir.

15365. And you thought you ought to get a share as well as anybody else?—Yes, sir.

15366. And you went to Mr. Patrick Laffan for fear he would forget you?—Yes, sir.

15367. Did he tell you he would bear you in mind?—Yes, sir.

15368. How much did you expect?—I never expected a farthing as I never made an agreement nor never spoke to him about money from the time I gave my vote up to this day.

15369. But you expected your share of what was going?—I did, sir.

15370. What was your share?—I didn't make any inquiry about it.

15371. Did you not hear people were getting £30 or £35?—I did, sir.

15372. Was that what you expected?—I wouldn't take it before the election, whatever I would get.

15373. Did you think you would be put to your oath at the election if you got anything?—I did, sir, and that is the reason I wouldn't take it, whatever I would get.

15374. When you went up to Mr. Patrick Laffan that he should not forget you, did you not expect you would get as much as anybody else?—I didn't, sir, expect anything. How could I expect it? He said he would bear me in mind.

15375. Did you not hear it was going?—I heard it was going.

15376. And you expected as much as anybody else?—Not for my vote, sir; I never expected anything for my vote.

15377. What else did you expect it for?—My son was employed by Mr. Patrick Laffan, sir.

15378. What is your son's name?—Patrick Connors.

15379. How was he employed by him?—He employed him to go to Goold's Cross one evening.

15380. How often did he go?—He didn't go at all, because it was by night Mr. Munster came in.

15381. That was the work he did—that he was willing to go if wanted, but he did not go?—Yes, sir.

15382. Did he put in any claim?—He did, sir.

15383. For how much did he put in the claim?—For ten pounds, sir.

15384. Is that all?—That's all, sir, and Mr. Patrick Laffan gave him three pounds the first day he engaged him to go out against him to Goold's Cross.

15385. Mr. Patrick Laffan gave it to him?—Yes, sir.

15386. When did he give it?—A week or a fortnight before the election—before Mr. Munster came to town at all.

15387. That was for the day he did not go?—He didn't go, because it was by night Mr. Munster came, sir.

15388. He sent in a claim for ten pounds?—Yes, sir.

15389. If thirty or thirty-five pounds was going that would be your share?—I didn't want to put in anything for my vote; whatever I would get for my own vote I wouldn't take it.

15390. You would not have taken it before the election?—No, sir.

15391. But after the election you would?—If it was going the way I would take it as well as everyone else; but I wouldn't before the election.

15392. You thought you would be put to your oath at the election?—I did, sir.

15393. Did you vote in 1865?—No; I had ne'er a vote before until then, sir.

15394. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne at all?—I was, sir.

15395. Who canvassed you for Mr. O'Beirne?—I was within and Mr. O'Beirne came; I was within, but I turned aside, for I was canvassed by Mr. Laffan for Mr. Munster.

15396. And were you never canvassed by anybody for Mr. O'Beirne?—No; I was never canvassed for anyone, only I pledged myself the first day to Mr. Laffan for Mr. Munster, and I stated so; I never went inside, or near any of them until the day I went up to Mr. Michael Laffan.

15397. Did anybody tell you you would be as well treated as the others after the election?—No, sir; there wasn't a word about it.

15398. Did anybody tell you Mr. Munster was a generous man, and to leave it to him and his agents until after the election?—No, sir, no.

15399. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You voted for Mr. Munster?—I did, sir.

15400. After the election if you heard that there was money going on Mr. O'Beirne's side, you would not think of going there to get your share of it?—No, I wouldn't, sir. For what should I go there?

15401. But you did go when you heard there was money going on Mr. Munster's side?—Yes, sir.

15402. If you had voted for Mr. O'Beirne you would go to him if you heard there was money going on his side?—Yes, I would, sir.

Daniel Moloney of the Commons, sworn; examined by Mr. MOLLOY.

Daniel Moloney.

15403. Dan, how long have you been an elector of Cashel?—I think since 1857.

15404. Did you vote in 1857?—I did, sir.

15405. For whom did you vote?—Sir Timothy O'Brien, sir.

15406. For whom did you vote in 1859?—John Lanigan.

15407. For whom in 1865?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir.

15408. And in 1868?—Mr. O'Beirne, sir, also.

15409. Did you get anything on account of your vote in 1865?—No, sir.

15410. Did you pass a bill?—No, sir.

15411. Did you not sign a bill?—I didn't sign a bill, nor see a bill.

15412. Was any money promised to you on account of your vote?—No, sir.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

October 21.

Daniel Moloney.

15413. How came you to vote for Mr. O'Beirne in 1865, instead of the man you voted for in 1859?—Because some of my neighbours wanted some request from Mr. Lanigan, and they told him, and he said he didn't lie under any compliment to any man of the Commons.

15414. You were offended at that?—I was, sir.

15415. Were you canvassed by Mr. Lanigan in 1865?—No, sir; he never asked me for my vote.

15416. Were you canvassed by Mr. O'Beirne?—I was, sir.

15417. Did you promise him at once?—To Mr. O'Beirne, sir?

15418. Yes?—I did, sir.

15419. Were you offered any money, or promised it at any election in Cashel?—I was, sir.

15420. When?—In 1857, sir, and in 1868.

15421. Who offered you the money in 1868?—Mr. Sullivan, sir, Michael Sullivan.

15422. Where does he live?—He lives in the corner of the Main-street.

15423. Mr. O'Sullivan, you say?—Yes, sir; Michael O'Sullivan.

15424. When did he offer you money?—Well, I couldn't exactly say; but a few days before the election. I think it was the Saturday before the election.

15425. Did he come to you, or did you go to him?—He came to me. I was talking on Saturday to Pat Halloran, and Sullivan said he was glad Halloran was retained, that he was prevented from voting. He wanted me to his place. He told me—he asked me.

15426. Did you go to his place?—I did, sir. He asked me what amount of money would please me, and I said £70. He asked me, "Do you think it is a gold leg is under Mr. Munster entirely?" says he. "I don't care a damn what leg is under him if I get the money," says I. "That amount of money is too much," says he; "I don't think you can get it; but call to me at six o'clock this evening, and I'll settle you down."

15427. Did you go back to him?—No, I didn't, sir.

15428. Why did you not go back?—Well, if I got £500 I wouldn't vote for him.

15429. Why did you ask £70?—I wanted to get out of the man, because I didn't know what he wanted me in for.

15430. Why did you not tell him you would have no conversation with him on such a subject?—I didn't want to fall out with the man. I would have taken nothing.

15431. Did he give you a treat?—I couldn't tell you that.

15432. Did any other person promise you money at the last election?—Well, Michael Cahill, and a butcher in Friar-street, I think, Neddy Duggan, and one Butler—I don't know is he a butcher or dealing-man—John Butler.

15433. What did they offer you?—I don't remember, because I took no notice of what they said; only I think they said, "You passed a note in '65 to Mr. O'Beirne, and if there was a certain thing laid down, and if Mr. O'Beirne sued for that note you will be saved, and you will get £25 with that." I listened to the talk, because I was more in dread of them than anything else, and I should please the people.

15434. What did you say when they spoke of the note of 1865?—I said that would do, that it was very good.

15435. Did you pass a note?—I didn't pass a note, but they said I passed a note to Mr. O'Beirne.

15436. And you agreed with them?—I did, sir.

15437. Were any promises of money made to you on Mr. O'Beirne's side at the last election?—Never; never one single shilling; I never received at any election, and I voted four times.

15438. Did you ever receive anything in consideration of your vote?—Never.

15439. Though it was not at election time, did you?—At any time I never got a shilling for a vote.

15440. Did you ever get money at any time on account of having voted?—Never.

15441. Before or after the election, did you?—After or before it.

15442. Mr. WATERS, Q.C.—You said if you got £500 you would not vote for him?—I solemnly swear it.

15443. If you got £1,000?—I wouldn't, nor all he could bring here to Cashel.

15444. You would not take it?—No.

15445. Even if you voted for him?—If I voted for him.

15446. If Mr. O'Beirne was as rich as Mr. Munster, and if he offered you £500 after voting for him, would you take it?—From Mr. O'Beirne?

15447. Yes?—I would so.

15448. I expected to find a ne plus ultra of purity in you. Did you ever ask anyone how much they would give the Commoners?—Never; I didn't put one foot before the other to go to anyone.

15449. Do you know Mr. Laffan?—Mr. Laffan?

15450. Do you know Mr. Laffan?—I have a slight knowledge of him.

15451. Turn round. Is that he there?—'Tis, sir [pointing to Mr. Patrick Laffan]. I knew him and his brother.

15452. You are Daniel Moloney, living in the Commons?—I am, sir.
